In this field, as the puissant Prince Humfrey Duke of Glocester the kings brother, fought with great courage and force, he was sore wounded in the hammes with a sworde, and ouerthrowne, insomuch, as he lay as halfe dead in the field, his head toward the Englishmen, and his feete towards his enemies: vpon whom the king hauing a brotherly compassion, bestrode him, and with most strong battell and labour, not without his owne great perill, like a brother he defended, and succoured his brother from the enemies, and made the Duke to be born out of the field amongst his owne men.

At the last, the victory obtayned, and the great hoste of the Frenchmen ouercome, slaine, wounded, taken and banquished, forthwith an other hoste of Frenchmen, no lesse than the first, supposing the Englishmen to be wearied by their long trauell and fight, disposed them to beginne againe the battell anew. When the Englishmen (which had many moe prisoners than they were of themselues in number) saw this newe field assembled to giue them battell againe, fearing in this new field, lest they should fight both against their prisoners, and their other enemies, they put to death many of their said prisoners, both noble & rich men, among whom the Duke of Brabant, who at that field was taken prisoner, was one.

Titus Liuius

The prudent king of England seeing the resemble of his aduersaries sent his heraults vnto them, commaunding them, either forthwith to come to battell, or else immediately to depart the field, and if they delayde to depart, or to come to battell, both those of their company alreadie taken prisoners, and also all they that should thereafter be taken, without mercie or redemption should be put to death: which message when the Frenchmen heard, fearing the strength of the Englishmen, and also the death, both of themselues, and also of their friendes before taken prisoners, with great heauinesse, and with shame, they forthwith departed. Then the king of England being assured of the victorie, gaue the greatest laud and praise to God that might be.

Frenchmen slaine.

In this battell were slaine on the French party, the Noble Dukes of Alanson, of Berrey, and Bauere, and the Lord Hely, the Lord Labret chiefe Constable of France, the Archbishop of Saunce, Eight Earles, an hundred and one Barons, fiftéene hundred Knights, and aboue tenne thousand of all estates, whereof scarcely fiftéene hundred were souldiers or labourers, the rest were of coate armour (saith Enguerant:) but Thomas Elmham saith, Archbishops, one, Dukes, three, Earles, fiue, Barons, and such like, foure score and twelue, Knights, fiftéene hundred, of Esquires and Gentlemen, seuen thousand, whereof hée nameth the Archbishoppe of Saunce, the Dukes of Brabant, Alanson, and of Bauere, the Earles of Riuers, Dampmartin, Parlenses, Grantper, Saunsls, and of Dansemonteuse, the Lord of Bret, Constable of Fraunce.

Frenchmen taken prisoners.

In this battell were taken prisoners of the Frenchmen, the Dukes of Orleance, and of Burbon, Arthur brother to the Duke of Britaine, the Earles of Vandosme, of Ewe, and Richmount, and sir Bomcicault Marshall of Fraunce, and many other to the number of 1500. Knightes and Esquires: And of the English partie were slayne Edward Duke of Yorke, buried at Fodringhey, Michaell de la Poole Earle of Suffolke, buried at new Elme, and to the number of an hundred persons in the vantgard, and of all estates in the English partie were not found dead aboue fiue hundred in the fielde. When night approached, the king of England returned with his host into the village, wherein they had harboured the night before, where hée found his horses, and other baggages and carriages that he left behinde him there before the field, to be stolen and caried away by the Frenchmen: where amongst many other Iewels of great price, was stolen away a sword of great value, adorned with gold and precious stones, which was after giuen to Philip Earle of Charloys, sonne and heire to Iohn Duke of Britaine.

tie God for his so happy a victory, causing his Priests and Chaplaines to sing the Psalme, In Exitu Israel de Ægypto, and commanding every man to kneele downe on the ground at this verse, Non nobis Domine, non nobis, sed nomini tuo da gloriam: which being done, he caused Te Deum with certaine Anthems to be song, giuing laud and praise to God, not boasting of his owne force or any humane power. This night when the King sate at his refection in the foresaid village, hée was serued at his boorde, of those great Lords and Princes that were taken in the field. That night the King appointed good and sure watches throughout his host, for feare of sodaine inuasions, but the Frenchmen were vtterly diuided and gone without making or intending any new businesse, whereby the Englishmen were suffered in peace to take their rest.

On the next day the King with his people entred his iourney toward Calice: and as they passed through the fields where they had fought the day before, they found all the dead bodies dispoyled, as well of their harnesse, as of their array, by the inhabitantes of the countrey, notwithstanding the bodies that might be knowen for Englishmen of any reputation, the king caused to be enterred according to their estates, and so continuing his iourney the King came to the Castell of Gwines, and from thence he went to his Towne of Calice, with all his host and his prisoners, where he was receiued of his liege men, with great ioy and due honour. After the kings host was somewhat refreshed with meat, drinke and sléepe, the king conferred with his wise counsellers, if it were good now to returne into Fraunce, and to pursue his enterprise begun, or else to return with his host into England, there to refresh his people, among whom it was considered that the number of his people was right small, and many of them vered with the flix, many sore grieued of their wounds which they had receiued at the field. Moreouer, that their long staying at Calais should cause scarcity of victualles there, whereas otherwise in their owne countrey, the people should at more ease refresh themselues, and also be better cured of their wounds: finally, considering the time had not béen hitherto vnfortunate, but that with honour they might returne with great gaine, which they had conquered, they doubted not, but by the ayde of God the King should right well obtaine his desire in time to come, for which causes they all condescended vpon their returne into England.

Then with all diligence the Nauy was prepared, and by the kings commaundement, the Lords and great estates of the prisoners of France vnto a great number, were brought into that ship, wherein the King was determined to passe the Sea. At this their passage the Sea was maruellously boysterous and rough, insomuch as two of the English shippes were perished in the flouds, by reason whereof the French prisoners were so incombred and vered, that the day of their passage séemed to thē no lesse bitter & terrible, than that day wherein they were taken at Agencourt, nor they could not maruell enough, how the king should haue so great strengthes, so easily to resist and endure the rage and boysterousnesse of the Sea, without accombrance and disease of his stomacke. When the King had passed the Sea, and was come to King Henry arriued at Doner. arriue and to take land at Douer, innumerable people of Religion, Priestes, and Noblemen, and of the commons came running to méete the King in euery way: and when he was arriued on the xviii. day of Nouember, he abode at Douer by certaine dales, to refresh and rest his Lords, and his prisoners, after his troublesome passage, and from thence he toke his iourney towards the Citie of London, where the Maior of London, with the Aldermen and crafts to the number of foure hundred riding in red, with hoodes red and white, met with the King on the Black heath comming from Eltham, and so brought him through London to Westminster, with all his prisoners of Fraunce.

The gates and stréetes of the Citie were garnished and apparelled with precious clothes of Arras, containing the victories, triumphes and princely Actes of the Kings of England his progenitors, which was done to the ende that the King might vnderstand, what remembrance his people would to their posterity of these his great victories and triumphes. The Conduits through the Citie ranne none other but good swéete wines, and that abundantly. There were also made in the stréetes many Towers and stages, adorned richly, and vpon the height of them sate small children, apparelled in semblance of Angels, with swéete tuned voyces singing prayses and laudes vnto God: for the victorious King would not suffer any ditties to be made and song of his victory, for that he would wholy haue the prayse giuen to God: neyther would hée suffer to be carried before him, nor shewed vnto the people his helmet, whereupon his Crowne of golde was broke, and deposed in the fieldes by the violence of the enemie, and great strokes that he had receiued, nor his other armour that in that cruell battaile was so sore broken, but as the faithfull constant champion of God, he eschewed all occasions of vaine glory, and refused the vaine praises of the people. On the next morrow, the Maior, Aldermen and 200. of the commoners, presented the king with a 1000. l'. in two basons of gold, worth 500. pounde.

The first day of December, by the kings commaundement, a great number of the bishops and Abbots of the realme, were assembled at London, there to celebrate and kéepe the exequies for Edward late Duke of Yorke, the Earle of Suffolke, and of other both English and French, which died in partes beyond the sea: vnto these solemnities came from Harflew, he Captaine of the same Towne, the Kings vncle Earle of Dorset, who a little before had made a roade into the borders of the countrey next adioyning, and had put them to flight, and taken prisoners 800.

Halfepence of Ianua forbidden. In the feast of the Purification, seuen dolphins of the sea came vp the riuer of Thamis, and plaid there whiles foure of them were kilde.

In a Parliament begun the 15. of March at Westminster, the halfepence of Ianua (commonly called Galey halfepence) were forbid to be vsed as lawfull payment among the English people.

The

The first of May, Sigismonde the Emperour landed at Doner, and the seuenth of May, the Maior, Aldermen, and craftes of London receiued him at Blacke-heath, and the King with his Lords met him at S. Thomas Waterings, and so brought him through London to Westminster. The Emperor returned out of England the xvi. of August, after he had laboured, but could make no peace betweene England and France. An. reg. 4.

John Benet woolman, who had in London scattered scedules full of sedition, was drawne, hanged, and beheaded on Michaelmas day. The viii. day of October, was a parchment maker of Drillmell stréte, drawne, hanged, and beaded, for that he had harboured sir John Old-castell. Tho. Walsing. Woolman beheaded.

King Henry of England, immediately after his returne from Caleis, sent his legats to Constance, where was kept ỹ generall councel, as ye haue heard, which with all other legats, the Emperour being there present, laboured for the vnity and peace of their mother the Church, and to reform the schisme that had long continued of the Popes, which councell toke effect in this manner. They first deposed all the Popes, by whom the schisme was continued, & they with the Cardinals elected into the papacy, the Cardinal of Columpne, borne in Rome, and was named Martin the fift, whose armes were a piller of siluer crowned with golde, in a field gules. At this counsell, by the assent of all nations there present, it was authorised, and ordained that England should obtaine the name of a nation, and should be said one of the fiue nations, that owe their deuotion to the Church of Rome, which thing vntill that time, men of other nations, for enuy had delayed and letted. The kingdome of England one of the fiue nations. T. Elmham

In the Parliament at London, Thomas Bewfort Earle of Dorset was made Duke of Exceter, and had 1000. l. the yére giuen him.

King Henry kept his Christmas at Kenelworth, at which time there was treason wrought gainst him, by a certaine Esquire of the complices of sir John Old-castell. 1417.

The morrow after Christmas day, certaine seditious persons spread abroad poysoned bils, raylyng against all estates of the Church, almost in euery great house, and hospital of the Townes of Saint Albons, Northampton, Reading, &c. but no man would be knowne to be the author of them: also one by his counterfeit name, called frier Tucke, with many other malefactors, committed many robberies in the countries of Surrey, and Sussex, whereupon the king sent out his writs for their apprehension. Record frier Tucke.

On Easter day in the after-noone, at a Sermon in Saint Dunstons in the East of London, a great fray happened in the Church, where-through many people were sore wounded, and one Thomas Petwarden Fishmonger, slayne out of hande, wherefore the Church was suspended, and the beginners of the fray (which was the Lord Strange, and sir John Tussell Knight, through the quarrell of their two wiues) were brought to the Counter in the Poultrie: the Archbishoppe of Canterbury caused them to be excommunicate, as well at Paules Crosse, as in all other parish Churches of the Citie. The xxi. of Aprill, the said Archbishop sate at S. Magnus, to enquire of the authors of that disorder, where he found the fault to be in An. reg. 5. A fray in S. Dunstons Church. Records of Cant.

the Lord Strange and his wife, who vpon the first of May following, in Paules Church before the Archbishop, the Maior of London, and other, submitted themselues to penance, which was inioyned them, that immediatly all their seruaunts should in their shirts go before the Parson of Saint Dunstons, from Paules, to Saint Dunstons Church, and the Lord bare headed, with his Ladie bare foted, Reignold Kenwood Archdeacon of London following them, and at the hallowing of the Church, the Ladie should fill all the vessels with water, and also offer an ornament of tenne pound, and the Lord Strange should offer a Pire of fiue pound.

Earle Dowglas of Scotland came into England, and promised amitie to the king, the which he assured by oath and writing sealed, yet notwithstanding he after turned to the French, at the battaile of Vernol in Perch fought by the Duke of Bedford as shall be shewed.

Titus Liuius.

King Henry prepared his Nauie, ordinance, and victuall for his people, and generally all other things behouefull for the warres, he assembled through England such men as wel Dukes, Earles, Lords, Knights and Gentlemen, and commons as he knew were good both for warre and peace: which being done, vpon Saint Markes day the Euangelist, he toke his iourney towardes Hampton, in purpose, when the winde and sea were fauourable, to goe into France: he rode through London, till he came at Paules, where he alighted and made his offering, and in like maner he offred at Saint Georges in Southwarke, and in all his way he gaue the farewell to euery man, praying them all to pray to God for him.

In this meane time the Frenchmen, made couenant with the Citizens of Geane (a Citie in Italy) whereby the Italians were bound, at a certaine price for euery Caricke limited for the French mens money, to prepare and furnish with armed men, as many of their greatest Carickes as the French should desire, and so prepared they should send them to the ayde of the French men, against the Englishmen, many of these Carickes so prepared, were of marueilous greatnes, yea greater then euer were seene in those parts before that time, they sayled into the mouth of the Seene, where they strongly alleged Hereflete by water, whereof when the king of England was aduertised, he delibered to go vnto them in his own person to remoue them from this siege, but from that purpose hee was letted, by the aduise of his counsaile, wherefore he gaue that iourney to the right puissant Iohn, Earle of Huntington, who entred the Nauie, departed from the land, and had such fauourable winde, that in short time he was brought vnto the enemies, who assailed each other by great vigor and strength. Their ships were grapled and fought together, the more part of a sommers day, but at the length the Italians oppressed by the strength of the Englishmen, were vtterly discomfited and ouercome, their greatest Caricks, and also the greater part of their men were taken, the residue of the Genowaies seeing their fellowes slaine or taken, were stricken with feare, & their chaines or cables broken, or hewed asunder, they departed their Caricks from the English ships, and escaped by helpe of the winde and streame. This victory obtayned, the Noble Earle returned to Hampton, whereof when the king was aduertised, he gaue laud and praising for this victory vnto God: and for the same he inhaunsed the Earle his nephew, with honour, and also with rewardes, he had fought with nine caricks and taken foure of them, with their patrons, and the Admiral of them all, that was called the Bastard of Burbon, with all the treasure that they all should haue bene waged with for a quarter of a yere.

Hampton

The xvviii. day of July the puissant king Henry (his Nauie of 1500. ships being prepared) assembled his armie to passe the seas, of his own company and purueiance 16400. armed men, and besides that number came to him to Douer, Lords and Gentlemen with their retinues, and the day and place for the same prefixed: first the Duke of Clarence with 240. speares, and 720. archers in his retinue: and the Duke of Glocester with 100. speares, and 300. archers, and fiue Earles with 470. speares, and 1410. archers, to wit, the Earle of March 100. speares and 300. archers, the Earle of Warwicke 100. speares 300. archers, the Earle of Huntington 40. speares, and 120. archers, the Earle of Suffolke 30. speares, and 90. archers, and the Earle of Salisbury 100. speares, and 300. archers, and after these Earles followed 13. estates of the Realme, with 506. speares, and 1590. archers, that is to say, the Lord Burgauenny, the Lord Matrauers, the Lord Fitz Hughe, the Lord Clifford, the Lord Grey, the Lord Willoughby, the Lord Talbot, the Lord E. Courtney, the L. Bourcher, the Lord Rosse, the Lord Louel, the L. Ferrers of Chartley, the L. Harrington.

After came 87. knights, and their retinue, 940. speares, and 2852. archers. Of carpenters and other artificers the king had with him in wages to the number of 1000. and so the kings whole hoste besides labourers & artificers, amounted to the number of 25527. fighting men, of whom euery fourth man was a horseman. Those things thus ordered, and the Nauy for their conueyance ready apparelled, the K. entred his shippe, which was royally and sumptuously adorned: the sayle thereof was of purple silke, right beautifully embrodered, both with the armes of England & of Fraunce, and this ship they called the Kings chamber. He had also another the second a caricke of like apparell, which by the Kings commaundement they called the Kings hall, and these two he ordered to be the principall of all the Nauy. Before he departed the Realme, he constituted Iohn Duke of Bedford his brother, to be protector of his Realme of England in his absence.

On the first day of August the whole fléete arriued in Normandie, not farre from the Castell of Conque, where the king dubbed 48. knights, such as were worthie of that order. Now, when all the ships were discharged of their carriages, the king sent them againe into England, except such ships as were deputed for the carriage of guns and other engins and habiliments of warre.

This being done, the king sent men of armes on horsebacke to espie the situation and strength of the Castell of Humflew, and other nigh vnto those parts, which Gentlemen, with many prisoners returned, and great praye of beastes. Their enemies stricken with feare, euery man conueyed their goods and beasts into the Cities, Townes and Castels, not knowing which the king would first besiege: they strengthened their Townes and walles with stones, guns and other things necessary for their defence. The king take his enterprise to assege the Towne of Tonque, whose Castel was maruellously defensible, the assege whereof was giuen to the Duke of Glocester, chiefetaine of the kings auantguard, who constrained the Frenchmen so sore, what with assaults, with guns and other engines, that within short time, to wit, the fourth day of the siege, and the ninth day of August, they promised to yeeld the Castell to the Duke, if the same were not shortly relcued by the French: but when they heard no word of succour, they yeelded the Castell to the king, and he made sir Iohn Kikeley Captaine there.

Castell of Tonque taken by the English.

Also the Earle of Salisbury conductor of the kings second battell whiles the Duke of Glocester assieged the Castell of Tonque, wanne the Castell of Aumbeliers, and put out the Frenchmen thereof, which Castel so taken, with all that belonged thereunto, the king gaue to the same Earle. And thus this Noble Earle was the first that had any land giuen vnto him of the kings liberalitie in this conquest.

Castell of Aumbeliers yeelded to the English.

The Earle Marshall was sent to the Castell of Louers, which in short time he subdued, and after it was giuen to him by the king.

The eightéenth day of August, the king placed himselfe with his army before the Citie of Cane, on the south side néere vnto the Monastery of Saint Stephen, and the Duke of Clarence the kings brother was sent before with one thousand horsemen to kéepe the suburbes of the Towne, that the townsmen should not burne them, the Duke thus lodged on the north side, by the Monastery of Nuns of the holy Trinitie: the Earle Marshall lay on the left hand of the king, and the Lord Maltrauers hard by him, and by him were placed the Lords Talbot and Vmfreuile: and nert to them the Lords Neuill and Willoughby. On the right hand of the king lay the Earle of Warwike & the Lord Iohn Grey, and by them the Earles of Huntington & of Salisbury, and the Lord Gren-Cornewall.

King Henry besieged Cane

The kings army thus placed and set in order: the Abbey of Saint Stephen being munited with Frenchmen, when they sawe themselues to weake to resist the kings force, they toke and carried away both victualles and iewelles of the house, and brought them into the Towne next adioyning, and deuised how they mought set the Abbey on fire: but a certaine Monke of the place boldly put himselfe in ieopardy in the dead season of the night, to crépe on handes and féete, till hée came to the Duke of Clarence, whom he found lying in compleate harnesse, in a garden vpon the grasse, with his head vpon a stone, whom hée besought to preuent the ruine of his place, which else should be destroyed. For, said hée, it doth specially pertayne to you to preserue our Monastery, which are descended of the king which founded our place, builded it, and indued it with possessions, wherefore take mine aduise and I will bring you into the place, and the Duke following the Monkes counsell, toke scaling ladders, and came to the side of the Abbey, which the Monke knewe was not munited. The Duke hauing by this meanes gotten the place, brought the king into it.

Not

Not farre distant from this place was an other Monastery of women, right strong and defensible, which also that worthy Duke had received vnder his tuition.

The fourth day of September, at the breake of the day, the king caused all his trumpets to be sounded, and forthwith the ladders were rayled to the walles of the Towne, they fell to scaling them with great diligence, but many of them were cast backewards into the ditch, and their ladders with them: the French cast great stones vpon the Englishmen, they powred on their heades scalding water, molten lead, boiling pitch, and oyle, all which would not make the Englishmen forsake the assault, amongst whom Edmond Springes lately made knight, in his armour went vpon the walles of Cane, and fought very sore, both giuing and receiuing many woundes, and yet at length was ouercome and died. Notwithstanding the kings men ceased not to assault and set vpon the enemies so fiercely, on that one side, that they that were on the other side the Towne to keepe and to defend the same, were forced to leaue their standing, and to come to that side that the king assaulted. And thus when that side of the Towne was voyde of defence, the Duke of Clarence, in the place which was thought most safe, scaled the wals and came vpon the backs of the Frenchmen, which so sodainly astonied them, that they knew not whether it were better to go on forward against the king, or to turne backe to withstand the Duke.

Thus great destruction and slaughter was made of the Frenchmen, for the king meeting them in their forward, and the Duke of Clarence comming on the rereward, tooke all hope of safegard from them, and thus the king got the Towne, and entred the same by the gates, that the Duke had opened for him. After which entry of the king, he went to with great deuotion the principall Church of the Towne being of Saint Peter, there to giue laudings and praises to the Almighty God, for the obtayning of this so great a victory. All they that intended to prayes were maruellously inriched, for the inhabitants of that Towne were men of great substance: but there was no man so hardy that durst presume to robbe any Church, for feare of the kings iustice, which was extreme in that case, no women in the Towne were rauished by the Englishmen, but shortly after the king commaunded all women and children to be auoyded out of the towne, and so the towne was inhabited of new possessors. The king made sir Gilbert Vmfreuile Earle of Kyme, captain there, and sir Gilbert Talbot, and sir Iohn Popham bayliffes. Neuertheless the Castel of Cane was not yet gotten, they held it three weekes after the taking of the towne. After the taking of this town of Cane, the siege yet enduring before the Castel, the puissant Prince the Duke of Glocester, with his battell before Bayeux, they of the Towne and Castell yeelded vnto him.

Cane in Normandy wonne by king Henry.

The xx. day of September the Castell of Cane was deliuered vp to King Henry: and in short time the Englishmen had taken the Citie of Lieeux, and the Castel of Newbry: and not long after, all the fortifications, were it town, Castell or Citie within a great circuite about them, were taken and reduced to the kings obeysance.

Tho. Walsing. Whilest these things were in doing in Normandie, the fauourers of sir John Old-castel beganne to raged in England, who with great proffers and promise of money, stirred vp the Scots to inuade the Realme in the kings absence, affirming that the same would be easily wonne, and it was said that sir John Old-castell talked with William Dowglas the Scot at Pontfract, promising him a great summe of money, to perswade the people to come with him, and to bring with them, him, who was falsely called king Richard, and to set him out as king. Also indentures, and other writings were found, made betwixt sir John Old-castell & the Duke of Albany, in the which the Scots were inuited to besiege Rorborough and Berwike: whereupon the Duke of Albany besieged Berwike by water and land on eth side: and the Earle Dowglas did also besiege Rorborough, tarrying there xv. daies, vndermining to ouerthrew the walles, but it hapned at the same time Thomas Beawford Duke of Exceter, came to Bridlington vpon deuotion to that place, who straightwaies, so sone as he heard tidings thereof, went into those parts, gathering by the way as he went men of armes and archers. On the other side Iohn Duke of Bedford protector of the Realme, and other Nobles, to wit Ralph Earle of Westmerland, and Henry Percy Earle of Northumberland, with 60000. warriers, the Archbishop of Yorke Henry Bewet, which for great age might not indure to ride vpon an horse, caused himselfe to be brought to the English hoste in his chaire, there to comfort & incourage the hearts of the people, that they should more ardently defend their countrey, his Cleargy being there with him, & other, remoued those sieges: for the Scots in the night leauing their tents, ladders & other engins, with shame returned into Scotland.

Nouᵉ 8. Otho Colonna Cardinal of S. George Pope by name of Martin V. his Election put an end to ye Long Schism.

When these thinges were in good suretie toward the North, the Duke of Exceter with a chosen company of men of warre, toke his ships, and sayled into Normandy, where he landed, & toke his iourney towards Roane to the king, in the which iourney, he wanne the Citie of Ebroicen.

Titus Liuius. King Henry hauing deputed in all his townes and forces, Captaines and gouerners, into whose hands all the Frenchmen that should returne into the kings obeisance, should giue their othes of true allegiance. The first of October he departed from Cane with his people, leauing behinde him a sufficient garrison, and toke his iourney to the Castell of Coursey, which on the third day after was yeelded vnto him. The first of October he went to assiege Argentine, which Towne was very defensible and strong, with a Castell of great strength, but the inhabitants of this Towne answered the kings heraults, that if they were not succoured by the Frenchmen by a certaine day limited, they would deliuer both the Towne and Castel vnto the king vnder condition, to depart with their goods and when the time limited was come, the Towne and Castell were deliuered. After this, daily resorted to the king much people of Normandy, to do fealty vnto him, and to liue vnder his Empyre. The Citie of Sées which was right well peopled, and wherein were two Abbeis maruellous strong and defensible, yeelded vnto the king: likewise many other Townes in that prouince yeelded them vnto the king, without assault or br tell. These things thus done, the king toke his voyage toward ward Alanson, to receiue into his dominion the Towne of Semile, in which iourney he sent a great part of his host to two strong Abbeis, whereof the one was called Bomolins, and the other Essey, which if they had made resistance, he commaunded to be taken by force, but they submitted themselues to the kings authority. The king came to Alanson on the 15. of October, where he first caused his brother Humfrey Duke of Glocester to pitch his tents before the Castell, and the rest of the Towne himselfe attieged. This Towne and Castell was likewise yelded to the king in manner as the rest. The English men after this toke the Towne of Bolosine, and the Towne and Castell of Freswey: and shortly to recount, all the countrey by a great circuit, Cities, Townes and Castels were brought vnder the kings subiection. In this time, the Duke of Britaine accompanied with many great estates of his countrey came to king Henry, with whom he accorded a peace from the 17. day of October, vntill the last day of September, in the yere following. The Dolphine of France also desired to treat with the king of England for peace, to whose Embassadors the king appointed the Towne of Tonque, whereunto they might safely resort for the same treaty, but there was no good done.

The King besieged Phalbeys, which the French, to their power resisted right manfully, and made with them many battailes, and skirmishes: but in the ende the inhabitants, seeing the Englishmen more couetous of honour, then weary of paine, they couenanted with the king, that if by the second day of Januarie they were not deliuered from the siege, they should freely deliuer vnto the king their Towne. In this meane time was taken in England sir John Olde-castle, in the territory of the Lord Powesse, not without danger and hurt of some that toke him: neither could he himselfe be taken before he was wounded. At the which time all the states of the Realme were called to a Parliament at London, therein to prouide the king of a subsidie and aide of money, who toke great paines beyond the seas. These Lords & other when they heard tell that the publike enemy was taken, they agreed all, not to dissolue the Parliament vntill he were examined, and heard to answere in the same: wherefore the Lord of Powes was sent to fetch him vp with power, who brought him to London in a litter, wounded, and also a Cleark with him that was of counsell in all his secrets. Assone as the said sir John Olde-castell was brought into the Parliament before the Duke of Bedford, regent and gouernour of the Realme, and the other estates, his inditement was read before him, of his forcible insurrection against the king in Saint Giles fielde, and other treasons by him committed, the question was asked how he would excuse himselfe, and shew why he should not be deemed to die: but he seeking other talke beganne to preach of the mercies of God, and that all mortal men that would be followers of God, ought to preferre mercy aboue iudgement, and that vengeance pertayned onely to the Lord, and ought not to be practised by them that worship God, but to be left to God alone: with many other wordes to detract the time, vntill the chiefe Iustice admonished the Regent not to suffer him to spend the time so vainely, in molesting of the Nobles of the Realme: whereupon the Earle of Bedford regent gent commanded him to answere formally vnto the matter laid to his charge. The said sir Iohn being thus vrged, at the last after deliberation taken, he said, it is the least thing that I account of, to be iudged by you, as of mans iudgement: and againe, he began to talke, but nothing to the purpose, vntill the chiefe iustice commanded him againe to answere finally, and to informe them if he could, why he should not suffer death. To the which he stoutly answered, that he had no iudge amongst them, so long as his liege Lord King Richard was aliue, and in the Realme of Scotland, which answere when he had made, because there needed no further witnesse, he was commaunded to be drawne and hanged vpon a gallowes, and to bee burned hanging vpon the same, which iudgement was executed vpon him on the xviii. day of December in Saint Giles field, where when many honourable persons were present, the last words that he spake, was to sir Thomas of Erpingham, aduising him, that if he saw him rise from death to life againe, the third day, he would procure that his sect might be in peace and quiet: he was hanged by the necke in a chaine of iron, and after consumed with fire.

1418. King Henry kept his feast of the Natiuitie of Christ at Baiour in Normandie, where when the day limited was come, they of Phalois, with gates open deliuered the Towne to the King, and shortly after the Castell was yelded to him also.

The Duke of Clarence with his armed power conquered in this time the Townes and Castels of Harecourt, Fagnon, Tiwil, Cambrise, Courton, and diuers other, and also the strong Abbey of Bikilrom, all which places, the mightie Duke, with allæges, assaults, oppressions, and faire promises, especially obserued, in short time he subdued, to the kings Empyre.

An. reg. 6. The Duke of Glocester was sent to the Ile of Constantine, in the first entrie of which iourney, he obtayned the strong Castell of Caudey, from whence he went to the Towne and Castell of Aire, the inhabitants whereof yelded them with all their goods, to liue vnder the kings obedience: the Castell of Torney yelded to the Duke: the Town of Lew, the Castell of Saint Sauiour le Vicount, Valeiges, Breckcourt, and Who: all these submitted them to the Duke for the king.

King Henry during this time, sent of his owne company the Earle of Huntington to suruey certaine defensible places, which in short time he manfully reduced vnder the kings obeisance. The king sent also the Earle of Warwike with another company of men of warre, to assiege the Castell of Monfront, which Castell vnto him was deliuered on the 22. day of June.

When the Duke of Glocester (after he had beene with the king) had reprised his iourney towards Sharbrough, the Captaine of the same hauing knowledge of his purpose, and other Noble men that were deputed by the Frenchmen, for the defence of that place, assembled out of all partes the strongest men of warre, in marueilous great number, for the resistance of the Englishmen, and for the defence of the Towne: the Duke approched nigh vnto the Towne, whereunto he laid his siege, but not in all places, for the inhabitantes had broken the bridge without the Towne, whereby the Englishmen were depriued of their passage ouer.

Englishmen

Now to returne to the king, who had persewered the whole Lent, and also the solemnitie of Easter in prayers, fastings, vigils, almesdéeds, and other works of mercy, within the Towne of Balaur: from whence after Easter he went to Cane, where he solemnized the feast of Saint George, at the which feast he made 15. knights of the Bathe, fiue of them were, sir Lewes Robsart, sir Roger Saluine, sir Iohn Stewart, sir Iohn Shotebroke, and sir Iohn Mountgomery, whom he sent to besiege diuers places thereabouts. This being done, he deliuered to go to Roane, the chiefe and principall City of Normandy, notwithstanding that his company was greatly minished by the absence of the Duke of Glocster, that then lay at Sharbrough, as is afore shewed, and of the Earle of Warwicke that then besieged the Castell of Monfront. Neuertheless the king departed from Cane the ninth of June, & toke his voyage with all his people towards the Citie of Roane: in which iourney, because it was not farre out of his way, he first laid siege to the Towne of Louars, and compelled them within to yeld to him vpon conditions, on the éuen of Saint Iohn Baptist. King Henry besieged Louars.

Then the king on the 22. of June, remoued his army towardes Pontlarche, where hée laid his siege on the one side of the Towne, by the middle whereof, the riuer of Séene hath his course, but could haue no passage ouer the riuer to lay siege on the other side, for the bridge which was without the Towne was defended with a strong Tower, and a garrison: but king Henry commaunded to make boates of wickers, and those to be closed in beastes skinnes, by which boates, on the fift of July, the Duke of Clarence with his company passed ouer secretly in great number, and then besieged the other side of the Towne: but because the riuer of Séene diuided his host, whereby if eyther part should haue néede of other, they could not come togither for the riuer, the king caused to be made so many small square boates of the wicker aforesaid, that being tyed together, and cast into the riuer, hée made of them a bridge. When the inhabitaunts and garrisons perceiued them thus enuironed in all parts, they agréed with the King, that if within 15. daies they were not deliuered from this siege, they should deliuer to the King the Towne and Castell, and when the day was come, they performed promise: and this was the first bridge ouer the riuer of Séene that the King subdued to his power. Titus Liuius. King Henry besieged Pontlarche.

After the King had thus obtayned that bridge ouer the riuer of Séene, and that there was none other riuer or flood might let his iourney, with all the haste he might, hée entred his iourney towards Roane. The Citizens hearing the approch of their enemies, and fearing least they should be lodged in the suburbes, which were much larger than the Citie was within the walles, and was also much replenished with Monasteries, Churches, and Towers, burned the same, and made all éuen with the ground. To this City on the thirtith day of July this victorious King approched, against whom came the Citizens with their garrisons and men of warre, where the more part of all that day they continued in battell, and fought sore on both King Henry besieged Roan partes, but the Frenchmen were forced to seeke their succour within the walles of the Citie, whom in their recoile the King pursued still before the Citie, where he ordered his siege in this manner. First, the King with a Noble company of young and hardie men lodged himselfe before the gate of Saint Hilarie. The Duke of Clarence with his power was lodged before the gate of Caulx. The Duke of Excester, after he was come to the King, was lodged with his people before the gate of the Castell, called Beauuice. Earle Marshall was lodged before the gate called Harkeuile. The Earle of Warwicke, after he was come from the Castel of Donfrount, was lodged vpon the hill, where the strong Monastery of Saint Katherin was. The Earles of Salisbury and Huntington, were lodged there vpon the other side of the riuer of Seene: vpon whom their enemies made many assaultes: and because the riuer of Seene diuided the English host in two parts, the King caused to be made a strong bridge of timber ouer the same riuer, that when neede should require, they might haue free passage on foote and horse: and because their enemies should not approch vnto it, with their ships or gallies, the king caused to be made a great chaine to be drawne ouer the riuer, betwixt the Citie and the bridge. At that time the king of Portugale cosin to the king of England, sent a Nauie of ships well manned vnto the kings ayde, whom the king commaunded to lie betwixt the Citie and the Sea, to enclose the Citie from all succours by water. The Towne of Caudbecke fearing the danger of the time, couenanted with the king of England, that when the Citie of Roane were taken and deliuered into the kings obaysance, they in like manner would yelde them to him, without any assault, and vnder the same appointment accorded with the king, foure teene other defensible Townes and Castles that were nigh borderers vnto Roane. After many cruell battels and assaults, the Citizens fearing at length to be famished, dayly put out of the Citie a great number of poore people and other, but the hunger encreasing, they were forced to eate their horses, dogs, cats, rats, and mise: and when such and other like things were consumed and eaten, then the plague of famine entred the Citie, so that the people for default of relefe died, that the liuing might scarcely burie the dead, whereby that Noble Citie was brought into so much misery, that it is not lesse marueil than pitiful to heare.

In this meane time during this siege of Roane, the Duke of Excester besieged the Citie of Eneroys: also about the twentie of August king Henry had three marueilous victories in Normandy. The first was that 100. Englishmen took three great Lords at a place called Kilbuise, & put to flight 380. persons besides. The second was, 400. of his enemies entred within the suburbes of the Towne of Ebroicens, and 11. Englishmen chased them away and toke foure of them, and slue 12. and toke 40. of their horses. The third was, the enemies would indeed haue taken the Towne which was called Leuers, but the Captaine of the same with an hundred of our men went out against 1000. of them, and ouercame them, and toke 180. Gentlemen of the enemies. About this time also Captaine de la Bouche toke the towne of Pontoys by Paris.

When the Citizens of Roane, perceiued themselues maruellously afflicted by famine, (as is before shewed) and also to be in dispaire of succor, from the Frenchmen, now after halfe a yéeres siege and more, vpon certaine conditions, they deliuered to the King of England their Citie, Castle, tower, abbayes, Churches, houses, citizens, captaines, garrisons, and generallie all things that were within the Citie, whatsoeuer they were. The xix. day of Januarie, there had died within this Citie (as was said) for default of victuals during this siege mo than xxx. thousand people. This noble King the rather to relieue this oppressed Citie, ordained the same to be the chiefe chamber of all Normandie, and ordeined his exchequer, his treasurie, and his coynage to be kept in the same; he also edified a strong tower behinde the Castle. Whilest the King ordered his businesse at Roane, hee sent diuers Lords with strong puissance of people, to receiue the Castles of townes bordering vpon Roane, amongst whom the Duke of Clarence, in short time reduced to the King, the mightie Castle of Galiard, the towne of Vernon, the towne of Naunt, the Castle of Vandmount, and many other strong places and holds. 1419. Ann. reg. 7.

The Earle of Salisbury, with the garrison to him assigned toke the towne of Hounslow, the towne of Mounsieur de Villers, the towne of Ewe, the towne of Gurney, the new Castle, & generally all the places in that part.

This yéere Quéene Ioane mother to the Duke of Britayne, and the Kings stepmother being defamed of some wicked practise, by witchcraft, or sorcerie, that she had deuised the Kings death, by the counsell of Iohn Randolph Doctor of Diuinitie, of the order of the Friars minors, then of the couen of Shrowsbury, hir confessor, forfaited all hir lands and goods by Parliament, and hauing all her seruants put from hir, was committed to the custodie of Iohn Pellam, and by him sent to the Castle of Leeds in Kent, hee appointed nine seruants to attend hir, and to bring her into the Castle of Pemsey, there to be gouerned vnder his prouidence. Frier Randolph, being apprehended in the Ile of Iersey, was conueyed to Chirbrughe and there imprisoned, and from thence was sent to the tower of London, where at length, to wit, in the yéere of Christ 1429. on the fift of June, he was slaine by the parson of Saint Peters Church in the tower, falling out at words with him, and after Quéene Ioane was deliuered of hir imprisonment.

King Henry sent his brother Humfrey Duke of Glocester, accompanied with the Earle Marshall, and a great power of armed men, to lay siege before the towne and Castle of Iuorie, which towne, after many assaults and battels, the Duke toke by force: but the Castle thereof was not yéelded, till the 13. of May. The King also sent the Earle of Huntington with a power from Naunt, to the towne of Pontois, by which, if it were taken, he might haue the more sure and easie passage to Paris. Those which were sent, at the entrie of the night were come nigh vnto Pontois, where, in a wood they left their horses, and that done, in the darknes of the night, they went on foote to the ditches of the towne, which then were drie, where part of them lay on the banks bankes of the ditches, with their ladders in their hands ready to scale the wals when time would serue, and the residue bid them in the vines where they might be ready to enter the towne at the opening of the gates. At the breake of the day, they of the towne changed their watch, at the which change, the walles were left without watches for the time. But the Englishmen seeing time to accomplish their intent, raised their ladders, and scaled the wals, and by that meanes, entred the towne: where, some of them forthwith brake the gate, and made entrie for the rest of their company, which, when the garrisons of the towne perceiued, as men amazed, they turned themselues to flight. But not long after, they armed them, and assailed their enemies, but to the Englishmens great auaile, the Earle of Huntington with his company set spurs to their horses, and hasted them to the succour of their first company, whereby the Frenchmen as all discouraged and in despaire to saue the towne, at the sight of these new rescues that came to the Englishmen, leauing behinde them all their riches and substance endeuored themselues to escape by flight, and so the towne of Pointois, auoided of al Frenchmen, was left free to the English. After these enterprises thus atchieued, the King with all his companie came to the towne of Pointois, where he abode a certaine time, from whence he sent the Duke of Clarence with a chosen power of men to Paris, to view the situation and strength thereof, before which Citie, when he had tarried certaine dayes and had seene all that him liked, and that none of the Frenchmen would issue out of the Citie to fight with him, he returned to the King, and ascertained him of all that he had seene.

Bokinuillers yeelded.

On the xviii. of August, King Henry with all his host departed from Pointois. And because the Castle of Bokinuillers had done certaine inhumane cruelties to the Kings lands that bordered thereabout, to the intent to represse their malice, the King lodged himselfe not far from thence, and sent certaine to assault the same Castle, where both the inhabitants and garrisons feared so much the King, that as men desperate of all succours, they yéelded both Castle and goods. And then all the townes, Castles, and holds within a great circuite, without abiding battaile, yéelded them to the King: but that strong and mightie towne of Gyson, whereof the Castle is much more defensible than the towne, would not submit to the King, wherefore on the last day of August the King with all his host toke his iourney thither, and enclosed the towne with his pauilions and tents. Betwixt him and them of the towne, were many sharpe battailes and cruell assaults, but at all times the Englishmen put the Frenchmen to flight, wherefore the inhabitants and garrisons of the towne and Castle deliuered the same to the King in the xviii. day of September.

Enguerant.

In this meane time the Dolphin assembled an host of 20000. men at Monstrea and Faulcien, in purpose to fight with the Englishmen, and for the same by his letters he sent to Troyes in Champeigne for the Duke of Burgoyne, desiring him to haue his company in his iorney. At whose request the same Duke incontinent vpon sight of his letters, and vpon the suretie of the Dolphins oth, safely to goe and come, came vnto him to the place aforesaid, where notwithstanding his former oath, against both Gods law and mans law, the Dolphin caused him at his comming, abhominably and cruelly to be murdered. After whose death the Dolphins seruants dispoiled him of his array, and cast his naked body into a vile pit. The Duke being thus murdered, Philip his sonne, who had married the Lady Micquiell the Dolphins sister, entred into all his fathers possessions: and shortly after, he ioyned in amitie with the King of England, promising him in marriage his sister in law the Lady Katherine, & to be heire to King Charles: King Henry promised to deliuer to him so many of them as were guilty of his fathers murthering, as came into his hands, and the Dolphin should be for euer excluded from all title to the crown of France. The Earle of S. Paul was gouernor of Paris although he were but viii. yéres of age, he gouerned the Citie wisely, to the Duke of Burgoynes behoofe, who had put him into that charge. The Dolphin would haue excused himselfe of the murder lately committed, but could not, for he was led and gouerned by them that had committed it. Indéede diuers of them had their friendes killed, in the murder of Paris, when the Earle of Erminake and the other prisoners were killed there, and therefore to be reuenged on the Duke they cared not in what danger they put the Realme, nor in what blame the Dolphin came, who notwithstanding he put them from him, and they went out of the Realme, all this would not appease the matter, nor reconcile the Dolphin to the Duke Philip. Titus Liuius.

King Henry with his whole armie returned to Maunts, where of his host he made three battails, whereof the one he deliuered to the Duke of Glocester, whom he sent to subdue the strong towne called Saint Germayns, which after many battails and skirmishes, in short time was yélded to him for the King. The second battail he sent to the Castle of Mount Dye, which in like manner fearing the englishmens puissance, yélded them to the King. And with the third of the said battails the K. in his owne person went to assiege Mewlance, which aboue all other was most strong. The scituation of this towne was in a plenteous Ile, bet wixt two armes of the sea, no man mought approch nigh to assault it by land, but onely by the bridge: and by water no vessell might come nigh vnto it, for the infinite multitude of piles that were fired and hid in the riuers. This towne was also defended with high and strong walles, within it also there were people in great number, as well of the inhabitants as of garrisons of men of war, that were purposely deputed for the defence thereof. Wherefore the King considering the strength, and defence of this place, assembled diuers ships and other small vessels, wherein by right great labour, hee first anoyded and clensed the riuer of the foresaid piles, which being done, he made all those vessels to be fastned togither with chaines, and then he commaunded to be made certaine small Castles and towers of timber, which when they were finished, hee entended by strength of men, in those ships to assault the walles of the towne, but the garrisons and inhabitants being feared at the sight of these towers, before they were all finished, they sent their captaines to the King to treat with him for peace, which was granted them vpon condition, that if they were not aided by the last of Nouember, by the Frenchmen, they should deliuer the towne to the King, and when the day came they according to couenant deliuered the towne to the King, and then the King returned to Paunt, and sent the Duke of Excester to beseege the Castle of Galiard, which to him was yéelded the 20. of December.

1420. King Henry solemnized the feast of the Natiuitie of our Lord in the Citie of Roane: he sent the Earle of Salisburie to take the towne of Freseay, which in short time was deliuered to him. The Earle Marshall and the Earle of Huntington, were sent to subdue the prouince of Shenon, where the Dolphin had deputed a captaine with a strong power, which captaine met the two Earles and gaue them battaile, but the Englishmen remained conquerours, and thus the two Earles subdued the prouince of Shenon, without any great resistance.

Whilest these and many other victories were atchieued, the King continuing in the Citie of Roane, lauding God, the Ambassadors of Charles King of Fraunce, and of Philip Duke of Burgoigne, came to treate of peace, where of the King they were honorably receiued, and hee sent backe with them to the French King, and the Duke of Burgoigne, his Ambassadors with full authoritie to conclude this long sought peace, of which Ambassadors, the principall was the Earle of Warwicke in companie of certaine Bishops and other discréte men, accompanied with a strong power of armed men. These Ambassadors were first brought to the Duke of Burgoigne, because hee was next vnto them, and after they toke their iourney vntill they came to the Citie of Troys, where they found King Charles of Fraunce, with the Quéene his wife, and that beautifull Lady Katherine their daughter. And entering into communication of peace with the Kings Counsell of Fraunce, the way of peace was found betwixt those two Kings by aliance, that is to say, by a marriage to be made betwixt the most victorious King of England, and the Lady Katherine daughter to the King and Quéene of Fraunce: but because they perceiued that many things might not be done without the presence of the Kings, as well for the apposition of their seales for the ratifying of the articles of this peace, as for the solemnization of the matrimonie, and also that King Charles was a man of many péeres, they condescended that the king of England at a certaine day amongst them limited should come to the foresaid Citie of Troys, with as great an armed power as he would: at which day appointed, if he failed to be there, all his communication of peace should bee as voide. These things thus concluded and set downe in writing, the Earle of Warwicke with his company returned to the King of England, to whom they declared by order what they had done, who was content in all things to performe their appointments, and prepared for his iourney. He called together Knights, men of armes and archers to the number of sixtéene thousand, of them the more part were archers: and when the time came that hee would depart towards Troys (as hee was accustomed) hee diuided his people in three parts and battels, and two wings, and in that manner the eight day of May, he entered his iourney toward Troys in Campaigne, where hee was met by the Duke of Burgoigne accompanied with many noble men, two leagues without the towne, whom hee receiued with great honor and due obseruance. Then this most victorious King accompanied both of English and Frenchmen of euery estate and degree, entered the foresaid Citie of Troys, the streetes whereof without any abiding hee passed vntill he came to the Kings Palace, where King Charles and the Quéene his wife abode his comming, of whom he was receiued godly and after a princely manner. When the King of England was thus royally receiued, after the due resolutions on his part made to King Charles and the Quéene, hee departed from them, and by the Duke of Burgoigne and other great estates as well of England as of Fraunce, he was conueyed to his lodges. The Citie was diuided into two parts, whereof the one halfe was assigned to the Frenchmen and Burgonians, and the other halfe to the Englishmen: and because that part assigned to the Englishmen, sufficed not to receiue them all within the walles, but that a great part of them must be lodged in the suburbes, the King of England, because his people on that part should haue free concourse togither, he caused the wall on that part of the Citie where he was lodged, to be cast downe to the ground. King Charles gaue authoritie and power to Isabel his wife and Quéene, to Philip Duke of Burgoigne, and to certaine other of his Counsell plenarily to conclude the peace with King Henry, for him and for his Realme of Fraunce, vnder such conditions as should be decréed, and also to proue, ratifie, and confirme the same, by oth solemnized in the person of King Charles, without fraud, in all things to be obserued vnto the said King Henry, his heires and successors, by the said King Charles his heires and successors, &c. On the 21. of May, in the 11. yéere of the reigne of King Charles, in the Cathedrall Church of Troys, the King of England with the Duke of Clarence his brother, and other Dukes, Earles, Bishops, Barons, Lords of estate, and other prelates of England, and Isabel the Quéene of France, with the Duke of Burgoigne, and other of the Kings Counsell of France, and in that part his especiall commissioners, for and in the name of the King of Fraunce, and also for themselues, and in their proper names, in a great assembly of the three estates of France, vulgarly called their Parliament, concluded a peace betwixt the two Realmes of England and France, and the same ratified and approued with the conditions and articles that in part shall follow, whereupon writings were made, sealed with the broade seale of the said King Charles. Then immediatly Isabel the Quéene and the Duke of Burgoigne, in the name of King Charles, made a solemne oth vpon the holy Euangelists, that the same Charles, his heires and successors should obserue and kéepe, without fraud, the peace made betwixt the two Realmes. And the same oth the Quéene and the Duke of Burgoigne in their owne names and for themselues, their heires and successors, made vnto the King for him, his heires and successors, and after them as many as were there present both of the Kings Counsell, and also of the Parliament, as Bishops, Lords, knights, and commons, made the same oth to the King. And the 23. and 24. day of May the Chancellor of France, and many other Lords, bishops, prelates, lates, and noble men gaue the like faith and oth to King Henry of England.

Roger Wall. The third of June, being present the Councell of King Charles, Isabel Quéene of France, the Duke of Burgoigne, and the Parliament of France, and also the Duke of Clarence, with many Bishops, Lords, and Knights of England, with King Henry, the matrimonie was solemnized betwirt the most victorious King Henry of England, and the excellent and glorious Lady Katherine daughter to Charles of Fraunce and Isabel his Quéene. The peace that was confirmed betwirt the said two Kings and their Realmes was read as followeth.

King Henry from now forth during the life of King Charles, shall not name or write himselfe King of Fraunce, nor shall not suffer himselfe of his people so to be named or written. After the death of King Charles, King Henry shall be King of Fraunce peaceably with his heires and successours. And because King Charles by reason of his infirmitie is vnable to gouerne the common weale, King Henry during the life of Charles, shall rule and gouerne the Realme of Fraunce, to the profite and honor of the same King Charles. King Charles in all his writings shall name the same King Henry our sonne and heire of Fraunce, during the life of the said King Charles. King Henry shall be written, Henry King of England, and heire and regent of Fraunce, and in the like manner he shall write himselfe in all things that shall be authorized vnder his owne seale. King Henry shall call King Charles his father, and Quéene Isabel his mother, and shall honor them. Nor King Henry shall not prohibite, with-hold, nor defend King Charles his father of the crowne of Fraunce, nor the issues or reuenues thereof. And the Quéene his mother at all times during her life, he shall kéepe in due estate as belongeth to hir maiestie. &c. with diuers other articles which for breuitie I set not downe in this place.

After the final end and accomplishing of this marriage, couenants and conditions, ratified in all parts, King Henry accompanied of King Charles and of his counsell, of the two Quéenes, Isabel and Katherine, and of the Duke of Burgoigne, departed from Troys, and toke his iourney to Paris, and from Paris not many dayes after they all went to lay siege to the Citie of Sens, which was to them contrary, but before the whole host were setled in their places, the captaine Citizens and garrisons submitted their bodies and Citie with all that they had to the King. Then they hasted to Montreau, which towne they toke by force.

King Henry besieged Melune. Tho. Walsing. On the xv. of July they went to the Citie of Melune, and enuironed the same with a strong siege, for there were the Kings of England, of France, and Scotland, the Dukes of Burgoigne, Bauier, Clarence Bedford, and Excester, the Earles of March, Warwicke, Huntington, and Somerset, &c. This siege continued 14. wéekes and od dayes, from the feast of Mary Magdalen, to the feast of All Saints, not without in a manner euery day, a conflict and sore skirmish, but at length for want of victuals the besieged, yéelded themselues to the Kings of England and France, from whence the foresaid Kings with a great part of their armie went to Paris.

King

King Henry kept his Christmasse in the Citie of Paris, in the Castle of S. Anthony. And after he had holden a Parliament there he went to Roane, and there with his Normans, and Englishmen held a Parliament. And then when he had established sure guard for his Realme of France, and Dutchie of Normandie, he passed through Picardy to Caleis, and so to Douer, where with his Quéene he landed on Candlemasse day. 1421. Titus Liuius.

The fourteenth of Februarie Quéene Katherine was crowned at Westminster, vnto whom the King assigned to hir dowrie 10000. markes: also he consented to the deliuerie of the King of Scots, who had béen long prisoner in England, with condition, that before his departure out of England, he shall take to wife the Duke of Somersets sister, néece to the cardinall of Winchester.

The xvii. of March being Easter éue, Thomas duke of Clarence, the Kings brother, the Lord Rose Marshall, and his brother Gilbert Vmframuile Earle of Kime, and Iohn Gray made Earle of Tankeruill in Normandy, with many other Lords, were slaine beyond the water of Leire in France, & many Lords were taken prisoners, of the which were the Earle of Huntington and the Earle of Somerset and his brother, the Lord Fits Walter, and other, the bastard of Clarence, with strength, got his fathers body, brought it into England and buryed it at Canterbury, besides K. H. the fourth his father. Ann. reg. 9.

In a Parliament at Westminster it was ordeined that no man should prouer gold in paiment, but if it held waight, wherefore were ordained balances and weights. The King suppressed the French houses of religious monks and Friers, and such like in England, because they thought til of the conquest ouer France, their lands were giuen by him and Henry the first, to monasteries and colledges of learned men. Priories alians in England suppressed

In this Parliament was demanded a subsidie. The Bishop of Winchester lent the King 20000. pound to restraine the matter. The King hauing disposed all things in order concerning the Realme of England and the wars in Scotland, leauing in England his Quéene with a great power, to the number (after Enguerant) of 30. thousand, returned into Fraunce, where, after he had visited the King and Quéene of France at Paris, he tooke the Castle of Dzelur by assault. And when hee heard, that his enemies prepared themselues to battaile, he approched the sloud of Loyre, about which sloud it was said his enemies were: but against him came no man. Wherefore the King led his host to lay siege to the Citie of Sens, commonly called the Kings new towne, which towne for lacke of victuals yelded themselues and the towne to the King. Titus Liuius.

Iohn Lord Mortimer brake forth of the tower of London, and being afterwards taken, he was drawen and hanged: as shall be shewed in the second yéere of the raigne of King Henry the first.

In the moneth of October, when King Henry had deliuered the Citie of Paris from all annoiances, hee with his host went to beseige the Citie of Meaux in Brye, to which Citie nigh adioyning, is a place called the Market of Meaux, betwixt which two places floweth the riuer of Marne, Titus Liuius.

which also enuironeth both the same places.

This Citie was besieged all the winter, wherein were so many, and so great stormes and flouds of raine, that the Kings host was often annoyed with hunger and colde.

The 6. of December, at foure of the clocke in the afternoone, Lady Katherine Quéene of England, brought forth hir first begotten son in the Castle of Windsore, and his name was giuen him Henry: for there receiued him at the font, Iohn Duke of Bedford his vncle Lord Warden of England, and Henry the Kings vncle Bishop of Winchester, and Iaquelyn Dutches of Holland that remained then in England. Henry Chicheley Archbishop of Canterburie, doing the office of Baptisme.

1422. King Henry held his feast of Christs Natiuitie at the siege before Meux, for he would not giue ouer his siege.

In the moneth of Februarie the Knights that were in garrison, and the principall of the Citie of Mealx perceiuing that the sommer comming should cause the siege to be more light, and lesse painfull to the Englishmen, and difficill vnto themselues, departed the Citie, and went into that place, that An. reg. 10. is called the Market of Mealx, as to the more defensible holde, after whose departing the common people hauing none abilitie to resist the Kings power, yéelded themselues and the Citie to the King. After this in the moneth of May, when the King had sore beaten the foresaid Market of Mealx, he constrained the Frenchmen that were besieged, to condescend vnto certaine couenants, and to deliuer the place vnto him: and shortly after were deliuered to the King the towne of Dreux in Valois, the Castle of Pier Pountmeralaw, Offemount and many others. After the rendring of these townes and Castles, the King sent ouer into England prisoners 160. which landed at Hampton on the first of July, from whence they were brought in carts to the tower of London, and the King returned to Paris.

Quéene Katherine sailed into France.

In the moneth of Aprill Katherine Quéene of England shipped at Hampton, and sailed ouer into France with a strong power, vnder the conduct of Iohn Duke of Bedford the Kings brother, Humfrey duke of Glocester being appointed Warden of England, in the Duke of Bedfords place: when the comming of Quéene Katherine was knowne to King Henry hir husband, and to Charles King of France, both these Kings, and with them the Quéene of France, accompanied with many great Lords and estates, as well of England as of France, went to méete hir at Boys de Viscenne, where she was ioyfully receiued of them, as if she had béen an Angel sent from God. The 11. day of May the two Kings of England and France, with their Quéenes departed from Boys de Viscenne, and went to Paris: the King of England and his Quéene were lodged in the Castle of Louure, and the King of France and his Quéene were lodged in the pallace of S. Paul.

King Henry sicknes to the death.

King Henry hearing that the Dolphin with a great power besieged the towne of Guisney, hee determined to goe himselfe to the raising of the siege, and so came to the towne of Corbeil, and to Senlis, where he waxed so sicke, of an hot burning ague, with a vehement flixe, that hee was constrained trained to take and send his brother Iohn Duke of Bedford, Thomas Beawford duke of Excester, the Earles of March, and Warwicke, to rescue them of Colney: but the Dolphin raised his siege and departed thence. King Henry his disease increasing, made his testament, appointed his treasure and iewels to be sold, his debts to be payed, aswell to the pleasaunce of his souldiers as to other vnto whom he ought good, either in England or in France: he ordayned his brother Iohn Duke of Bedford to be regent and gouernor of Fraunce and and Normandie, and committed the kéeping of Henry his sonne to Henry Beawfort Bishop of Winchester, and to Thomas Bewfort, Duke of Excester, he departed this life in the Castle called Boyes de Viscenne, not farre from Paris, on the last of August, in the yére 1422. when he had raigned nine yéres fiue moneths and odde dayes. There was present at his death King Charles of Fraunce, and the two Quénes: but before his death this most prudent King disposed the guard of the young Prince his sonne, and the defence of the Realme of England, to his brother Humfrey Duke of Glocester, but the custodie of the body of this young Prince, the King committed to his vncle the Duke of Excester, to indoctrine him in all good manners: and the reuenues of the Dutchie of Normandy, he bequeathed to his brother Iohn Duke of Bedford, for the gouernance of the same Dutchie and of the Realme of France: he appointed his debts to bee paid out of his treasurie, and of his iewels. In his life time he rédified the castle of Kenelworth, he builded there a most pleasant place, and caused it to be termed le pleasaunt marish, King Henry the eight, caused the said banqueting house to be taken downe, and part of it to be set vp in the base courte at Kenelworth: he rédified his royall manour that then was called Shéene, now Richmond: he founded two monasteries vpon the Thamis not farre from Richmond, the one of Carthusians, which he named Bethlem, the other religious men and women of Saint Bridget, and that he named Sion. He founded Gartar, principall King at armes of all Englishmen, and also the brotherhod of S. Giles without Creples gate of London. He gaue 1000. markes to the worke of Westminster Church, more he gaue to the same Church a faire Psalter, with another booke called Flores historiarum, both verie faire written, and enlumined, and a royall scepter of gold, for the Quéene. The ring that King Richard the second gaue vnto S. Edwards shrine, being taken away, this King Henry recouered againe, in the which ring there was a Rubie, estéemed worth a thousand markes in value: he gaue to the colledge of Windsore, or chappell of Knights, of Saint George and of the gartar, an Image of massy siluer to the honor of our blessed virgin Mary, the mother of Christ. Executors of his testament were Henry Fitz Hugh, Walter Hungerford, Walter Bewchampe, Lewes Robsart, William Porter, and Robert Babthorpe Knights, and Iohn Woodhouse, and Iohn Lauenthorpe Esquiers: his goods, cattels, iewels, and money came to 40000. markes, as appeareth by the record of Henry the first, the first yére. Shortly after his departing, his bowels were enterred in the Church of S. More de Folles, and his corps well enbaulmed and seared, was closed in lead: and accompanied with all the Lords, estates, and commons of England that were there present, with also many Lords and great estates, as well of France, Normandie, Burgondy, and Picardy, was brought with great honor to Paris, and set in the Church of our Lady, where were done for him right solemne exequies, with distribution of money and great almes to the poore. From thence he was brought to Roane, where he abode long. When all things necessarie were prepared for the conueiance of the dead King into England, his body was laid in a chariot, which was drawen by fower great horses: and aboue the dead corpes they laid a figure made of boiled hides or leather, representing his person, as nigh to the semblance of him as could be deuised, painted curiously to the similitude of a liuing creature: vpon whose head was set an Imperiall diademe of golde and precious stones, on his body a purple roabe furred with ermin, and in his right hand he held a scepter royall, and in his left hand a ball of golde, with a crosse fired thereon. And in this manner adorned was this figure laid in a bed in the said chariot, with his visage vncouered toward the heauens: and the couerture of his bed was of red silke beaten with golde: and besides that, when the bodie should passe through any good towne, a canapie of marueilous great value, was borne ouer the chariot, by men of great worship. In this manner accompanied of the King of Scots, and of all Princes, Lords, and Knights of his house, he was brought from Roan to Abeuile, where the corpes was set in the Church of Saint Offrane. From Abuile, he was brought to Hedin, and from thence to Montreuil, so to Bulloigne, and to Calice. In all this iourney were many men about the chariot clothed all in white, which bare in their hands torches burning, after whom followed all the houshold seruants in blacke, and after them came the Princes, Lords, and estates of the Kings blod, adorned in vestures of mourning: and after all this, from the said corpes the distance of two English miles followed the Quéene of England right honorably accompanied. In this manner they entred Calice, from whence after a few dayes they departed, and continued their iournies by water and land vntill they came to London, where they arriued about the tenth of November, and so were conueyed by London bridge, through Cheape to the Cathedrall Church of Saint Paul: vpon the couering of the formost of the fower horses that conueyed the chariot, were imbrodered the ancient armes of England: vpon the couerture of the second horse were the armes of England and Fraunce, in one shield quarterly: vpon the couerture of the third horse was imbrodered the armes of Fraunce, without any manner of difference: and on the fourth horse were the armes of King Arthur, which was three crownes golde in a field azure. When his exequies were solemnised at Saint Pauls Church in London, he was brought from thence to be enterred in the Abbey of Saint Peter at Westminster amongst his Noble ancestors, at the féete of King Edward the Confessor, a royall image of siluer and gilt was laid vpon his tombe, which Quéene Katherine his wife caused to be made for him, but about the latter end of King Henry the eight, the head of the Kings image being of massy siluer, was broken off, and conueyed cleane away, with the plates of siluer and gilt that couered his body. Thus this most victorious and renowned renowmed King entred the way decréed for euery creature, in the flower and most lustie time of his age, to wit, but five and thirtie yéeres olde, when he had raigned nine yéeres, ten moneths, and od dayes. The first of Henry the first, Quéene Katherine had assured for hir ioynter, Castles, lands, tenements, named and deliuered vnto the summe of 40000. scuts, euery two scuts worth a noble.

King Henry the sixt.

HEnry the first, borne at windsore, being an infant of eight moneths old, began his raigne the last of August, in the yéere 1422. Continuing the time of his youth, the gouernance of the Realme was committed to Humfrey Duke of Glocester, and the gard of his person to Thomas Duke of Excester: and to Iohn Duke of Bedford was giuen the regiment of France, who right wisely and nobly ruled the same so long as he liued. This Henry was of nature gentle and méeke: he loued better peace than war, quietnes of minde than busines of the world: honestie than profit: rest and ease, than trouble and care: all iniuries that euer happened to him, which were many, he suffered patiently, and reputed them to be worthily sent of God for his offences. Ann. reg. t. Titus Liuius.

The 21. of October, Charles King of France passed out of this world, and was buried at Saint Denis in France, after he had béen crowned King 46. yéers. He was greatly beloued of his people all his life time, and therefore was called Le Roy Charle le biew ame: but yet he had a sickenes the more part of his raigne, that being out of his wit, he would strike all that came nére him: it toke him first in the Citie of Mans shortly after he had béen in Flanders to reduce the Flemings to obedience. There was by reason héereof great trouble in France, because those that were nére to him in linage, sought euery one to haue the chiefe gouernment in their hands. When he thus died, the Realme was left in miserable state, for people of each strange nation were gouernors in the Realme. First, the Englishmen had conquered a great part, and sought to haue the rest: and the Duke of Burgoigne, with many other great Lords alied with him, sought to conquer all, for the young King Henry of England, who claimed then to be King of France, and likewise in all the money that was coined, the armes of both Realmes were quartered. The Crownes that were stamped in the time of Charles, and al other money more, were forbidden to be currant, and called to the mint. King Henry caused a péece to be stamped called a Salus, worth two and twenty shillings, and Blans of eight pence a péece, and so in no place of France where King Henry was obeyed, any other money was receiued, but such as had the armes of France and England stamped on it.

edicts and customs of the said Realme, as was alledged, proclaimed himselfe King after the decease of his father, notwithstanding, by the agrément made at the marriage of his sister to the King of England, it was otherwise concluded (as before is recited:) and so there were two Kings in France, Henry and Charles, both which striuing for the crowne, the Realme was in way of perdition.

Parliament at London.

A Parliament at London began the ninth of November, wherein was graunted to the King a subsidie for three yeres, fiue nobles of euery sacke of woll that should passe out of the land.

King Charles of France began now to aduance himselfe into the Duke of Burgoigne lands, and the Constable of Scotland, accompanied with many Lords, and men of war of King Charles side, laid siege to the towne of Carnens, but the Marshall of Burgoigne assembled men of war to raise the siege, with whom went Thomas Mountacute Earle of Salisburie, a valiant man, and now being come togither, fought with their enemies, wan the field, toke the Constable, whose sonne was slaine in the field. Many of King Charles men were slaine and taken to the number of ten or twelue hundred good men of warre. After which victorie, the Earle of Salisburie laid siege to Montaguillon in Campaigne, and continued there an eight monethes before he could haue it rendred, and then caused the same to be raised and thrown downe.

The Earle of Salisburie wan diuers holdes in Fraunce, and raised them.

Ann. reg. 2.

Then the Earle of Salisbury besieged the Castle of Monnes, which at length was yéelded to him: this Castle he also raised and beat downe, which was the strongest place in all Champaigne, it was after repaired by King Charles.

Duke of Bedford married the Duke of Burgoynes Daughter. Phil. Comi.

About the same time the Duke of Burgoyne gaue his sister the Lady Anne in marriage to the Duke of Bedford, and so the alliance was made more strong betweene the English and the Burgonians.

Philip de Comines writeth, that Iohn Duke of Bedford, regent in France for the Englishmen, his monthly allowance in that office amounting to 20000. crownes at the least.

Thomas Langley Bishop of Durham was made Chancellor of England.

The Dukes of Burgoyne, Bedford, and Britaine, met in the towne of Amiens, there was also the Earle of Richmont, brother to the Duke of Britaine, and many other great Lords, which Earle of Richmont had married Margaret, the Duke of Britaines eldest sister, sometime wife to the Duke of Guyen, and Dolphin of France. These three Dukes were fiue or sixe dayes together in Amiens, in great friendship and reuerence eche to other, promising perpetuall amitie to continue. After this, the Duke of Britaine returned into his country, the duke of Bedford (regent of France) to Paris, and the duke of Burgoyne to Arras: but within a while after, the Earle of Richmont reuolted to King Charles, vpon some misliking he had conceiued against the Duke of Bedford: King Charles receiued him ioyfully, and made him Constable of France.

About the same time the Duke of Bedford caused Crotoy to be besieged both both by water and by land, which after foure or five moneths siege, was both towne and Castle deliuered to the Duke, where he ordained Ralph Butler to be captaine. At that time the Duke of Bedford was obeyed as regent in all places through Vimeu, Pontieu, and Picardy, from Paris to Reins, Chalons, and Troyes vp to the water of Loyze.

About the feast of S. Andrew the captaines of King Charles assembled their forces about le Fere, and Nelle, and toke by night the towne of Campeigne, and spoiled the inhabitants of all their goods. Shortly after came the Duke of Bedford to Mondidier with twelue hundred fighting men, and requested the Lord of Sanenses to lay siege to Campeigne, and he would finde him men and money to wage them, whereunto he granted, and after fiftéene dayes siege had the same deliuered.

In this meane time, to wit, about the xvii. of Nouember, a Parliament began at Westminster, wherein the yong King was set in his maiestie among his Lords. And the xxvi. day of Nouember the King with the Quéene remoued from Westminster vnto Waltham holy Crosse, and from thence to Hertford, where he held his Christmasse, and the King of Scots with him: and the foresaid Parliament was adiourned vnto the twentieth day after Christmasse: In the which Parliament, among other actes, was ordained that what prisoner that for grand or petie treason was committed to warde, and after wilfully brake or made an escape from the same, it should be déemed petty treason, and the goods of him so escaping should be forfeited to the Lord of the soile that they were found in. Parliament at Westminster. 1424.

In the moneth of February, Iames Stewart the yong King of Scots, who was taken by the Englishmen in the eight yéere of King Henry the fourth, and had remained in England prisoner till this time, was now according to couenant, deliuered out of Pomfret Castle, vpon pledges, to wit, Dauid Okliff sonne to the Earle of Athole, Alexander Earle of Crauford, Alexander Lord of Gourdon, Iohn de Lyndesey, Patricke sonne and heire to Sir Iohn Lyon, Andrew Grey of Soules, Dauid de Ogleby, Sir William de Rothin, Dauid Mogresse, and William Olifant: the same King of Scots was then married in the priory Church of Saint Mary Oueries in Southwarke, to the Lady Iane the Dutches daughter of Clarence, by hir first husband Iohn Earle of Somerset, cosen to King Henry, and they kept their marriage feast in the Bishop of Winchesters place, by the said Church of saint Mary Oueries, K. of Scots released of imprisonment.

The fourteenth day of February, the foresaid Parliament being againe holden at Westminster, for breaking of the foresaid acte of escaping out of prison, Sir Iohn Mortimer was accused, by a yeoman named William King of Wimolton in Ridale, in Yorkeshire, seruant vnto Sir Robert Scot Knight, lieutenant of the tower of London, of diuers points of treason as followeth: First, that he counselled with the said William King, to the end to breake out of prison, and promised to him for the same ten pound in his purse, an habergeon, and a dublet, the yéerely value of forty pound land, & in processe an Earledome. Also, that the said Mortimer should say, that he would goe into Wales, vnto the Earle of the Marches, and there he would raise fortie thousand men, Mortimer accused of treason for escape out of the Tower.

and with that power he would enter the land, and strike off the heads of the Lord protector, and of the Bishop of Winchester, to the intent that he might tell or play with some of his money. And furthermore he accused him, that the said Mortimer should say, that the Earle of March was but a daw, saue that he was the greatest, noblest, and worthiest of blood, and should be King by right inheritance, and that he himselfe was next rightfull heire to the said crowne after the said Earle of March, wherefore if the said Earle would not take vpon him the crowne and rule of the land, he said that he else would. And ouer this, the said William alleaged to the said Sir John Mortimer, that he should say, that if he failed of his purpose, and might not ioyne vnto the Earle of Marches, that then he would saile vnto the Dolphin, and ride and take his part, where he wist well he should be accepted, and haue good aide of him to bring about his purpose. All which matter this William would proue vpon the same Mortimer with his body: or as the Lords & commons should award. Which John Mortimer, after the statute aforesaid escaped out of the tower, and was taken againe vpon the towre wharfe sore beaten and wounded, and on the morrow brought to Westminster, & by the authoritie of the said Parliament, he was after drawen to tiburne, hanged, and headed, of whose death (saith Hall) no small slander arose: his body was buried in ỹ gray friers church.

Joh. Gerson writes agt. ỹ Pope's Infallibility

A Gen.l Council call'd at Pauia but order'd to meet at Basil in 1430.

Richard Wooduill was created Baron Wooduill: John Sturton Knight Baron Sturton for him and his heires: and Thomas Hoo Knight Baron Hoo and of Hastings.

King Henries people besieging the Castle of Dinry in the marches of Normandy, they within compounded to yeeld at a day assigned, if the Englishmen were not fought withall before the same day by the Frenchmen: whereupon as well King Charles as the Duke of Bedford made great leuies of men to keepe the day appointed, and herewith they drew both towardes Paris. But when King Charles heard how the Duke of Bedford was comming towards him with such a puissance, he was counselled to draw backe, and so he did towards Vernole in Perch, whom the Duke of Bedford followed, so that he found his armie neere to Vernole. And when either armie was in sight of the other, they put themselues in order of battell, and the Englishmen made an hedge of their horse behind their battell, because the French should not strike in among them on the backes: and the Frenchmen ordered themselues in battell array, making a great battell of footemen, in the which they put the stoute and chiefest men. They appointed their horsemen to set on the Englishmen a trauerse, the battelles on foote came vpon and ioyned, where was a sore fight betwixt them, continuing two houres togither, that no man might iudge which way the victorie would incline: but at length, the men of King Charles began to breake, and then the Englishmen began to thrust in among them, and did so much, that they discomfited their enimies. There were slaine the Earle Dowglas Duke of Turon, Iames Dowglas Earle of Wighton, Iohn Earle of Bougham, with the vicount Nerbon, & many other, to the number of ten thousand (saith Fabian:) foure thousand saith mine Author (a Frenchman) who saith, that the Duke of Bedford bare himselfe most valiantly, fight-

ting with an axe so fiercely, as he had the praise of all other. The Earles of Salisburie and Suffolke gouerned themselues also right valiantly.

The Lord of Tozsy and other Lords of Normandy, which before had taken part with the Englishmen, this day turned to the French, hoping that the Englishmen should haue lost the battell. True it is, that the Frenchmen would neuer suffer their King Charles to be present in person at any battell, but when they thought to pitch a field, they sent him into some strong towne. By the losse of this battell fought on the seuenteenth of August before Vernole in Perch, King Charles was put to great hindrance, so that he was not able in puissance to giue the Englishmen any battell, hauing enough to do to defend and keepe his townes and fortresses against them. Ann. reg. 3.

The Duke of Bedford returned into Normandy, where he punished many that fled from him in the day of battell. Then went he to Paris, where he found the Duke of Burgoyne, who receiued him, and the Dutches of Bedford his wife, the said Duke of Burgoynes sister, right toysfully, and made to them a great feast, at which feast also were the Earles of Salisburie and Suffolke, the olde Quéene of France, mother to King Charles, and many other great estates, of diuers nations, amongst the which, the Dutchesse of Bedford was holden for the most gallantest Lady of all other, and with her, the countesse of Salisburie a very faire Lady. The Duke of Bedford that had neuer iusted before, iusted there.

The Duke of Burgoine enamoured with the Countesse of Salisburie, whereof came great displeasure and losse to England, by the breach of amitie betwixt the English and the Burgonians.

The Duke of Burgoine was a very goodly and amiable man of personage, doing excellently wel whatsoeuer he toke in hand, and especially in daunsing and iusting he exceeded all other of his countrey. At this feast, he became desirous of the countesse of Salisbury, and some messages passed betwixt them, which came to the Earle of Salisburies eare, whereof he was nothing contented with the Duke, and therefore sought to doe him displeasure afterward.

This feast being ended, the Duke of Burgoyne went into his countrie of Burgoyne, and there toke to wife the Dutchesse of Neuers which had béen wife to his vncle the Duke of Neuers, and had by her two children. She was halfe sister to the duke of Burbon, but she lined not long with him. The duke of Burgoyne also gaue his sister the yongest, named Agnes, in mariage vnto Charles de Burbon Earle of Cleremont, for the which, the Duke of Bedford and other Englishmen were wroth, for that he made such aliance with the enemies without their accord.

The second cause of breach of amitie, betwixt England and Burgoine.

This yére the Frenchmen repaired the Castle of Mouns in Champaigne, which had béen a little before destroyed by the Englishmen, and now it was well stuffed with victuals and men, which began to make sore warre to the country, but shortly after the Earle of Salisbury besieged them, and with him Messire Iohn de Luxenburg, who did so much, that the Castle was yéelded to him. The Duke of Bedford with his wife the dutchesse, lay for the most part in Paris leading there a pleasant life with the Lady whom he greatly loued, and was lodged in the house of the Tournelles néere to the Castle S. Anthony, where he made faire buildings, and his men still made sore wars against the French towards the riuer of Loyre, and other places, vpon base Normandy, and toward the Dutchie of Alanson.

Earle of March sent into Ireland.

This yéere in England Edmond Mortimer Earle of March with many other Lords, and a great retinue, were sent into Ireland, where the said Earle of March ended his life without issue, whose inheritance descended to Richard Plantagenet, sonne and heire to Richard Earle of Cambridge beheaded at Southampton, as is afore shewed.

Iaqueline Dutchesse of Henault.

This yéere the wars began in Henault, by reason of Iaqueline Dutchesse of Henault, daughter to Duke William of Henault, uncle to Philip Duke of Burgoyne, and also daughter to Duke Iohn of Burgoynes sister, wife to the forenamed William, and so double cosin german to Philip, Duke Philip now liuing. This Iaqueline was married to Iohn Duke of Brabant hir cosin german, and cosin german also to Duke Philip of Burgoyne, and before that, she was married to the Earle of Pontioue, sonne to King Charles le bien aime, eldest brother to King Charles now liuing, but notwithstanding that she was thus married to the Duke of Brabant, yet was she conueyed by Sir Robert Knight, and brought into England to the Duke of Glocester, and there married to the said Duke of Glocester: and so she had two husbands aliue at once, Brabant and Glocester, a thing thought vnreasonable, both against God, the world, and the Church, for she had béen foure or fiue yéeres in company with the Duke of Brabant, but there had fallen some variance betwixt them, and so she was come from him into Henault.

Iaqueline married to the Duke of Glocester.

Rob Fabian. Parliament at London. Subsidie paied.

About the last of Aprill began a Parliament at Westminster, wherein was granted a subsidie of twelue pence in the pound of all manner marchandise comming in, or passing out of this Realme, three shillings of a tunne of wine for the terme of three yéeres to be holden. And furthermore it was enacted, that all merchant strangers should be set to an English host, within fiftéene dayes of their comming to their port sale, and to make no sale of any merchandise ere they were so lodged: and then within 40. dayes following to make sale of all they brought, and if any remained vnsold at the said forty dayes end, that then all such merchandise vnsold to be forfeited. Also that all strangers that carried any woolles out of this land, should pay three and forty shillings foure pence for a sacke custome, where the English merchants and denisons payed but fiue nobles, &c.

All strangers to be lodged within English hosts.

The Duke of Glocester goeth into Holland.

After the marriage had béen solemnised betweene the Duke of Glocester, and Iaqueline Dutchesse of Holland, as is aforesaid, within a moneth after the Duke of Glocester assembled an army of twelue hundred fighting men at the least, all Englishmen, and taking the Dutchesse with him in company, passed ouer to Calice, and straight from thence to Lens in Artois, and so into Henault, making no outrage as he passed through Duke Philips countries. At their comming into Henault, many townes obeyed them, and other refused so to doe: likewise were the Nobles diuided.

A third cause of the amitie to be broken betwixt England and Burgoyne.

The Duke of Burgoyne hearing of this, was sore offended for the iniurie done to his cosin of Brabant, the dishonor of his cosin the Dutchesse Iaqueline, and the euill dealing of the Duke of Glocester, and therefore, to aid the Duke of Brabant he appointed many of his captaines with twelue hun-

ded fighting men Picards, to go against the Duke of Glocester. The Duke of Brabant was a man but of weake complexion, and therfore by the counsell of Brabant it was ordayned, that his younger brother Philip Earle of Saint Pol, should be chiefe Captaine of the warre against the Duke of Glocester. He had a great army, as the more part of the Nobles of Brabant, of Henault, and of Burgoyne, in all fiftie thousand. Piere de Luxenburg, Earle of Connarson, his nere kinsman, had the leading of the army, for himselfe was but young. The Duke of Glocester had put off his men in garrison within the towne of Brayne, in the county of Henault, who made fore warre to the countrey about, but the Earle of S. Pol, and Connarson did come and besiege Brayne, continuing afore it 12. daies before they within yelded, compounding to depart with bodies and goods saued. These hauing won Braine, destroyed it vtterly, and that done, tooke the field with all puissance, which was great: and the Duke of Glocester likewise came into the field, so that they approched neere togither, and the vantcurrers skirmished, but the battel ioyned not. The Duke of Glocester had sent his herault, and written to the Duke of Burgoyne, calling him traytor, and disloyall to the king of England and Fraunce, for that he had sent men in ayde against him in ayde of the Duke of Brabant, and therefore offered him the combate: whereunto the Duke of Burgoyne answered, that he would accept the combat willingly, denying that euer he had fayled of his promise: but contrariwise, that the Duke of Glocester had done great wrong to the Duke of Brabant, to haue bereft him of his wife, contrary to the ordinance of God, and of holy Church, and for other words which the Duke had vttered against the Duke of Burgoynes honour, he gaue him the lie, and so farre the matter went in words betwixt them, that the day was appointed for the combate, and the Duke of Burgoyne chose for Iudge of the combate, the Emperor of Almaine, and the Duke of Burgoyne sent the Duke of Glocester a safe conduct, to depart safely into England, to prepare himself of things necessary for the cõbat, whereupon both the campes brake vp: the Duke of Glocester went to Mons in Henault, to the Dutches his wife (so termed) and gaue her to vnderstand that he was desirous to trie the combate with the Duke of Burgoyne, and many other things he tolde her, which he performed not; for within foure daies after, he toke all his power with him, and returned into England, doing no hurt by the way to the Duke of Burgoynes countries, and left the Dutchesse in Mons, finally accompanyed with the people of that countrey. Shortly after his departure, the Duke of Burgoyne sent the Lord Lilladam to the towne of Mens to receiue Iaqueline the Dutchesse, who being deliuered vnto him, he conueyed her to Gant, where the Duke and she made great semblance of ioy togather, she promising to be gouerned alwaies by his aduise, but to go to her side husband the Duke of Brabant she would not: but what semblance soeuer she made, she had an other thought in her head, as it appeared afterward, for when she espied her time, she stale away into her countrey of Holland, where she was well receiued of many Lords, and began forthwith to maintaine warre against Duke Philip of Burgoyne, and sent to goyne, and the losse of many townes in France.

Humfrey duke of Glocester chalengeth the combate with Philip Duke of Burgoyne.

the Duke of Glocester for ayde, who sent to her a thousand fighting men, vnder the conduct of the Lord Fitzwaters, who landed them in a place called Brewers hauen. During these troubles in Henault, diuers Lords of the countrey, held with the Duke of Glocester, and therefore had their lands sore wasted. Also Messire Englebert Denguien held on the party of Philip Duke of Burgondy: and hée, when he toke any of the Englishmen, would cause one of their thombs to be cut off, and so sent into England.

The Duke of Burgoyne fearing least Iaqueline would deliuer the countrey of Holland into the possession of the Duke of Glocester, he assembled his power, & went into Holland, to put the countrey into obeisance. At his comming thither, Iaqueline accompanied with many Nobles of the countrey, and the Lord Fitzwaters, would haue defended his landing, but notwithstanding all the defence they could make, he entred vpon them, and there nére to the Towne of Brussels, they ioyned in battell, the Duke of Burgoyne and his people against the Englishmen and Hollanders, taking the Dutchesse Iaquelines part: there was a fierce battell on all sides, but in the ende, the Hollanders and Englishmen were all discomfited, and there died in that place aboue seuen or eight hundred, besides those that were taken prisoners: the Lord Fitzwaters hardly escaped.

1425. After this battell got by the Duke of Burgoyne, diuers townes of the countrey reuolted to him against Iaqueline the Dutchesse, as Dordrecht Schiedam, and many other. Shortly after, the Duke of Burgoyne leauing garrisons in those Townes that obeyed him, to make resistance against the Dutchesse that lay in the Towne of Gant, he returned into his countrey of Flanders and Artois, there to prepare such abilliments as were necessary for him to vse at the combate appointed betwixt him and the Duke of Glocester. The Duke of Glocester likewise in England made his prouision of his abilliments and furniture, but the Duke of Bedford brother to the Duke of Glocester, toke great paines to make them friends: and also the counsell of the young king of England, were nothing content with this variance, doubting least it might be occasion that the Duke of Burgoyne might withdraw himselfe from their amitie, wherby their busines in France should be hindered. The Duke of Bedford therfore toke his iourney from Paris to Calice, and so into England, to the end to agrée the said Dukes: he toke with him the Dutches his wife, and not past a foure or fiue hundred men.

An. reg. 4. About Michaelmas Peter Duke of Quimbre, Prince of Portugall came into England, and was honourably receiued and feasted by the Kings vncles, and was also elected into the order of the garter.

Humfrey duke of Glocester married Elianor Cobham.

When Humfrey Duke of Glocester vnderstood that Pope Martine the fift had giuen sentence, that the first marriage with the Duke of Brabant and Iaqueline was good and effectuall, and the second espousalles celebrated with the Duke of Glocester and the said Iaqueline to be vnlawfull, he beganne to ware weary of her, by whom he neuer had profit, but losse, and toke to his wife by a second marriage Elianor Cobham, daughter to Reignold Cobham Lord of Sterborow, which Elianor before was his wanton paramour, paramour, to his great reproch, as was then noted.

The morrow after Simon and Iudes day, when the Maior of London had bene at Westminster to take his charge, as the custome is, at such time as he was holding his great dinner, he was by the Duke of Glocester Lord Protector sent for in speedy manner, & when he came to his presence, he gaue to him commandement, to see the Citie were surely watched in the night following and so it was done. Debate betweene the Duke of Glocester and the Bishop of Winchester.

On the nert morrow about nine of the clocke, certaine seruants of the Bishop of Winchester, vncle to the said Protector, would haue entred the City by the bridge, but the warders or kepers thereof, kept them out by force, as before they were commaunded, wherewith they being grieuously discontented, gathered to them a greater number of archers, and men of armes, and assaulted the gate with shot and other meanes of warre, insomuch, that the commons of the Citie shut in their shops, and sped them thither in great number; so that great bloudshed would haue followed, had not the wisedome of the Maior and Aldermen stayed the matter in time,

The Archbishoppe of Canterbury with the Duke of Quimbre called the Prince of Portugall and other, toke great labour vpon them to pacifie this variance betwixt the vncle and the nephew, the Protector and the Bishop, insomuch, that they rode betweén them eight times, ere they might bring them to any reasonable conformitie, and lastly they agreed to stand to the rule of the Duke of Bedford, Regent of France, or of such as he would assigne, whereupon the Citie was set in more quiet, and the Bishop of Winchester wrote a letter to the Duke of Bedford, Lord Regent as followeth.

Bishoppe of Winchesters letter to the Duke of Bedford.

Right high and mightie Prince, and right Noble, and after one lenest earthly Lord, I recommend me vnto your grace with all my heart: and as ye desire the welfare of the King our soueraigne Lord, and of his realmes of England and of France, and your owne weale, with all yours, haste you hither, for by my troth, and ye tarry long, we shall put this land in ieopardie with a field, such a brother ye haue here, God make him a good man. For your wisedome knoweth well, that the profit of France standeth in the welfare of England. Written at London, the last of October.

On the tenth day of January nert ensuing, the said Duke of Bedforde with his wife, came vnto London, and with them also came the said Bishop of Winchester, and the Maior and Citizens receiued him at Merton, and conueied him through the Citie vnto Westminster, where he was lodged in the Kings pallace, and the Bishoppe of Winchester was lodged within the Abbots lodging. On the morrow following, the Maior presented the Regent with a paire of basins of siluer, and ouer-gilt, and in them a 1000. markes of gold. The 21. of February, began a great councell at S. Albons, which was afterward remoued to Northampton, but for that no due conclusion might be made, on the 15. of March was called a Parliament at Leicester, the which endured till the 25. day of June. This was called the Parliament of Battes, because men being forbidden to bring swords or other weapons, brought great battes and staues on their neckes, and when those weapons were inhibited them, they toke stones and plomets of lead. During this parliament, the variance betwixt the two Lords was debated, insomuch, that the Duke of Glocester put a bill of complaint against the Bishop, containing fire articles, all which articles were by the Bishop sufficiently answered, and finally, by the counsel of the Lord Regent, all the matters of variance betweene the said two Lords, were put to the examination and iudgement, with the assistance of the Lordes of the Parliament, Henry Archbishop of Canterbury, Thomas Duke of Exceter, Iohn Duke of Norfolke, Thomas Bishop of Durham, Philip Bishop of Worcester, Iohn Bishop of Bathe, Humfrey Earle of Stafford, Raulph Lord Cromwell, and maister William Alnewike, then keeper of the priuie seale, which Lords made a decree and awarde, so that eyther party toke other by the hand with friendly and louing words, none hauing amends of other. Upon Whitsonday following, was a solemne feast holden at Leicester aforesaid, where the Regent dubbed king Henry knight, & then forthwith the king dubbed Richard Duke of Yorke, that after was father to king Edward the fourth, and other to the number of fortie.

The Earle of Cambridge was made Duke of Yorke, and the Earle Marshall, Duke of Norfolke.

After the Parliament, the king went to Killingworth Castell.

Anno reg. 5. Iohn Audley

On Saturday the euen of Saint Michael the Archangell, in the morning before day, betwixt the houres of one and two of the clocke began a terrible earthquake, with lightning and thunder, which continued the space of two houres, and was vniuersall through the world, so that men had thought the world as then should haue ended, and the generall doome to haue followed. The vnreasonable beasts rored and drew to the townes, with hideous noise. Also the fowles of the ayre likewise cried out: such was the worke of God at that time to call his people to repentance.

An earthquake during two houres.

1427. On Newyéres day Thomas Beawford the Duke of Exceter deceased at Gréenewich, and was buried at Saint Edmondsbury in Suffolke. Thomas Beawchampe Earle of Warwike was made maister and gouernour vnto the king during his nonage.

About the purification of our Lady, the duke of Bedford Regent of France, with his wife and family passed the seas vnto Caleis, and so through Picardy into France: but ere he departed from Caleis, to wit, vpon the feast day of the Annunciation of our Lady, the Bishop of Winchester, within the Church of our Lady of Caleis, was created Cardinall, and after the solemnity done, the Regent toke him on his right hand, and so conueyed him vnto his lodging.

This yéere the Duke of Alanson, that before was taken prisoner at the battell of Vernole in Perch, was deliuered for a ransome of 200000. scutz of gold, which was 50000. markes sterling.

This yéere also, they Earle of Salisbury accompanied with the Earle of Suffolke, the Lord Talbot, and other, laid a strong siege vnto the citie of Orleance, and held the Citizens very streight, and maugre the Duke of Orleance, and the Marshall of France, the Englishmen wan from them diuers strong holds adioyning adioyning to the Citie, and forced them to burne a great part of their suburbs: but one day as the said Earle of Salisbury, Thomas Mountagew, rested him at a bay window, a gunne was leuelled out of the Citie, the shot whereof thiue-red so the bars of the yron grate, that one of the same bars stroke the Earle on the head, bearing away one of his eyes, and the one side of his cheeke. Sir Thomas Gargraue was likewise stricken, and died within two daies. The Earle was conueyed to Meun on Loyre, where, after eight daies he likewise departed the world, whose body was conueyed into England with all funerall pompe, and buried at Bisham in Barkshire by his progenitors, leauing behinde him one onely daughter named Alice, married to Richard Neuil sonne to Ralph Earle of Westmerland. The damage that the Realme of England receiued by the death of this notable man manifestly appeared, in that immediately after his death the prosperous good successe which the Englishmen had had, began to decline. In his place was appointed the Earle of Suffolke to be Lieutenant and Captaine of the siege, ioyning with him the Lord Scales, the Lord Talbot, sir Ion Fastolfe, and diuers other valiant Captaines. An. reg. 6. Earle of Salisbury slaine. 1428.

In a Parliament at Westminster was granted to the king a subsidie of euerie tunne of wine three shillings, and of other merchandise, except woll, fell, and cloth, twelue pence of the pound. Also, of euerie parish through the Realme (excepted Cities & Boroughs) the benefice being in value ten marks, ten of that parish should pay fiue shillings and eight pence, euery man eight pence: and of euery benefice that were ten pound, ten parishioners to pay 13. shillings and foure pence, and so rate and rate-like of euery benefice from the lowest to the highest. And for the inhabitants of Cities and Boroughs euery man being in value 20. shillings aboue his household stuffe, and the apparrell of him & his wife, should pay foure pence, & so after that rate vnto the richest. On the first of September the Cardinall of Winchester being returned from beyond the seas, was met by the Maior and his brethren, and certaine Citizens of London on horsebacke without the Citie, and so brought to his pallace in Southwarke. Cardinall of Winchester.

The eight of Nouember the Duke of Norfolke was like to haue béene drowned, passing from Saint Mary Ouery stayres through London bridge, betwixt foure and fiue of the clocke at night, his barge being set vpon the piles ouerwhelmed, so that to the number of thirtie persons were drowned, and the Duke with two or three other that escaped were drawne vp with ropes. Duke of Norfolke escaped drowning. 1429.

King Henry kept his feast of Christs Natiuitie at Eltham.

The 21. of February Richard Neuill was made Earle of Salisbury.

King Henry kept his Easter at Hartford.

So it fell out, that in the Lent season, victuall and artillery about Orleance began to ware scant in the English campe, wherefore the Earle of Suffolk appointed sir Iohn Fastolph, sir Thomas Rampston, & sir Philip Helle, with their retinues, to ride to Paris to the Lord Regent, to informe him of that lacke, who incontinent prouided victuall, artillery and munitions necessarie, and loaded therewith many chariots and carts: and for the sure conuey-

ance of the same, he appointed sir Simon Morbrier prouost of Paris, with the guard of the Citie & other, to accompany sir Iohn Fastolph to the army lying at the siege of Orleance: they were in all to the number of 1500. men: these with great difficulty came to the English camp before Orleance, where they were ioyfully receiued, & commended for their valiant withstanding of enemies by the way, as they marched. The Earle of Suffolke being thus victualled, continued the siege, & euery day almost skirmished with the French men, who at length offered to treat to saue themselues and their City from captiuitie, they submit the City, themselues and all theirs vnder the obeisance of the Duke of Burgoin, because he was extract out of the blonde royall of Fraunce. The Duke with thankes certified them againe, that he would gladly receiue them, if the Duke of Bedford Lord Regent would therewith be contented. Whereupon messengers were dispatched to the Regent, who thought it neither conuenient nor honourable, that a Citie so long besieged by the king of Englands power, should be deliuered to any other forren Prince. Whereupon the Regent answered the Burgonian ambassadors, that sith the King of England had bene at all the charges about the siege and winning of the City, it was not consonant to reason, that the Duke should enioy the fruites of another mans charge: hereof followed a double mischiefe to the English procedings in the Realme of Fraunce, for both the Burgoigne conceiued an inward grudge against the Englishmen, for that he suspected them to enuie his glory: and againe, the Englishmen left the siege of Orleance, which by this treaty they might haue recouered out of their enemies hands, and put their friends in possession of it.

The Maiden of God so called by the French.

While this treaty was in hand, Charles of Fraunce studied daily howe to prouide a remedie by the deliuery of his in Orleance out of present daunger. And euen at the same time, a monstrous woman, named Ioan la pucell de dieu, was presented vnto him at Chinon, where as then he soiourned, of which woman, her birth, qualities, and estate, the French Historyes make mention at large, but to be short, so much credit was giuen to her, that she was honoured as a Saint, and so she handled the matter, that she was thought to be sent from God to the ayde of the French King Charles, the seuenth of that name. This woman being armed at all pointes like a valiant Captaine, rode from Poictiers to Bloys, and there found men of warre, victuall and munitions ready to be conueyed to Orleance. Here was it knowne that the Englishmen kept not so diligent watch as they had bene accustomed to do, and therefore this Maid with their French Captaines, comming forward in the dead time of the night, and in a great rayne and thunder, they entred into the Citie with all their victuall, artillerie, and other necessaries. The next day the Englishmen boldly assaulted the towne, but the Frenchmen defended the walles so, as no great feate chaunced that day betweene them. The Bastard of Orleance gaue knowledge to the Duke of Alanson in what daunger the towne stode without his present helpe, who comming within two leagues of the City, gaue knowledge to them within, that they should be readie the next day to receiue him, which accordingly was accomplished:

for the Englishmen suffered him and his armie to enter. On the next day in the morning, the Frenchmen all together issued out of the towne, and wanne the bastell of Saint Low by assault, and set it on fire. And after they likewise assaulted the Tower at the bridge foote, and toke it ere the Lord Talbot could come to the succours, in the which William Gladesdale also Captaine was slayne, with the Lord Molins and the Lord Poynings also. Lord Molins slaine.

The Frenchmen with this good lucke, fetched a compasse about toward the bastell, which was in the kéeping of the Lord Talbot, the which like a good Captaine, without all feare issued forth against them, and gaue them a sharpe encounter, that they fledde againe into the Citie with great losse of men and small artillery: of Englishmen were lost in the two bastels to the number of fiue hundred men, or there about. The Earle of Suffolke, the Lord Talbot, the Lord Scales, and other Captaines assembled together in counsell, where it was amongst them determined to leaue their fortresses and bastels, and to assemble in the plaine field, there to abide all the day to sée if the Frenchmen would issue forth to fight with them. But when the Frenchmen durst not come forth, the Englishmen set fire on their lodgings, and departed in good order of battell from Orleance. And the next day which was the eight of May, the Earle of Suffolke rode to Jergeaux with 400. men, and the Lord Talbot with another company turned to Melun: and after he had fortified that towne, he went to the Towne of Lauale, and wanne it together with the Castell. The siege of Orleance broken vp.

Thus when the Englishmen seuered themselues into garrisons, the Duke of Alanson, the Bastard of Orleance, Ioan le pucell, the Lord Gaucourt, and diuers other Captaines of the Frenchmen came on the 12. of June before the Towne of Jergeaux: where the Earle of Suffolke and his two brethren sojourned, and gaue to the Towne so fierce an assault on three parts, that Poiton de Sentrailes perceiuing another part voide of defence, scaled the walles on that side, and without difficulty, tooke the Towne, and slue sir Alexander Poole, brother to the Earle, and many other to the number of 200. but the French lost 300. good men. Of the Englishmen were taken 40. with the Earle of Suffolke and his brother Iohn. The Frenchmen as they went to Orleance, slew their prisoners all sauing the Earle and his brother. Shortly after the same French army came to Mahun, where they toke the Tower at the bridge foote, and put therein a garrison: from thence they remoued to Bangeney, and constrayned them in the Towne to yéeld. At this place there came to the Duke of Alanson, the new Constable Arthur of Britaine, and the Lord Dalbert with other, also the Earle of Vandosme came to them, so that they were now ioyned to the number of 23000. men, the which shortly after fought with the Lord Talbot, néere to a village in Beause, called Patay, at which battell, the L. Talbot was sore wounded at the backe, and taken, & the rest put to flight: in which fight were slaine aboue 1200. and 40. taken, of whom the L. Talbot, the L. Scales, the L. Hungerford, and sir Thomas Rapston were chiefe. This ouerthrow did so much abash the Englishmen, that Alexander Poole slaine. Earle of Suffolke taken by the French.

immediately thereupon the townes of Ianuile, Mahun, Foyt, and diuers o-ther returned from the English part, and became French. Charles the French king perceiuing fortune to smile vpon him, determined to conquer the City of Reimes that he might be there crowned, in his iourney thitherward he besieged the City of Auxerre, and had it. From thence he went before Troies which was deliuered to him, and then Chalons, &c. In semblable dede they of Reimes yeeld themselues: in the which towne the said Charles (in the pre-sence of the Dukes of Lorain, and Barre, and of all the noble men of his fa-ction) was sacred king of France, by the name of Charles the seuenth.

The Duke of Bedford aduertised of all these doings, assembled his power a-bout him, and hauing together 10000. men, besides Normans, departed out of Paris in warlike fashion, and passing through Bry to Monstrean Fault Yone, sent by his herault Bedford, letters to the French king, signifying to him, that where he had contrarie to his finall conclusion, accorded betweene his brother king Henry the fift, and king Charles the first, by allurement of a diuellish witch, taken vpon him: the name, title, and dignitie of the king of France, and further, had by murther, stealth, craft, and deceitfull meanes vio-lently gotten, and wrongfully kept diuers Cities and Townes belonging to the king of England his Nephew: for proofe whereof he was come downe from Paris with his army, into the countrey of Brie, by dint of sworde to proue his writing and cause true, willing his enemies to chose the place, and in the same he would giue him battel. The new French king being come from Reimes to Dampmartine, studying how he might compasse them in Paris, was halfe abashed at this message, but yet to set a good countenance on the matter, he answered the Herault, that he would sooner seeke his maister, than his maister should neede to pursue him. The Duke of Bed-ford hearing this answere, marched toward the king, and pitched his field in a strong place. The French king though at the first he meant to haue abidden battell, yet when he vnderstood that the Duke was equall to him in number of people, he chaunged his purpose, and turned with his armie a little out of the way. The Duke of Bedforde perceiuing his faint cou-rage, followed him by Hilles and Dales, till he came to a Towne not farre from Senlis, where he found the French king and his armie lodged: wherefore he ordered his battels, setting the Archers before, and himselfe with the Noble men in the maine battell, and put the Normans on both sides for wings. The French king also ordered his battels to the most aduantage. Thus these two armies lay two dales and two nights, either
Ann. reg. 8. in sight of other without any great doing, except a few skirmishes. At length in the dead of the night, as priuily as might be, the French king brake vp his campe, and fled to Bray. The Duke of Bedford had much adoe to stay his people in the morning from pursuit of the French kings armie: but for that he mistrusted the Parisians, he would not depart farre from that City, and so returned thither againe.

In this season Pope Martine the fift, meaning to subdue the Bohemians that dissented from the Church of Rome in matters of faith, and religion, appointed Henry Beawford Bishop of Winchester, Cardinall of S. Eusiby, to be his legate in an army to inuade the kingdome of Boheme, and to bring a power of men with him out of England, and because the warre touched religion, he licensed the Cardinall to take a tenth of the spiritualitie, the Bishop gathered the money, and assembled 4000. men and more. As this Bishop was come to Douer, ready to haue passed the seas into Flanders, the Duke of Glocester (hauing receiued letters from the Duke of Bedford, containing an earnest request to releeue him with men of war) writ to the Bishop of Winchester, willing him to passe with all his army toward the Duke of Bedford. The Cardinall least he should runne into the note of infamy, if he refused to ayde the Regent of France, passed ouer with his power, & brought the same vnto his cosen to the Citie of Paris, where he remained not long, but passed on his iourney towards Boheme, from whence in short time he returned into England.

The first of November, king Henry being about the age of nine yéeres was solemnly crowned in Saint Peters Church of Westminster, at whose coronation were made 36. Knights of the Bath, & after solemnization in the Church finished, an honourable feast in the great Hall of Westminster was kept, whereof ye may read a large discourse in Robert Fabian. After which feast great preparations was made for the kings iourney into France. King Henry crowned.

1430. Combat fought in Smithfield.

Richard Duke of Yorke was constituted Constable of England in absence of Iohn Duke of Bedford Regent of France, he was made Constable, for, and because of a battel to be fought betwéene Iohn Vpton, and Iohn Downe he was confirmed Constable of England for terme of life, so that he did no waies derogate Iohn Duke of Bedford, that was beyond the sea, dated the 11. of Ianuary.

The xviii. of January a battell was done in Smithfield within the lists before the king, betwéene two men of Feuersham in Kent, Iohn Vpton notarie appellant, and Iohn Downe gentleman defendant, Iohn Vpton put vpon Iohn Downe, that he and his compiers should imagine the kinges death, the day of his coronation: when they had long fought, the king toke vp the matter and forgaue both parties.

The xvii. day of April the king toke shipping at Douer, & landed the same day at Caleis, hauing in his company the Dukes of Yorke and Norffolke, the Bishops of Bath, Ely, and Rochester, the Earles of Huntington, Stafford, Warwicke, Oxford, Deuonshire, Wortaine of Ewe, and of Dymond, and Barons, the Lord Boucher, Beaumond, Typtoft, Fitz water, Roos, Arundale, Audley, Fauconbridge, Gray Cordner, Scroope, and Wels.

Le pucel de dieu

Whilest the king remained at Caleis many skirmishes were fought betwéene the Englishmen and the French in diuers parts of France, and the Frenchmen preuailed greatly by helpe of a woman which they named The mayden of God. So that lastly she with her company came to the towne of Champaigne, to the ende to remoue the siege laid thereunto by the Duke of Burgoigne and other of the English Captaines, and the 23. of May she gaue battell to the Englishmen, and fought with them a long time, but in the end by the manhod of a Burgonian knight named sir Iohn Luxemborough, she was taken aliue, and her company distressed, she was conueyed to the Citie of Roane, and there kept a season, where she fained her selfe to be with child, but when the contrary was knowne, she was condemned and brent.

After this, king Henry by small iourneyes into Fraunce, came to Paris, where he was honourably receiued of the Citizens and taken for their soue-

Their Captaine was drawne, hanged, and headed at Abington, and his head was sent to London, and set on the bridge: his other fautors were executed in diuers places and countries to the terror of other. Also the 12. of July Richard Russell woolman, was drawne, hanged, and quartered, for that he would haue made Dukes and Earles at his pleasure.

Councel of Basil

King Henry remaining still in France, the Earle of Arundale accompanied with 2000. Englishmen, sent a certaine of his company vnto a towne, called Beamount, to prouoke the Frenchmen to issue out of the towne, which small company when Boyssicant and Sentrales then Captaines beholde, they with their souldiers sped them forth to take the said Englishmen, the which by little and little gaue backe, till they had tolled the Frenchmen a good space from the towne, and then set vpon them with a stout courage, and beate them on hande till the Earle with his companie rescued them: then betwixt them was a cruell fight, but in the ende the Frenchmen were chased, and the said Sentrayle with many footemen of the said towne were taine.

remoued from Roan to Pontoyse, and so to Saint Dionesse, & then to Paris, where he was receiued with great honour by the Citizens, and taken for their soueraigne Lord and King. There were in his company of his owne nation, his vncle the Cardinall of Winchester, Iohn Kempe Cardinall and Archbishop of Yorke, the Dukes of Bedford, of Yorke, and Norffolke, the Earles of Warwicke, Salisbury, Orford, Huntingdon, Dxmond, Wortaine, and Suffolke. Of Gascoine there were the Earles of Longuile, and March, besides many Noble men of England, Gwine, and Normandie: and the chiefe of the French nation, were the Dukes of Burgoigne, and Lewes of Luxemburg Cardinall and Chancellor of France for king Henry: the Bishoppes of Beauoys and Noyne both peeres of France, besides the Bishop of Paris, and diuers other Bishops, the Earle of Vantemount and other noble men. And he had a guard of 3000. archers, some on horsebacke, some on foote. To speake of the honour, where with he was receiued into the Citie of Paris, what pageants were prepared, and how richly, the gates, streets, and bridges on euerie side were hanged with costly clothes of arras and tapestrie, it would be to long a processe.

On the seuenth day of December king Henry was crowned in Paris, by the Cardinall of Winchester, at the which coronation was present, the Duke of Burgoigne, the Duke of Bedford Regent, and diuers other Nobles of France. After the solemnitie of this feast was ended, the king departed from Paris, and so came to Roane, where he held his Christmasse, and that done, hee returned to Calais, where when he had sojourned a season, hee toke shipping and returned into England, and landed at Douer the eleuenth of February, and then riding toward London, hee was met on Barham Downe, betwixt Douer and Canterbury, by a great companie of Gentles and commons of Kent, all clad in a liuerie with red hoodes, the which accompanied him till he came to Blackheath, which was on the one and twentith day of February, where hee was met by the Maior of London, who rode in a gowne of crimson Veluet, his Aldermen in scarlet, and the Citizens all in white gownes and red hoods, with diuerse workes or cognisances broidered vpon their sleeues after the faculties of their misteries or crafts: and after due obeysance and saluting of the King, they rode on before him towardes the Citie. And when the King was come to the bridge, there was deuised a mightie Giant, standing with a sword drawne in his hand, hauing written certaine speeches in meeter of great reioycing and wel-comming of the king to the Citie, on the middest of the bridge, and in diuers other places of the Citie, were diuers faire and sumptuous pageants replenished with goodly and beautifull personages, the order and speeches whereof, are set downe by Robert Fabian in his chronicle. Thus being conueyed to his pallace at Westminster, the Maior with the Citizens returned to London, and on the 24. day of Februarie the Maior and Aldermen yode to the King, and presented him with a hampire of golde, and therein a thousand pound of nobles.

This yeere by reason of the souldiers of Calais, a restraint was made there of the Wolles, for they were not content of their wages; wherefore the Duke of Bedford Regent of France, came down thither in Easter week, at which time many souldiers were arrested: and rode againe to Tirwine. And hauing not long since buried the Lady Anne his late wife, sister to ỹ duke of Burgoigne, he married there the Lady Iaquet the daughter to Peter Earle of Saint Paule, and shortly after returned to Caleis, where he caused foure of those souldiers to be beheaded, on the xi. of June, and 110. souldiers to be banished the towne, besides 120. that were banished before that time. And vpon Midsummer éuen the Lord Regent with his new wedded spouse came to London, and remained there till the latter end of August, and then returned againe to Paris.

The Council of Basil concerning ỹ Hussites They are allowed to communicate in both kinds.

The Duke of Burgoine was nothing pleased with this new aliance contracted by the Duke of Bedforde, with the house of Lutzenbourgh, but the marriage was consummate ere he could finde any meane to preuent it.

The Frenchmen raised a crew, and sodainly take the towne of Saint Valarie in Normandy, nére to the riuer of Some, and an other army vnder the leading of sir Ambrose de Lore, wasted all the countrey about Cane. The Duke of Bedford not minding to be idle, sent the Earle of Arundell, Henry the Earle of Warwicks sonne, the Lord Lisle Adam Marshall of France for king Henry, and 1200. men of warre, with ordinance and munitions to besiege the towne of Laigny vpon the riuer of Marne, the Earle with shot of a Canon brake the arch of the bridge, and got from the Frenchmen their bulwarke, and set it on fire, diuers assaults were made, but the towne was well defended, by 800. men of armes, besides other souldiers. The Duke of Bedford hereof aduertised, gathered an army of 6000. men whereof were Captains Robert Lord Willoughby, sir Andrew Ogard, Chamberlaine to the Duke, sir Iohn Saluaine, baillife of Roane, sir Iohn Mountgomery, baillife of Caur, sir Philip Hal baillife of Vernale, sir Richard Ratcliffe deputy of Caleis, sir Ralph Neuill, sir Ralph Standish, sir Iohn Handford, sir Richard Enthin, sir Richard Haringdon, baillife of Eureux, sir William Fulthorpe, sir Thomas Griffith of Ireland, Dauid Hall, Thomas Strangwish, Leonard Ormstone, Esquires, and Thomas Gerard. The Duke of Bedford with this army came to the siege before Laigny, where he made a bridge of boates, and brought his ordinance so nére the town, that to al people it séemed not long able to resist: but the bastard of Orliance Earle of Dunoys, with other hardy Captaines valiantly defended it. At the length the French king perceiuing this towne to be the key betwéne the territories of Burgoigne, English and French, & that the losse thereof should turne him to irrecouerable domage, sent the Lord of Rieux, Poyton, the Hire, the Lord Gawcourt and 6000. men, with plenty of victuals, to the intent, eyther to raise the siege, or at the least victual the towne. The Frenchmen framed themselues in order of battell, as though they would doe much, but did nothing in effect: but that whilest part of them maintained a skirmish, an other sort conueyed into the towne thirtie oxen, and other victuall. In that skirmish were slaine diuers valiant Frenchmen, and the rest considering how the Englishmen were planted, being now the beginning of

August

August, they remoued and went vnto Fort vnder Yerre, where by a bridge made of empty pipes, they passed into the yle of France. The Duke of Bedford not minding to lose the more for the lesse, raised his siege, and returned to Paris, nothing more minding then to trie his quarrell by dint of sworde against his enemies, if they would thereto agree. And thereupon he sent Bedford his herault to the Lord Gaucourt & other Captains of the French armie, offering them battaile within a conuenient time, and where they would appoint. To the which officer at armes the Captaines answered, that battaile they feared not, nor the English force they much regarded, but they saide there was time to gaine, and time to lose, of the which they doubted not, to espie the one or the other, to their gaine or losse. An. reg. 11.

The 25. of November the Lord Fitzwalter was drowned on the sea, and many other harmes were done by tempest.

The Regent, sent Peter of Lurenborough Earle of Saint Paule, and Robert Lord Willoughby, with a competent number of men to besiege the town of Saint Valarie, which the Frenchmen a little before had taken, these valiant Captaines enuironed the towne with a strong siege. Within the towne, were sir Lewes de Vicount, sir Philip de la Towre, and sir Reignold de Versciles Captaines with 300. good fighting men, which by the space of three weekes, manfully defended the same. But then perceiuing the fiercenesse of the Englishmen, and the weakenesse of themselues, and hauing no hope of reliefe, rendered the towne, their horse and harneis onely saued. 1433.

After this towne was thus gotten, the Earle of Saint Paule, and the Lord Willoughby returned to the Regent, where they were well welcommed, and after the said Earle departed from Paris, to lay siege to the Castell of Monches, but being encamped nere to the towne of Blangy, he by a sodaine maladie finished his daies and departed this life, leauing his seignories to Lewes his sonne and heire.

On the eight day of July, King Henry beganne his Parliament at Westminster, continued it till Lammasse, and then adiourned it vntill Saint Edwards tide. Parliament.

During the raigne of this king Henry the first were Lieutenants ouer the Realme of Ireland, Edmond Earle of March, and Iames Earle of Dzmond his deputie: Iohn Sutton Knight Lord of Dudley, and sir Thomas Strange his deputie: sir Thomas Stanley, and sir Christopher Planket his deputie: Lyon Lord Welles, and the Earle of Dzmonde his deputie: Iames Earle of Dzmonde the kings Lieutenant by himselfe: Iohn Earle of Shzewsbury, and the Archbishop of Diuelin Lord Iustice in his absence: Richard Plantagenet Duke of Yorke, father to Edward the fourth and Earle of Ulster, had the office of Lieutenant by Letters Patents, during the space of tenne yeeres, who deputed vnder him at seuerall times, the Baron of Diuelin, Richard Fitz Eustace Knight, Iames Earle of Dzmonde, and Thomas Fitz Moris, Earle An. reg. 12.

of Kildare: to this Richard then resident in Diuelin, was borne within the Castell there, the second sonne George Duke of Clarence, afterward drowned in a butte of malmesey.

1434. John Lord Talbot.

John Lord Talbot gathered a crew of chosen men of warre in England, to the number of 800. and about the beginning of the moneth of March, sayled into Normandy, and passed by Roan towards Paris, and in his way he toke the strong Castell of Jeing betweene Beauuois and Gisors, and caused all the Frenchmen within to be hanged on the walles, and after raced the Castell, and came to the Regent Duke of Bedford at Paris. The presence of which renowmed Captaine, so incouraged the hearts of the English nation, that they thought nothing able to resist their puissance, and so discouraged the hearts of the Frenchmen, that they were in doubt whether it were better to fight or to flie, for he was a chosen Captaine, and in martiall feates fully instructed. When this hardy Baron had communed with the Regent, he departed from Paris with his army, and besieged the Castell of Beaumount vpon Oise, whereof was Captaine sir Amadour de Viguolles, brother to the Hire: which Castell was sone rendred vpon condition. After that he recouered without long siege, the townes of Creile, the bridge of Saint Marens, the new towne of Emoy, Crispy in Valoys, and Cleramount in Beauuois: and so with great riches and rich prisoners, he returned againe to Paris.

The towne of Saint Denis, which is within two English miles of Paris, was gotten by the practise of one Iohn Notice a Knight of Orleance, from Mathew Gougly, and Thomas Kiriell Captaines, they slew there many Englishmen, and toke many prisoners, but sone after the saide Captaines with strength taken from Paris, laid such strong a siege about Saint Denis, that finally they agreed to deliuer the towne to the Englishmen.

In the very same season the Earle of Arundell toke the Castell of Bameline, and raced it to the ground, and after toke the Castell of Orle, and from thence came to saint Selerine, where the Lord Ambrose de Lore was Captaine, which issued out and fought with the Englishmen so eagerly at the first, that he droue them backe an arrow shot: but the Earle so incouraged his men, that they toke new courages to them, and set so fiercely on the Frenchmen, that they slue a great number, and droue the remnant into the towne. After this victory, he besieged Louiers, whereof was Captaine the Hire, and his brother, which rendred the towne without stroke. Then the Earle enuironed the towne of Saint Selerine with a strong siege, when he had lien there almost three moneths, euery day attempting somewhat, for the performance of his enterprise: in conclusion at the three monethes ende, he gaue so fierce assault, that by force he entred the towne, and slue Iohn Almaine, and Guillam Saint Aubine, the chiefe Captaines, and 800. of their men of warre, and the children of Loire were taken prisoners: he repleuished the towne, and made Captaine sir Iohn Cornewall. Then he besieged the strong towne of Silly, and the inhabitants deliuered pledges vpon condition, that if the towne were not rescued within thirtie daies, they should render the towne into his possession: which offer was taken, and when the time was expired, the towne was deliuered, where leauing a garrison, the Earle departed to Paris, & in the meane way toke the Castels of Pelley and Saint Laurence.

The Lord Willoughby, and sir Thomas Kiriell returning with great victories out of the parties of Burgoigne, toke in their way the towne of Louiers, and furnished it both with men and munitions.

The Earle of Arundell minding to haue besieged the towne of Rey, was there slaine with Ralph Standish, the Earle of Arundell was buried at Beauuois, in the gray friers there. The Earle of Arundell wounded to death.

Through a great frost, that lasted from the 25. of November, vnto the tenth of Februarie, the Thamis was so frozen, that the merchandise which came to the Thamis mouth, was there landed, and carried through Kent to London. Great frost.

When the Pope Eugenius the fourth, and his Cardinals after long labour could make no peace betwixt king Henry of England and France, and Charles also named king of France, they at length made a peace betwixt the said Charles and Philip Duke of Burgoigne, whereby the said Duke of Burgoigne became vtter enemie to the king of England, and sone after the said Duke began his order of the Lilly, and the Golden fléece, and ordained certaine knights of that order, and made thereunto many statutes, whereof some of them were like vnto the statutes of the Garter. 1435.

This yéere on the 14. of September died Iohn Duke of Bedford Regent of France, a man as politike in peace, as hardie in warre, and yet no more hardy than mercifull when he had the victory, whose bodie was with all funerall pompe, and solemne exequies buried in the Cathedrall Church of our Ladie in Roan, on the north side of the high altar, vnder a sumptuous and costly monument: which tombe when king Lewes the 11. by certaine vndiscréte persons was counselled to deface, affirming that it was a great dishonour, both to the king, and to the realme, to sée the enemy of his father, and theirs to haue so solemne and rich memoriall: he answered saying. What honour shall it be to vs, or to you to breake this monument, and to pull out of the ground the dead bones of him, whom in his life time, neither my father, nor your progenitors, with all their puissance, were once able to make flie one foote backward: but by his strength, wit, and policie kept them all out of the principal dominions of the realme of France, and out of this Noble Dutchie of Normandy: wherefore I say, first, God saue his soule, and let his bodie now lie in rest, which when he was aliue, would haue disquieted the proudest of vs all: and for the tombe, I assure you is not so decent, nor conuenient as his honour and actes deserued. The Duke of Bedford died. E. Hall. Ann. reg. 14. A worthy saying of a king against defacers of monuments.

After the death of the Noble Prince the Duke of Bedford, the Frenchmen began not onely to withdrawe their obedience, which they had by oth promised to the king of England, but also toke sword in hand, and openly defied the Englishmen: but the Englishmen appointed for regent in Fraunce Richard Duke of Yorke, sonne to Richard Earle of Cambridge (beheaded at Richard Duke of Yorke, made Regent of France.

Hampton.) This Richard now Regent was so disdained of Edmond Duke of Somerset, being cosen to the King, that by all meanes possible he sought his hinderance, by reason whereof, ere the Duke of Yorke could get his dispatch, he was constrained to linger till the Citie of Paris, and diuers other the chiefest townes in France were gotten by the French king.

1436. The Duke of Yorke perceiuing his euill will, openly dissembled that which he inwardly minded, and thus either of them wrought things to the others displeasure, till at length, by mortall warre they were both consumed, with almost all their whole lines and offsprings.

The Normans of the countrey of Caux, being hartened by the death of the Duke of Bedford, beganne a new rebellion, slue diuers Englishmen, robbed many townes that were vnder the English obeisance, and toke the towne of Harflew by assault, and diuers other townes. But the new Lord Regent being aduertised, sent forth the Lord Scales, sir Thomas Kiriell, and the Lord Hoo, which so afflicted those rebels of Caux, that they slue aboue fiue thousand persons, and brent all the Townes and Villages in the countrey, not being walled, so that in that part was neither habitation, nor tillage, for all the people fled into Brytaine, and all the beasts of the countrey were brought to Candebecke, where a good shepe was sold for an English penie, and a cow for twelue pence. Daily was skirmishing in euery part, in so much, that the Lord Scales discomfited at the Rye beside Roan, the Hire and 1500. valiant Frenchmen, of the which, aboue three hundred were taken prisoners, beside seuen goodly fayre coursers. Amongst other of the prisoners, were sir Richard Reiginald de Fountaines, sir Alaine Gerond, Alaine de Monsey, and Geffrey Gram Captaine of the Scots. But yet this victory and others the like, staied not the Frenchmen from working treason daily, in so much, that diuers townes turned to the part of king Charles, and some were taken by practise, as Drappe, Boys de Vincent and other.

A cow for xii. pence, and a sheepe for a penie.

Here is one chiefe point to be noted, that eyther the disdaine among the chiefe peeres of the Realme of England (as ye haue heard) or the negligence of the kings Counsell, was the losse of the whole dominion of France, betweene the riuers of Seene and Marne, and in especiall of the Noble Citie of Paris: for here before were sent ouer thousands for defence of the holdes and fortresses, now were sent hundreds, yea and scores, some rascals, and some not able to draw a bowe, or beare a bill: for the Lord Willoughby, and the Bishop of Terrouanne, which had the Gouernment of the Citie of Paris, had in their company not past 2000. Englishmen. Which weaknesse king Charles wel perceiuing, he appointed the Constable Arthure of Britaine, the Earle of Dunoys, the Lords De la Roch, and Lisle Adam, with other valiant Captaines, and men of warre, as well Burgonians as French, to go before Paris, trusting by fauour of certain Citizens, with whom he had intelligence, shortly to be Lord of the Citie, without great losse or battell: so these Captaines came before the Citie of Paris, but perceiuing that all things succeeded not according to their expectation, they returned to Mount Marty, and the next day set on the towne of Saint Diones, where they slue two hundred hundred Englishmen, and vpon composition permitted the other to depart to Paris.

Thomas Lord Beaumount, which of late was come to Paris with 800. men, issued forth of the Citie with 600. souldiers, intending to viewe the doings and number of the French armie, but being espied, hee was sodainly compassed about, so that he was discomfited and taken, and with him 80. prisoners, besides 200. which were slaine in the field, and the remnant chased to the gates of the Citie. The Parisians, especially the maister of the hals, and some of the Vniuersitie, and Michaell Lellier, and many other Burgesses of the Citie, perceiuing the weakenesse of the Englishmen, and the force of the Frenchmen, signified to the French Captaines their mindes, willing them with all diligence to come, that they mought receiue so rich a pray to them to be deliuered. The Constable delaying no time, came with his power, and lodged by the Charterhouse, and the Lord Lisle Adam approching to the walles, shewed to the Citizens a charter, sealed with the great seale of King Charles, by the which he had pardoned them their offences, and granted them their olde liberties, so that they would be to him true and obedient: which being to them declared, they ranne about the towne, crying Saint Denis, liue king Charles. The Englishmen perceiuing this, determined to keepe the gate of Saint Diones, but the chaines were drawne, and women and children cast downe stones and scalding water on their heades, and the Citizens slue them, the Bishop of Tirwine, the Lord Willoughby, and sir Simon Morhiber, withdrew to the bastle Saint Anthonie, whilest this rumour was in the towne, the Earle of Dunois, and other scaled the wals, and some passed the riuer by boates, and opened the gate of Saint James, by the which the Constable with his banner displaied entered. The Bishoppe and the Lord Willoughby defended their fortresse tenne daies, and yeelded. Thus was the Citie of Paris brought into the possession of Charles the French king, &c. now when Paris, Saint Denis, Saint Germaine and diuers other townes in Fraunce were taken for lacke of succour, the Duke of Yorke Regent of France, came ouer into Normandy with 8000. men, and in his company the Earles of Salisbury and Suffolke, the Lord Falconbridge and other, but this Regent neuer did good in Fraunce, as appeareth by the histories.

The 19. day of July, the Duke of Burgoigne, with a great multitude of Burgonians and Flemmings appeared before Caleis, and there pight his Paulions and Tents, at which season was Lieutenaunt of Caleis sir Iohn Ratcliffe Knight, and of the Castell was Lieutenaunt the Baron of Dudley: this siege endured about three weekes, in which season many knightly acts were done and exercised on both parts.

Caleis besieged by the Duke of Burgoigne.

Ro Fabian.

On the second day of August the Duke of Glocester, protectour of England, with 500. sailes, (as some write,) landed at Caleis, and entended vpon the third day following to haue issued out of the towne, and to haue giuen battaile to the Flemmings, (but as our English writers testifie,) so soone as the Duke of Burgoigne was ware of the great power of the Lord protector, he toke with him of his ordinance that he might lightly carrie, and the other that were cumbersome he left behind. When the duke with his host was thus fled, the Lord protector which his people followed him into the countrey by the space of eleuen dayes, in which season he burnt y^t two townes of Popering and Bell, and returned to Calais, and so into England.

An. reg. 15. This yeare was the Castle or towne of Rokesborough in Scotland besieged by the King of Scots, but when he heard that Sir Ralph Gray knight was comming thither with a competent number to remoue the siege, anon he departed, leauing some part of his ordinance behind him, to his great shame and dishonour.

1437. Queene Katherine deceased. The 3. of January Quéene Katherine late wife to Henry the fift, and mother to King Henry the first, departed out of this transitorie life at Bermondsey, and on the eight of February hir body was brought to S. Katherins by the tower, from thence to S. Pauls, and so was buryed at Westminster in our Ladyes chappell, and hir corpes being taken vp againe in the raigne of King Henry the 7. when he laid the foundation of his new chappell there, she was neuer since buried, but remaineth still aboue ground in a coffin of boords, behind the east end of the quire. This Quéene Katherine (saith Hall) after the death of K. Henry the fift hir husband, being yong and lusty, following more hir own appetite, than friendly counsell, & regarding more hir priuate affection, than her owne honour, toke to husband (saith he) a goodly gentleman, named Owen Tewther, by whom she conceiued and brought forth three sonnes, Edmond, Iaspar, and another which was a monke of Westminster, and a Daughter which liued not long. After whose death, King Henry because they were his brethren, of one wombe descended, created Edmond Earle of Richmond, and Iaspar Earle of Penbroke: which Edmond had by Margaret Daughter and sole heire to Iohn Duke of Somerset, Henry, which after was King of this Realme, called King Henry the seuenth.

The Dutches of Bedford, sister to Lewes Earle of S. Paul, without counsell of her friends, maried a lusty knight, called Sir Richard Wooduile, to the great displeasure of hir vncle the Bishop of Turwine, and the Earle hir brother. This Sir Richard was made baron of Riuers, and after Earle, and had by his Lady many noble sonnes, and faire daughters, whereof one was Lady Elizabeth, after Quéene of England, maried to King Edward the fourth.

This yeare the 14. of January at noone, the great stone gate at London bridge with the tower vpon it next to Southwarke fell downe in the Thames and two of the farthest arches of the same bridge, and yet no man perished in body, which was a great worke of God,

Also this yeare on the ninth of July, Iane late Quéene of England, and before Dutches of Brytaine, daughter to the King of Nauarre, and wife to King Henry the fourth, died in the mannor of Hayering a Bowre in Essex, from from whence she was remoued to Bermondsey, and from thence conueyed to Canterbury, where she was solemnly enterred by King Henry the fourth her husband.

This yeere the King gaue licence to Humfrey Duke of Glocester, and Elianor his wife, to build and embattell his manor house at Greenewich, to inclose two hundred acres of ground pasture, wood, and heath, and to imbattell his tower in the same parke, &c. Record. Tower of Greenwich.

In the meane time, Iohn Duke of Somerset accompanied with the Lords of Fauconbridge, Talbot, Sir Francis Surien Arraganois, Mathew Gough, Thomas Pawlet, Thomas Harington, Walter Lymbroke, Iohn Geding, William Watton Esquires, and Thomas Hilton baslike of Roane, with a puissance of the English party, besieged the towne of Harflew both by water and by land. The captaine within the towne was called Sir Iohn de Stuteuile, and Sir Robert his brother, with other, to the number of 600. fighting men. The assailants made trenches, both to assault the town, and to let the French from succours, that they should neither approch nor aide the townes men besieged: diuers assaultes were giuen, and great ordinance was laid before the gate of the towne, which ouerthrew buildings: the siege endured long, to the great discomfiture of them within, whereof they aduertised the King, who sent thither the Earle of Owe, the Earle of Dunoys, the bastard of Burbon, the Lord Gainecourt and other, with 4000. men, these passed the riuer of Some betweene Amias and Corby, came before the towne, and daily skirmished with the Englishmen, but nothing preuailed, and therefore returned. The captaines of the towne rendred the towne to Iohn Duke of Somerset, who made captaines there Thomas Pawlet, William Lymbrike, Christopher Barker, and George S. George, which many yeres manfully defended the towne and hauen, but afterward when the said Duke was regent, he not onely lost the towne, but also the Citie of Roane, with many other Cities.

This yeere was a parliament holden at Westminster in which were diuers notable conclusions ordained, aswell for the preseruation of peace at home, as for the maintenance of war in outward regions: and an act was made for buieng and selling by strangers, very profitable to the publike weal if it were obserued. Parliament at Westminster. An. reg. 16.

On the 6. of November the Earle of Warwike as regent of France, passed the sea, after he had bin seuen times shipped and vnshipped, and landed at Harflew with 1000. fresh souldiers, and came to Roan, and then the Duke of Yorke returned into England.

The Earle of Warwicke hearing that the Duke of Burgoyne besieged the Castle of Croytie, sent the Lord Talbot, the Lord Fauconbridge, Sir Thomas Kiriel, Sir Iohn Montgomerie, Thomas Lymbroke, Thomas Chandos, Dauy Hall, and other Knights and Esquires, and in all 5000. men. When the Duke of Burgoyne was informed of the approch of the Lord Talbot, and other, hee with all his power sauing 400. left in a bastle by him there newly builded, fledde to Abbeuile, which bastle was soone gained, and the men either slaine or taken. After this the Lord Talbot sent 1438. Albert V. Duke of Austria Emp. of Germany sent to the Duke of Burgoin, signifying to him, that except he would come forth, and giue him battell, he would vtterly waste his countrey of Picardy, and according to his promise he burnt townes, spoyled, and slew many people in Picardy, but for all this doings, the Duke of Burgoyne appeared not, but got him from Abbeuile to Ambois, so that the Lord Talbot abode 20. daies in Picardy and Artois, destroying all afore him, and returned without impeachment.

Owen Tewther foulyhurting his keper, brake out of Newgate, but was taken afterward by the Lord Beaumond, and brought again to Newgate, and againe escaped. This Owen was thus imprisoned by the Duke of Glocester, for that he had foure children by Quéene Katherine, late wife to Henry the fift, as is afore shewed. This Owen was many yeres afterward taken at a skirmish about Wigmore, and brought by sir Richard Vehan grandfather to great Vehan the sergeant at armes, to Hereford, and there beheaded, and buried: but afterward Iaspar sonne to Owen sodainly tooke sir Richar Vehan in his house, or, as some say, at Chepstow Castle, and caused his head to be smitten off. In the moneth of June the Earle of Huntington (as steward of Gwine) with 2000. archers, and 400. speares was sent into Gascoigne, as a supply to the contry and commons of the same. Also sir Richard Wooduile, sir William Chamberlaine, sir William Peits, and sir William Story with 1000. men were sent to stuffe the townes in Normandy, which at that time had thereof great néede, for the English Captaines had small confidence in the Normans, and not to much in some of their owne nation, for briberie, with couetousnes ranne fast abroad with French crowns, that vneth any creature could hold their hands close, or purses shut.

This yeare the towne of Wico Malbanke, or Nantwich in the countie of Chester was pitifully consumed with fire.

This yeare, by reason of great tempests, vnmeasurable windes and raines there rose such a scarsitie, that wheate was sold in some places for two shillings fiue pence the bushell, wine for twelue pence the gallon, bay salt for fourtéene pence the bushell, &c

In this moneth followed such a frost, and after that so déepe a snow, that al the ground was couered therewith, and all the ditches frozen, which weather put the Englishmen in hope to recouer againe the towne of Pontoise, by the French King gotten before, by corrupting with money diuers burgesses of the towne, wherefore the Englishmen being clothed all in white, with Iohn Lord Clifford their captaine, came in the night to the ditches, and passed them without danger, by reason of the frost, scaled the walles, slew the watch, and toke the towne with many profitable prisoners.

After the regaining of the towne of Pontoise Richard Beauchamp Earle of Warwike lieutenant generall of France, and of the dutchy of Normandy, died in the Castle of Roan in Normandy on the last of Aprill, the yere of his age 58. And on the fourth of October next following his corpes being honorably conueied, aswell by water as by land, from Roan in Normandy, to Warwike in England, and was laid with full solemnities in a faire chest made of stone

About the beginning of Lent, Iohn Duke of Somerset, and the Lord Talbot, with other captaines and men of war, to the number of 2000. marching towards Picardy, passed ouer the riuer of Some, and through the towne of Monteruel, came before the fortresse of Fulleuill, which the Duke besieged, Whilest the Lord Talbot entred further into the country. After that the Duke had mounted his great artillery, and began to batter the hold, the captaine within being slaine with a shot thereof, and the batterie being still continued, the place was yéelded, in the which the Duke left a competent garrison of souldiours, which afterward sore indomaged the country.

This done, the Duke followed the Lord Talbot, who was already entred a good way within the country of Sauthois, and now ioyning their powers togither, they came to a fortresse called Lyhons in Sauthois, which was also rendred vnto them, after they had brent the Church which the countrie people kept against them, and would not yéeld it, till they were fired out, and brent, and slaine, to the number of 300. The fortresse being by composition deliuered into their hands, the duke with his power lay there about ten dayes, sending diuers troupes of his men abroad into the country, which spoiled the same, tooke the fortresse of Harbonners, and the Lord thereof within it, who for his ransome, and to haue his subiects and house saued from spoile and fier, compounded with his takers for 1000. saluz of gold, which he paied to them: finally, after the Duke of Somerset, and the Lord Talbot, with their power had laine in Lyhons about ten dayes, they returned into Normandy without any impeachment,

This yére wheat was sold at London for thrée shillings the bushell, malt for thirteene shillings the quarter, otes for eight pence the bushell, which forced men to eate beanes, pease, and barley, more then in an hundred yéres before: wherefore Stephen Browne maior of London sent into Prusse, and caused to be brought to London many ships laden with rie, which did much good to the people, for bread corne was so scarse in England that poore people made them bread of ferne rots. An. reg. 18. Great dearth of corne in England. 1440.

Sir Richard Wich vicar of Hermetsworth in Esser, or middlesex, sometime vicar of Dertford in Kent, who had before abiured, was brent on the tower hill the 17. of June. After whose death was great murmur among the people, for some said he was a good man and an holy, and put to death by malice: and some said the contrary, so that many men and women went by night to the place where he was brent, and offered their money, images of wax, and other things, making their prayers, kneeling, and kissing the ground, bare away with them the ashes of his body for holy reliques, &c.

This endured eight dayes, til the maior and aldermen ordained men of armes, to restraine the people, who apprehended many, and sent them to prison, among whom was taken the vicar of Berking Church beside the tower, in whose parish all this was done, who had receiued the offering of the simple people. And to excite them to offer the more feruently to the fulfilling of his false couetousnes, he had medled ashes with the powder of spices, and strewed them in the place where the priest was brent, and so the simple people were deceiued, weening the sweete sauour had come of the ashes of the dead priest: all which the said vicar of Berking church confessed in prison. This haue I noted the more at large, because some haue written the vicar of Berking to be brent, which is false, for he was not brent, though he better deserued thã the other.

The Duke of Yorke regent of France.

After the death of the Earle of Warwike, the Duke of Yorke was againe made regent of France, which being accompanied with the Earle of Orfort, the Lord Bourcher called Earle of Ewe, Sir Iames of Ormond, the Lord Clinton, Sir Richard Wooduile, and diuers other noble men on the fiftenth of May shipped at Portsmouth, and sailed thence into Normandy, before whose arriuall, the French King sore greeued with the towne of Pontoise, assembled a great army, and besieged the said towne himselfe in person, enuironing it with bastiles, trenches, and ditches, beating the walles and bulwarks with the shot of great ordinance, giuing thereunto diuers great assaults, but Iohn Lord Clifford like a valiant captaine defended the towne so manfully, that the Frenchmen rather lost than won.

The Duke of Yorke at his landing, sent for the Lord Talbot, and a great number of souldiours, and so came neere to the towne of Pontoise, and there incamped himselfe, and sent word to the French King, that thither he was come to giue him battell, if he would come out of his strength and bastiles, but the French King determined not to venture his person with men of so base estate, but meant to keepe his ground, bidding the Lord regent to enter at his perill: and in the meane season did what he could to stop the passage of the riuer Oise, so that no victuall should be brought to the English army by that way.

The Duke of Yorke perceiuing that the French King minded not to fight, purposed to passe ouer the riuer of Oise, and so to fight with him. Whereupon he remoued his campe, and appointed the Lord Talbot and other to make countenaunce, as they would passe the riuer by force at the port of Beaumont, amount, and appointed another company in boates of timber and lether, and bridges made of cords and ropes to passe ouer beneath the abbey. Whilest the Lord Talbot made a crie as though he would assault the gate, certaine Englishmen passed the water in boates, and drew a bridge of cords ouer, so that a great number of them were got to the other side, ere the Frenchmen were aduised what had hapned. When they saw the chance, they ran like mad men to haue stopped the passage, but it was too late, for the most part of the Englishmen were got ouer, insomuch, that they chased their enimies backe, and slue Sir Guillam de Chastell, and diuers other. The Frenchmen seeing their euill hap, returned to their King, and tolde him what had happened, whereupon he doubting to be assailed to his disaduantage, thought not good longer to tarry, but with all spéede, remouing his ordinance into the battle of Saint Martin, which he had newly made, dislodged in the night from Vandbuyllon, and went to Poyssi, leauing the Lord de Cotigni Admirall of France with 3000. men, to keepe the battle. The Englishmen the next day came before the towne of Ponthois, thinking there to haue found the French King, but he was gone, and in his lodging they found great riches, and much stuffe, which he could not carrie away for feare of the sodaine inuasion. The Duke with his power entred the towne, repaired the wals, and diuers times assaulted the battle of the Frenchmen. After this the Duke intending once againe to offer the French King battell, left behinde him at Ponthois, Sir Geruais Clifton, Sir Nicholas Burdet, Henry Chandos, and a thousand soldiers, and therewith remouing with his whole army came before Poyssi, where he set himselfe and his men in order of battell ready to fight. There issued out some Frenchmen, but to their losse: for diuers of them were slaine, and fewer valiant horsemen taken. The Duke perceiuing the Frenchmen durst not encounter in field with the English power, dislodged from Poyssi, & came to Paunt, and from thence to Rouen.

When the Regent and the Lord Talbot were returned againe into Normandy, the French King considering how much it should redound to his dishonour to let rest the towne of Ponthois, in his enimies hands, he eftsones returning sodainly againe vnto Ponthois, he first by assault gat the Church, and after the whole towne, toke the captaine and diuers other Englishmen, and slue to the number of three hundred, amongst the which Sir Nicholas Burdet chéefe butler of Normandy was one. Anno reg. 19.

Sir Nicholas Burdet slaine.

After this King Henry, and King Charles, agréed to send Ambassadors to commune of peace: King Henry sent Henry Beaufort Cardinall of Winchester, with diuers other noble men to Calais, with whom was also sent Charles Duke of Orliance yet prisoner in England, to the end he might be both author of the peace, and procurer of his owne deliuerance. The French King sent the Archbishop of Reimes, and the Earle of Dunois, and the Duke of Burgoigne sent the Lord de Creue-Cure, and diuers other: all these met at Calais, where the Duke of Orliance curteously receiued the Earle of Dunoys (his bastard brother) thanking him greatly for his paines taking in gouerning his lands and countrie. During the time of his captiuitie and absence, diuers communications were had, as well for the deliuerance of the Duke, as for a finall peace, but nothing was concluded, sauing that another meeting was appointed. The Duke of Orliance was set at libertie, paying for his ransome 300000. crownes.

The 26. of nouember was a challenge in armes done before King Henry within lists, in Smithfield, betweene Sir Richard Wooduile, a knight of England, and a knight of Spaine, but the King toke vp the matter into his hands, after the third stroke.

The Kings Colledge in Cambridge.

This yeere King Henry being of himselfe alwayes naturally inclined to doe good, and fearing least he might seeme vnthankfull to Almightie God for his great benefits bestowed vpon him, since the time hee first toke vpon him the regiment of his Realme, determined for his primar notable worke, to erect and found two famous Colleges in the honour and worship of his holy name, and for the increase of vertue, the dilation of cunning, and establishment of Christian faith, whereof the one in Cambridge, to be called his College Royall of our Lady, and Saint Nicholas: and the other at Eaton, beside Windsore, to be called his Colledge of our Blessed Ladie. And for the performance of this his deuout purpose, he enfeoffed certaine Bishops with other noble and worshipfull personages, by his letters pattents, with lands and possessions, parcell of his inheritance of the Dutchie of Lancaster, to the cleere value of well neere fower and thirtie hundred pound by yere, which letters patents he after confirmed by his acte of Parliament, declaring also by his will vnto his said Feoffes, his intent and meaning, how the same should be imployed vpon the edifications of his said two Colledges, whereof in my iudgement the deuice is so excellent, and the buildings so princely and apt for that purpose, as I cannot omit to set forth vnto you the very plat of the whole Colledge in Cambridge, euen as I finde mentioned, almost Verbatim, in his said will, supposing, that if the rest of the house had proceeded according to the Chappell already finished (as his full intent and meaning was) the like Colledge could scant haue been found againe in any Christian land. This Colledge was begun in his time, and finished so farre, that in Anno 1443, (which was the 23. of his raigne) the cemitery or Church yarde, the altar, &c. (as the manner was) were consecrated by the Bishops of Salisbury and Lincolne. The words of the Will are thus: As touching the dimensions of the Church of my said Colledge, of our Ladie and Saint Nicholas of Cambridge, I haue deuised and appointed, that the same Church shall containe in length 288. foote of assise, without any Iles, and all of the wideneſſe of fortie foote. And the length of the same Church from the West ende vnto the altars at the Quire dore, shall containe 120. foote. And from the Prouosts stall, vnto the greece called Gradus Chori, 90, foote, for 36. stals on either side of the same Quire, answering to xxx. fellowes, and ten priests conduits, which must be de prima forma. And from the said stals vnto the East ende of the said Church, 62 foote of assise. Also a Rerodosse bearing the rodloft, departing the Quire, and the body of the Church, containing in length fortie foote, and in breadth fourteene foote. The wals of the same

And in the east end of the same Church shall be a window of nine dayes, and betwirt euery butterace a window of fiue dayes. And betwirt euery of the same butteraces in the body of the Church, on both sides of the same Church a closet with an Altar therein, contayning in length twentie foote, and in breadth ten foote, vawted and finished vnder the soile of the Ile windowes. And the pauement of the Church to be enhanced foure foote aboue the ground without. And the height of the pauement of the Quire one foote and a halfe aboue the pauement of the Church. And the pauement of the Aultar three foote aboue that. And on the North side of the Quire a Vestrie contayning in length fiftie foote, and in breadth, twentie two foote, departed into two houses beneath, and two houses aboue, which shall containe in height twentie two foote in all, with an entrie from the Quire vaulted. And at the West ende of the Church a Cloyster square, the East pane contayning in length, 175. foote and the West pane as much. The North pane two hundreth foote, and the South pane as much, of the which the Deambulatorie thirteene foote wide, and in height twentie foote, to the Corbill table, with cleare Stories and Butteraces with finiales, vaulted and embattelled. And the ground thereof, foure foote lower than the Church ground. And in the middle of the West pane of the Cloyster a strong Tower square, contayning foure and twentie foote within the walles. And in height one hundred and twentie foote to the Corbill table. And foure small Turrets ouer that fined with Pynacles. And a doze into the sayde Cloyster inward, but outward none. And as touching the dimensions of the housing of the sayde Colledge, I haue deuised and appoynted in the South side of the said Church a Quadraunt, closing to both ends of the same Church, the East pane whereof shall containe two hundred and thirtie foote in length, and in breadth within the Wals two and twentie foote. In the same panes middle a tower for a Gatehouse, contayning in length thirtie foote, and in breadth two and twentie, and in height fortie foote, with three Chambers ouer the Gate, euery one ouer the other. And on either side of the same Gate foure Chambers, euery one contayning in length fiue and twentie foote, and in breadth two and twentie foote. And ouer euery of these Chambers, two Chambers aboue of the same measure or more, with two Towers outward, and two Towers inward.

The South pane shall containe in length 238. foote, and in breadth two and twentie foote within, in which shall bee seuen Chambers, euery one contayning in length nine and twentie foote, and in breadth two and twentie foote with a Chamber parcell of the Prouostes lodging, contayning in length fiue and thirtie foote, and with a Chamber in the East corner of the same pane, contayning in length fiue and twentie foote, and in breadth two and thirtie foote. And ouer euery of all these Chambers two Chambers, and with fiue towers outward, and three towers inward. The West pane shall containe in length 230. foote, and in breadth within 24. foote, in which at the ende toward the Church shall be a Library, contayning in length 110. foote, and in

Thus much I haue inlarged by occasion of reading this good kings will: the cunning deuise whereof I leaue to the considerate iudgement of such as be expert in architecture, heartily desiring almighty God to put into the heart of some noble Prince of his land, one day to make perfect this royall worke so charitably begun.

Roger

Roger Bolinbrooke a great astronomer, with Thomas Southwell a chanon of S. Stephens chappell at Westminster, were taken as conspiratours of the kings death, for it was said, that the same Roger should labour to consume the kings person by waie of Negromancie, and the said Thomas should say Masses in the lodge of Harnesey Parke beside London, upon certaine instruments, with the which the said Roger should vse his crafte of Negromancie, against the faith, and was assenting to the said Roger, in all his workes. And the fiue and twentith day of Julie being Sondaie, Roger Bolingbroke, with all his instruments of Negromancie, that is to say, a chayre painted wherein he was wont to sit, vppon the foure corners of which chayre stode foure swordes, and vpon euery swoorde an image of copper hanging, with many other instrumentes: he stode on a high scaffolde in Paules Churchyarde, before the crosse, holding a swoorde in his right hand, and a scepter in his left, arrayed in a maruellous attire, and after the sermon was ended by maister Low Bishop of Rochester, he abiured all articles longing to the crafte of Negromancie or misbowning to the Faith, in presence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Cardinall of Winchester, the Bishop of London, Salisbury and many other. Roger Bolinbrooke.

On the Tuesday next following, dame Elianor Cobham, daughter to Reginald Cobham Lord of Sterbrough: Dutchesse of Gloucester fled by night into the Sanctuary at Westminster, which caused hir to be suspected of treason. Elianor Cobham apprehended.

In the meane time Roger Bolingbroke, was examined before the kings Counsaile, where he confessed that he wrought the said Negromancie at the stirring and procurement of the said Dame Elianor, to knowe what should befall of hir, and to what estate she should come, whereupon she was cited to appere before Henry Chicheley Archbishop of Canterburie, Henry Beauforte Bishop of Winchester Cardinall, Iohn Kempe Archbishop of Yorke Cardinall: William Ascothe Bishop of Salisburie, and other in Saint Stephens chappell at Westminster, there to answere to certaine articles in number 28. of Negromancie, witchcraft, sorcerie heresie, and treason, where when she appeered, the foresaid Roger was brought forth to witnes against hir, and said, that she was cause and first stirred him to labor in the said arte. Then on the eleuenth of August, she was committed to the warde of Sir Iohn Steward, Sir William Wolse Knights, Iohn Stanley Esquire, and other, to be conueyed to the Castle of Lædes, there to remaine til three wækes after Michaelmasse.

Shortly after a commission was directed to the Earles of Huntington, Staffyrde, Suffolke, and Northumberland, the treasurer Sir Ralph Cromwell, Iohn Cornwall, Lord Fanhope, Sir Walter Hungerforde, and to certaine Iudges of both Benches, to enquire of all manner of treasons, sorceries and other things that might be hurtfull to the kings person, before whom the said Roger, and Thomas Southwell, as principals, and dame Elianor as accessarie, were indicted of treason in the Guilde Hall of London.

There was taken also Margerie Gurdemaine a witch of Eye besides Westminster, whose sorcerie and witchcrafte the said Elianor had long time vsed, and by hir medicines and drinkes enforced the Duke of Glocester to loue hir, and after to wed hir, wherefore, and for cause of relapse, the same witch was brent in Smithfield, on the 27. of October.

The one and twentith of October, in the chappell beforesaid, before the Bishops, of London Robart Gilbart, of Lincolne William Alnewike, of Norwich Thomas Brouns, the sayde Elianor appéred, and Adam Molins clarke of the Kings counsell read certaine articles obiected against hir of Sorcerie and Negromancie, whereof some shee denied, and some shee granted.

The three and twentith of October dame Elianor appéred againe, and witnesses were brought forth and examined: and she was conuict of the said articles: then was it asked if she would say any thing against the witnesses, whereunto she answered nay, but submitted hir selfe. The 27. day of October she abiured the articles, and was adiorned to appére againe the ninth of Nouember. In the meane time to with on the 26. of October Thomas Southwell died in the Tower of London, as himselfe had prophesied that he should neuer die by Iustice of the Lawe.

Elianor Cobham did penaunce.

The 9. of Nouember dame Elianor appéred before the Archbishop and other, in the sayde Chappell, and receiued hir penaunce, which she performed.

On Monday the 13. of Nouember, she came from Westminster, by water, and landed at the Temple bridge, from whence with a taper of ware of two pound in hir hande, she went through Flétestréte, hodlesse (saue a kerchese) to Pauls, where she offered hir taper at the high altar. On the Wednesday next shee landed at the Swan in Thamis stréte, and then went through Bridgestréte, Grace church stréte, straight to Leaden Hall, and so to Christ Church by Aldegate. On Fryday she landed at Quéene Hiue, and so went through Cheape to S. Michaels in Cornehill, in forme aforesaid: at all which times the Maior, sheriffes, and crafts of London, receiued hir and accompanied hir. This being done she was committed to the ward of Sir Thomas Stanley, wherein she remained during hir life in the Castle of Chester, hauing yerely 100. markes assigned for hir finding, in the 22. of Henry the first she was remoued to Kenilworth, there to be safely kept, whose pride, falsé, couetise, and lecherie, were cause of hir confusion.

The 18. of Nouember Roger Bolingbroke, with Sir Iohn Hum priest, and William Woodham Esquier, was arrained in the Guild Hall of London, where the said Iohn and William had their charters, but Roger Bolingbrooke was condemned, and had iudgement of Sir Iohn Hody, chiefe Iustice of the Kings Bench, and the same day he was drawn from the tower to Tiborne and there hanged and quartered: and when the said Roger should suffer, he said that he was neuer guiltie of any treason against the Kings person, but he had presumed too far in his cunning, whereof he cried God mercy: and the Iustice that gaue on him iudgement liued not long after.

Henry Beauchampe succéeded in his fathers inheritance, who being kept kept two yéeres in the kings hands, was reſtored to al his liuings with great glory, for he was crowned King of Wight, by the kings owne hands, and nominated chiefe Earle of England. Henry Beauchamp Earle of Warwicke.

The Duke of Orliance being deliuered (as is afore ſhewed) and ſpeaking now better Engliſh than French, after his arriual in France, repaired to the Duke of Burgoyne, and according to his promiſe, married the Lady Mary Cleue in the towne of Saint Omers, on whom he begat a ſonne, which after was French King by the name of Lewes the twelfth.

Richard duke of Yorke regent of France and gouernor of Normandy, ſent the Lord Willoughby with a great number of ſouldiers, to deſtroy the county of Amiens, and Iohn Lord Talbot was appointed to beſiege the towne of Diepe: and the regent himſelfe, accompanied with Edmond Duke of Somerſet, ſet forward into the dutchie of Aniow. The Lord Willoughby entred the country of his enemies vpon ſuch a ſodaine, that a great number of people were taken ere they could withdraw into any place of ſafegard. The Frenchmen in the garriſons adioyning, aſtonied with the clamor and crie of the people, iſſued out, and manfully fought with the Engliſhmen, but in the end the Frenchmen ſlaine in the forefront, they turned their backes and fled, the Engliſhmen followed and ſlew many, and ſuch as eſcaped the ſword were robbed by the earle of Saint Pole, which was comming to aide the Engliſhmen: in this conflict were ſlaine aboue 600. men of armes, and a great number taken.

The Dukes of Yorke and Somerſet entred into Aniow and Maine, and there deſtroyed townes, and ſpoiled the people, and with great prayes and priſoners repaired againe into Normandy, whither alſo the Lord Willoughby withdrew after his enterpriſe atchieued. The Duke of Somerſet entred into the marches of Britaine, and toke by aſſault a towne named la Gerch, appertayning to the Duke of Alanſon, ſpoyling and burning the ſame, from thence he went to Ponray, where he ſoiorned two moneths, ſending forth daily his men of war, to deſtroy the countries of Aniow, Traonnois, and Chatragonnois. The French King ſent the Marſhall Loyach with foure thouſand men to reſiſt the inuaſions of the Duke of Somerſet, but the Duke diſcomfited him, ſlew 100. of his men, and toke 62. priſoners of the beſt of them. The Duke after this incounter toke the towne of Beaumont le Vicount, and manned all the fortreſſes on the frontiers of his enemies, and with rich booties and priſoners returned to the Duke of Yorke. 1442.

In the meane time the Lord Talbot beſieged the towne of Diepe, enuironing it with déepe trenches and rampiers, building alſo vpon the mount Powlet a ſtrong baſtile, but at length perceiuing the towne to be ſtrongly defended, he deliuered the cuſtodie of the baſtile to his baſtard ſonne a valiant yong man and departed to Roan for aide, money, and munition.

The French King ſent his ſonne the Dolphin of Vienne, with the Earle of Dunois and 15000. men to raiſe the ſiege from Diepe: three dayes they aſſailed the baſtile, in the which 600. Engliſhmen were incloſed: at length the Frenchmen wan it, and toke the baſtard Talbot priſoner, with Sir William liam Poitow, and Sir Iohn Repley, which shortly after were redeemed. The other Englishmen, seeing the battle won by the Frenchmen, stood all a day in order of battaile, and in the night following returned to Roan.

Whilest these things were in doing, Philip Duke of Burgoigne made sharpe war against the Earle of S. Pole, in taking from him his townes and Castles, so that he was constrained to renounce his allegiance, promised and sworne to the King of England, and returned to the French parte.

A combat in Smithfield.

The 30. of January a challenge was done in Smithfield within lists, before the King, the one, Sir Philip le Beawfe of Aragon a Knight, and the other an Esquire of the Kings house called Iohn Anstley or Astley, these comming to the field toke their tents, and then was the Knights sonne made Knight by the King, and so brought againe to his fathers tent. Then the Heraults of armes called them by name to doe their battaile, and so they came both all armed with their weapons: The Knight came with his sword drawne, and the Esquire with his speare, which speare the Esquire cast against the Knight, but the Knight auoyded it with his sword, and cast it to the ground, then the Esquire toke his axe, and went against the Knight sodainly, on whom he stroke many strokes hard and sore vpon his basenet and on his hand, and made him lose and let fall his axe to the ground, and brast vp his vmbar three times, and caught his dagger and would haue smitten him in the face, for to haue slaine him in the field: and then the King cried hoo, and so they were departed, and went to their tents, and the King dubbed Iohn Astley Knight for his valiant tourney, and the Knight of Aragon offered his harnes at Windsore.

John Beauford Earle of Somerset, was made Duke of Somerset: and Lord Iohn Talbot for his approued prowes shewed in France, was created Earle of Shrowesbury, & his sonne Lord Talbot, and then with a company of 3000. men sent againe into Normandy, for defence of that Countrie the 25. of May.

1443. Commotion at Norwich.

The Citizens of Norwich, rose against the Prior of Christs Church, within the same Citie, and would haue fired the priory, they kept the towne by strength against the Duke of Norffolke, and all his power, wherefore the King sent thether the chiefe Iudge Iohn Fortescue, with the Earles of Stafford and of Huntington, who indicted many Citizens, and the Prior also. The Liberties of the Citie were seised into the Kings hand, and Sir Iohn Clifton made captaine there, and many of the Citizens fled ouer the seas and into vnknowne places.

William Chicheley Aldermen of London, augmented with godly legacies, for the sustentation of the poore, which Colledge at the suppression was valued by the yéere in lands 156. pound 2. shillings, &c.

This archbishop also founded two Colledges in Oxford, the one All soules Colledge (vnto the which King Henry the first gaue lands lately belonging to the priors alians, to wit, 4. priories, Alberbery in Salop, Runney in Kent, Languenith in Southwales, & Wodon Pinkney in Northamptonshire, and therefore the said K. in the Charter is called founder:) The other Barnard Colledge since suppressed by King Henry the 8. now by Sir Thomas White againe redified, and named S. Iohns Colledge. He also redified the new Library at Canterbury, and furnished the same with bookes, builded a great part of their steeple, repaired their church, and gaue to the couent and Church many ornaments, and rich iewels, he caused his owne tombe in the same Church to be builded during his life, he was the new builder, or especiall repayrer of the faire large parish Church of Crodowne, as appeareth by his armes grauen on the wals, steeple, and porch of the same Church.

Iohn Stafford borne at Yoke in the parish of Abbotesbery in Dorcetshire, doctor of lawes, deane of Saint Martins le Grand in London, after Bishop of Bath and Wels, about the 12. of Henry the 6. made Chancellor of England, was by Eugenius the fourth, made Archbishop of Canterburie.

Also Lewes Lushebrughe Bishop of Elie deceased at his maner of Hatfield and was buried at Elie. To whom Thomas Bourchar succéded, being translated from Wircester. Anno's Elij.

Whilest England was disquieted, and France by spoile defaced, all Christendome lamented the continuall destruction of so noble a Realme, and the effusion of so much Christian blod: wherfore to agrée the two puissant kings, all the Princes of Christendome trauailed so effectually by the Orators and Ambassadors, that a diet was appointed to be kept at the Citie of Towrs in Towraine, where, for the K. of England appeared William de la Pole Earle of Suffolke, doctor Adam Molins Bishop of Chichester, képer of the Kings priuy seale, Sir Robert Ros, and other: and for the French King were appointed Charles Duke of Orliance, Lewes de Borbon Earle of Vandosme, great maister of the French Kings houshold, Pierce de Bresse steward of Poytowe, and Bartram Beannan Lord of Precigni. Ann reg. 22. All Christian Princes labour to appease the troubles in Fraunce. Fred 3d Emp. of Germany.

There were also sent Ambassadors from the Empire, from Spaine, from Denmarke, and from Hungarie, to be mediators betwixt the two Princes, many méetings were about this busines, but no finall concord could be agréed vpon, more then a certaine truce for eightéene moneths, which after was prolonged to the yéere 1449. but in the meane time broken, as ye shall heare afterward.

In this treatie William de la Pole Earle of Suffolke, imagining with himselfe, that the next way to come to a perfect peace, was to moue some marriage, betwéene the French Kings kinswoman, the Lady Margaret Daughter to Reyner Duke of Anion, and King Henry of England: this Duke Reyner named himselfe King of Cicill, Naples, and Jerusalem, 1444. At this time George Castriot called Scanderbeg flor. in Epirus.

hauing onely the title of those Realmes, without any profit. This marriage was at the first made strange to the Earle, and one thing seemed to be agreat let to it, to wit, because the King of England possessed a great part of the Dutchie of Aniow, and the whole countrie of Maine, which pertained (as they said) to Duke Reyner. The Earle of Suffolke condescended, that the Dutchie of Aniow, and the county of Maine should be deliuered to the Duke, demanding with his daughter for hir mariage nothing. And to the intent that of this truce might insue a finall concord, a day of enteruiew was appointed betweene the King and the Duke, in a place conuenient, betweene Chartres and Roan.

Dukes, Marquesses and Earles created.

When these things were concluded, the Earle of Suffolke with his company returned into England where he declared what an honorable truce he had taken, through ỹ which there was great hope of a finall peace, by meanes of the honorable mariage which he had concluded. But though this mariage pleased well the King, and diuers of his councell, yet other some were against it. For the performance of the conclusions, the French King sent the Earle of Vandosme great master of his house, and the Archbishop of Reimes first pere of France, and diuers other into England, where they were honorably entertained, and after that the instruments were sealed, and deliuered on both parts, the said Ambassadors returned with great rewards.

When these things were done, the King created Humfrey Earle of Stafford Duke of Buckingham: and Henry Beauchamp Earle of Warwike, King Henry hartily tendering him for his parents sake, bestowed vpon him the Dukedome of Warwike: vnto whom also the King gaue the Castle of Bristow, with all the appurtenances, which King Iohn had kept in his hands and his successors after him: he gaue vnto him also the Iles of Gernsey and Iarnsey, Serke, Erme, and Aurney with all the priories aliens in the same. The Earle of Dorset was created and made Marquesse of Dorset, and William de la Pole Earle of Suffolke was created Marquesse of Suffolke: also Iohn Talbot Knight, the son of Iohn Earle of Shrewsbury, was created Baron Lisle for him and his heires males on the 26. of July.

An reg. 23.

In the moneth of Nouember William de la Pole marques of Suffolke with his wife and many honorable persons both men and women richly apparelled, sailed into France, for the conueiance of the Lady Margaret, nominated Q. into the Realme of England. This noble company came to the Citie of Towers in Touraine, where they were honorably receiued & entertained, both of the French K. and of the Duke Reiner, where the marques of Suffolke as procurator to King Henry, espoused the said Lady in the Church of S. Martin. At which mariage were present the father & mother of the bride, the French King which was vncle to the Duke Reiner, and the French Quéene aunt to the Dutches his wife: there were also the Dukes of Orleance, of Calabre, of Alanson, and of Britaine, 7. Earles, 12. Barons, 20. bishops, besides knights and gentlemen. When the feast, triumphs, bankets, and iusts were ended, the Lady was deliuered to the marques of Suffolke, which in great estate conueied her through Normandy vnto Diepe, where a while they remained.

woman excelled all other, as well in beauty and fauour, as in wit and policie, and was of stomacke and courage not inferiour to any: her badge was the daisie flower. This marriage seemed to many both vnfortunate, and vnprofitable to the Realme of England, and that for diuers causes: first the king had with her no dowry, and for the fetching of her, and other charges about her, the Marques of Suffolke demaunded a whole fifteenth in open Parliament: and also there was deliuered for her the Dutchie of Anion, the Citie of Mans, and the county of Maine. Furthermore, the Earle of Arminake tooke such displeasure with the king of England for the marriage, that he became vtter enemy to the Realme of England, and was the chiefe cause that the Englishmen were expulsed out of the Dutchie of Aquitaine.

Ann. reg. 24. Parliament. 1446.

A Parliament was summoned, in the which it was concluded, that by good foresight Normandy might be so furnished for defence before the ende of the truce, that the French king should take no aduantage through want of timely prouision: hereupon money was granted, and an army leuied, the Duke of Somerset appointed to be Regent of Normandy, and the Duke of Yorke discharged of that office.

The Marquesse of Suffolke the second of June, in the first session of this Parliament, before the Lords spirituall and temporall in the high house assembled, eloquently declared his paine and diligence sustained in his legacy, as well for the concluding an abstinence of warre, as in making of the marriage, opening also to them, that the said truce expired the first of Aprill next comming, except a final peace, or a further truce were cõcluded in the mean season: and therefore he aduised them to foresee and prouide things necessary for the warres, least happily the French perceiuing them vnpurueyed, would take the aduantage, and agree neither to peace nor amitie. Likewise on the next morrow, he descended into the common house, accompanied with certaine Lords, and there declared the same matter to the Knights, and bourgesses, praying the commons for his discharge, that as well all his doings and procedings in the Kings affaires, beyond the sea, as also his aduertisements and counsaile opened to the Lordes and commons now together assembled, might be by the king and them enacted, and enrolled in the recordes of the Parliament. Whereupon on the next morrow William Burley then speaker, and then company of the lower house, repayred to the Kings presence then sitting amongst the Lords, and there humbly required that the request of the Marquesse mought be granted, and so likewise the Lordes made the like petition, kneeling on their knees, and the king condescended to their desires, and so the whole matter was enacted and recorded for his acquitall.

In this 26. yeare of the raigne of this King, I finde no great matter worth the recitall, but that the Marquesse of Suffolke, by great fauour of the king and Queene, was created Duke of Suffolke, which dignitie he long enioyed not: for Richard Duke of Yorke being greatly alied by his wife, to the chiefest peeres and potentates of the Realme, ouer and besides his owne progenie, perceiuing the King to be a ruler, and not to rule, but the whole burthen of the Realme to rest in the ordinance of the Queene, & the Duke of Suffolk, began secretly to allure his friends of the Nobilitie, and priuily declared vnto them his title to the Crowne, and likewise did he to certaine gouernours of Cities and Townes, which priuely attempt was so politikely handled and secretly kept, that his prouision was ready before his purpose was opened.

After the death of Henry Beauford Bishop of Winchester, the affaires in Fraunce, were neither well loked to, nor the gouernours of the countrey well aduised, for an English Captaine, called sir Frances, surnamed de Aragonoys, tooke a towne named Fogars, vpon the borders of Normandie belonging to the Duke of Brytaine. For the which he complained him to the French king, and hée at the said Dukes request sent vnto the king of England, to make restitution of the harme. The which messengers were aunswered of the kings counsell, that the déede was right displeasant vnto the king, and that sir Frances Aragon had enterprised the feate of his owne presumption. Whereupon it followed shortly after, that the French by like policie tooke the towne and castell of Pountallarche, and after that many other, so that the taking of the foresaid towne of Fogiars by the Englishmen, was the occasion by the which the French after gat all Normandie. An.reg. 27.

French

This yéere the Frenchmen got many townes in Normandie out of the possession of the Englishmen. Also the citie of Roane was yéelded to the French, with condition that the captaines and garrisons might depart with armour and goods, and not long after was rendered (with the like condition as of Roane) the townes of Harflewe, and Hounflewe. A knight of Fraunce called sir Lewes de Breyll, chalenged an Esquire of England named Ralph Chalons of certaine feats of warres, the which to prowe, a day to them was giuen to mète at a towne in Fraunce named Mauunce, where the French knight at that day was present: but Chalons ranne the French knight through the bodie with his speare, whereof the said Lewes died. 1449. Roan yeelded to the French. Ann.reg. 28.

About the same time also, began a new rebellion in Ireland, but Richard Duke of Yorke being sent thither to appease the same, so asswaged the furie of the wilde and sauage people there, that he wan such fauour amongst them, as could neuer be separated from him and his linage. Richard Duke of Yorke wan fauor of the Irish.

John Vicount Beamount, was made Chamberlaine of England, Henry de Bromefield Lord Vescy, William Bourcher knight, Lord Bunuile, William Beauchampe Lord S. Amonde, Thomas Percy Lord Egremonde, these were created the 6. of Nouember. Barons created.

The French king assembled an army royall, and comming before Cane, besieged it on all sides, and assaulted the walles, but the Duke of Somerset, and the other captaines within the towne, manfully withstood their enemies, beating backe the assailants. The French king with his great ordinance shot daily at the wals, and did some hurt, but to the castell which stode on a rock, and in it a dungeon, vnable to be beaten down, he did no harm at all. Though the Duke of Somerset were the kings lieutenant, yet sir Dauy Hall, as captaine of this towne for his master the Duke of Yorke, owner therof, toke vpon him the chiefe charge, sir Robert Vere was captaine of the castell, and sir Henry Radford, captaine of the dungeon: daily the shot was great, but more terrible then hurtfull, sauing that one day, a stone shot into the towne, fell betwéen the Dutches of Somerset and her children, which being amased with this chance, besought her husband knéeling on her knées, to haue mercy and compassion of his small infants, that they might be deliuered out of the towne in safetie. The Duke moued with the sorrow of his wife, and loue of his children, rendered the towne, with condition to depart with all their goods. Sir Dauy Hall, with diuers other departed to Cherbrough, and from Cane deliuered to the French.

thence sailed into Ireland, to the Duke of Yorke, making relation to him of all these doings, which thing kindled so great a rancor in the Dukes heart, that he neuer left persecuting the Duke of Somerset, till he had brought him to his fatall confusion. After the obtayning of this strong towne of Cane, the Earle of Cleremont, besieged the Citie of Sisseur, whereof was Captaine Mathew Gowgh, with 300. Englishmen, who in the ende delinered the towne vpon condition to depart. Then was Falaise besieged, whereof were Captaines, for the Earle of Shrewsbury that was owner, Andrew Trolope, and Thomas Cotton Esquires, which agreed to deliuer it on conditions. The towne of Donfront was likewise rendered, so that there rested now, onely English, the towne of Chirburgh, whereof was Captaine one Thomas Gonuile, which as long as victuals serued, defended the towne right manfully, but in the ende, vpon composition yelded the towne, & went to Caleis, where the Duke of Somerset, and many other Englishmen then soiourned. Thus was Normandy lost clerely out of the Englishmens hands, after it had continued in their possession the space of 30. yeeres, by the conquest of Henry the fift. In which Dutchie were an 100. strong townes and fortresses, to be kept, and holden, besides them that were destroyed by the warres, and in the same is one Archbishoprieke, and fiue Bishoprickes. Whilest the French made these conquestes in the Dutchy of Normandy the common people make exclamations against the Duke of Suffolke, affirming him to bee the onely cause of the deliuery of Aniow, and Mayne, the chiefe procurer of the Duke of Glocesters death, the losse of Normandy, &c. Whereupon the Quéene doubting not onely the Dukes destruction, but also her owne confusion, caused the Parliament begunne at Westminster, after Chrismas adiourned to the blacke Friers in London, then to be adiourned to Leicester, thinking there to haue suppressed the malice conceiued against the Duke and her, at which place fewe of the Nobilitie would appeare. Where it was againe adiourned to Westminster, where was a full appearance. In the which session the commons of the neather-house put vp to the King and the Lords many artickles of treason, misprision, and euill demeanour against the Duke of Suffolke, as ye may read in Hall. The Quéene therfore, doubting some commotion to arise, caused the said Duke to be committed to the Tower, where he remained not past a moneth, but was restored to the kings fauour. This doing so much displeased the people, that in sundrie places of the Realme, they assembled together in great companies, and chose to them a Captain, but were ouercome as shall bée shewed.

After this little rage asswaged, about the Octaues of Easter, the Parliament was adiorned to Leicester, whither came the King & Quéene in great estate, estate, and with them the Duke of Suffolke, as chiefe counseller, where the commons of the lower house besought the King, that such persons as assented to the release of Anjow, and deliuerence of Mayne, might be duely punished. And to be priuie to that fact they accused as principall, the Duke of Suffolke, with John Bishop of Salisbury, sir James Fines Lord Say, Daniel Triuilian, and other whom they indited of treason, and many other matters touching the king and his commons, as it appeareth by the verdict of three inquestes, to the number of a thirtie persons, whereupon the king to appease the commons, first sequestred the Lord Say, being Treasurer of England, and other from their offices, and romes, and after banished William de la Pole Duke of Suffolke, for fiue yeres, who taking ship, at Ipswich in Suffolke, on the third day of May, sailed towards France, but was encountered with a ship of warre, appertayning to the Duke of Excester, Constable of the Tower of London, called the Nicholas of the Tower. The Captaine of which barke, with small fight entered into the Dukes ship, and perceiuing his person present, brought him to Doner Roade, and there on the side of a cocke boate, caused his head to be stricken off, and left his bodie with the head lying there on the sandes, which corpes being there found, by a chaplaine of his, was conueyed to Wingfield colledge in Suffolke, and there buried saith Hall: but I otherwise finde him to be buried in the Charterhouse of Kingstone vpon Hul.

Wil de la Pole Duke of Suffolke banished and murdered.

This William de la Pole Duke of Suffolke, and Alice his wife, daughter to Thomas Chawcer, sonne to Geffrey Chawcer the famous Poet, translated and increased the Manor place of Ewelme in Oxfordshire: they builded a new the parish Church of Ewelme, a comely peece of worke standing on an hill: and also hard adioyning to the west ende of Ewelme parish Church, they founded a prettie hospitall or almes house for two priests chaste of bodie and deuout in soule, and thirteene poore men to dwell and be sustayned in for euer, one of the priests to be master of the almes house and almes people, them to instruct as well by his sonnd doctrine, as good life, the other priest a schole master, freely to teach the children of the tenantes of the said Lordshippe of Ewelme and other Lordships pertaining to the said almes house their Grammer, and either of these two priests to haue tenne pound the peere. One of the thirteene poore men to be called minister, to present the faultes of the other to the master, and to ring their common bel to seruice, and to haue sirteen pence the weeke, the other twelue poore men to haue euery of them fourteene pence the weeke. This house hath to name Gods house, or the house of almes, vnto the which he gaue three Manors, Ramruge in Hampshire, Conerke in Wiltshire, and Weethe in Buckinghamshire, with their appurtenances, all which at the suppression was valued but 20. pound the peere, such large penniworth was then made by such as ment to purchase: they also founded the hospitall of Donnington.

The death of the Duke of Suffolke brought not the Realme in quiet, for those that fauoured the Duke of Yorke, and wished the crown vpon his head procured a commotion in Kent in this manner.

In

Iacke Cade Captain of the rebels in Kent.

In the moneth of May, the commons of Kent in great numbers assembled, hauing to their Captaine Iacke Cade, who named himselfe Mortimer, cosen to the Duke of Yorke, or as hée was named of some Iohn Mend all: this Captaine brought a great number of people to the Blackheath, and there kept the field more then a moneth, pilling the countrey about, to whom the Citie of London at that time was full fauourable. And the said Captain (as I find recorded) sent for such Citizens of London as it pleased him to commaund to repayre vnto him, vnder letters of safe conduct, as followeth.

The safegard and signe manuell of the Captaine of Kent, sent to Thomas Cocke draper of London, by the Captaine of the great assemble in Kent.

By this our writing ensealed, we grant and will permit truly, that Thomas Cocke of London draper, shall come in good suretie and in safegard to our presence, without any hurt of his person, and so auoid from vs againe at his pleasure, with all other persons alligned at his denomination with him comming in like wise.

The commaundement by the Captaine of Kent, sent vnto Thomas Cocke aboue said.

For your instruction, first yée shall charge all Lumbards and strangers, being merchants, Ienewes, Venetians, Florentines, and other, this day to draw them togither, and to ordaine for vs the Captaine 12. harnises, complete of the best fashion, 24. brigandines, 12. battaile axes, 12. glaues, six horses with saddle and bridle completely harnessed, and 1000. markes of readie money: and if this our demaund be not obserued and done, we shall haue the heads of as many as we can get of them.

What answere to this demand was returned I finde not, but like it is the same was granted and performed, for I finde not the said Captaine and Gentlemen, at their being in the Citie, to haue hurt any stranger.

In the meane time the king sent notable men to the said Captaine and his fellowship, to know their purpose and the cause of their insurrection: vnto whom the Captain answered, that he and his company were assembled there to redresse and reforme the wrongs that were done in the Realme, and to withstand the malice of them that were destroyers of the common-weale, and to amend the defaultes of them that were chiefe counsellers to the king, and shewed vnto them the Articles of complaints touching the misgouernment of the Realme, wherein was nothing contayned but séemed reasonable, whereof a copie was sent to the Parliament holden that time at Westminster, with also one other bill of requestes by them made, of things to be reformed, and to haue answere thereof againe, but he had none. The bill of Articles they intituled

The complaint of the commons of Kent, and causes of the assembly on the Blackeheath.

1 Inprimis, it is openly noysed that Kent should be destroyed with a royall power, and made a wilde forrest, for the death of the Duke of Suffolke, of which the commons of Kent thereof were neuer guiltie.

2 Item, the king is stirred to liue onely on his commons, and other men to haue the reuenues of the crowne, the which hath caused pouerty in his excellencie, and great payments of the people, now late to the king granted in his Parliament.

3 Item, that the Lords of his royall bloud bene put from his daily presence, and other meane persons of lower nature exalted and made chiefe of his priuy counsell, the which stoppeth matters of wrongs done in the realme from his excellent audience, and may not be redressed as law wil, but if bribes and gifts be messengers to the hands of the said counsell.

4 Item, the people of his Realme be not paid of debts owing for stuffe and purueiance taken to the vse of the kings household, in vndoing of the said people, and the poore commons of this Realme.

5 Item, the kings menial seruants of household, and other persons, asked daily goods and landes, of empeached or indited of treason, the which the king graunteth anon, ere they so endaungered be conuict. The which causeth the receiuers thereof to enforge labours and meanes applied to the death of such people, so appeached or indited, by subtle meanes, for couetise of the said grants: and the people so impeached or indited, though it be vntrue, may not be committed to the lawe for their deliueraunce, but helde still in prison, to their vttermost vndoing and destruction, for couetise of goods.

7 Item, it is noysed by common voices, that the kings landes in France bene aliened and put away from the crowne, and his Lords and people there destroyed with vntrue meanes of treason, of which it is desired, enquiries through all the Realme to be made how and by whom, and if such traytors may be found guiltie, them to haue execution of law, without any pardon, in example of other.

8 Item, collectors of the 15. peny in Kent be greatly vered and hurt in paying great summes of money, in the Exchequer to sue out a writ called Quorum nomina for allowance of the Barons of the ports, which now is desired, that hereafter in the lieu of the collectors, the Barons aforesaid may sue it out for their ease at their owne costes.

9 Item, the sheriffes, and vndersheriffes, let to ferme their offices and baylliwikes, taking great suretie therefore, the which causeth extortions done by them and by their bailifes to the people.

10 Item, simple and poore people that vse not hunting, be greatly oppressed by inditements fained and done by the said sherifes, vndersherifes, baylifes, and other of their assent, to cause their increase for paying of their said ferme.

11 Item, they returne in names of Enquestes in writing into diuers Courtes of the Kings not summoned nor warned, wherethrough the people daily lese great summes of money, well nie to the vttermost of their vndoing: and make leuie of amercements called the Greene ware, more in summes of money than can be found due of record in the Kinges bookes.

12 Item, the ministers of the court of Douer in Kent vexe and arrest diuers people throughout all the shire out of Castell ward passing their bands and liberty vsed of olde time, by diuers subtle and vntrue meanes and actions falsely fained, taking great fée at their list in great hurt of the people on all the shire of Kent.

13 Item, the people of the said shire of Kent, may not haue their free election in the chosing knights of the shire, but letters been sent from diuers estates to the great rulers of all the countrie, the which imbraceth their tenants and other people by force to chose other persons than the common will is.

14 Item, whereas knights of the shire should chose the kings collectors indifferently without any bribe taking, they haue sent now late to diuers persons, notifying them to be collectors, whereupon giftes and bribes be taken, and so the collectors office is bought and solde extortionously at the knights lust.

15 Item, the people be sore vexed in costes and labour, called to the Sessions of peace in the said shire, appearing from the farthest and vttermost parts of the West vnto the East, the which causeth to some men fiue daies iourney, whereupon they desire the said appearance to be diuided into two parts, the which one part to appeare in one place, another part in another place, in releeuing of the greeuance and intollerable labours and vexations of the said people.

The requests by the Captaine of the great assembly in Kent.

INprimis, desireth the Captaine of the commons, the welfare of our soueraigne Lord the King, and all his true Lords spirituall and temporall, desiring of our said soueraigne Lord, and of all the true Lords of his counsell, he to take in all his demaines, that he may raigne like a King royall, according as he is borne our true Christian king annointed, and who so wil say the contrary, we all will liue and die in the quarrell as his true liege men.

2 Item, desireth the said Captaine, that he will auoid all the false progeny and and affinitie of the Duke of Suffolke, the which bene openly knowne, and they to be punished after the custome and lawe of this land, and to take about his noble person the true Lords of his royall blod of this his Realme, that is to say, the high and mightie Prince the Duke of Yorke, late exiled from our said soueraigne Lords presence (by the motion and stirring of the traiterous and false disposed the Duke of Suffolke and his affinitie) and the mightie Princes and Dukes of Excester, Buckingham, and Norffolke, and all the Earles and Barons of this land: and then shall he be the richest king Christen.

3 Item, desireth the said Captaine and commons punishment vpon the false traitors, the which contriued and imagined the death of the high and mightfull excellent Prince the Duke of Glocester, the which is too much to rehearse, the which duke was proclaimed as traitor. Upon the which quarrel, we purpose all to liue and die vpon that it is false.

4 Item, the Duke of Excester, our holy father the Cardinal, the Noble Prince Duke of Warwike, and also the Realme of France, the Dutchy of Normandy, Gascoine, and Guien, Anioy and Maine, were deliuered and lost, by the meanes of the said traitors, and our true Lords, Knights, and Esquires, and many a good yeoman lost and solde ere they went, the which is great pitie to heare, of the great and grieuous losse to our soueraigne Lord and his Realme.

5 Item, desireth the said Captaine and commons, that all the extortions vsed daily among the common people, might be laid downe, that is to say, the grene Ware the which is falsely vsed, to the perpetuall destruction of the kings true commons of Kent. Also the kings Bench, the which is too greefull to the shire of Kent without prouision of our soueraign Lord and his true Counsell. And also in taking of wheat and other graines, beefe, mutton, and all other victuall, the which is importable to the said commons, without the beefe prouision of our said soueraigne Lord, and his true Counsell, they may no longer beare it. And also vnto the statute of labourers, and the great extortioners, the which is to say, the false traitors, Sleg, Crowmer, Isle, and Robert Est.

These Bils when the Counsell had well perused, they did not onely disallow and condemne them and the authors, as proud and presumptuous, but also perswaded the King rather to suppresse those rebels by force, than by faire promises. Whereupon the king remoued from Westminster vnto Grenewich, from whence he would haue sent certaine Lords with a power to haue distressed the Kentishmen, but the men said to their Lords they would not fight against them that labour to amende the Common weale: whereupon the Lords were driued to leaue their purpose. And because the Kentishmen cried out against the Lord Say the Kings Chamberlaine, hee was by the King committed to the Tower of London. Then went the King againe to London, and within two daies after went against the Kentishmen with fiftéene thousand men well prepared for the warre, but the saide Kentishmen fledde the night before his comming into the wood countrie nere vnto Senocke, whereupon the king returned againe to London, and sent sir Humfrey Stafford knight, with William Stafford Esquire his kinsman saith Pigot, and other Gentlemen, to follow the Kentishmen, who finding them at Senocke, set vpon the rebels, and fought with them a long time, but in the end both the Staffords were slaine, with many other of their people.

King Henries power ouercome.

When Iacke Cade had thus ouercome the Staffords, he forthwith apparelled himselfe with the knights apparell, and after he had refreshed his people, he returned to the Blacke heath, and there pight againe his field, and lay there from the 29. of June, till the first day of July, in which season came vnto him the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Duke of Buckingham, with whom they had a long communication, and found him right discreet in his answeres. Howbeit they could not cause him to submit himselfe and lay downe his people.

King Henry went to Killingworth.

In the meane while, the King and Quéene hearing of the increasing of his rebels, and also the Lords fearing their owne seruants, least they would take the Captaines part, remoued from London to Killingworth, leauing the Citie without ayde, except onely the Lord Scales, which was left to kéepe the Tower, and with him a manly and warly man named Matthew Gough. Then the Captaine of Kent thus houering at Blacke heath, to bring himselfe the more in fame, that he kept good iustice, beheaded there a petie Captaine of his named Paris, forsomuch as he had offended against such ordinances as he had established in his host: and hearing that the King and his Lords were thus departed, drew him néere vnto the Citie, so that vpon the first of July, hé entred the Borough of Southwarke, then being Wensday, and lodged him there at the Hart, for he might not be suffered to enter the Citie.

Captaine of Kent and his Kentishmen entred the City of London.

Rob. Fabian.

Rebels of Essex pight their field on the Mile s end.

And vpon the same day, the commons of Essex in great number pight them a field vpon the plaine of Miles end.

And vpon the second day of the said moneth, the Maior called a common counsell at the Guildhall, to puruey for the withstanding of these rebelles, in which assembly were diuers men of sundry opinions, so that some thought good that the said rebelles should be received into the Citie, and some otherwise. Among the which Robert Horne Stockfishmonger then being an Alderman, spake sore against them that would haue them enter. For the which, the commons were so mooued against him, that they ceased not till they had him committed to warde. And the same afternoone about fiue of the clocke, the Captaine with his people entred by the bridge, and cut the ropes of the drawe bridge asunder with his swoorde. When he was passed into the Citie, he made in sundry places thereof Proclamations in the Kings name, that no man in paine of death should robbe or take any thing without paying therefore. By reason whereof, he wanne the hearts of the commons, but all was done to beguile him. After as he came by London stone, he strake it with his swoorde, and saide: Now is Mortimer Lord of this Citie, and then shewing his minde to the Maior for the ordering of his people, hé returned into Southwarke, and there abode as he before had done, his people comming and going at lawful howres when they would.

On the morrow the third of July, the said Captaine againe entred the Citie, & caused the Lord Say to be set from the Tower to the Guildhall, where he was arraigned before the Maior and other the Kings Iustices, and Robert Horne Alderman before named should haue béene likewise arraigned, but that his wife and other friends for fiue hundred markes gat him reforred to his liberty. The Lord Say desiring he might be tried by his péres, was by the rebels forceably taken from the officers, and brought to the standard in Cheape, where they strake off his head, pight it on a pole, and bare it before them, and his body they caused to be drawne naked at a horse taile vpon the pauement from Cheape into Southwarke to the saide Captaines inne.

Also a squire called Crowmer that was then Sheriffe of Kent, that had wedded the said Lord Saies daughter, by commaundement of the Captaine was brought out of the Fléete, that was committed thither for certaine extortions that he had done in his office, and led to Mile end without London, and there without any iudgement his head was smit off, and the Lord Saies head and his were born vpon two long poles vnto London bridge, and there set vp, and the Lord Saies body was quartered.

The same day the Captaine went vnto the house of Philip Malpas draper, and Alderman, and robbed and spoyled his house, taking from thence great substance, and returned into Southwarke. On the next morrow he againe entred the Citie, and dined that day in the parish of Saint Margaret Patins at one Gherstis house, and when he had dined, like an vncourteous guest he robbed him, as the day before he had Malpas. For which two robberies, although the poore people drew to him and were partners in the spoyle, yet the honest and wealthy commoners cast in their mindes the sequele of this matter, and feared least they should be dealt with in like maner. Then the Maior and Aldermen with assistance of the worshipfull commoners in safegard of themselues and of the citie, toke their counsel how they might driue the Captaine and his adherents from the city, for the performance wherof, the Maior sent vnto the Lord Scales, and Mathew Gough, then hauing the Tower in their gouernment, requiring their ayde and assistance, which they promised.

On the fift of July, the Captaine being in Southwarke, caused a man to be beheaded there, and that day entred not the Citie. When night was come, the Maior and the Citizens, with Mathew Gough kept the passage of the bridge, and defended the Kentishmen which made great force to reenter the Citie. Then the Captaine séeing this bickering, went to harneis, & assembled his people, and set so fiercely vpon the Citizens, he draue them backe from the stoupes in Southwarke, or bridge gate, vnto the drawbridge, in defending whereof, many a man was drowned and slaine. Among the which was Iohn Sutton Alderman, Mathew Gough a Squire of Wales, and Roger Hoiland Citizen. This skirmish continued all night till nine of the clocke on the morrow, so that sometime the Citizens had the better, and sometimes the other, but euer they kept them vpon the bridge, so that the Citizens neuer passed much the bulwarke at the bridge foote, nor the Kentishmen no farther than the drawe bridge. Thus continuing the cruell fight to the destruction of much people on both sides, lastly, after the Kentishmen were put to the worst, a truce was agreed for certaine houres, during which truce, the Archbishop of Canterbury, then Chancellor of England, sent a generall pardon to the Captaine for himselfe, & an another for his people, by reason whereof, he and his company withdrew them by little and little, and their Captaine put all his pillage and goods that he had robbed, into a barge, and sent it to Rochester by water, and himselfe went by land, and would haue entred into the Castell of Quinborow with a fewe men that were left about him: but he was there let of his purpose: wherefore he fled into the wood country beside Lewes in Sussex. The Captaine and his people being thus departed, not long after proclamations were made in diuers places of Kent, Sussex, and Southery, that who might take the foresaid Captaine alue or dead, should haue a thousand markes for his trauell.

Captaine and rebels pardoned.

A Jubile at Rome.

The Copy of the Writ and Proclamation by the King, for the taking of the said Cade and his fellowship.

HEnricus Dei gratia Rex Anglie & Francie, & Dominus Hibernie, vniuersis & singulis custodibus, &c.

For as much as one Iohn Cade borne in Ireland, which calleth himselfe Iohn Mortimer, and in some writting calleth himselfe Captaine of Kent, the which Iohn Cade the last yere tofore his dwelling in Sussex with a Knight, called Sir Thomas Dagre, slue there a woman with child, and for that cause toke the greeth of the Church, and after for that cause forswore the Kings land: the which Iohn Cade also after this, was sworne to the French part, and dwelled with them, which hath now of late time, (to the intent to enrich himselfe by robbing and dispoyling of the kings liege men, as it is nowe openly knowne, to bring himselfe to great and high estate) falsely and vntruly deceiued many of the kings people, and vnder colour of holy and good intents, made them to assemble with him against the kings regality and his lawes, and nought setting by the kings Grace and pardons granted, not only to him, but all the kings subiects, the which by his deceit haue assembled with him, the which he with great reuerence receiued on Sunday last passed, and so did all that were assembled with him: notwithstanding all this, he laboureth now of new to assemble the kings people againe, and to that intent beareth them on hand, that the kings letters of pardon graunted to him and them, be not auailable nor of none effect without authoritie of Parliament: whereas the contrary is true, as it is openly knowne by that, that the king grants from time to time his Charters of pardon to such as him list, of all maner of crimes and offences both generall and speciall.

The king therefore willeth and commaundeth, that none of his subiects giue faith nor credence to the said false informations of the said false traitor, nor accompany with him in any wise, nor comfort, nor sustaine him nor his with victuall, nor with any other things. But will whosoeuer of the kings subiects may take him, shall take him, and that whosoeuer taketh him, and bringeth him quicke or dead, to the king or his councell, shall haue a thousand markes for his labour truly paid him without faile or delay by the prouision of the kings councell. And whosoeuer taketh any of those that from this day forth accompany with him, shall haue fiue marke for his reward, truly to be paid in manner and forme aboueaid.

And ouer this, commaunding all Constables, Ministers, and Officers of the said shire, that none of them on paine of death take vpon them to execute any commaundement by word or writing sent or made vnto them by the said Cade, calling himselfe Mortimer and Captaine, be it to reare any people, or to any other intent: but to arest and make to be arested such as take vpon them to bring any such commaundement by writing or by word. Et hoc nullatenus omittatis, Teste me ipso apud Westminster, x. die Iulij, anno regni. 28.

After which proclamation thus published, a gentleman of Kent named Alexander Eden awaited so his time, that he toke the said Cade in a garden in Sussex. And there he was slaine at Hothfield, and brought to London in a cart, and there quartered, his head set on London bridge, and his quarters sent to diuers places in Kent. Captaine of Kent taken and beheaded.

This yeere the commons also in diuers parts of England, as in Sussex, Willshire, and other places, did much harme to many persons, among the which, on the 29. of June, William Ascoth Bishop of Salisbury (after he had said masse at Edington) was by his owne tenants drawne from the altar, in his Albe with his Stole about his necke, to the top of an hill, and there by them shamefully murthered: for they cleaued his head as he kneeled on his knees in his prayers, and after spoiled to the naked skin, and then they renting his bloody shirt, toke euery man a peece, and made boast of their wickednesse: and the day before his chariot was robbed of his treasury to the value of ten thousand markes. Bishop of Salisbury murthered. Ann. reg. 29.

Alexander Eden Esquire, sherife of Kent, for his good seruice against the late rebels, is made Custos or keeper of the castle at Rochester. Alexander Eden.

In the moneth of September, Tresham that was speaker in the last Parliament, was beheaded in Northamptonshire.

After Michaelmas, Richard Duke of Yorke comming out of Ireland, toke John Sutton Baron of Dudley, and Reginald Abbot of Saint Peters at Glocester, and shortly after he toke John Gargraue keeper of the Kings Bench at London, and sent them to the castle of Ludlow.

The first of November began a Parliament at Westminster, and the first of December the Duke of Somerset which was newly come out of Normandy, was put vnder arest, and his goods by the commons was fowly despoiled and borne away from the Blackfriers. After which riot, on the next morrow, proclamation was made through the citie by the Duke of Yorke, Parliament at Westminster.

and the Duke of Norffolke, that no man should spoyle or rob, vpon paine of death: and the same day at the Standard in Cheape was a man beheaded for doing contrary to the proclamation.

King Henry rode into Kent with an army.

The fourth of December, the King and his Lords rode through the Citie of London, with a great armie of men well appointed, and deuided into three battels. Also the Citizens armed stood in the stretes of the Citie, where through the king passed, which altogither made the greatest shew of armed men that had bene seene in London within the memory of any man then liuing.

1451. Rebels in Ken and Sussex executed.

The 18. of January, the King with certaine Lords, and his Iustices rode towards Kent, and there indighted and arraigned many, whereof to the number of 26. were put to death, eight at Canterbury, and the residue in other townes of Kent and Sussex. And the King returning out of Kent on the 27. of Februarie, the men of that countrey, naked saue their shirts, in great numbers, met him on the Blackheath, and there on their knees asked mercy, and had their pardon. Then the King rode royally through the Citie of London, and was of the Citizens ioyfully receiued, and the same day against the Kings comming to the Citie, nine heads of the Kentishmen that had bene put to death, were set on London bridge, and the Captaines head that stode there before, was set in the middest of them.

The malice begunne, increased betweene the Lords of the land, and especially against the Duke of Somerset, and other of the Queenes Counsell, for the lesing of Normandy, whereof the chiefe Citie of Roan was lost or giuen vp by appointment, the yeere proceeding (as witnesseth Gagwine) vpon condition that the Duke of Somerset with his wife and English souldiers, should with such goods as they might carry, depart freely from the Citie: for which free passage he should pay vnto the French king 56. thousand Scutes, which amount to fourteene thousand markes sterling. And also he was bound to deliuer into the French kings possession, all Townes and Castels that at that day were in the possession of Englishmen, within the Dutchie of Normandy: for the performance of which couenants, the Lord Talbot was sent for one of the pledges, and so by one Floquet all the Towns and Castels were to the French kings vse receiued, Harflete onely excepted, whereof the Captaine named Curson, with the assistance of sir Thomas Auringham, in despite of all the French kings power laid both by sea and land, held the same a full moneth or more, and then for lacke of rescue, gaue it vp by appointment.

Richard Duke of Yorke, pretending a title to the Crowne, and heire to Lionell Duke of Clarence, came this yeere out of Ireland vnto London, in the Parliament time, there to consult with his especiall friendes, Iohn Duke of Norffolk, Richard Earle of Salisbury, and Richard his sonne, which after was Earle of Warwicke, Thomas Courtney Earle of Deuonshire, and Edmond Brooke Lord Cobham, &c. After long deliberation and aduise taken, it was concluded, to keepe their chiefe purpose secret, and that the Duke should raise an armie of men, vnder a pretext to remoue diuers counsellers about the the King, and to reuenge the manifest iniuries done to the commonwealth by the same rulers, of the which as principall, the Duke of Somerset was namely accused, both for that he was greatly hated of the commons for the losse of Normandy, and for that it was well knowne, that he would be altogither against the Duke of Yorke, in his challenge to be made to the crowne, when time should serue: Therefore when the Duke of Yorke had thus framed his foundation of his long intended enterprise, he assembled a great host, to the number of 10000. in the marches of Wales, publishing openly that the cause of this his gathering of people, was for the publike wealth of the Realme, for affirming the same to be true, he wrote his letters in forme as followeth: An. reg. 30.

Richard Duke of Yorke his declaration of truth as he said

For asmuch as I Richard Duke of Yorke am informed, that the King my soueraigne Lord, is my heauy Lord, greatly displeased with me, and hath me in misstruck by sinister information of mine enemies, aduersaries, and euill willers, where God knoweth, from whom nothing is hid, I am, haue been, and euer will be his true liege man, and so haue I said before this diuers times, as well by mouth as by writing, notified and declared to my said soueraigne Lord. And for that this notice so comen vnto me of the displeasure of my said soueraigne Lord is to me so greuous, I haue prayed the reuerend father in God the Bishop of Hereford, and my cosen the Earle of Shrewsbury to come hither, and heare my declaration in this matter. Wherein I haue said to them, that I am true liege man to the King my soueraigne Lord, euer haue been, and shall be to my dying day. And to the very proofe that it is so, I offer my selfe to sweare that, on the blessed Sacrament, and receiue it, the which I hope shall be my saluation, at the day of dome: And so for my speciall comfort and consolation, I haue prayed the said Lords to report and declare vnto the Kings highnes my said offer. And to the ende and intent, that I will be ready to doe the same oth in presence of two or three Lords, such as shall please the Kings highnes to send hither to accept it. In witnes whereof I haue signed this scedule with my signe manuall, and set thereunto my signet of armes. Written in my Castle of Ludlow, the 9. of January, the 30. yere of the raigne of my soueraigne Lord King Henry the sixt. 1452.

The 16. of February, King Henry accompanied with the Duke of Somerset, and many other Lords, tooke towards the marches of Wales, for as much as he was credibly informed, that the Duke of Yorke, assisted with diuers other Lords and men of name, had in those parts gathered a strong power of people, and with them was entring the land, and so held on his iourney towards him: but when the Duke had witting of the Kings great power, he returned from the way which was taken by the Kings host, and hasted towards London. And when he had receiued knowledge from the Citie, that he might not there be receiued, he went ouer Kingston bridge, and so into Kent, and there vpon Brent heath neere vnto Dertford, he pight his field, whereof the King hauing knowledge, sped him after, and lastly came vnto Blacke heath, and there pight his field. When both the hosts were thus imbattelled, embattelled, mediatian of peace was made betweene them, for further ans whereof, to the Duke were sent the Bishops of Winchester and of Ely, with the Earles of Salisbury and Warwicke. To whom it was answered by the Duke, that he nor none of his company intended any hurt to the Kings person, nor to any of his Counsell, being louers of the commonwealth, and of him and his land: but his intent and purpose was to remoue from the King a few euill disposed persons, by whose meanes the common people was grieuously oppressed, and the comminaltie greatly impouerished, of whom he named the Duke of Somerset to be the principall, &c. And further to vnderstand of the Dukes meaning by this his forcible entring of the Realme, (as himselfe pretended) may appeare by certaine letters by him written to the King, and also the Kings answers to the same, both which I thinke good here to set downe as I finde them recorded.

Please it your highnesse to conceiue that sith my departing out of this your Realme, by your commaundement, and being in your seruice in your land of Ireland, I haue béene informed that diuers language hath béen said of me to your most excellent estate, which should sound to my dishonour and reproch, and charge of my person: howbeit that, I aye haue béene, and euer will be, your true liege man and seruant: and if there be any man that will or dare say the contrary, or charge me otherwise, I beséech your right wisenes to call him before your high presence, and I will declare me for my discharge as a true knight ought to do, and if I do not, as I doubt not but I shall, I beséech you to punish me as the poorest man of your land: and if he be found vntrue in his suggestion and information, I beséech you of your highnes that he be punished after his desert, in example of all other. Please it your excellence to know, that as well before my departing out of this your Realme, for to go into your land of Ireland, in your full noble seruice, as sith, certaine persons haue lien in await for to hearken vpon me, as sir Iohn Talbot knight at the Castell of Holt: sir Thomas Stanley knight in Cheshire: Pulford at Chester: Elton at Worcester: Brooke at Gloucester: and Richard groome of your Chamber at Beaumarres: which had in charge (as I am informed) for to take me and put me into your Castell of Conway, and to strike off the head of sir William Oldehall knight, and to haue put in prison sir William Deuereux knight, and sir Edmond Malso knight, without enlarging, vntill the time that your highnes had appointed their deliuerance.

Item, at such time as I was purposed for to haue arriued at your hauen of Beaumarres, for to haue come to your noble presence to declare me your true man and subiect, as my dutie is, my landing was stopped and forbarred by Henry Norres, Thomas Norres, William Bulkley, William Grusi, and Bartholomew Bould, your officers in Northwales, that I should not land there, nor haue victuall nor refreshing for me and my fellowship, as I haue written to your excellence here before, so farre forth that Henry Norres deputie to the Chamberlaine of Northwales said vnto me, that he had in commaundement that I should in no wise haue landing, refreshing, nor lodging, ging, for men nor for horse, nor other thing that might turne to my worthy or case, putting the blame vpon William Say Vsher of your chamber, saying and affirming that I am against your intent, and as a Traitor, as I am informed: and moreouer, certaine letters were made and deliuered vnto Chester, Shrewsbury, and to other places for to let mine entrie into the same.

Item, aboue all wrongs and iniuries aboue said done vnto me of malice, without any cause, I being in your land of Ireland, in your honourable seruice, certain commissions were made and directed vnto diuers persons, which for the execution of the same, sate in certaine places, and the Iuries impanelled and charged, to the which iuries, certaine persons laboured instantly to haue me indited of treason, to the intent for to haue vndone me and mine issue and corrupted my blod, as it is openly published: beseeching your Maiestie royall, of your righteousnes, to examine these matters, and thereupon to doe such iustice in his behalfe as the cause requireth: for mine intent is fully to pursue to your highnes for the conclusion of these matters.

Answere of king Henry to the duke of Yorke.

Cosin, we haue seene the bill that ye take vs late, and also vnderstande the good humble obedience that ye in your selfe shewe vnto vs, as well in word as in deed, wherefore our intent is, the more hastily to ease you of such thinges as were in your said bill. Howbeit that at our more leisure we might aunswere to your said bill, yet we let you to wit, that for the causes aforesaid, we will declare you nowe our intent in these matters: sith it is that a long time among the people hath beene vpon you many straunge language, and in especiall anone after your disordinate and vnlawfull slaying of the Bishoppe of Chester, diuers and many of the vntrue shipmen and other, said in their manner, wordes against our estate, making manace to our owne person by your sayings, that ye should be fetched with many thousandes, and ye should take vpon you that, which ye neyther ought, nor as we doubt not, ye will not attempt, so farre forth that it was said to our person by diuers, and especially we remember of one Wasnes which had like wordes to vs. And also there was diuers of such false people, that went on and had like language in diuers of our Townes of our land, which by our subiectes were taken and duely executed: wherefore we sent to diuers of our courtes and places, to hearken and to take heede if any such manner comming were, and if there had beene, for to resist it: but comming into our land our true subiects as ye did, our intent was not that ye, nor lesse of estate of our subiectes, nor none of your seruantes should not haue beene letted nor warned, but in goodly wise receiued: Howbeit that peradventure your suddaine comming, without certaine warning, caused our seruantes to doe as they did, considering the causes aboue said. And as to the enditement that ye spoke of, we thinke verily, and holde for certaine, that there was none such. And if ye may truely proue that any person was thereaboutes, the matter shall bee demeaned as the case shall require, so that he shall know it is to our great displeasure. Vpon this for the easing of your heart in all such matters, we declare, repute, and admit you

our true and faithfull subiect, and as our welbeloued Cosin.

Richard Duke of Yorke to King Henry againe.

Please it your highnes tenderly to consider, that great murmur and grudging is vniuersally in this your Realme, in that Iustice is not duly ministred to such as trespasse and offend against your lawes, and in especiall of them that be endited of treason, and other being openly noised of the same, whereby great inconueniences haue fallen, and great is like to fall hereafter in your said Realme, which God defende, but if by your highnes prouision conuenable bee made for due reformation and punishment in this behalfe. Wherefore I your humble subiect and true liegeman, Richard Duke of Yorke, willing as effectually as I can, and desiring the suretie and prosperitie of your most royall person, and the welfare of this your noble Realme, counsell and aduertise your excellencie for the conuersation of good tranquillitie and peaceable rule among all other subiects, for to ordaine and prouide, that true iustice be had, against all such that so be endited, or openly named, wherein I offer my selfe, and will put my endeuour for to execute your commaundement in the premises, for the punishing of such offenders, and redresse of the sayde misrules, to my might and power. And for the hastie execution hereof, like it your highnes to addresse these letters of priue seale and writs to your officers and ministers, to doe, take, and arrest all such persons so noysed and endited, of what estate, degree, or condition soeuer they be, and them to commit to the Tower of London, and to other of your prisons, there to abide without baile or mainprise, vntill the time they be vtterly tried, and determined after the course of your lawes.

Answere of King Henry to the Duke of Yorke.

Cosin, as touching your bill last put vp to vs, we vnderstand well that ye of good hart, counsell and aduertise vs to the setting vp of iustice, and to the spedie punishing of some persons endited or noysed, offering your seruice to bee readie at commaundement in the same, sith it is that for many causes mouing vs to haue determined in our soule to stablish a sad, and a substantiall Counsell, giuing them more ample authoritie and power than euer wee did afore this: in the which wee haue appointed you to bee one. But sith it is not accustomed sure, nor expedient, to take a conclusion and conduct by aduise or counsell of one person by himselfe for the conseruation, it is obserued that the greatest and the best, the rich and the poore, in libertie, vertue, and effect of your voyces be equall: we haue therefore determined within our selfe to send for our Chancellor of England, and for other Lords of our Councell, yea and all other, together within short time ripely to commune these and other our great matters, in the which communication, such conclusion by the grace of God shall be taken, as shall sound to his pleasure, the weale of vs and our land, as well in these matters as in any other.

At length it was agreed by the King, that the Duke of Somerset should be committed to warde there to abide and answere such articles as the Duke of Yorke would lay against him, vpon which promises so made by the King to the Duke, who sawe that the people of Kent, and of other places came came not to him as they had promised, and that they were not strong ynough, for the Kings part was much more than his, he brake vp his field on the first of March, and yelded himselfe to the King at Dertford, where contrary to promise before made, he found the Duke of Somerset chefe about the King. Then was the Duke of Yorke sent before to London, and holden partly as prisoner, and straighter should haue bẽ kept, but it was noised that Sir Edward Earle of March, sonne to the said Duke of Yorke was comming toward London with a strong power of Welshmen, which feared so the Quéene and Counsell, that the Duke was set at full libertie. And on the tenth of March, the said Richard Duke of Yorke made his submission, and toke his oth to be true, faithfull, and obedient subiect to King Henry the first, King of England, in S. Pauls Church at London, there being present the King and most of his Nobilitie, that is to say, the Dukes of Buckingham, Northampton, and Somerset: the Earles of Warwike, Arundel, Salisbury, Shropshire, Deuonshire, Wiltshire, Northumberland, Stafford and Dorset: vicounts of Beaumont and Wels: barons Fitz Warren, Sainmond, Cobham, Douglas, and others: Bishops, the Cardinall, Archbishop of Yorke, and Caunterbury, Winchester, Ely, and London, in these words following.

I Richard Duke of Yorke, confesse and beknow that I am and ought to be humble subiect and liegeman to you my soueraigne Lord King Henry the first, and owe therefore to beare you faith and truth, as to my soueraigne liege Lord, and shall doe all dayes vnto my liues ende, and shall not at any time will or assent that any thing be attempted or done against your most Noble person, but whersoeuer I shall haue knowledge of any such thing imagined or purposed, I shall with all spéede and diligence possible to mee, make that your highnes shall haue knowledge thereof, and ouer that doe all that shall bee possible to mee, to the withstanding and let thereof, to the vttermost of my life: I shall not any thing take vpon mee against your royall estate or obeysance that is due thereto, nor suffer any other man to doe, as farre forth as it shall bee in my power to let it: And also shall come at your commaundement whensoeuer I shall bee called by the same, in humble and obeisant wise, but if I bee letted by any sicknes or impotence of my person, or by such other cause as shall bee thought by you my soueraigne Lord reasonable. I shall neuer hereafter take vpon mee to gather any rowt, or to make any assembly of your people, without your commaundement or licence, or in my lawfull defence, in interpretation or declaration of the which my lawfull defence, I shall report mee at all times to your highnes, and if the case require, to my péeres, nor any thing attempt against any of your subiects, of what estate, degrée, or condition that they bee. But whensoeuer I finde my selfe wronged and agréeued, I shall sue humbly for remedie to your highnes, and procéede after the course of your lawes, and in none otherwise, sauing in mine owne lawfull defence in manner aboue sayde, and otherwise haue to your highnes as an humble and true subiect ought to haue him to his soueraigne Lorde. All these things aboue said I promise you truely to obserue and kéepe, by the holy Euangelists uangelists contained in the booke that I lay my hand heere vpon, and by the holy Crosse I heere touch, and by the blessed sacrament of our Lordes body, that I shall now with his mercie receiue. And ouer I agree me and will, that if I any time hereafter, as by the grace of our Lord God I neuer shall, any thing attempt by way of feate or otherwise against your royall Maiestie and obeisance that I owe thereto, or any thing take vpon me otherwise than is aboue expressed, I from that time forth be vnabled, held and taken, as an vntrue and openly forsworne man, and vnable to all maner of worship, estate, and degree, be it such as I now occupie, or any other that might in any wise growe vnto me hereafter. And this I haue here promised and sworne, procedeth of mine owne desire and free volunte, and by no constraining or coaction. In witnes of all the which thinges aboue written, I Richard duke of Yorke aboue writ subscribe, with mine owne hand and seale.

This oth he also toke at Westminster, and at Couentrie, at sundrie times, although he little estemed thereof, as by the sequele may appeere. An. reg. 31.

This yeere deceased Iohn Stafford Archbishop of Canterburie, late Lord Chancelor of England, and was buried at Canterburie. After him succeeded in the archbishoprick Iohn Kemp, borne at Wie in Kent, doctor of lawes, first bishop of Rochester, then of Chichester, then of London, then Archbishop of Yorke, Chancelor of England, and Cardinall of S. Albin: and now Archbishop of Canterburie, and Cardinall of S. Rufine, & was inthronized at Canterburie on the 11. of December.

On the twelfe day after Christmas, the king holding his Christmas at Westminster with great solemnitie, made his two brethren by the mothers side knights.

The Earle of Kendall, and the Lord Lespare came Ambassadours from the cheefes Magistrates of the citie of Burdeaux, which signified to the counsell, that if they woulde send an armie into Gascoigne, the people of the countrie woulde reuolt from the French part, and againe become English. This newes sore troubled the heades of the Counsell, which caused them, least inwarde sedition might hinder outward victorie, to set the duke of Yorke at libertie, and permitted him to goe to the castell of Wigmore in the marches of Wales, by whose absence the duke of Somerset rose in such high fauour, both with the king and the Queene, that his word was onely heard and regarded. The Counsell hoping now to haue the citie of Burdeaux, with the country round about, appointed Iohn Lord Talbot Earle of Shrewsbury, to go thither with an armie, who arriuing in the Isle of Medre, passed forth with his power, being scant three thousand men, and toke the stronge towne of Fronsake, and diuers other townes and fortresses. The inhabitants of Burdeaux hearing of the Earles arriuall, sent to him messengers in the darke night, requiring him with all speede, to come and receiue the citie. The Earle hastened forth, and came before that cittie, ere the Frenchmen within vnderstood any thing of the citizens purpose. But when they heard that there was a gate set open for the Englishmen to to enter, they thought to haue escaped secretly by a posterne, but they were pursued, slaine, and taken by the Lord de Lespare, and other of the English armie.

After the regaining of Burdeaux, there arriued at Blay, the bastard of Somerset, sir Iohn Talbot Lord Lisle by his wife, sonne to the said Earle of Shrewsburie, the lord Molins, the lord Harington, the lord Cames, sir Iohn Howard, sir Iohn Mountgomerie, sir Iohn Vernon with 2200. men, victuals and munitions.

In the moneth of March, was the towne of Harflew won by the French men, and shortly the citie of Bayons was giuen vp by appointment, that the soldiers should leaue their armour behind them.

When the Earle of Shrewsburie was furnished as is aforesaide, first hee fortified Burdeaux with Englishmen, and store of victuals, and artillerie, then he rode into the country abroad, where he obtained cities and townes, without stroke, amongst other townes, the towne and castle of Chastillon in Perigort was to him deliuered, the which he fortified.

In the meane time the French King being aduertised of these thinges, raised an armie to resist the inuasion made by the Earle, and first he appointed his captaines to besiege the towne of Chastillon, to the rescue whereof the Earle hasted forward, hauing in his companie eight hundred horsemen, vnder the leading of his sonne the lord Lisle, the lord Molins, the lord Cameis, sir Edward Hull, sir Iohn Howard, and sir Iohn Vernon: hee appointed also fiue thousand footemen, vnder the conduct of the Earle of Kendall, and the lord de Lespare to follow him with spéede. In his way hée toke a tower, which the Frenchmen had before taken, and slue all that hee found therein, and after by the way hee met fiue hundred Frenchmen a foraging, of whom he slue the more part, and chased the other to the campe.

The Frenchmen that lay at the siege, perceiuing by these runners away that the Earle approched, left the siege, and retired in good order into the place which they had trenched and fortified. The Earle aduertised how the siege was remoued, hasted forward toward his enemies, doubting least they would haue béen fled, and gone before his comming: but they abode the earles comming, and so receiued him, that though by manly courage hee first wan the entrie at their campe, yet at length, they compassed him about, and shooting him through the thigh with a hand gun, slue his horse, and finally killed him, lying on the grounde. There died also the lord Lisle his sonne, & his bastard sonne Henrie Talbot, and sir Edward Hull, and thirtie other men of name, the lord Moleins was taken prisoner with threescore others. The residue of the English people fled to Burdeaux and other places, of whom in the flight were slaine aboue a thousand persons.

An. reg. 32. After this, the towne of S. Millan, Liborne, and all other townes which the Earle of Shrewsbury had conquered, rendered themselues to the French men, Burdeaux onely excepted. The which Citie being the last refuge of the English people, the French King in person besieged with all his puissance, and in conclusion constrained both the garrison and inhabitants to yéelde, so that the Englishmen and Gascoignes might safely depart with all their substance, Description of Aquitaine.

The 13. day of October, the Quéene at Westminster was deliuered of hir first sonne, who was named Edward.

1454. When the warres were ended in forraine parts, ciuill dissention began againe to renew within the Realme, being diuided into two seuerall factions: for King Henry descended of the house of Lancaster, claiming the crowne from his grandfather King Henry the fourth: and Richard Duke of Yorke, as heire to Lionell Duke of Clarence, third sonne to King Edward the third, wrestled for the game, by reason whereof, the nobles, as well as the common people, were into many parts diuided, to the vtter destruction of many a man, to the great ruine and decay of this Realme. For while the one partie studied to destroy the other, all care of the commonwealth was set aside, iustice and equitie clérely exiled.

Practise of the Duke of Yorke.

The Duke of Yorke aboue all things, first sought meanes howe to prouoke the malice of the people against the Duke of Somerset, imagining that hee being made away, his purpose should shortly come to conclusion.

he writ 27. Vol. in fol. & dy'd ætat. 40.

He also practised to bring the King into the hatred of the people, for that he was not a man of stomacke sufficient to supply the rowme which he held. Many of the high estates not liking the world, and disallowing the acts and doings both of the King and his counsell, determined to practise how things might come to some alteration: which when the Duke vnderstood, he chéerly intertained and wan the fauour of the two Neuils, both named Richards, the one Earle of Salisbury, the other Earle of Warwike, the first being the father, and the second the sonne. This Earle of Salisbury, was second sonne to Ralph Neuill Earle of Westmerland, whose daughter the Duke of Yorke had maried, and the said Richard was espoused to laby Alice the only child, and sole heire of Thomas Mountacute Earle of Salisbury, slaine at the siege of Orleance, of which woman he begat Richard, Iohn and George, Richard the eldest sonne espoused Anne, the sister and heire of the entire blood to Henry

Beawchampe

Beawchampe Earle, and after Duke of Warwicke, in whose right and title he was created Earle of Warwicke.

The Duke of Yorke with his friends wrought so effectually, and handled his busines so politikely, that the Duke of Somerset was arrested in the Quénes great chamber, and sent to the Tower of London, where he kept his Christmas without great solemnity, against whom, in open Parliament, were laid diuers articles, beginning thus: These articles and points following, giue and minister I Richard Duke of Yorke, your liege man, and seruant vnto your highnes, summarily proposing and declaring them, against Edmond Duke of Somerset, for the great welfare, and the common auaile and increase of your maiestie royall, and of this your noble Realme, as well to bring to knowledge and vnderstanding the meanes and causes of the great mischiefes and inconueniences, which late befell vnto this your noble Realme, as in losse of your liuelode beyond the sea, and otherwise in punishment of deseruiters, and excuse of innocency, and also in putting aside, and eschuing of the great and importable hurt and preiudice which béen like, withouten that puruepance be had of remedie, to succéed in short time. To the which articles of euery of them, I the said Duke of Yorke desire of your equall and indifferent right wisenes, that the said Edmonde answere by his faith, & truth the sacrament of his oth thereupon made duely and truely as law and conscience requireth, &c. as I haue at large set downe in my larger Chronicle. An. reg. 33. Edmond duke of Somerset sent to the tower, and articles put against him by the duke of Yorke.

The king at that time hauing laine long sicke at Clarendon, was conueyed to London, by reason whereof, no finall determination procéeded in this waightie cause, but all was put in suspence, till the next assemble of the high court of Parliament.

This yére wheat, and other graines were in such plenty, that a quarter of wheat was commonly solde for twelue pence, and fourtéene pence: a quarter of malt for sixtéene pence, and seuentéene pence at the most, and not aboue. A certaine farmer dwelling in the towne of Cruse Rosse, or Roise towne in Hartford shire, wanting money, sold twenty quarters of wheat the best, for twenty shillings. Wheat sold for xii. pence the quarter.

Iohn Kempe Archbishop of Canterbury deceased, and was buried at Canterbury. This Kempe was borne at Wie in Kent, whereupon, when he was Archbishop of Yorke, he made the parish Church of Wie, a Colledge, wherof the gouernour was a prebend, and the other were ministers for diuine seruice, and to instruct youth in grammer and learning, according to his foundation. Which Colledge, at the suppression the 36. of Henry the eight was valued 93. pound, two shillings by yére. The father of this Archbishoppe Kempe lieth buried in the said Church of Wie, with this Epitaph following, Archbishop of Canterbury deceased.

Idem Thomas obijt Anno Domini 1428. 30. die Mensis Maij.

Unto this Iohn Kempe succeeded in the archbishoppricke of Canterburie, Thomas Bourcher brother to Henrie earle of Eſſex, deane of Saint Martins, first bishop of Winchester, then of Ely, and then archbishop of Canterbury, and cardinall of Saint Ciriac, and William Grey was made bishop of Ely: and Richard Neuill earle of Salisburie, was made lord chancelor of England.

Whilest king Henry lay sicke, Richard duke of Yorke bare all the rule and gouerned as regent, and did now discouer the sparks of his hatred, hid vnder dissimulation, against the Duke of Somerset: but when the king had recouered his strength againe, and resumed to him his princelie gouernment, he caused the Duke of Somerset to be set at libertie, and preferred him to be Captaine of Caleis, wherewith not onely the Commons, but many of the nobilitie (fauorers of Richard duke of Yorke) were greatly greeued and offended, saying that he had lost Normandie, and would lose Caleis.

Edmond duke of Somerset Captaine of Calis.

1455. The Duke of Yorke raised a power, and marched toward London.

The duke of Yorke and his adherents, perceiuing that their accusing of the duke of Somerset preuailed not, determined to reuenge their quarrel, and obtaine their purpose by open warre: and so he being in Wales accompanied with his especiall freinds, the earles of Salisburie, and Warwick, the lord Cobham, and others, assembled a power of warlike persons, and marched towards London.

Alphonse Borgia chosen Pope by ye name of Calixtus iij. Apr. 8. 1455.

The king being informed thereof, assembled likewise an host, and meaning to meete with the duke, rather in the north parts then about London, where it was thought he had too many freends, with great speede, being accompanied with Humfrey duke of Buckingham, and Humfrey his eldest sonne earle of Stafford, Edmond duke of Somerset, Henry Percie earle of Northumberland, Iames Butler earle of Wiltshire, and of Ormond, Iohn Bewford earle of Dorset, Iasper Tewder earle of Penbroke, brother to the king, Thomas Courtney earle of Deuonshire, Iohn lord Clifford, the lords Dudley, Barnes, Rose and others, being in all aboue 2000. men of warre, departed from Westminster the 21. day of May, toward Saint Albons, to meete with the duke of Yorke, the earles of Warwicke and Salisburie: the king lodged that night at Wadeford, or Watford one this side Saint Albons, and on the morow in the morning early he came to Saint Albons. And about the same time, were there assembled Richard D. of Yorke, Iohn D. of Norfolk, Richard earle of Warwick, Richard earle of Salisburie, William L. Fauconbridge, Edward L. Cobham, and many other knights and esquiers, the kings enemies, in a place called Beyfielde, beside Saint Albons.

the King hearing of the Dukes comming with the Lords afore said, pight his banner in a place called Goselowe, which place was sometimes called Sandforth in Saint Peters stréte, and commaunded in strong manner to kéepe the wards and barriers of the same Towne. The Duke of Yorke knowing the strength made against him abiding in the fielde afore saide, from seuen of the clocke in the morning, vntill it was almost ten of the clocke without any stroke smitten on either part, by the aduise of his counsell sent vnto the King vnder these words following.

Words in writing by ỳ duke of Yorke vnto the King.

Please it vnto your excellent Grace, Richard Duke of Yorke, to take him as your true liege man and humble subiect, and to consider and tender at the reuerence of God, and in the way of charitie, the true intent of my comming, and to bée good and gracious Soueraigne vnto mée, and all other your true liege men, which, that with all their power and might will bée readie to liue and die with you in your right, and to do all things as shall like your Maiestie royall to commaund vs, if it bée to the worship of the Crowne of England, and the welfare of this your noble realme. Moreouer, gracious Lorde, please it vnto your Maiestie Royall, of your great goodnesse and rightwisenesse, to encline your will to heare and séele the rightwise part of vs your true subiects and liege men. First, praying and beséeching to our Soueraigne Christ Iesus, of his high and mightie power, to giue the vertue of prudence, and that through the prayer of the glorious Martyr Saint Albon giue you very knowledge of our trothes, and to know the intent of our assembling at this time: For God that is in heauen knoweth, our intent is rightfull and true. And therefore wé pray vnto that mightie Lord in these words: Domine sis clypeus defensionis nostræ: wherefore gracious Lorde, please it your Maiestie Royall to deliuer such as wée will accuse, and they to haue like as they haue deserued. And this done, you to bée honourably worshipped as most rightfull King and our true gouernour. And if wée should now at this time bée promised, as afore this time is not vnknowne haue bén promises broken which haue bén full faithfully promised, and thereupon great othes sworne, we will not now cease for no such promises, nor oth, till we haue them which haue deserued death, or else we to die therefore.

The answere by the King to the Duke of Yorke.

KIng Henry charge and commaunde, that no manner person of what degrée, estate, or condition soeuer hée bée, abide not, but that they auoide the fielde, and not be so hardie to make resistance against me in my own Realme. For I shall knowe what traytor dare bée so bolde to arise any people in mine owne land, where through I am in great disease and beauinesse: by that Faith I owe vnto Saint Edward, and vnto the Crowne of England, I shall destroy them euery mother sonne, and eke they to be hanged, drawne, and quartered, that may bée taken afterward of them, in example to make all such Traytours to beware, for to make any rising of people within mine owne land, and so trayterously to abide their King and gouernour. And for a conclusion, rather then they shall haue any Lord that here is with mée, at this time, I shall this day for their sake in this quarrell my selfe line and die.

The words of the Duke of Yorke to all gentlemen and other assembled with him.

SIrs, the King our Soueraigne Lord will not bée reformed at our beséching ne prayer, nor will not in no wise vnderstand the intent wherefore wée bée here assembled and gathered at this time, but onely is in full purpose to destroy vs all, and thereupon a great oth hath made, that there is none other way, but that hée with all his power will pursue vs, and if wée bée taken, to giue vs a shamefull death, leesing our liuelode and goods, and also our heires shamed for euer. Therefore sirs, now sith it will none otherwise bée, but that wée shall vtterly dye, better it is to vs to dye in the fielde, than cowardlie to bée put to an vtter rebuke and shamefull death, for the right of England standeth in vs. Considering also in what perill it standeth at this time, and for to redresse the mischiefe thereof, let euery man helpe to his power this daye, and in that quarrell to quite vs like men, to the Crowne of England, praying and beseeching vnto that Lorde the which is eternall, that raigneth in the glorious kingdome celestiall, to kéepe and saue vs this daye in our right, and thorough the giftes of his holy grace wée may bee made strong to withstand the great abhominable and horrible malice of them, that purpose to destroye vs and the Realme of England, and put vs to a shamefull death: praye wee therefore vnto that Lorde to bée our comfort and our defendor, saying these wordes, Domine sis clipeus defensionis nostri. And when these wordes were saide, the Duke of Yorke, and the Earles of Warwike and Salisburie, with their host, betwéene eleuen and twelue at none breake in, in three seuerall places of the saide streete. The King then being in the place of Edmond Wetby, Hundreder of the sayde Towne of Saint Albons, hearing of the sayde Dukes comming, commaunded his host to slay all manner Lords, Knights, Squiers, Gentlemen and yeomen, that might bée taken on the partie of the foresaide Duke of Yorke. This done, the Lorde Clifforde kept so strongly the barriours of the same Towne, that the foresaide Duke of Yorke might in no wise with all the power that hée had enter, nor breake into the sayde Towne. The Earle of Warwicke knowing thereof, take and gathered his men together with him, and brake in by the Garden side into the sayde Towne, betwéene the signe of the Keye, and the Exchequer in Holywell streete: and anon as they were within the sayde Towne, they blewe vppe the Trumpet and cried with an high voyce, a Warwicke, a Warwicke, that marueyle it was to heare. And till that time the Duke of Yorke might neuer haue entrie into the Towne, and then with strong hand they brake vppe the Barriers, and fought a fierce and cruell Battaile, in the which were slaine on the Kinges partie Lordes of name, Edmonde Duke of Somerset, Henry Earle of Northumberland, the Earle of Stafford, the olde Lorde Clifforde, Sir Robert Vere, Bartin Entewsell, William Chamberlaine, Richard Forteſcue, and Ralph Ferrers knightes, Oliuer Maleuory, Oliuer Alterton, Gilbert Scaresbrooke, Iohn Garthe, Thomas Packington, Roger Morecroft, William Tarwin, Iohn Benſtede, Iohn Alforde, Reginalde Griffith, Humfrey Acworth, Henrie Hawlin the Quænes meſſenger, Richarde Chanſelar porter to the king, Alexander Breakeſpeare, Gilbert Hilding, porter to the King, William Souche, Iohn Boteraux, Ralph Babthorpe ſewer to the king, and Ralph his ſonne, the Kings Attorney, William Coruin, William Cotton of Conington in Huntingdon-ſhire, receiuer of the dutchie of Lancaſter, Gilbert Faldingar, Iohn Daues, Ellis Wood, Robert Woodwarde, and Ralph Willoughby Eſquires, Hawling the Kings porter, and William Butler yeoman, Iohn Apſinken, Iohn Dauie, Iohn at Hethe, Hughe North, William Porter, Iohn Page, Thomas Barker, Iohn Taylor of Henley, Robert Purton, and Henry Himingley yeoman of the crowne, Nicholas of the pantrie, Iohn Cockes, William Fiſhmonger to the duke of Buckingham, Allen Sutton clarke chaplein, and many other ſlaine, to the number of 5000. and on the other part was ſlaine about 600. perſons, of them that were ſlaine, bẽ buried at Saint Albons eight and fortie perſons. And at that battell were wounded Lordes of name, the King ſhot into the necke with an arrowe; Humfrey duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Sudley, in the viſages with arrowes, Humfrey Earle of Staffort in the right hand with an arrow, the Earle of Dorſet was ſo ſore hurt that he might not goe, but was faine to be caried home in a cart, and ſir Iohn Wenloke knight in likewiſe hurt and caried from thence in a chaire, and diuers other knights and Eſquires ſore hurt, and the ſubſtance of the Kings hoſte deſpoiled of their harneis, at their owne requeſt, made deliuery to the dukes hoſte for ſaluation of their liues and fled. The earle of Wiltſhire, and Thomas Thorpe, Lord cheefe baron of the Exchequer, with many other fled, and caſt away their harneis in ditches and woods. This done, the duke of Yorke, the Earles of Warwick and Saliſburie, came vnto the King where hee was, and beſought him on their knees, of grace and forgiuenelle of that they had done in his preſence, and beſought him of his highnes to take them to grace, and as his true liege men. The King deſired them to ceaſe their people, that there ſhould bee no more hurt done, and to obey his commaundement, did cauſe to bee proclaimed in the Kings name, that all manner of people ſhould ceaſe off their malice, and not to ſmite one ſtroke more, and ſo ceaſed the battaile. And vpon the day nert after, the King and the Duke of Yorke, the Earles of Warwicke and Saliſburie, came to London, and were lodged in the biſhops pallace of London, where they kept their Whitſontide with great ioye and ſolemnitie, concluding there to hold a Parliament, the ſame to begin on the ninth of July nert following.

This yeere in the moneth of June appeered a comet or ſtarre, called Stella Cometa Cometa, betwixt the north and the east, extending his beames towardes the south.

The parliament began at Westminster on the ninth day of July as was appointed, in the which session, the Duke Humfrey of Glocester, late deceased at Bery in Suffolke, was openly declared to haue béene a true subiect to the King and Realme: besides this it was inacted, that no person should iudge or reporte any poynt of vntruth of the Duke of Yorke, the Earles of Salisburie, and Warwike, or of any Knight, Esquire, archer, or other comming in warlike aray against the King at Saint Albones, considering their enterprise was only to sée the Kings person in safegarde. And all the blame was put vpon the Duke of Somerset, Thomas Thorpe baron of the Exchequer, and William Ioseph Esquier the Kings colaterall companion, because they vpon malicious purpose kept a certaine letter from the Kinges knowledge, and would in no wise suffer it to bée deliuered vnto him, notwithstanding the same made to the aduancement of some good assured peace, if it had béene throughly and aduisedly read, waied and considered: in which letter they declared that as humble and faythfull subiects, they onely required that it would please the King, whose honor, health, suretie, and preseruation they chiefely wished, not to giue credite to their aduersaries malicious suggestions, till their comming to his presence, vnto the which they humblie besought him that they mought be admitted, as his faithfull liege people, to shewe the intent and purpose of their comming, which was to none other end, then to enlarge their fidelitie, and allegiaunce towardes his most dread person, intending to put themselues with as much diligence, industrie, and trauaile, in all things that might prefer and aduance his honor, suretie, and safegard, as any subiect he had liuing. The keeping backe of this letter did minister matter sufficient to the parliament, to colour, and iustifie for well done all transgressions, committed in the late battaile at Saint Albons.

In this Parliament was the Duke of Yorke made Protector of the realme: the Earle of Salisburie was made Lord Chancelor, and had the great seale to him deliuered: And the Earle of Warwike was made Captaine of Calois, and the territories of the same. And thus the rule of the Realme rested in the Duke and Chauncelor, and all the warlike affaires remained principallie in the Earle of Warwike. And so amongst them it was agréed, that King Henrie should still raigne in name and dignitie, but neither indéed nor in authoritie, not minding to destroy him, least they mought sodaynely prouoke the furie of the common people against them, because that of the common people hée was for his holynes of life, and aboundaunt Clemencie, much fauoured and highlie estéemed.

Now that the Duke of Yorke, and his adherentes had wrested the whole rule and gouernment into their hands: all such persons, as either loued or the Quéene fauoured, were put beside the priuie counsell, and such put in their places as were knowne to fauour the house of Yorke.

Also

Also all officers were schaunged throughout the Realme at the will of the Protectour, Chancelor, and Captaine of Calets, so that they constituted and ruled all things at their owne wils: but they were noted with an erectable offence, of diuers spirituall persons, and namely of the Abbot of Westminster, and his Monkes, for that they toke out of the sanctuarie at Westminster Iohn Holland Duke of Exceter, being repugnant to the order taken in the last parliament, and conueyed him to the Castle of Pont fracte. Duke of Exceter fet out of Sanctuarie, and sent to Pontfract Castle.

But Henry Bewford newely inuested Duke of Somerset, and Humfrey Duke of Buckingham, who had lost his sonne in the same battaile, and other Lordes and men of authoritie fauouring the partie of kinge Henry, and bewayled the vnsure estate of the same King, because they perceiued whereunto the cloked curtesie, and dissembled manner of the Duke of Yorke did drawe, thought it necessarie to purney for a remedie ere the mischiefe happened: hereupon they consulted with the Quéene, and by her aduise was a great councell called at Grénewich, where the Duke of Yorke was discharged of his Protectorship, and the Earle of Salisburye depriued of his office of Chauncelorship, which change amongst the nobilitie, caused sodain alterations, and seditious attempts to spring in the communaltie, especiallie in the Citie of London. Ann. reg. 34.

In the Moneth of May an Italians seruant walking through Cheape of London, with a dagger hanging at his girdle, a Merchants seruant that before time had béene in Italie, and there blamed for wearing of the like weapon, chalenged the stranger, howe he durst bée so bolde to beare weapon, considering hée was out of his native countrey, knowing that in his countrey no stranger was suffered to weare the like. To the which question such answere was made by the stranger, that the Mercer toke from him his dagger and brake it vpon his heade, whereupon the stranger complained to the Maior, who on the morrowe sent for the yong man to the Guild-hall: wherefore after his aunswere made vnto the complaint, by agrément of a full Court of Aldermen, hée was sent to warde: and after the Court was finished, the Mayor and sheriues walking homeward through Cheape, were there met by such a number of mercers seruantes and other, that they might not passe, for ought that they could speake or doe, till they had deliuered the yong man that before was by them sent to prison. 1456. Rob. Fabian.

And the same daie in the afternoone sodainely was assembled a multitude of lewde and poore people of the Citie, which without heade or guide ranne vnto certaine Italians houses, and especially to the Florentines, Lukeses, and Venetians, and there toke and spoyled what they found, and did great hurt in sundrie places, but most in fower houses standing in Broadstréete warde, whereof three stode in Sainte Bartholmewes Parish the little, and one in the Parish of Sainte Benets Finke.

The Mayor, Aldermen and worshipfull commoners of the Citie, with all their diligence resisted them what they coulde, and sent diuers of them to Newgate: and finally, not without shedding of bloud, and mayming of diuers Citizens, the rumour was appeased. The yong man beginner of all this businesse, toke Sanctuarie at Westminster, and not long after the Duke of Buckingham with other noble men were sent from the King into the Citie, who there charged the Maior by vertue of a commission, that inquirie shoulde bee made of this ryot, and so called an oyer determiner at the Guild-Hall, where sate for Iudges the Maior, as the Kinges lieuetenant, the Duke of Buckingham on his right hand, the chiefe Iustice on the lefte hande, and many other men of name, where while they were empanelling their inquestes, the other commons of the Citie, many of them secretly put them in armour, and ment to haue rong the common bell, so to haue raised the whole force of the Citie, and so to haue deliuered such persons as before for the robberie were committed to warde.

But this matter was discretely handled by the counsell and labour of some discrete commoners, which appeased their neighbours in such wise, that all this furie was quenched: but when word was brought to the Duke of Buckingham, that the communaltie were in harnesse, hee with the other Lords toke leaue of the Maior and departed, and so ceased the inquirie for that day.

Upon the morrowe the Maior commaunded the common councell with the Wardens of fellowshippes to appere at the Guild-Hall, where by the Recorder in the Kinges name and the Maiors, was commaunded euerie Warden, that in the afternoone eyther of them should assemble his whole fellowship at their common Halles, and there to giue streight commaundement, that euerie man see the kings peace kept within the Citie. After which time the Citizens were brought to such quietnesse, that after that day, the enquirie was duelie perused, and three persons for the sayd riot put in execution and hanged at Tyborne, whereof two were Sanctuarie men of S. Martins le Graund, the other a shipman, for robbing of Anthony Mowricine and other Lumbardes.

1457. The French nation hearing of the ciuill dissention within the Realme of England, thought to worke some domage to the English people, in reuenge of olde iniuries, whereupon were two Nauies appointed to inuade the townes standing vppon the riuage of the sea. The Captaine of the one fleete, was William Lord Pomyars, and of the other sir Pierce Bressy Captaine of Dieppe. These two Captaines taking their course out of the mouth of Seyne, seuered themselues, the one Westwarde, and the other Eastwarde, which was sir Peter Bressy, this luskie Captaine sayling almost all the coastes of Sussex, and Kent, durst not once take lande till he arriued in the Downes, and there hauing perfect notice that a little before the cheefe Rulers of the Towne, were departed from thence to auoyde the plague which then there raigned, entered the Hauen with fiftéene thousand men, and their shippes all landing at Sandwich, whereof 7000. entered entred the land, the space of three mile, and there kept and defended the town, vntill their other company might come to them, at what time they killed the Maior, the baylifes and the other officers of Sandwich, with diuers other Gentlemen of the countrey, and spoyled and robbed the Towne, leading and carying away carts of furniture and other riches to their ships, and moreouer robbed and spoyled two great galleies or ships laden with marchandise comming to London.

The Lord Pomyars likewise toke his course west ward, and by night brent Foway and other certaine townes in Deuonshire, in the moneth of August, and with his pillage returned into Britaine. The towne of Foway brent.

The Scottes also entred Northumberland, and burned certaine cottages and houses, but hearing that the Duke of Yorke was marching thitherwarde with a great Armie, they with all haste returned into Scotlande.

In this yére was a great fraie in the North countrey betwéene the Lord Egremonde, and the Earle of Salisburies sonnes, whereby many were maimed and slaine, but in the ende the Lord Egremonde was taken, who was by the kings counsell found in great default, and therefore condemned in great summes of money, to be paid to the Earle of Salisbury, and in the meane time committed to Newgate. Rob. Fabian.

Not long after this sir Thomas Percie Lord Egremount, and sir Richard Percie his brother being prisoners in Newgate, condemned in a great summe to the Earle of Salisburie as is aforesaid, brake out of prison by night, and went to the king, the other prisoners toke the leades of the gate and defended it a long while against the shrifes and all their officers, insomuch that they were forced to call more ayde of the Citizens, whereby they lastly subdued them. Register of Maior.

The Quéene secretely thirsting the ouerthrowe of Richard Duke of Yorke, and his faction, perceiuing that she could attempt nothing against him nére to the Citie of London, because the Duke was had more in estimation among the Citizens, then eyther the king or Quéene, and therefore she caused the king to make a progresse into Warwickshire, for his health and recreation, and so with hauking and hunting came to the Citie of Couentrie, where diuers waies were studied to compasse the Quénes desire: for the accomplishing whereof, the Duke of Yorke, the Earles of Salisbury, and Warwicke, were sent for to Couentrie by the kings letters, vnder his priuie seale, to which place the saide Lords resorted: but béeing admonished by secret frendes, what was intended against them, they auoyded that daunger, and so not saying farewell, they departed from the Court, the Duke vnto Wigmore in the marches of Wales, the Earle of Salisburie to his Castle of Middleham in the North countrey, and the Earle of Warwicke sayled to the Towne of Calois, thus were they separated in bodies, but in mindes and heartes knit togither in one, hauing alwaies messengers with letters walking betwixt them, to communicate their deuises. Robert Ponings sometime Swoordbearer and caruer to Jacke Cade proclaimed a traitor.

In this meane time many were apprehended for raising of seditious stirs among other one Robert Ponings late of Southwarke, in the countie of Surrey Esquire, which was sometime a companion and adherent, to the most horrible wicked and heynous traytor and tyrant John Cade in time of his insurrection, being then his caruer, and swoord bearer, what time he did his robberie and tyranny in the citie of London, and in many other places, the which Robert stirred the greatest part of such as were adherents, &c. For all which doings being pardoned, he hath still persevered in his wickednes, and of late, to wit in the 31. the 32. &c. of our raigne hath assembled numbers of men at Northe Cray, and Frammingham in Kent, &c. Wherefore we proclaime him to be a traytor, and to be apprehended, &c.

Reginald Pecock Bishop of Chichester.

Maister Reginald Pecocke Bishop of Chichester, a secular Doctour of Diuinitie, that had laboured many yeres to translate the holy Scripture into English, was accused to haue passed the boundes of Diuinitie and of Christian beleefe in certaine Articles, of the which hee was conuict before the Archbishoppe of Canterburie, and other Bishops and Clerkes, and after vtterly abiured, reuoked, and renounced those Articles openly at Paules Crosse in his Mother tong, on the fourth day of December, as followeth, In the name of the Trinitie, Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, I Reynold Pecocke Bishop of Chichester vnworthy, of my owne power and will without any manner coertion or dread, confesse and knowledge that I here before this time presuming of mine naturall witte, and preferring my iudgment and naturall reason before the new and the olde Testament, and the authoritie and determination of our mother holy Church, haue held, written and taught otherwise than the holy Romane and Vniuersall Church teacheth, preacheth, or obserueth. And one is against the true Catholicke and Apostles faith, I haue written, taught and published many and diuers perilous doctrines, bookes, workes and writings, conteining Heresies and errors, contrary to the faith Catholicke, and determination of holy Church: and especially these Heresies and errors following, that is to say:

In primis quod non est de necessitate fidei credere quòd dominus noster Iesus Christus post mortem descendit ad inferos.

Item, quòd non est de necessitate salutis credere sanctorum communionem.

Item, quòd non est de necessitate salutis credere & tenere illud quod concilium generale & vniuersalis Ecclesia statuit, approbat, seu determinat, in fauorem fidei, & ad salutem animarum, est ab vniuersis Christi fidelibus approbandum & tenendum.

Wherefore I miserable sinner which here before long time haue walked in darknes, and now by the mercie and infinite goodnes of God reduced into the right way, and light of truth, and considering my selfe greeuously haue sinned and wickedly haue informed and infected the people of God, returne and come againe to the vnitie of our Mother holy Church, and all heresies and errors written and contained in my sayde bookes, workes and writinges, here solemnly and openly reuoke and renounce, which heresies and errors and all other spices of heresies I haue before this time before the most Reuerend father in God, and my good Lord of Canterbury in diuers and lawfull forme iudicially abiured, submitting my selfe, being then and also now at this time a very contrite and penitẽt sinner, to the correction of the Church and of my said Lord of Canterbury.

And ouer this, exhorting and requiring in the name and vertue of almightie God, in the saluation of your soules and mind, that no man hereafter giue faith and credence to my said pernitious doctrines, heresies and errors, neyther my said Bookes keepe, hold, or read in any wise, but that they all such Bookes, workes, and writings suspect of heresies, deliuer in all godly haste vnto my said Lord of Canterbury, or to his Commissioners and Deputies, in eschewing of many inconueniences and great perils of soules, the which else might be cause of the contrary. And ouer this declaration of my conuersation and repentance, I here openly assent, that my said Bookes, workes, and writings, for declaration and cause aboue rehearsed, bee deputed vnto the fire, and openly burnt in ensample and terror of all other, &c. After this, he was depriued of his Bishoprike, hauing a certaine pencion assigned vnto him for to liue on in an Abbey, and sone after he died. His Bookes were intituled:

1 Of Christian Religion, and a Booke pertayning thereunto.
2 Of Matrimonie.
3 Iust aprising of holy Scripture, deuided into three parts.
4 The Donet of Christian Religion.
5 The follower of the Donet.

In the moneth of Ianuary died the Earle of Deuonshire, in the Abbey of Abingdon, poysoned (as men said) being there at that time with Quéene Margaret. King Henry and his adherents perceiuing that the Duke of Yorke lay still and stirred not, returned to London, and there called a great councel, openly declaring that the French and Scots, emboldened by the ciuill discord within the Realme, would attempt to annoy the same, as of late they shewed apparant tokens of their malicious meaning, and would not cease vpon occasions to doe further displeasures, till they perceiued a perfect concord, and vnfained amity to be concluded betweene him and his friends, and those of the contrary part and confederacie. And to the intent, he would be the author of peace, he promised so to entertaine the Duke of Yorke, and his fautors, that all old grudges being not onely inwardly forgotten but outwardly forgiuen, should be the cause of perpetuall loue and assured amitie. This deuise was of all men present well taken, and adiudged for the best. Whereupon diuers graue persons were sent to the Duke of Yorke, and all other the great estates of the Realme, which since the battell of S. Albons neuer met or communed togither, commaunding them for great causes to resort to the Kings pallace without delay. At whose commaundement came to London, the Earle of Salisbury on the 15. of January with 500. men, and was lodged in his owne house called the Herber: and on the 26. day came Richard Duke of Yorke with 400. men, and was lodged at Bainards Castell being his owne house. Then came the Dukes of Exceter and Somerset with 800. men, and were lodged without Temple barre, and the Earle of Northumberland, the Lord Egremond, and the Lord Clifford came with 1500. men, and lodged without the Citie. And on the 14. of February came the Earle of Warwicke from Caleis with 600. men, all in red iackets, embrodered with ragged staues before and behinde, and was lodged at the grey friers. And on the 17. of March, the King and Quéen with a great retinue came to London, and were lodged in the Bishops pallace. And because no notorious attempt or bickering should be begunne betwéene any of the parties, or their retinues, the Maior of London, Godfrey Boloigne, and Aldermen of the City kept great watch, as well by day as by night, riding about the Citie, by Holborne and Fléetstréet with 2000. men well armed, to sée good order & peace to be kept. The Lords which lay within the Citie held a daily councell at the blacke Friers. The other part soiourning without the walles, assembled likewise in the chapiter house at Westminster.

At the length by the diligent trauaile, good exhortation, and prudent aduice of the Archbishoppe of Canterbury, and other learned and vertuous Prelates, both partes were perswaded to come to a communication, where after long debating of their grieuances, they were accorded, promising to forget all olde rancours, and to be friendes each to other, and obedient to the king, whereof writings were made and sealed. The principall points whereof, the king being reputed as whole arbitrator consisted herein.

First, that at the costes and expences of the Duke of Yorke, the Earles of Warwicke and Salisbury fiue and fortie pounds of yéerly rent should be giuen vnto the Monastery of Saint Albons, to be imployed for Edmond late Duke of Somerset, Henry late Earle of Northumberland, and Thomas Clifford, which being slaine in the late battell of Saint Albons, were buried in the Abbey Church. The same Duke of Somerset, Earle of Northumberland and Lord Clifford, were declared for true liege men to the king at the day of their deaths, as wel as the Duke of Yorke, the Earles of Warwicke and of Salisbury. Yoze, the Duke of Yorke should giue to Elianor Dutchesse of Somerset, and to Henry Duke of Somerset her sonne, the summe of fiue thousand markes, &c. The Earle of Warwicke should giue vnto the Lord Clifford the summe of one thousand markes: diuers other awardes betwixt parties were there made, which I am forced to ouerpasse for breuities sake.

For the outward publishing of this ioyfull agréement, there was vpon our Lady day in Lent, or fiue and twentieth day of March, a solemne procession celebrated within the Cathedrall Church of Saint Paule in the Citie of London: at the which the King was present in his habite royall, with the Crowne on his head, before him went hand in hand, the Duke of Somerset, the Earle of Salisbury, the Duke of Exceſter, and the Earle of Warwicke, and ſo one of the one faction, and another of the other. And behinde the King, the Duke of Yorke, and the Quéene with great familiarity to all mens ſights, whatſoeuer was meant to the contrary, which appeared afterward.

Citie

The thirtenth day of Aprill there was a great fray in Flétſtréte, betwéene men of court and the inhabitants of the ſame ſtréte, in which fray the Quénes Atturney was ſlaine. For this facte, the king committed the principall gouernours of Furniuals, Cliffords, and Barnardes Inne to priſon in the Caſtell of Hertford, and William Tailor Alderman of that warde, with many other, were ſent to Windſore Caſtell the ſeuenth of May. On Thurſday in Whitſon wéeke, the Duke of Somerſet with Anthonie Riuers and other foure, kept iuſtes before the Quéene in the Tower of London, againſt three Eſquiers of the Quénes: an in like manner at Grénwich the Sunday following. Juſting in the tower of London.

On the Trinitie Sunday or Monday following, certaine ſhippes appertayning to the Earle of Warwicke, met with a fléete of Spaniards, and after long and cruell fight tooke ſixe of their ſhips laden with yron & other merchandiſe, drowned, and chaſed to the number of 26. not without ſhedding of blod on both parts, for of the Engliſhmen were ſlaine 100. and many more wounded and ſore hurt. The Earle of Warwicke tooke Spaniſh ſhips.

The King and Quéen being at Weſtminſter, the ninth day of November fell a great debate, betwéene Richard Earle of Warwicke, and them of the kings houſe, inſomuch, that they would haue ſlaine the Earle: and hardly he eſcaped to his barge, and went after to Caleis, for he was not long before made Captaine thereof by authority of the Parliament. Soone after, the young Duke of Somerſet by ſtirring of them that hated the Earle of Warwicke, was made Captaine of Caleis, and a priuy ſeale directed to the Earle for to diſcharge him of the Captaineſhip: but the Earle, foraſmuch as he was made by Parliament, he would not obey the priuie ſeale, but continued forth in the ſaid office. An. reg. 37.

The Earle of Warwicke Admirall, Captaine of Caleis with a fourtéene well appointed ſhips, ſailed abroad to ſcower the ſeas, and by chance met with fiue great ſhips, whereof three were Carickes of Gene, and the other two were of Spaine, bigger in height and length, than the Carikes. The Earle though he were vnneth able to deale against them, yet he valiantly encountering them, there was a sore battayle fought betwixt them, for it lasted almost the space of two daies, yet in the ende the English had the victorie: so that two of those shippes being forced to saue themselues by flight, the other three were taken, which the Earle brought to Caleis, with all the marchandise abourd in the same, the value whereof in wine, oyle, ware, yron, cloth of golde, and other riches was estéemed to the value of tenne thousand pound and better, by reason whereof, those wares were solde wonderfull cheape: there were taken a greate number of prisoners, beside a thousand persons slaine in the fight, and of the Earles part about the number of fiftie.

Now in this meane time, after that the Earle of Warwicke was departed the Realme and gone ouer to Caleis, the Duke of Yorke, and the Earle of Salisbury falling to consultation, it was agréed betwixt them, that the said Earle of Salisbury with a warlike company should march toward the King, and signifie to him by way of complaint, both the manifest iniuries done to his sonne, and also the vncourteous breach of the swome amitie and late agréement, in which suite if he prevailed, he should not then let passe the occasion giuen for reuenge of displeasures to him done, both by the Quéene, and her counsell. The Earle of Salisbury therefore remoued from Pikeham Castle, with foure or fiue thousand men, taking his way through Lancashire towards London.

In the meane season the Quéene afflicted by the Dukes of Somerset and Buckingham, hauing a diligent eie to al her busines, imagined that the Earle of Warwicke had kindeled this fire, to the intent, to set the Crowne on the Duke of Yorkes head: wherefore she appointed Iames Twicher Lord Audley (because his power lay in those parts) to raise an host of men, and to giue battaile to the same Earle, if he saw cause, a place inconuenient: she allied vnto her all the Knights and Esquiers of Chestershire for to haue their fauour: she held open household among them, and made her sonne the Prince, to giue a liuerie of Swans to all the gentlemen of that countrey, and to many other through the land, trusting through their strength to make her sonne King, making priuie meanes to some of the Lords to moue the King to resigne the Crowne to her sonne, but she could not bring it to passe.

An. reg. 38.

The 21. day of September Richard Earle of Salisbury hauing gathered a well appointed army, toke his way toward Ludlow, where at that time the Duke of Yorke lay, to the intent that they both together would haue ridden to the King to Colshull in Staffordshire, to haue excused them of certaine articles laide against them by malice of their enemies, as they laide. Whereupon those that were about the King, and also the Quéene, who lay at Eglishall, moued him to assemble a great power, whereof Iames Twicher Lord Audley was made chiefe, and had the leading of them into the fielde called called Blozeheath nére vnto Muckleſtone, by the which the ſaid Duke and the Earle muſt néds paſſe, and there both hoſtes met and fought a mortall battell, wherin the Lord Audley was ſlaine with Hugh Venables of Kinderton, Thomas Dutton of Dutton, Richard Molineux of Seſton, William Trowtbecke, Iohn Legh del Bothes, Iohn Donne of Wilkington, and Iohn Egerton of Egerton Knights, Richard Donne of Croton, Iohn Dutes Eſquires, and many other, in all to the number of 2400. perſons, but the greateſt loſſe fell to the of Cheſterſhire, that had receiued the Princes liuery of Swans: but there were taken priſoners the Earle of Saliſburies two ſonnes Thomas and Iohn, and ſir Thomas Harington, which were ſent to Cheſter, but ſone after deliuered. After this diſcomfiture at Blozeheath, the Duke of Yorke perceiuing his deſtruction to be intended, and his priuie intents throughly diſcloſed to the King and Quéene, he thought good no longer to linger his buſines, but with all diligence to diſplay and auance his banner, and therefore ſending for the Earle of Saliſbury, after long communication, they determined to raiſe an armie, and by fine force eyther to die, or to winne their purpoſe. Hereupon were men forthwith aſſembled, both out of the North, & of the Welch, which all came to the Marches of Wales, determining there to abide their enemies, or to méet them as occaſion ſerued. There came to him from Caleis the Earle of Warwicke, bringing with him a great number of expert men in martiall feates, whereof two were Captaines of great experience, the one called Andrew Trolope, the other Iohn Blunt. Blozeheath field. Richard Molineux.

The King hauing aduertiſement of the Dukes doing, ſent forth Commiſſioners to leuie a power in all parts of the Realme, where he thought to haue any faithfull fauourers, by reaſon whereof a great number of men were aſſembled, then the king accompanied with the Dukes of Somerſet and Exceſter, and other that fauoured the houſe of Lancaſter, marching forward came vnto Worceſter, where he ſtayed for a time, and ſent to his aduerſaries a meſſenger, to wit, the Biſhoppe of Saliſbury Richard Beauchampe, to offer vnto them a frée generall pardon for all treſpaſſes whatſoeuer, if they would giue ouer their enterpriſe and become true and obedient ſubiectes. To whom they anſwered by the mouth of the Earle of Warwike, in three pointes: Firſt, that as concerning the pardon, they durſt not truſt vnto it. Secondly, that notwithſtanding ſuch pardons, thoſe that were about the King were vnruly, and cared not to breake the Kings commaundement. Thirdly, although euerie Lord, béing called to the Parliament, ought frélye to come, and ſafely to depart, yet the ſaid Earle of Warwicke, at a certaine counſell holden at Weſtminſter, was in danger of death, if the Lord abouc had not the better prouided for his eſcape, for the which cauſe he ſith the kings pardon may be likened to a buckler of glaſſe, or a ſtaffe of réede, of the which there is no truſt: we dare not commit our ſelues vnto the defence of any ſuch pardons.

The King receiuing ſuch an aunſwere was nothing contented therewith, and therefore commaunded his ſtandartes to be aduanced: but before he came nére to the place where the ſaid Lords were incamped, they wrote a letter letter to the King, whereof the tenour was thus.

Most Christian King, right high and mightie Prince, and our most dread soueraigne Lord, after as humble recommendations to your high excellency as will suffice. Our true intent to the prosperitie and augmentation of your high estate, and to the Commonweale of this Realme, hath bene shewed vnto your highnes in such writing as we make thereof. And ouer that an Indenture signed by our hands in the Church Cathedrall of Worcestr, comprehending the proofe of the trueth and dutie that (God knoweth) we beare to your said estate, and to the prehemінence and prerogatiue thereof, we sent vnto your good grace by the Prior of the said Church, and diuers other Doctors, and among other, by Maister William Linwoode Doctor of diuinitie, which ministred vnto vs seuerally the blessed sacrament of the bodie of Jesus, whereupon we and euery of vs deposed for our said trueth and duety, according to the tenour of the said Indenture. And sith that time we haue certified at large in writing and by mouth, by Gartar king of armes, not onely to your said highnesse, but also to the good and worthie Lordes being about your most noble presence, the largenesse of our saide trueth and duety, and our intent and disposition, to search all the motions that might serue conuenently to the affirmation thereof, and to our perfect suretie from such inconuenient and vnreuerent ieopardies as we haue bene put in diuers times here before. Whereof we haue cause to make, and ought to make such exclamation and complaint, not without reason, as is not vnknowne to the said worthie Lordes, and to all this land, and will offer vs to your high presence, to the same intent, if we might so doe without said surety, which onely causeth vs to kepe such fellowship as we doe in our lawfull manner. And hereto we haue forborne and auoided all thinges that might serue to the effusion of Christian blood, of the dread that we haue of God, and of your royall Maiestie: and haue also eschewed to approach your said most noble presence, for the humble obeisance and reuerence wherein we haue, and during our life will haue the same. And yet neuertheselle we heare, that we be proclaimed and diffamed in our name vnrightfully, vnlawfullie, and sauing your high reuerence, vntruely, and otherwise (as God knoweth) than we haue giuen cause, knowing certainely that the blessed and noble intent of your said good grace, and the righteousnesse thereof is, to take, repute and accept your true and lawfull subiectes, and that it accordeth neither with your saide intent, nor with your will or pleasure, that we should be otherwise taken or reputed. And ouer that, our Lordships and tenaunts bene of high violence robbed and spoyled, against your peace and lawes, and all righteousnesse. We therefore, as we suffice, beseech your said good grace to take, repute, and receiue thereunto our said trueth and intent, which to God is knowen, as we shew it by the said tenour of the same Indenture, and not apply your said blessednes ne the great righteousnes and equitie wherewith God hath euer indued your high nobilitie, to the importune impatience and violence of such persons as intend of extreme malice to proceede vnder the shadow of your high

Most Christian King, right high and mighty Prince, and most dread soueraigne Lord, wee beseech our blessed Lord to preserue your honour and estate in ioy and felicity. Written at Ludlow the tenth day of October: R. Yorke, R. Warwicke, R. Salisburie.

After their excusation contained in this letter sent to the King, they withdrew them, and went into diuers parts beyond the seas, for the more surety of their persons. The Duke of Yorke went into Ireland, where he was honourably receiued: the Earle of March, Salisbury, and Warwicke, not without great ieopardy and perill, as well on the land as on the sea, went to Calais, and abode there.

Then was a Parliament holden at Couentry, wherein were attaint of treason, Richard Duke of Yorke, Edward Earle of March his son and heire, Richard Earle of Warwicke, Edmond Earle of Rutland, Richard Earle of Salisbury, John Lord Clifford, Lord Clinton, sir Thomas Harington, sir Iohn Wenlocke, Thomas Neuill, Iohn Neuill sonnes of the Earle of Salisbury, Iames Pickering, Iohn Conyers, Thomas Par, William Oldhall, and Henry Ratford, knights, Iohn Bowser, Thomas Cooke, Iohn Clay, Richard Gyton, Robert Browne, Edward Bowser, Thomas Vaughan, Iohn Roger, Richard Grey, Walter Deuereux, Walter Hopton, Roger Kynderton, William Bowes, Foulke Stafford, the Lord Powis, and Alice Countesse of Salisbury, their goods and possessions escheted, and their heires disherited vnto the ninth degree, their tenants spoiled of their goods, bemained and slaine, the towne of Ludlow longing to the Duke of Yorke, was robbed to the bare walles, and the Dutches of Yorke spoiled of her goods.

Ludlow spoiled.

In this moneth of October, Henry the young Duke of Somerset, Henry Lord Roos, and Lord Audley, with men of armes sailed towards Calais, to the intent the Duke should haue bene Captaine there: but when he came to land, they of Calais would haue taken him, so that he hardly escaped to the Castell of Gwines: his souldiers were stripped out of their harnesse, and let go. The Lord Audley was taken into Calais, and the Lord Roos towne and certain great ships which lay there at anker: but when the Earle of Warwike saw time conuenient, he sent some of his men to Sandwich by night, the which toke the Lord Riuers and Anthonie Wooduile his sonne in their beds, and led them ouer to Calets, with all the great ships saue one called Grace de Dieu, the which might not be had away because she was broke in the bottome. Sir Baudwine Fulford vndertooke on paine of losing his head, that he would destroy the Earle of Warwicke, but when he had spent the King a thousand markes in money, he returned again. Then was the Duke of Excester Admirall sent to the sea with a great Nauy for to distresse the Earle of Warwicke and his Nauy, he sailing from Sandwich to Dertmouth, for lacke of victuals and many his souldiers forsooke him there. And betwixt Sandwich and Dertmouth he met the Earle of Warwicke comming out of Ireland that had béene there for to speake with the Duke of Yorke, and brought with him his mother that was fled thither for dread, and led her to Calets: but the Duke of Excester durst not set vpon the earle of Warwicke, nor the Earle would not distresse him, because he was admirall, and of the Kings blood, but let him passe by.

The Duke of Excester sent to the seas.

In the moneth of June 500. men were sent to conduct the Duke of Somerset from Gwines into England, but abiding the wind in the Port of Sandwich, the Earle of Warwikes men spoyled them of their harnes, killed their Captaine Mountfort and many other. The Earles at Calets sent to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and at large to the commons of England certain articles in writing, beginning thus: Worshipful sirs, we, the Duke of Yorke, the Earles of March, Warwik, and Salisbury, sewed, and offred to haue come vnto the King our soueraigne Lords most noble presence, to haue declared there afore him for our duety to God and to his highnes, and to the prosperity and welfare of his noble estate, and to the commonweale of all his land as true liege men, the matters following, that is to say.

Captaine Mountfort slaine.

Articles sent from the Duke of Yorke, & the Earles, to the Archbishop of Canterbury and to the commons.

Inprimis, the great oppression, extortion, robbery, murther, and other violences done to Gods Church and to his ministers thereof, against Gods and mans law.

2 Item, the pouerty and misery that to our great heauinesse our soueraigne Lord standeth in, not hauing any liuelode of the crown of England, whereof he may kéepe his honourable household, which causeth the spoiling of his said liege men by the takers of his said household, which liuelode is in their hands that haue béene destroyers of his said estate, and of the said common weale.

3 Item, how his lawes be partially and vnrightfully guided, and that by them that should most loue and tender his said lawes, the said oppression and extortion is most fauoured and supported, and generally, that all righteousnes and Iustice is exiled out of the said land, and that no man dreadeth to offend against the said lawes.

4 Item, that it will please his said good grace to liue vpon his owne liuelode, liuelode, whereupon his noble progenitors haue in dates heretofore liued as honorably and as worthily as any Christian Princes, and not to suffer the destroiers of the said land, and of his true subiects, to liue thereupon, and therefore to lacke the sustenances that should be belonging to his said estate, and finde his household vpon his poore commons, without payment, which neither accordeth with Gods nor mans law.

5 Item, how oft the said commons haue bene greatly and marueilously charged with taxes and tallages, to their great empouerishing, wherof little good hath eyther growen to the King or to the said land, and of the most substance thereof the king hath left to his part not halfe so much: and other Lords and persons, enemies to the said commonweale, haue to their owne vse, suffering all the olde possessions that the King had in France and Normandy, Anion and Maine, Gascoign & Guien, won and gotten by his father of most noble memory, and other his noble progenitors, to be shamefully lost or sold.

6 Item, how they cannot cease therwith, but now begin a new charge of imposition and tallages vpon the said people, which neuer afore was seen, that is to say, euery township to find men for the Kings guard, taking ensample therof, of our enemies and aduersaries of France, which imposition and tallage, if it be continued to heire, heires, and successors, wil be the heauiest charge & worst ensample that euer grew in England, and the foresaid subiects, and the said heirs and successors, in such bondage as their ancestors were neuer charged with.

7 Item, where the king hath now no more liuelode out of his Realme of England, but only the land of Ireland, and the towne of Caleis, and that no King Christened hath such a land and a towne without his Realme, diuers Lords haue caused his highnes to write letters vnder his priuy seale, vnto his Irish enemies, which neuer king of England did heretofore, wherby they may haue comfort to enter into the conquest of the said land, which letters the same Irish enemies sent vnto me the said Duke of Yorke, and marueled greatly that any such letters should be to them sent, speaking therin great shame and villany of the said Realme.

8 Item, in like wise the King by excitation and labour of the same Lords, wrote other letters to his enemies and aduersaries in other lands, that in no wise they should shew any fauour or good will to the towne of Caleis, whereby they had comfort enough to proceed to the winning thereof. Considered also that it is ordained by the labour of the said lords, that no where victuall nor other thing of refreshing or defence should come out of England, to the succour or relefe of the said town, to the intent that they would haue it lost, as it may openly appeare.

9 Item, it is deemed and ought greatly to be deemed, that after that the same Lords would put the same rule of England, if they might haue their purpose and intent, into the handes and gouernaunce of the saide enemies.

10 Item, how continually sith the piteous, shamefull, & sorrowful mur-ther to all England, of that noble, worthy, and Christian Prince Humfrey Duke of Glocester the kings true vncle, at Bury, it hath bẽn labored, studied, and conspired, to haue destroied and murthered the said Duke of Yorke and the issue that it pleased God to send me of the royall blood, and also of vs the said Earles of Warwick and Salisbury, for none other cause but for the true heart that God knoweth we euer haue borne, and beare to the profit of the kings estate, to the commonweale of the same Realme, and defence thereof.

11 Item, how the Earles of Shrewsbury and Wilshire, and the Lord Beaumount, our mortal and extreme enemies, now, and of long time past, hauing the guiding about the most noble person of our said soueraign Lord, whose highnes they haue restrained and kept from the liberty and freedome that belongeth to his said estate, and the supporters and fauourers of all the premises, would not suffer the kings said good grace to receiue and accept vs, as he would haue done, if he might haue had his owne wil, into his said presence, dreading the charge that would haue bẽne laid vpon them, of the misery, destruction, and wretchednesse of the said Realme, wherof they be causes, and not the King, which is himselfe as noble, as vertuous, as righteous and blessed of disposition, as any Prince earthly.

12 Item, the Earles of Wilshire and Shrewsbury, and the Lord Beaumont, not satisfied nor content with the kings possessions and his goods, stirred and excited his said highnes to hold his Parliament at Couentry, where an act is made by their prouocation and labour, against vs the said Duke of Yorke, my sonnes March and Rutland, and the Earles of Warwicke and Salisbury, and the sonnes of the said Earle of Salisbury, and many other Knights and Esquires, of diuers matters falsely and vntruly imagined, as they will answere afore Almighty God in the day of dome, the which the said Earles of Shrewsbury and Wiltshire, and the Lord Beaumont prouoked to be made, to the intent of our destruction and of our issue, and that they might haue our liuelode and goods, as they haue openly robbed and dispoyled all our places and our tenements, and many other true men, and now proceed to hanging and drawing of men by tyranny, and will therein shew the largenes of their violence and malice as vengeably as they can, if no remedy be prouided at the kings highnesse, whose blessednes is neither assenting nor knowing thereof.

We therefore seing all the said mischiefes, hearing also that the French king maketh in his land great assembly of his people, which is greatly to be dread for many causes, purpose yet againe with Gods grace to offer vs to come again to the said presence of our said soueraigne Lord, to open and declare there vnto him the mischiefes aboue declared, and in the name of the land to sue, in as reuerent and lowly wise as we can, to his said good grace, to haue pitie and compassion vpon his said true subiectes, and not to suffer the same mischiefes to raigne vpon them. Requiring you in Gods behalfe, and praying you in your owne, therein to assist vs, doing alway the duety of liege men in our persons to our said soueraigne Lord, to his estate, prero-

gatiue, and prehemínence, and to the surety of his most noble person, wherunto we haue euer beene, and will be as true as any of his subiectes aliue, whereof we call God, our Lady Saint Mary, and all the Saints in heauen vnto witnes and record.

In the meane time, the Earle of Wiltshire treasurer of England, the Lord Scales, and the Lord Hungerford went to Newbery, which longed to the Duke of Yorke, and there made inquisition of all them that in any wise had fauoured the said Duke, whereof some were found guilty, and were drawen, hanged, and quartered, and all the inhabitants of the towne were spoiled of their goods. From thence the Earle of Wiltshire went to Southhampton, where vnder colour to take the Earle of Warwike, but especially to steale out of the Realme, as appeared afterwards, he armed fiue great carickes of Jene, and stuffed them with souldiers, taking victualles of the kings price without paiment, and put a great part of his treasure into the said carickes, and after sailed about in the sea, and at last stale into Dutchland, sending backe againe his souldiers into England. Then were the kings priuy seales directed to all Bishops, Abbots, Priors and other states spirituall and temporall to lend the king money, therewith to wage souldiers to keepe the sea coasts: but the commons of Kent dreading the like vengeance to be taken vpon them, as was done vpon them of Newbery, sent priuily messengers to Caleis to the foresaid Earles, beseeching them in all haste possible to come to their succour, whereupon the said Earles sent ouer into Kent the Lord Fauconbridge, to know if their deeds would accord with their words, and anon the people of Kent and other shires adioyning resorted to the said Lord Fauconbridge in great number, and made long proclamations, containing diuers articles and causes of their assembly, all which here I ouerpasse. When the Earles knew the willing hearts of those people, they prepared to come into this land, against whose comming, a long ballet was fired vpon the gates of Canterbury, made in fauor of the Duke of Yorke and the said Earles, beginning thus: In the day of fast and spirituall affliction, The celestiall influence of bodies transitorie, &c. The Earles of March, Warwicke, and Salisbury, arriued at Sandwich, where met with them Thomas Bourcher Archbishop of Canterbury, who with his crosse borne before him, & a great number of other people, accompanied them to London, into the which City they entred on the second day of July: with them came the Popes legate, to treat of a peace, if need were.

The Earle of Wiltshire and other spoiled Newbery.

The Earle of Wiltshire stale ouer the seas Priuie seales for money.

The men of Kent sent to Caleis for the Earles.

The Earles entred into London.

Then was a conuocation of the Cleargy holden in Saint Pauls Church, where the said Earles being present, the Earle of Warwicke recyted the cause of their comming into the land, with the misgouernments thereof, and then made open oth vpon the crosse of Canterbury, that they had euer borne true faith and allegeance to King Henry. Then the Earles of March and Warwike, with the Lords Fauconbridge, Clinton, Bourchier called Earle of Ewe, the Prior of Saint Iohns, Audley, Burgaueny, Say, and Scrope, the Archbishop, the Popes legate, the Bishops of Ercester, Ely, Salisbury, and Rochester, addressed them forth to the king at Hoz-thampton, leauing the Earle of Salisbury to be gouernour of the Citie in their absence. The Lord Scales and Hungerford, that before the comming of the Earles were in the Citie of London, and would haue had the gouernance thereof, went to the Tower of London, and with them the Lords Vessy, Louell, Delaware, Kendale a Gascoigne: Knights, sir Edmond Hampden, Thomas Brune sherife of Kent, Iohn Bruin of Kent, Geruais Clifton treasurer of the Kings house, Thomas Tyrell, the Dutches of Excester and many other. Then was the Tower of London beseged both by water and land, that no victuals might come to them. And they that were within the Tower cast wild fire into the City, and shot many smal guns, wherby they brent and slew men, women, and children in the streets: also they of the Citie laid great guns on the further side of the Thames against the Tower, and brake the walles in diuers places.

Tower of London besieged.

The King lying in the Friers at Northampton ordained a strong and mighty field in the medows beside the Nunry, hauing the riuer at his back. The Earles with their power comming to Northampton, sent certaine Bishops to the King, beseeching him to admit the Earle of Warwicke to come to his presence, to declare their innocency: which request being denied by the Duke of Buckingham, the Earles sent an herault of armes, desiring to haue hostages for his safe comming & going, but he might not be heard. The third time the Earle of Warwicke sent word to the King, that at two houres after noone he would speake with him, or die in the field. The Bishop of Hereford a white frier, the Kings confessor, incouraged the Kings part to fight, wherefore after the battell he was committed to the Castel of Warwicke, where he was long prisoner.

The tenth day of July at two of the clocke afternoone, the Earles of March and Warwicke let crie through the field, that no man should lay hand vpon the King, nor on the common people, but on the Lords, Knights and Esquires: then both hosts incountred and fought halfe an houre, the Lord Edmond Grey of Ruthen that was the kings vaward brake the field and came to the Earles party, and was a great helpe to them in obtaining the victory: many on the Kings side were slaine, and many that fled were drowned in the riuer, the Duke of Buckingham, the Earle of Shrewsbury the Lord Beaumont, and the Lord Egremont were slaine by the kings tent, with many knights and esquires: the kings ordinance of guns might not be shot, there was so great raine that day.

Battell at Northampton.

When the field was done, and the Earls had the victory, they came to the King, he being in his tent, and said in this wise: Most noble prince, displease you not though it haue pleased God of his grace to grant vs the victory of our mortall enemies, the which by their venemous malice haue vntruly stirred & moued your highnesse to exile vs out of your land, and would haue vs put to finall shame and confusion: we come not to the intent for to vnquiet ne grieue your said highnesse, but for to please your noble person, desiring tenderly the high welfare & prosperity thereof, and of al your realme, and to be your true liege men while our liues shall endure.

The

The king with these words was greatly recomforted, and anon was led to Northampton with procession, where he rested three daies, and came to London the sixteenth day of July, and was lodged in the Bishops pallace.

The nineteenth day of July, they that were in the Tower of London, for lacke of victuals yéelded and came forth, of the which afterward some were drawne and headed.

The Lord Scales late in an euening entred a wherry with three persons, and rowing toward Westminster, there to haue taken sanctuary, was descried by a woman, and anon the wherry men fell on him, killed him, and cast him aland beside Saint Mary Queries. Lord Scales murdered by whirry men on the Thames.

When Quéene Margaret heard that the king was taken, she with her sonne and eight persons fled to the Castell of Hardlagh in Wales, and was robbed by the way in Lancastershire of al her goods to the value of ten thousand markes: from thence she went into Scotland.

The tenth of August Iames king of Scots besieging the Castell of Rocksborough, was slaine with a gun that brake in his campe.

The 21. of September the Duke of Somerset came from Gwines into England. An. reg. 39.

The Eight of October a Parliament was begun at Westminster, vnto the which came Richard Duke of Yorke, that a little before was come out of Ireland, and being lodged in the pallace, the king being there, he brake vp the doores of the kings chamber, so that the king giuing him place, tooke an other chamber. Then the said Duke, as right heire by lineal descent from Richard the second, chalenged the Realme, purposing to haue béen crowned on Alhallown day next following, and hereupon sent to the Parliament in writing his said claime, title, and pedigrée. The which claime after diligent deliberation had and approued, by the said Parliament, peace and concord betwéene the King and the Duke on the vigill of Alhallow was established and concluded, as in articles followeth. Parliament. The articles betwixt king Henry and the Duke of Yorke

Blessed be Iesu, in whose hands all bountie resteth, and is the peace and vnitie betwixt Princes and the weale of euery Realme: I know by whose direction agréed it is appointed and accorded as followeth: Betwixt the most high and most mighty Prince King Henry the first, King of England and of France, and Lord of Ireland, on the one party, and the right high and mighty Prince Richard Plantagenet Duke of Yorke, on that other party, vpon certaine matters of variance moued betwixt them, and especially vpon the claime and title vnto the crownes of England and of France, and royal power, estate, and dignity apperteyning to the same, & lordship of Ireland opened, shewed, and declared by the said Duke, afore all the Lords spiritual and temporall, being in this present Parliament.

First, where the said Richard Duke of Yorke hath declared and opened, as aboue is said, title and claime in manner as followeth:

That the right noble and worthy Prince Henry king of England the third, had issue and lawfully got Edward his first begotten sonne, borne at Westminster the fiftéenth kalends of July, in the yeere of our Lord 1239.

and Edmond his second sonne, which was borne on Saint Marcels day, in the yéere of our Lord 1245. the which Edward, after the death of King Henry his father, intituled and called King Edward the first, had issue Edward his first begotten sonne, called after the decease of his father, King Edward the second, the which had issue, Edward the third: which Edward the third had issue, Edward Prince of Wales, William of Hatfield his second sonne, Lionell the third, Duke of Clarence, Iohn of Gaunt the fourth, Duke of Lancaster, Edmond of Langley the fift, Duke of Yorke, Thomas of Woodstocke the first, Duke of Glocester, and William of Windsore the seuenth. The said Edward Prince of Wales, which died in the life time of his father, had issue Richard, which succéeded Edward the third his grandsire: Richard died without issue: William of Hatfield the second sonne of Edward the third, died without issue: Lionell the third sonne of Edward the third, Duke of Clarence, had issue Phillip his daughter and heire, which was coupled in matrimony vnto Edmond Mortimer Earle of March, and had issue Roger Mortimer Earle of March her sonne and heire, which Roger had issue Edmond Earle of March, Roger Mortimer, Anne and Elianor: which Edmond, Roger, and Elianor died without issue: And the said Anne coupled in matrimony to Richard Earle of Cambridge, the sonne of Edmond of Langley, the fift sonne of Henry the third, and had issue Richard Plantagenet, commonly called Duke of Yorke. Iohn of Gaunt the fourth sonne of Edward, and the yonger brother of the said Lionell, had issue Henry Earle of Darby, which incontinent after that King Richard resigned the Crownes of the Realmes and Lordshippe of Ireland, vnrighteously entred vpon the same, then being aliue Edmond Mortimer Earle of March sonne to Roger Mortimer Earle of March, sonne and heire of the said Philip, daughter and heire of the said Lionell, the third sonne of the said King Edward the third, to the which Edmond the right and title of the said Crowns and Lordship by law and custome belonged. To the which Richard Duke of Yorke, as sonne to Anne daughter to Roger Mortimer Earle of March, son and heire of the said Philip daughter and heire of the said Lionell, the third sonne of King Edward the third the right, title, dignity royall, and estate of the Crownes of the Realmes of England and France, and the Lordship of Ireland, pertayneth and belongeth afore any issue of the said Iohn of Gaunt, the fourth sonne of the said King Edward. The saide title notwithstanding, and without prejudice of the said Richard Duke of Yorke, tenderly desiring the wealth, rest, and prosperity of this land, and to set apart all that might be trouble to the same, and considering the possession of the said K. Henry the first, and that he hath for his time bèn named, taken, and reputed for King of England and of France, and Lord of Ireland, is contented, agreed, and consenteth, that he be had, reputed, and taken for King of England and France, with the royal estate, dignity and prehemineńce belonging thereunto, and Lord of Ireland during his naturall life. And for that time, the said Duke without hurt or prejudice of his said right and title shal take, worship and honour him for his soueraigne Lord.

Item

Item, the said Richard Duke of Yorke, shall promit and bind him by his solemne othe, in maner and forme as followeth:

The othe of Richard duke of Yorke.

In the name of God Amen: I Richard Duke of Yorke, promise and sweare by the faith and truth that I owe to almighty God, that I shall neuer consent, procure, or stir, directly or indirectly, in priuie or apert, neither (as much as in me is) shall suffer to be done, consented, procured, or stirred, any thing that may sound to the abridgement of the naturall life of King Henry the first, or to the hurt or diminishing of his raigne or dignitie roiall, by violence or any other wise, against his fredome or libertie: but if anie person or persons would do or presume any thing to the contrary, I shall with all my might and power withstand it, and make it to be withstoode, as far as my power will stretch thereunto, so help me God and his holie euangelists.

Item, Edward Earle of March, and Edmund Earle of Rutland, sonnes of the said Duke of Yorke shall make like othe.

Item, it is accorded, appointed, and agreed, that the said Richard Duke of Yorke, shall be called and reputed from henceforth very and rightfull heire to the Crownes, royall estate, dignitie and Lordship aboue saide, and after the decease of the said King Henry, or when he will lay from him the saide crownes, estate, dignitie, and lordship, the said Duke and his heires shall immediately succeede to the saide Crownes, royall estate, dignitie and Lordship.

Item, the saide Richard Duke of Yorke shall haue by authoritie of this present Parliament, castles, mannors, lands and tenements, with the wards, marriages, reliefes, seruices, fines, amercements, offices, and wilons, fees, and other appurtenances to them belonging, whatsoeuer they be, to the yerely value of ten thousand markes ouer all charges and reprises, whereof fiue thousand markes shall be to his owne state, three thousand fiue hundred markes to Edward his first begotten sonne Earle of March, for his estate, and one thousand pound to Edmond Earle of Rutland his second sonne, for his yerely sustenation, in such considerations and such intent as shall be declared by the Lords of the Kings counsell.

Item, if any person or persons imagine or compasse the death of the said Duke, and thereof probably be attaint, or open deede done by folkes of other condition, that it be deemed and adiudged high treason.

Item, for the more establishing of the said accord, it is appointed and consented, that the Lordes spirituall and temporall, being in this present Parliament, shall make othes to accept, take, worship, and repute the said Richard Duke of Yorke, and his heires, as aboue is rehearsed, and kepe and obserue, and strength in as much as appertaineth vnto them, all the things aboue said, and resist to their power, all them that would presume the contrarie, according to their estates and degrees.

Item, the said Richard Duke of Yorke, Earles of March and Rutland, shall permit and make other to helpe, ayde, and defend the saide Lords, and euery of them, against all those that will quarrell, or any thing attempt against against the sayde lordes or any of them, by occasion of agreement or consenting to the sayde accord, or assistance giuing to the Duke and Earles, or any of them.

Item, it is agreed and appointed, that this accord, and euery article therein, bee opened and notified by the Kings letters patents, or otherwise, at such times and places, and in maner as it shall be thought expedient to the sayde Richard Duke of Yorke, with the aduise of the Lordes of the Kinges Counsell. The king vnderstandeth certainely, the sayd title of the sayde Richard duke of Yorke, iust, lawfull, and sufficient, by the aduise and assent of the Lordes spirituall and temporall, and the commons in this Parliament assembled, and by authoritie of the same Parliament declareth, approueth, ratifieth, confirmeth and accepteth the saide title iust, good, lawfull, and true, and thereunto giueth his assent and agreement of his free will and libertie. And ouer that, by the sayd aduice and authoritie declareth, entitleth, calleth, stablisheth, affirmeth, and reputeth the said Richard Duke of Yorke, very true and rightfull heire to the Crowne, royall estate, and dignity of the realmes of England and of France, and of the Lordship of Ireland aforesayde, and that according to the worship and reuerence that thereto belongeth, he be taken, accepted, and reputed in worship and reuerence, by all the states of the said realme of England, and of all his subiects thereof, sauing and ordaining by the same authority, the king to haue the sayd Crowne, realme, royall estate, dignitie, and preheminence of the same, and the said Lordship of Ireland during his life naturall. And furthermore by the same aduice and authoritie will, consenteth and agreeth, that after his decease, or when it shall please his highnes to laye from him the sayd Crowne, estate, dignitie, and lordship, the sayd Richard duke of Yorke, and his heires, shall immediatly succeede him in the said Crowne, royall estate, dignitie, and worship, and them then haue and enioy, any act of Parliament, statute or ordinance, or other thing to the contrary made, or interruption, or discontinuance of possession notwithstanding. And moreouer, by the sayd aduice & authoritie stablisheth, granteth, confirmeth, approueth, ratifieth, and accepteth the sayd accord, and all thinges therein contained, and thereunto freely and absolutely assenteth, agreeth, and by the same aduice and authority ordaineth and establisheth, that if any person or persons imagine or compasse the death of the said Duke, and probably be attaint of open deede done by folkes of that conditions, that it bee deemed and adiudged high treason. And furthermore ordaineth and establisheth by the sayd aduice and authoritie, that all statutes, ordinances and acts of parliament, made in the time of the sayd king Henry the fourth, by the which he and the heires of his body cõming of Henry late king of England the fift, the sonne and heire of the sayd king Henry the fourth, and the heires of king Henry the fift, were or bee inheritable to the sayd Crownes and realmes, or to the heritage of the same, bee annulled, repelled, damned, cancelled, void, and of none effect.

rieth and establisheth, that all other acts and statutes made afore this time by act of parliament, not repelled or annulled by like authoritie, or otherwise void, be in such force, effect, and vertue, as they were afore the making of these ordinances, and that no letters patents royall of record, nor acts iudiciall, made or done afore this time not repelled, reuerted, ne otherwise void by law, be preiudiced or hurt by this present act. Also it was ordained by the same parliament, that the said Richard Duke of Yorke, should be called prince of Wales Duke of Cornwall, and Earle of Chester, and protector of England.

The English chronicle printed by William Caxton, and therefore called Caxtons chronicle, declareth how that in the parliament, while the commons of the realme were assembled in the common house, communing and treating vpon the title of the said Duke of Yorke, suddenly fell downe the crowne which hong then in the midst of the said house, which was the fratry of the abbey of Westminster, which was taken for a prodigy or token that the raigne of king Henry was ended: and also the crowne which stood on the highest tower of the castell of Douer, fell downe the same yere.

The agréement aforesaid being put in articles was engrosed, sealed, and sworne by the two parties, and also enacted in the high court of parliament: for ioy whereof, the king hauing in his company the Duke of Yorke, rode to the cathedral church of Saint Paule within the citie of London, and there on the day of All Saints, with the crowne on his head, went solemnly in procession, and was lodged a good space after in the bishops palace neere to the said church. And on the saturday next ensuing, Richard Duke of Yorke was by sound of Trumpet, solemnly proclaimed heire apparant to the crowne of England, and protector of the realme.

After this, the parliament kept at Couentrie the last yere, was declared to be a diuelish councell, and only celebrated for the destruction of the nobilitie, and no lawfull Parliament, because they which were returned, were neuer elected according to the due order of the law, but secretly named by them, which desired rather the destruction than the aduancement of the common wealth. When these agréements were done & enacted, the king dissolued his parliament, which was the last parliament that euer he ended. The D. of Yorke wel knowing that the Quéene would spurne against the conclusions agréed in this parliament, caused both hir and hir sonne to be sent for by the king: but she being a stout woman, by the counsell of the dukes of Exceter and Somerset, not only denied to come, but also assembled a great army, intending to take the King by force out of the Lords hands.

The 21. of November, such abundance of waters ouerflowed in the countries of Huntington, Norfolke, Cambridge, and the yle of Ely, as the like had not béen séene before: for it ouerthrew the bridge, with a great part of the hospitall and fratry at Thetford in Norfolke, and the bridges in Cambridge, running ouer the wheeles of the water mils there, destroying many houses, and comming in at the windowes of the rest. Great waters flouds.

folke, and the earle of Warwicke his truſtie friends, to be about the king, and he with the earles of Salisburie and Rutland, and a conuenient number of men, departed out of London the ſecond of December, and ſent to the earle of March his eldeſt ſonne to follow him with all his power. The duke came to the caſtell of Sandall beſide Wakefield on Chriſtmas euen, and there began to aſſemble his tenants and friends. Where came to him vnder a colour of friendſhip, the lord Neuill, brother to the earle of Weſtmerland, and required of him a commiſſion for him to raiſe the people for to chaſtiſe his rebels, as he ſaid: but when he had raiſed to the number of 8000 men, he brought them to the lords of the countrie, that is to ſay, the earle of Northumberland and the reſt.

Battell at Wakefield.

1461. The Quéene aſcertained hereof, determined to méete with him before his power were come together, and ſo, hauing in their company the prince hir ſonne, the Dukes of Excéeter and Somerſet, the Earle of Deuonſhire, the lord Clifford, the lord Roſe, and in effect all the Lords of the north parts, with an 18000 men, marched from Yorke to Wakefield, where they placed themſelues euen before the caſtell gates: the duke hauing with him not fully 5000. men (as was ſaid) contrarie to the minde of his faithfull friends, would néedes iſſue forth to fight with his enemies. The duke of Somerſet, and other of the Quéenes part, deuiſed how to take them, and ſo appointed the lord Clifford to lye in one ſtale, and the Earle of Wiltſhire in another, and the Duke with other kept the maine battell. The duke of Yorke with his people deſcended downe the hill in good order of araie, and was ſuffered to paſſe on toward the maine battell: but when he was in the plaine fielde betweéne his caſtell and the towne of Wakefild, hée was enuironed on euery ſide, ſo that hée manfully fighting was within halfe an houer ſlaine, and his whole armie diſcomfited: and with him died of his truſtie friendes, his two baſtard vncles, ſir Iohn, and ſir Hugh Mortimers, ſir Dauy Hall, ſir Hugh Haſtings, ſir Thomas Neuill ſonne to the Earle of Salisbury, William and Thomas a Parre, brethren, Lorde Harington, Thomas Harington knight, ſir Henry Ratford knight, and other, to the number of 2000. whereof many were young gentlemen, and heires of great parentage in the ſouth parts. In this conflict was wounded and taken priſoner Richard Earle of Salisbury and was led by the Duke of Somerſet to the caſtell of Pontfract, and had grant of life for a great ranſome, but the common people of the country, who loued him not, tooke him out of the caſtell by violence, and ſmote off his head. There was alſo taken ſir Richard Limbroke, Ralph Stanley, Iohn Harow, captaine Hanſon, and diuers other. The lord Clifford perceiuing where the earle of Rutland was conueied out of the field, by one of his fathers chaplaines, and ſchoolmaſter to the ſame Earle, followed and ouertooke him, and ſtabbed him to the hart with a dagger as hée kneéled before him. The ſame Lord Clifford not ſatisfied herewith, came to the place where the dead corps of the Duke of Yorke lay, and cauſed his head to bée ſtriken off, and ſet on it a crowne of paper, and fixed it on a pole, and preſented it to the Quéene, not lieng farre from the field. The Dukes head with the Earle of Salisburies head were set vp ouer a gate of Yorke. This battell was fought in the south fielde of Wakefilde, by the faire stone bridge of nine arches, on the last of December. More of Wakefielde shall be shewed in my larger volume that is to come, God willing.

The Earle of March so commonly called, but now after the death of his father, duke of Yorke, lieng at Glocester, was wonderfully amazed when he sorrowful newes of these mishaps came to his vnderstanding: but being comforted by his friends, he remoued to Shrewsbury, & raised therabout a puissant army to the number of 23000. ready to go against the Quéne, & his fathers enimies. But when he was setting forward, newes was brought him, that Iaspar Earle of Penbroke, and Iames Butler Earle of Ormond & Wiltshire, had assembled a great number of Welchmen and Irishmen, suddenly to take and surprise him: he being therewith quickened, retired backe, and met with his enimies in a faire plaine nére to Mortimers Crosse, beside Ludlow, not far from Hereford east, on Candelmas day in the morning, at which time the sunne (as some write) appéred to the Earle of March like three sunnes, and suddenly ioined togither in one: vpon which sight hée toke such courage, that hée fiercely setting on his enemies, put them to flight: and for this cause men imagined hée gaue the sunne in his full brightnesse for his badge or cognizance. Of his enemies were slaine to the number of 3800. The Earles of Penbroke and Wiltshire fled, but Owen Teuther (whome Leiland saith should bée called Meredicke) father to the sayd Earle of Penbroke, which Owen Teuther had married (as was said) Katherine mother to king Henry the first, was there taken and beheaded, and afterward buried in a chappell of the gray Friers church in Hereford. There were also taken and beheaded, Dauid Floid, Morgan ap Reuther, sir Iohn Skidmore, and his two sonnes, Thomas Griffith, Iohn Throkmorton, Thomas fitz Henry, and other. During this season, the Quéne encouraged with this late gained victory at Wakefield, with a great number of people out of the north, marched toward London, intending to recouer the company of the king hir husband, and to vndoe all that had béene done in the last parliament. These northren people, after they were once passed the riuer of Trent, spoiled and wasted the countrie afore them Andrew Trollope grand captaine, and as it were leader of the battell, with a great armie of Scots, Welchmen, and other strangers, beside the northren men, destroied the townes of Crantham, Stanford, Peterborow, Huntington, Roiston, Welleborne, and in maner all the townes by the way vnto Saint Albons, sparing neither Abbeies, Priories, or parish churches, but bare away crosses, chalices, bookes, ornaments, and other things, whatsoeuer was worth the carriage, as though they had béene Saracens, and no Christians. At length they came downe to Dunstaple, and so to S. Albons, and hearing that the dukes of Northfolke and Suffolke, and the earles of Warwicke and Arundel, the lords Bonuile & other whom the Duke of Yorke had left to gouerne the king in his absence, had by the kings assent assembled a great host, and were incamped with the king nere to the towne. Those northren lords and other that were with the Quéne, made forwarde, and entring into Saint Albons, meant to passe through the towne, and so to cope with their enimies, but finding a sort of archers ranged, nére to the great crosse in the market place to defend their passage, they were receiued with such a storme of arrowes, which came flying about their eares as thicke as haile, that they were quickly repulsed backe, and with losse driuen to retire into the west end of the towne, where by a lane that leadeth northwards vp to S. Peters stréete, they made their entrie, and had there also a sharpe incounter against certaine bands of the kings people: but yet after great slaughter on both parts, they got through, and vpon the heath, at the north end of the towne, called Barnard heath, toward a little towne called Syndridge, in a place called No mans land, they had a far greater conflict, with fower or fiue thousand of the kings armie, which gaue the onset so fiercely at the beginning, that the victorie rested doubtfull a certaine time, till at the length through the withdrawing many of the Kentishmen with their Captaine Louelace, that was the vaward, King Henries part lost the field: the lords fled, and the king went to Quéne Margaret that was come with the northren men (as is afore saide) and her sonne Edward. The Earle of Warwicke went toward the Earle of March, that was comming toward London out of Wales. The lord Bonuile would haue withdrawen him, but the king assured him to haue no bodily hurt: neuertheles at the instance of the Quéne, the Duke of Excester, and the Earle of Deuonshire, he was beheaded at S. Albons, and with him Sir Thomas Kiriell of Kent. This battell was fought on Shrouetuesday, or the 17. of Februarie, in the which battel was slain 1916. persons, of whome no nobleman is remembred, saue sir Iohn Gray, which was the same day made knight in company of other twelue in the towne of Colny. The same day Thomas Thorpe baron of the Exchequer was beheaded at Highgate by the commons of Kent.

Lewis K. of Fraunce.

Now after the noble men were fled, and other were fled, and the king left in manner alone, without any power of men to garde his person, hée was counselled by a squire called Thomas Hoo, a man well séene in the lawes, to send some conuenient messenger to the northren lords, aduertising them that hée would now gladly come vnto them (whome hée knew to be his friends, and had assembled themselues together for his seruice) to the ende hée might remaine with them, as before hée had vnder the gouernment of the southern Lordes. According to this aduise, the king appointed the same Esquire to beare the message, who first went and declared the same vnto the Earle of Northumberland, and returning backe to the king, brought certaine Lords with him, who conueyed the king first into the Lord Cliffords tent, that stood nert to the place where the kings people had incamped. This done, they brought the Quéne and her sonne prince Edward vnto his presence, whome hée ioyfullie receiued, imbracing and kissing them in most louing wise, and yéelding heartie thankes to almighty God, whome it had pleaſed to ſtrengthen the forces of the Northren men, to reſtore his deerely beloued ſonne againe to his poſſeſſion. The Quéene cauſed the King to dubbe her ſonne Prince Edward Knight, with thirty other perſons, which the day before had fought on her partie. Knights dubbed at S. Albons.

This done, they went to the Abbey, whereof the Abbot and the monks they were receiued with hymmes and ſongs, and ſo brought to the high altar, and after to the ſhrine, and ſo to the Chamber, in which the king was wont to lodge. The Abbot made ſute, that order might be taken to reſtrain the northren men from ſpoiling the towne, and proclamation was forthwith made to that effect, but it auailed not, for they maintained that the ſpoyle of all thinges was graunted them by couenant, after they were once paſſed the riuer of Trent: and ſo not regarding any proclamation, they ſpared nothing that they could lay hands on, if the ſame were meet for them to carry away.

The Quéene hauing thus got the victorie, ſent to the Maior of London, commaunding him without delay, to ſend certaine carts laden with Lenten ſtuffe, for the refreſhing of hir armie, which the Maior incontinent granted, cauſed carts to be laden, and would haue ſent them forward, but the commons of the citie would not ſuffer them to paſſe, but ſtaied them at Cripple gate: during which controuerſie, diuers of the northren horſemen robbed in the ſuburbs of the citie, and would haue entred at Cripple gate, but they were repulſed by the commoners, and three of them ſlaine, whereupon the Maior ſent the Recorder to Barnet to the Kings Councell, there to recule the matter: and the Dutches of Bedford, the Lady Scales, with diuers Fathers of the ſpiritualtie went to the Quéene to aſſwage hir diſpleaſure, conceiued againſt the citie. The Quéene therefore at their humble requeſt by aduice of hir Councell, appointed certaine lords and knights, with 400. tall perſons to ride to the citie, and there to view and ſée the demeanor of the people, and diuers Aldermen were appointed to méete them at Barnet, and to conuey them to London, but all theſe deuiſes were ſhortly altered into another forme, becauſe true report came, not onely to the Quéene, but alſo to the citie, that the Earle of March, hauing vanquiſhed the Earles of Penbroke and Wiltſhire, had met with the Earle of Warwike, after the laſt battell at Saint Albons, at Chippingnorton by Coteſwolde, and that they with both their powers were comming towards London. The Quéene therefore, hauing little truſt in Eſſex, and leſſe in them of Kent, but leaſt of all in the Londoners, with hir huſband and ſonne, departed from Saint Albons into the north countrie, where their refuge onely conſiſted.

The Dutches of Yorke, ſéeing hir huſband and ſonne ſlaine, and not knowing what ſhould ſucceéde of hir eldeſt ſonne, ſent hir two yongeſt ſonnes George and Richard, ouer the ſea to the citie of Utrich in Almaine, where they were of Philip duke of Burgoigne well receiued, and ſo remained there till their brother had got the Crowne.

The

The Earles of March and Warwike, hauing knowledge that the king and Quéene were departed from Saint Albons, rode straight to London, entring the Citie with a great number of men of warre, the first weéke of Lent, or 28. of Februarie, where hee was ioyfully receiued, whose comming thither was no sooner knowne, but that the people resorted to him out of Kent, Essex, and other parts in great numbers to sée, aide, and assist this lustie prince in whom the hope of all their ioy consisted.

This prudent prince, minding to take time when time serued, called a great Councell both of the Lords spirituall and temporall, and to them declared the title and right that hee had to the Crowne, rehearsing also the Articles concluded betwixt King Henry and his Father by their writings signed and sealed, and also confirmed by act of Parliament, &c. Which after the Lords had considered, they determined, that because King Henrie was insufficient of himselfe to rule the Realme, hee should bée deprined of all kingly honour and soueraignetie, and incontinently was Edward Earle of March sonne and heire to Richard Duke of Yorke (by the lordes of that Councell assembled) named and elected for King and Gouernour of the Realme. On which day being Sunday, and the second day of March, the people of the Earles part being in their musters in Saint Iohns fielde, and a great number of the substantiall Citizens there assembled to beholde their order, suddenly the lorde Fawconbridge, which tooke the musters, wisely declared to the people certaine Articles and points that king Henrie had offended in, and then it was demaunded of them, whether the sayde Henrie were worthy to raigne still: but the people cried, Nay, nay. Then was it asked, if they would haue the Earle of March to be their King, and they sayde, Yea, yea: then certaine Captaines were sent to the Earle of March at Bainards Castell, who told him that the people had chosen him King, whereof he thanked God and them. and by the aduise of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Exceter, and the Earle of Warwike, with other, he tooke it vpon him. Many wealthy citizens of London, not altogither liking of this doing, conueied themselues out of the city, amongst the which were Philip Malpas Alderman of London, Thomas Vaughan Esquire, maister William Atclif, with many other, who fearing the Quénes comming to London, shipped them in a shippe of Antwerp, purposing to haue sayled thither: but by the way they were taken by a French ship named the Colmayne, and at length deliuered for great ransome.

Citizens of London fled.

Edward Earle of March being elected as is aboue sayd, on the next morrow went in procession at Paules, and offered there, and after Te Deum being song, he was with great roialty conueied to Westminster, and there in the Hall set in the kings seate with Saint Edwards scepter in his hande, and then asked of the people if they would haue him king, and they cried, Yea, yea. Then after certaine homages by him receiued, he was with procession conueied into the Abbey there, and set in the quire as king, while Te Deum was singing: that done, he offered at Saint Edwards shrine, and then returned by water vnto Saint Paules, and was there lodged within the the Bishops pallace. Thus toke he possession of the Realme, vpon a Tuesday being the fourth of March, and was proclaymed King of England, by the name of Edward the fourth, when King Henry had raigned thirtie eyght yéres, eyght moneths, and odde daies.

Edward Earle of March.

EDward Earle of March, borne at Roan, sonne and heire to Richard Duke of Yorke, about the age of eighténe yéres, began his raigne the fourth day of March, by the name of Edward the fourth, in the yére 1460. after the account of the Church of England: he was a man of noble courage and great wit: but in his time was much trouble and vnquietnes in the realme, as shall be shewed. Ann. reg. 1. John Roule.

The 12. of March, Walter Walker a Grocer that dwelt in Cheape of London, for words spoken touching the title of King Edward when he was proclaymed, was suddenly apprehended, condemned, and beheaded in Smithfield. This Grocer is he, whom maister Hall mistaketh to be Burdet, of whom ye shall find in the 17. yére of this Kings raigne. Walter Walker beheaded for a word speaking.

The same 12. day of March in the afternoone, King Edward hauing prepared a great armie, being accompanied with the Duke of Norffolke, the Lord Fauconbridge, the Lord Fitzwalter, sir Iohn Wenlocke, Iohn Stafford, Henry Ratelife of Framlséen, Roger Wolferstone and others, with great triumph rode through the Citie of London to Bishops gate, and so toke his iourney toward the North, where betwéene Shirburne in Elmet, and Todcaster, all the North partie met him, and on Palme Sonday the 29. of March fought a great battell betwéene Towton and Sarton, in which were slaine Henry Percy, Earle of Northumberland, the Earle of Shrewsburie, the Earle of Deuonshire, Iohn Lord Clifford, the Lord Bewmound, Iohn lord Neuill, the lord Willoughby, Leo lord VVels, the lord Roos, the lord Scales, the lord Grey, Reynolph lord Dacres, the lord Fitzhugh, the lord Molineux, lord Henry Beckingham: knights, two bastard sonnes of Henrie Holland Duke of Exceter, Richard Percie, Iohn Heyron, Gerueys Clifton, Edmond Hamys, Thomas Crakenthorpe, Iohn Crakenthorpe, VVilliam Harill, Iohn Ormonde, Andrewe Trolope, Roger Mollyn, Radulphe Pigote, Henrie Norbohew, Dauid Trolope, Iohn Burton Captaine of Yorke, and many other knights and Esquires, whose names were not then noted. The whole nomber slaine were accounted by some to be 33000. by other some 35091. many of these were first buried in fiue pits, yet appéring halfe a mile off by North Sarton church in the fielde there. Maister Bungate caused them to bée brought from thence, and to bee buried in the Churchyard of Sarton: the lord Dacres hath there a meane tombe. Towton village is a mile from Sarton, where a great Chappell was begun by Richarde the third, but not finished, in which Chappell were buried also 1461.

many of the men slaine at palmsonday fielde. This fielde was as much in Sarton Parish as in Towton, yet it bare the name of Towton.

King Henrie fled into Scotland.

The Duke of Excester, the Duke of Somerset, the Lord Roos, the Lord Hungerford, & many other fled to Yorke to king Henrie, and then they with the King, Quéne, and prince, fled towarde Scotlande to Berwike, and so to Edenborough.

King Edward went to Yorke, where he was with all solemnitie received, there he caused the heads of his father and the Earle of Salisburie with other his friends to be taken down, and buried with their bodies. And then Lewis xi. K. of France caused T. Courtney earle of Deuon. the Earle of Byrne, sir William Hill, to be headed and their heads set vp in place. James Butler Earle of Wilthire was beheaded at Newcastle, &c. and then King Edward went to Durham, and when he had quieted the country, returned southward. Shortly

Shortly after Quéne Margaret obtained a great power of Scots and other her friends, and so bringing her husband with her, and leauing her sonne called prince Edward, in the Towne of Barwicke, entred Northumberland, toke the Castle of Bamborough, and stuffed it with Scottish men, and made thereof Captaine, Sir Ralph Grey, and came forward toward the Bishoprieke of Durham. Whereof when the Duke of Somerset vnderstode, hée without delaie, reuolted from King Edward, and fled to King Henry, so likewise did Sir Ralph Percie, and many other of the Kings friends, but many followed King Henry in hope to get spoyle, for his armie went and spoyled townes whersoeuer they came.

About Midsommer the Scots with many French and Englishmen, laid siege to the Castle of Norham. but were forced to leaue it as they found it. The Earle of Warwike wan the towne of Barwike, where he made fiue Bannerets, and 22. Knights, and went into Scotland, where he burnt Lawghmaban, Jedworth, and Galowey, and many other Townes, and returned to Barwike.

This yéere a quarter of wheate was solde for two shillings at London, barley for two and twenty pence, pease for three shillings foure pence, and of otes for 14. pence, and in the countrey of Norffolke, a quarter of wheate was sold for 20. pence, mault for 20. pence, barly and otes for 12. pence. Price of graine.

In the month of Aprill, King Edwarde made great preparation against King Henry, and on S. Markes day Ralph Percie L. Hungerford, with a great power purposing to haue distressed sir Iohn Neuill, L. Mountacute, was himselfe slaine with many other. 1464. Ann. reg. 4.

The 15. of May King Henries power being at Yerham, the L. Mountacute with a power came thither, & enclosed them round about. There were taken & slaine many lords that were with K. Henry, but he himself was fled foure daies before into Lancashire, where he & other lined in caues full hardly vnknowne more than a yére. On Trinity sunday K. Edward made the L. Mountacute Earle of Northumberland & warden of the Marches. The Earles of Warwike & Northumberland toke Bamborough castle, and sir Ralph Grey being taken in Bamborough, for that he had sworne to be true to King Edward, was condemned, and had iudgement giuen vpon him by the Earle of Worcester high Constable of England, as followeth. Battell at Yeram.

Sir Ralph Grey, for thy treason, the King had ordained that thou shouldest haue had thy spurs striken off by the hard héeles, by the hand of the maister coke, who is here ready to do as was promised thée, at the time that he toke off thy spurs, and said to thée as is accustomed: That and thou bée not true to the souraigne Lord, he shall smite off thy spurs with his knife hard by the héeles: and so shewed him the maister coke ready to dw his office with his apron and his knife. Moreouer sir Ralph Grey, the King had ordeyned, here thou maiest sée, the kings of armes, and heralds, and thine owne proper coate of armes, which they should teare off thy bodie, and so shouldest thou aswell be disgraded of thy worship, nobles, and armes, as of thy order of knighthod. Also here is another coate of thine armes reuersed, the which Iudgement against sir Ralph Grey. The order of disgrading of a Knight.

thou shouldest haue worne on thy body, going to thy death wards, for that belongeth to thée after the law: notwithstanding the disgrading of knighthood, and of thine armes, and nobles, the king pardoneth that, for thy noble grand-father, who suffered trouble, for the kings most noble predecessors. Now sir Ralph Grey this shall be thy penance: Thou shalt go on thy féete vnto the townes end, and there thou shalt be laid downe, and drawen to a scaffold made for thée, and thou shalt haue thy head smitten off, thy body to be buried in the friers, thy head where the kings pleasure shall bee. This iudgment was pronounced at Doncaster, against the said Ralph Grey, for rebelling, and kéeping of the castle of Bambrough against king Edward.

Neuil earle of Northumberland, and Herbert earle of Penbroke.

After this king Edward returned to Yorke, where in despite of the Earle of Northumberland, which then kept himselfe in the Realme of Scotland, he created sir Iohn Neuill, L. Mountacute Earle of Northumberland, and in reprose of Iasper earle of Penbroke, hee created William lord Herbert Earle of Penbroke: but after when the Earle of Northumberland was reconciled to his fauor, he restored him to his possessions, name and dignitie, and preferred the lord Mountacute to the title of Marquesse Mountacute, so that in degrée he was aboue his brother the Earle of Warwicke, but in power and possessions far vnder him.

The Civil war call'd The publick good, begins in France

The Earle of Warwicke was sent ouer into France, to demaund the ladie Bona, daughter to Lewes Duke of Sauoy, and sister to the lady Carlot then quéene of France, which Bona was then in the French courte. The earle of Warwick comming to the French king, as then being at Towers, was of him honorably receiued, & curteously entertained: his message was so well liked for the aduancement of the lady Bona, that hir sister quéene Carlote obteined both the good will of the king hir husband, and also of hir sister the foresaid ladie, so that the matrimony on that side was cléerely assented to, and the Earle of Dampmartine appoynted with other to saile into England, for the full finishing of the same: but in the meane while, on the first of May, king Edward toke to wife Elizabeth daughter to Iaquet duches of Bedford, sister to the Earle of S. Paule, late wife to sir Iohn Grey, slaine at S. Albons fielde on king Henries part, which mariage was kept secret almost halfe a yéere.

K. Edward maried.

King Edward toke the Chauncelorship from the Bishop of Ercester, brother to the Earle of Warwike, and gaue it to the Bishop of Bathe.

In the month of May, the duke of Somerset, the L. Roos, the L. Molyns, Talbois earle of Kyme, sir Philip Wentworth, sir Thomas Finderne, gathered an hoste in the North countrey, & sir Ioh. Neuil earle of Northúberland with 10000. men came vpon them, whom the cómons forsaking, their captaines were taken & beheaded. K. Edward fearing the L. Mountacute, who he had of late made earle of Northumberland, he caused the men of the countrey to desire the rightful heire Percie son to Henry that was slain at Yorke field: & so Percie was restored, & Mountacute was made a Marques, and his son duke of Bedford, which should wed the kings eldest daughter, and so by possibility should be king of England, thus was he fed with faire words, but

This yéere the 22. of January, a Parliament began at Westminster, wherein it was enacted that no merchandize comming out of Flaunders, or out of any land of the duke of Burgoyne, should be sould within any ground of England. Also king Edward caused a new coyne to be made, whereby he gained much, for he made of an old noble a royall, which he commanded to go for 10. s. neuertheles to the same royall was put 8. d. of alay, & so weied the more by 8. d. being smitten with a new stampe: he likewise made halfe angels of 5. s. and farthings of 2. s. 6. d. angelets of 6. s. 8. d. and half angels, 3. s. 4. d. he made siluer monies of 3. d. a grote, & so of other coines after that rate, to the great harme of the commons. I finde by record, that William lord Hastings the kings Chamberlaine, was made master of the kinges mintes or monies of gold or siluer in the Tower of London, his Realme of England, territory of Ireland, and towne of Calets, with the Marches of the same: the which lord Hastings vndertoke to make the same monies vnder form following, to wit, of gold, a piece for 8. shillings 4. pence sterlings, which should be called a noble of gold, of the which there should be 50 such péeces in the pound weight of the tower, an other péece of gold 4. shillings 2. pence of sterlings, & to be of them 100. such péeces in the pound: and a thirde péece of golde weying the fourth part of the first, for two shillings one peny starlings, and 200. such péeces in the pound, and euery pound weight of the sayd tower, to be worth 20. pound, 16. shillings 8. pence of sterlings, the which should be 23. Carets, 3. graines and halfe fine, &c. And for siluer, 37. shillings 6. pence of starlings, the péece of 4. pence to be 112. groates, & 2. pence in the pound weight, &c. thus much out of the record.

King Henry taken.

King Henry was taken in Cletherwode, beside Bungerley Hyppingstons in Lancashire, by Thomas Talbot sonne and heire to sir Edward Talbot of Bashall, and Iohn Talbot his cosin of Colebey, which deceiued him being at his dinner at Wadington Hall, and brought him towardes London, with his legs bounde to the stirrops, where he was met by the earle of Warwike, and arested at Esyldon, and forthwith his gilt spurs were taken from his fæte, doctor Manning Deane of Winsore, doctor Bedle and yong Ellerton, being in his companie, with their fæte bounde vnder the horse bellies, were brought through the Citie to the Tower of London, where the king was kept long time.

Long piked shoes forbid.

It was proclaimed throughout England, that the beakes or pikes of shoone and bootes should not passe two inches, vpon paine of curling by the clergy, and forfeiting 20. s. to be paid one noble to the king, one other to the Cordwainers of London, and the third to the chamber of London, and for other cities and townes the like order was taken. Before this time and since the yeare of our Lord, 1382. the pikes of shoes and bootes were of such length, that they were faine to be tied vp to their knées with chaines of siluer gilt, or at the least with silke laces.

Sheepe transported ouer sea.

King Edward concluded an amitie & league with Henry King of Castile and Iohn King of Aragon, at the concluding whereof, he granted licence for certain Cotswold sheep to be transported into ỹ countrie of Spain, which haue there since mightily increased and multiplied, to the Spanish profit, as it is said: but true it is, that long ere this were sheepe in Spain, as may appeare by a patten of king Henry the second, the 31. of his reigne, graunted to the weauers of London, that if any cloth were found to be made of Spanish wool, mixed with English wool, the maior of London should sée it burnt.

Besides this, to haue amitie with his next neighbour the king of Scots, hée winked at the losse of Barwike, and was contented to take a truce for fiftéene yeares.

The 11. of Februarie Quéen Elizabeth was deliuered at Westminster of a daughter also named Elizabeth, who was long after married to king Henry the 7. whose Christening was done in the abbey with the most solemnitie that might bee, and the more, because the king was assured by his physitions, that the Quéene was conceiued with a prince, which proued otherwise as yée haue heard.

Hungerford and Courteney executed.

This yeare was the Lord Hungerford, sir Thomas Hungerford knight, sonne to the Lord Hungerford, and Henry Courteney of right Earle of Deuonshire, beheaded at Salisburie. The Lord Stafford of Southwike procured the said Courtneys death, to be made Earle of Deuonshire, as in deede he was shortly after.

Ann. reg. 7.

King Edward through the reuoall of the French kings sister in law (as yee haue heard) wan him enemies in France, wherefore in other places he procured him friends, but those friends had stand him in small steede, if fortune had not holpe him to another, euen at his elbow. This was Charles Earle of Charoloys, sonne and heire apparant vnto Philip Duke of Burgoyne, which Charles being then a widower, was counsailed to be a suter vnto king Edward to haue in mariage the Ladie Margaret, sister to the same king, a ladie of excellent beautie, and thought not vnworthy to match with the greatest prince of the world.

Anthony the Bastard of Burgoine, called the earle of the Roche, brother to ỹ said earle Charoloys, a man of great wit, courage, & valiancie, was appointed pointed by his father Duke Philip to go into England in embassage about this sute, who being furnished for his estate, having in his company gentlemen and other expert in all feats of chiualry, and martiall prowes, to the number of 400. horses, tooke ship, and arriued in England, where he was of the king and nobles honourably receiued. His message being declared, was ioyfully heard of the king, the which by that affinitie saw, how they mought be assured of a buckler against the French: the king therefore granted to the bastards request, and the said bastard openly in the kings great chamber contracted the said Ladie Margaret, for, and in the name of his brother the Earle of Charolois.

Walter Blunt made Baron, and Lord Mountioy. Baro Mountioy.

The third of June, began a Parliament at Westminster, wherein was resumed to the kings hands, all manner of gifts that had bene giuen from the first day he tooke possession of the Realme, to that time, except certaine things then excepted. Parliament at Westminster.

Also this yere in diuers places of England, many men were arrested, and treason surmised against them, wherethrough many of them were put to death, and the other escaped for great sums of money: amongst the which sir Thomas Cooke, sir Iohn Plumer knights, Humfrey Heyford, and other Aldermen of London were arrested, and charged with treason, wherof they were acquite, but they lost of their goods to the king, to the value of 40000. markes, or more, as some haue written: and for example, the forenamed sir Thomas Cooke late Maior of London, was by one named Hawkins appeached of treason, for the which he was committed to the Tower: his place in London seased by the Lord Riuers, and his Lady and seruants cleerly put out thereof. The cause was this: the forenamed Hawkins, came vpon a season vnto the said sir Thomas, requesting to lend him a 1000. markes vpon good surety, whereunto he answered, that he would first know for whom it should be, and for what intent: at length vnderstanding it should be for the vse of Quéene Margaret, he answered, he had no currant wares whereof any shift might be made without too much losse, and therefore required Hawkins to moue him no further for he intended not to deale withal, yet the said Hawkens required but one hundred pound, at length, and went without it, or the value of one peny, and neuer came againe to moue him, which so rested two or three yeres after, till the said Hawkins was cast in the Tower, and at length brought to the brake, called the Duke of Excesters daughter (because he was the deuiser of that torture) by meanes of which paine, he shewed many things, amongst the which the motion he had made to sir Thomas Cooke was one, by meanes whereof sir Thomas Cooke was troubled as ye haue heard, and one Iury, by meanes of sir Iohn Fogge, indited him of treason: after which, an Oyer determiner was kept in the Guildhall, in which sate with the Maior, the Duke of Clarence, the earle of Warwike, the Lord Riuers, sir Iohn Fogge, with other of the kings counsel, to the which place the said sir Thomas was brought, & there arraigned vpon life and death, where he was acquited of the said inditement, and sent to the counter counter in Breadstréet, and from thence to the kings bench: being acquited, his wife got again possession of his house, the which she found in an euill plight: for the seruants of sir John Fogge and the Lord Riuers had made hauock of what they liked. Also at his place of Giddy hall in Esser, another sort had destroyed the déere in his parke, his conies, and fish, & spared not braſſe, pewter, bedding, and all what they might carry: for the which might neuer one peny be gotten in recompence, nor sir T. Cooke be deliuered, till he had paid 8000. pound to the king, and 800. pound to the Quéene, and for that sir Iohn Markham knight, chiefe Iustice of the pleas, determined somewhat against the kings pleasure (that the offence done by sir T. Cooke was no treason, but misprision, the which was no desert of death, but to be fined at the kings pleasure) the Lord Riuers and the Dutches of Bedford his wife procured that he lost his office afterward in the 12. yéere of Edward the fourth.

Iustes in Smithfield.

The marriage aforesaid concluded, the bastard of Burgoigne chalenged the lord Scales, brother to the Quéene, to fight with him, both on horse back and on foote: which chalenge the lord Scales gladly accepted, the king casting lists to be prepared in west Smithfield of London for these champions, the length of 120. Tailers yards, and ten foote: and in breadth 80. yards and ten foote, double barred, fiue foot betwéene the bars, the timber & workmanship wherof cost two hundred markes, besides faire and costly galeries for the ladies and other. At the which martiall enterprise, king Edward himselfe with his nobility was present. The first day being the Thursday next after Corpus Christi day, they ran together with sharpe speares, and departed with equal honour. The next day they turneyed on horse backe, the lord Scales horse had on his chafron a long sharpe pike of stéele, and as the two champions coaped together, the same horse thrust his pike into the nostrels of the bastards horse, so that for very paine he mounted so high, that he fell on the one side with his master, and the Lord Scales rode about him with his sword drawne in his hand, till the king commaunded the marshall to helpe vp the bastard, who openly said, I cannot holde me by the clouds, for though my horse faile me, I will not faile my incounter-companion, but the king would not suffer them to do any more that day. The next morrow, the two noble men came into the field on foote, with two polaxes, and fought valiantly, but at the last the point of the poll-axe of the Lord Scales happened to enter into the sight of the bastards helme, and by fine force might haue plucked him on his knées: but the king sodainely cast downe his warder, and then the marshall seuered them. The bastard not content with this chance, required the king of Iustice, that he might performe his enterprise: the Lord Scales refused not: but the king calling to him the constable & the marshall, with the officers at armes, after consultation had, it was declared for a sentence definitiue, by the Duke of Clarence then constable of England, and the Duke of Norffolke then marshall, that if he would go forward with his attempted chalenge, hée must by the law of armes, be deliuered to his aduersary, in the same state and like

like condition, as he stood when he was taken from him. The bastard hearing this iudgement, doubted the sequele of the matter, and so relinquished his chalenge. Other chalenges were done, and valiantly atchieued by the Englishmen, which I passe ouer. Shortly after came sorowfull tidings to the bastard, that his father Duke Philip was dead, and thereupon taking his leaue of king Edward, and his sister the new Dutches of Burgoigne, liberally rewarded, returned to his brother the new Duke. This yere diuers persons being common Iurors, such as at Assises were forsworne for rewards, or fauour of parties, were iudged to ride from Newgate to the pillory in Cornehill with miters of paper on their heads, and then againe to Newgate: and this iudgement was giuen by the Maior of London. 1468. False Iurors set on the pillory.

Charles Duke of Burgoign desirous to see his new wife, wrote to king Edward, requiring him to send his sister ouer vnto him, according to the couenants passed betweene them. Anreg. 8.

King Edward on the other side not slacking the matter, first called a Parliament, which began at Westminster on the eight of May, wherein was granted two fiftenes and a dismy. Parliament at Westminster.

The 18. of June Margaret sister to king Edward the fourth, beganne her iourney from the Wardrobe in London, toward her mariage with Charles Duke of Burgoigne: first she offered in the Church of Saint Paul, and then rode through the City, the earle of Warwik riding before her, with earles and barons a great number, the Dutches of Norffolke, with other ladies and gentlewomen in great number. And at her entry into Cheap, the Maior of London and his brethren the Aldermen presented her with a paire of rich basons, and in them an hundred pound of gold, and that night she lodged at the Abbey of Stratford, where the king then lay: from thence she toke her iourney to Canterbury. The king riding after to see her shipping, on the first of July she toke the sea at Margate, and there toke leaue of the king her brother, and departed. There returned back again with the king, the Duke of Clarence, the Duke of Glocester, the Earles of Warwicke, Shrewsbury, & Northumberland. And there abode with her in the ship, the Lord Scales, the Lord Dacres her chamberlaine, sir Iohn Wooduile, sir Iohn Howard, and many other famous Knights and Esquires: she was shipped in the new Ellen of London, and in her nauy the Iohn of Newcastle, the Mary of Salisbury, and many other royall ships, and on the morrow landed at Sluce in Flanders, and as sone as her ship and company of ships were entred into the hauen, there receiued her sir Simon de Lelein & the water bailly, in diuers boats & barks apparelled ready for her landing. The first estate that receiued her was the Bishop of Utright wel accompanied, & the countesse of Shorne bastard daughter to Duke Philip of Burgoigne, & with her many ladies & gentlewomen, and so proceeding in at the gate of the towne, the same towne was presented to her, she to be soueraigne lady thereof: also they gaue her 12. markes of gold Troy waight, the which was 200. pound of English money, and so she proceeded through the towne to her lodging, euery householder standing in the street with a torch in his hand burning. Lady Margaret the kings sister maried to the Duke of Burgoigne.

On

On the morrow the olde Dutches of Burgoigne came to her, accompanied with many great estates. On the third of July came the Duke of Burgoigne to Sluce with twentie persons secretly, and was there openly affianced to the Lady Margaret, by the bishop of Salisbury and the Lord Scales, in presence of the Lord Dacre, the Dutches of Norffolk, the Lady Scales, and all the Knights, Esquires, and Gentlewomen environing the chamber.

Abt this time Enquerant de Monstrelet Gour of Cambray wrote yr Historie of his time from 1400 to 1467. in French

On the eight of July being Saterday, by the Duke of Burgoignes appointment, the Lady Margaret remoued by water to the Dame. And on the Sunday in the morning betwixt fiue and six of the clocke, the marriage was solemnized betwixt them, by the Bishops of Salisbury and of Turney, there being present the old dutches of Burgoigne, the Lord Scales, the Lord Dacre, with the Knights, Esquires, Ladies and Gentlewomen that came out of England: the great triumphs, feastings, shewes of pageants, with other strange deuises and iustings, were such as I haue not read the like, and would be ouer long in this place to set downe.

This yeere many murmurous tales ranne in the City betwéen the Earle of Warwicke and the Quénes blood, the which Earle was euer had in great fauour of the commons of this land, by reason of the excéeding houshold which he daily kept in all countries where euer he solourned or lay: and when he came to London, he held such an house, that fiue Oxen were eaten at a breakefast, and euery Tauerne was full of his meat, for who that had any acquaintance in that house, he should haue had as much sodden and rost as he might cary vpon a long dagger.

The 29. of September, Humfrey Neuill knight, and Charles his brother were taken by the Earle of Warwike, and beheaded at Yorke, king Edward being present. In the moneth of March, the Lord Willoughby, Rich. Lord Wels, sir Robert his sonne, sir Tho. Delaband, sir Tho. Dimocke the kinges Champion, drawe out of Lincolnshire sir Tho. Burgh a knight of the kings house, pulled downe his place, and tooke all his goods and cattell, and with 3000. of the commons, cried king Henry. King Edward gaue Lord Wels his pardon, and sent for him, and hauing him in custody, commaunded him vpon paine of death, to cause the Lincolnshire men to lay downe their host, and so he wrote, but all in vaine: whereupon the Lord Wels his head was cut off. King Edward dispersed the Lincolneshire men with his ordinance, and slue many of them: sir Robert Wels, sir Thomas Delaband, & sir Thomas Dimocke were taken and beheaded beside Stamford the 13. of March: and the 19. day the Lord Willoughby was beheaded at Doncaster. 1470. An. reg. 10. King Edward pardoneth, and beheadeth the Lord Wels.

King Edward comming to Hampton, caused Iohn Tiptoft Earle of Worcester (and Constable of England for terme of his life) to sit in iudgement vpon Clapham, and other Gentlemen taken in the ships, at a skirmish of Southampton, where to the number of twenty persons gentlemen and yeomen were drawne, hanged and headed: and after hanged by the legs on a gallowes of a paire of buts length, and then hauing stakes put in their fundaments, their heads were set on those stakes (an horrible spectacle) and so suffered to hang a long time after, to wit, till the 15. of May. The Duke of Clarence, and the Earle of Warwike fled into France, where they made a mariage betwixt Prince Edward sonne to king Henry the first, and one of the Earle of Warwikes daughters. At this mariage was concluded, that king Henry should raigne againe, and Prince Edward after, and for lacke of their heires George Duke of Clarence, and his heires, &c. Tiptoft Earle of Worcester cruell.

The 13. day of September, George Duke of Clarence, Iasper Earle of Penbroke, Richard Earle of Warwike, the Earle of Oxford, with the bastard Fauconbridge, and many other arriued at Plimmouth, and another sort at Dartmouth, of whom the Earle of Penbroke went into Wales, the other toward Excester, proclaiming in the name of King Henry, that all men betwixt the ages of 16. & 60. should be ready to assist the said Lords on the behalfe of King Henry, against King Edward. Also on the sunday next after the feast of Saint Michaell the Archangell Doctor Godard preaching at Paules crosse, declared by the reading of bils and diuers other argumen. s and George Duke of Clarence and other landed at Plimmouth.

and proues, that Henry was true and lawful king of England, and not king Edward. Moreouer, the Marques Mountacute, who had gathered a fire thousand men in king Edwards name, and was come nére vnto the said Edward, he told them how king Edward had serued him: first, making him Earle of Northumberland, and after giuing the same earldome to Thomas Percy, made him marques Mountacute, allowing him a Pies nest to maintaine it withal: wherefore he would leaue to serue him, & take part with the Earle of Warwike his brother. Whereof when king Edward vnderstood, he fled from his host, besides Nottingham, and the third day of October, he with the Lord Riuers, Lord Hastings his chamberlaine, the Lord Say, and other to the number of seuen or eight Earles, tooke shipping at Lin, and sailed toward the Duke of Burgoigne his brother in law.

The Quéene tooke sanctuary at Westminster. Kentishmen roobed the Flemmings, and chased them out of London. The tower of London yeelded to the mayor of London.

The Quéene had before that, to wit, on the first of October stolne secretly in the night out of the Tower of London by water to Westminster, and there taken sanctuary. This time was great watch kept in the City of London: for the Kentishmen had assembled themselues in great companies, and so had come to the outer part of the citie, as to Ratclif, Saint Katherins, Southwarke, and other the suburbs, and many of them were entred the citie, where they robbed the Flemmings at Blanchapleton, and other places, making them to flie out of the citie with sorrow ynough.

On Wednesday following, the tower of London was yéelded to the Maior and his brethren the Aldermen, who forthwith entred the same, and deliuered king Henrie of his imprisonment, and lodged him in the Kinges lodging. On the Friday following came to London the Archbishop of Yorke, brother to the Earle of Warwike, the lord Prior of Saint Iohns, and other to the number of two thousand men of armes. On the morrow following, came the Duke of Clarence, the Earle of Warwike, the bastarde Fauconbridge, with other to the number of foure thousand men. On the first daye of October the duke of Clarence, the Earle of Warwike, the archbishop of Yorke, the lord of Saint Iohns, with other entred the tower of London, and king Henrie being there prisoner nigh the space of nine yéares, they elected him to be their lawful king, and forthwith rode with him through London to the Bishoppes pallace, where hee rested till the 13. of October, on which day hee went a procession crowned in Paules Church: the Earle of Warwike bare his traine, and the earle of Oxford his sword, &c.

George Duke of Clarence the Earle of warwike & other restored King Henry.

Prince Edward borne in the sanctuary.

Quéene Elizabeth wife to Edward the fourth, being in the sanctuarie at Westminster, was deliuered of a prince on the fourth of Nouember, who was after king Edward the fift.

King Edward with the Lord Hastings, the lord Say, nine hundred Englishmen, and three hundred Flemmings, would haue landed in Esser, but there there the Earle of Orfords brother put them off, and after hee landed fore weather-beaten at Rauensporne, within Humber on Holderneſſe, and there roſe on him Holderneſſe mẽ, whoſe captaine was ſir John Weſterdale a preeſt, after caſt into the Marſhalſea at London. As king Edward paſſed the country, he ſhewed the earle of Northumberlands letters and ſeale, that ſent for him, ſaying, that he came to claime no title of the crowne, but only his dukedome of Yorke, nor would not haue done afore, but at the erecting of the earle of Warwicke, & cried in euery place, king Henry, & prince Edward, wearing an Eſtrich feather prince Edwards liuery. King Edward came to Nottingham, where ſir William Stanley, ſir William Norris, and diuers other brought him men, ſo that hee had then 4000. or more. Then Edward marched toward Leiceſter, where the earle of Warwick and marques Mountacute had 4000. men, and would haue fought with king Edward, but that hee had receiued letters from the Duke of Clarence, that he ſhould not fight vntill he came. Whereupon hee keeping Leiceſter ſtil, ſuffered Edward to march toward London. A little out of Warwicke the duke of Clarence with 7000 men meeting with king Edward, agreed to him and brake al the promiſes made in France. King Edward comming to London, by meaſter Vrſwike the Recorders means, and others, entred into the biſhop of Londons palace by a poſterne, and there tooke king Henry and the archbiſhop of Yorke, and ſent them both to the tower on Maundy thurſday.

King Henrie againe ſent to the tower.

The Earle of Warwicke, the Duke of Exceſter, marques Mountacute, and the earle of Orford, with many knights, came with their hoſt toward Barnet: wherefore king Edward tooke king Henry with him, and preoccupied the towne of Barnet all the night: the Earle of Warwicke and his retinue remained on the plaine without the towne, ſhoting guns one at the other. And in the morning being Eaſter day, and the 14. of Aprill, they fought in a thicke miſt from fower of the cloke in the morning til ten, and diuers times, the earle of Warwickes men ſuppoſed that they had got the victory of the field, but it happened that the earle of Orfords mẽ had a ſtar with ſtreames both before and behind on their liueries, and King Edwards men had the ſun with ſtreames on their liuery: whereupon the Earle of Warwickes men, by reaſon of the miſt not well diſcerning the badges ſo like, ſhot at the Earle of Orfords men that were on their owne part, and then the earle of Orford and his men cried treaſon, and fled with eight hundred men. The marques Mountacute was priuily agreed with K. Edward, and had gotten on his liuery, but one of his brothers the Earle of Warwickes men eſpying this, fell vpon him and killed him.

Barnet field.

The earle of Warwicke ſeeing his brother dead, and the Earle of Orford fled, lept on a horſe to fly, and comming to a wode where was no paſſage, two of king Edwards men came to him, killed him, and ſpoiled him to the naked ſkin. Sir William Tyrrell knight was killed on the earle of Warwikes part. The Duke of Exceſter fought manfully and was diſpoyled, wounded, & left for dead from ſeuen in the morning til fowre of the clocke in the after-noone, and then being brought to a ſeruants houſe of his there-

Were ſlaine on king Edwards party, Humfrey Boucher Lord Cromwell, Henry Bourcher ſonne and heire to the Lord Barons both buried at Weſtminſter: ſir Iohn Liſle was there ſlaine, alſo Th. a Par & Iohn Milwater Eſquires to R. Duke of Glocester were there ſlaine: and on both parts to the number of foure thouſand, which were buried on the ſame plaine halfe a mile from Barnet, where after a chappell was builded in memory of them.

Iohn Raſtall.

The morow after Eaſter day, were the bodies of the Earle of Warwike and the Marques Mountacute laid naked in Pauls Church in London, that al men might ſée them, for the ſpace of thrée or foure daies, and then buried at Billam Priory in Barkſhire; the Lord Barons was reuerently buried in the friers Auguſtines Church at London. King Henry with the Archbiſhop of Yorke, were ſent to the Tower of London.

Battell of Tewkeſbury. Liber Tewx.

At this time Quéene Margaret, and Prince Edward her ſonne had lien on the ſea 17. daies letted with foule weather, and on Eaſter day at éuen they landed with their French Nauy at Weymouth, and ſo came to Exceſter, from thence to Tewkeſbury, and pitched their field by Seuerne. Edward the fourth being come from Londō, fought with prince Edward at Tewkſbury on the fourth of May, toke Quéene Margaret priſoner with prince Edward her ſonne, whom cruelly he ſmote on the face with his gantlet, and after his ſeruants ſlue him. Edmond Duke of Somerſet, and ſir Hugh Courney fled from Prince Edward & loſt him the field. There was ſlaine Courney Earle of Deuonſhire, Lord Iohn of Somerſet, Lord Wenlocke, ſir Edmond Hamden, ſir William Whittingham, ſir William Vaus, ſir Nicholas Harnie, ſir Iohn Deluis, ſir William Filding, ſir Iohn Leukenor, ſir VV. Lirmonth, ſir Iohn Vrman, ſir T. Seamer, ſir VV. Rowſe, ſir Thomas Henry. King Edward entring a Church in Tewkeſbury with his ſword drawen, a Priest brought the ſacrament againſt him, and would not let him enter vntill he had granted his pardon to theſe that follow: Edmond Duke of Somerſet, Iohn Bouge Strother Lord of Saint Iohns, ſir Humfrey Audley, ſir Geruis of Clifton, ſir VVilliam Grimesby, ſir VVilliam Carie, ſir Henry Roſe, ſir Thomas Treſham, ſir VVilliam Newbrough, knights, Henry Treſham, VValter Courtney, Iohn Florie, Lewes Miles, Robert Iackſon, James Gower ſword bearer to Prince Edward, Iames Deluis ſonne and heire to ſir Iohn Deluis: all theſe, where they might haue eſcaped, tarried in the Church (truſting in the kings pardon) from ſaturday till munday, when they were taken out and beheaded.

ny of shipmen, and other of Essex and Kent, came to London, where being denied passage through ỳ city, he set upon Bishops gate, Aldgate, London bridge &c. along the Thamis side, shooting arrowes and guns into the city, fired the suburbs, and brent more than 60. houses, wan the bulwarks at Aldgate, and entred the city, but the porteclose being let down, such as had entred were slaine, and then the citizens pursued the rest so far as Stratford and Blackwall, slaying many, and toke many prisoners. Thomas the bastard went from London westward, as far as Kingstone upon Thames, to prosecute K. Edward, but the Lord Scales, with Nicholas Faunt Maior of Canterbury, by faire words caused Fauconbridge to returne to Blackheath in Kent, from whence in the night he stale from the host with 600. horsemen to Rochester, and so to Sandwich, where he abode the kings comming.

The one and twentieth of May king Edward came to London with thirtie thousand men: and the same night king Henry was murdered in the Tower of London: On the morrowe he was brought through Cornehill, from the Tower with a great companie of men bearing weapons as they should have led him to some place of execution, to S. Paules church in London, in an open coffin bare faced, where he bled: thence he was caried to the Blacke Friers, and there bled: and thence to Chersey Abbey in a bote, where he was then buried, but since by king Richard the third, in the second yeare of his raigne, removed to Windsor, where hee was buried without the chancell, at the south dore of the quire of Windsor chappell, where he was worshipped by the name of holy king Henrie: whose redde hat of veluet was thought to beale the headach of such as should put it on their heads, there he rested for a time, but nowe his tombe being taken thence, it is not (commonly) knowne what is become of his bodie. King Henry murdered.

Thus ended the king his transitorie life, having enioyed as great prosperitie, as fauourable fortune could afford, and as great troubles on the other side, as shée frowning couldo power out: yet in both states hée was patient, and vertuous, that hee maie bee a patterne of most perfect vertue, as hee was a worthie example of Fortunes inconstancie: he was plaine, vpright, farre from fraude, wholie giuen to prater, reading of Scriptures, and almesdéedes, of such integritie of life, that the Bishop which had béene his confessor tenne yéares, auouched that he had not all that time committed anie mortall crime: So continent as suspition of vnchast life neuer touched him: and hauing in Christmasse a sheiwe of yong women with their bare breastes laide out, presented before him, he immediately departed, with these wordes, fie, fie, for shame, forsooth you bee to blame: before his marriage hee liked not that women shoulde enter into his Court, and for this respect hee committed his two brethren by the mothers side, Iaspar and Edmond, to most honest and vertuous Prelates, to bee brought vp. So farre he was from couetousnesse, that when the executors of his vncle the Bishoppe of Winchester, surnamed the rich Cardinall, would haue giuen to him two thousand pounde, hee plainly refused it, willing them to discharge the will of the departed, and woulde scarcely condescende at length to accept the same summe of money toward Henry the first his exercise.

toward the endowing of his Colledges in Cambridge and Eaton: he was so religiouslie affected (as the time then was) that on principall Holydaies, hee would weare sacke-cloth next his skinne. Oth he vsed none, but in most earnest matters these wordes: Forsooth, and forsooth; he was so pittifull, that when comming from Saint Albons, hee sawe the quarter of a traytour against his crowne ouer Cripple gate, he willed it to be taken awaie, with these wordes: I will not haue anie Christian so cruellie handled for my sake; manie greate offences hee willinglie pardoned, and receiuing at a time a greate blowe by a wicked man, which compelled his death, hee onlie saide, forsooth, forsooth, yee doo fowlie to smite a King annointed so. Another also which thrust him in the side with a sworde, when hee was prisoner in the Tower, was by him pardoned, when hee was restored to his state and kingdome: not long before his death, beeing demaunded why hee had so long holde the Crowne of Englande vniustlie, hee replyed, my Father was King of England, quietlie enioying the Crowne all his Reigne, and his father my Grandsire was also King of Englande; and I, euen a Childe in my Cradle, was proclaymed and Crowned King without anie interruption, and so holde it fortie yeeres well neere, all the States dooing homage vnto mee, as to my Auncestors; wherefore I maie saie with King Dauid: The Lotte is fallen vnto mee in a faire grounde, yea, I haue a goodlie heritage, my helpe is from the Lorde which saueth the vprighte in hearte. Hee raigned eyght and thirtie yeeres, fiue monethes and odde dayes. And after his redemption of the crowne fiue monethes; he liued 52. yeares, hauing by his wife one only son, called Edward Prince of Wales, deceased as ye haue heard; hee was of seemly stature, of body slender, his face beautifull, of his owne naturall inclination, he abhorred all the vices as well of the body as of the soule.

And nowe to returne to king Edwarde. At his comming to London, the Maior, Aldermen and other citizens meeting him one mile without the Citie, to witte, betwixt Iseldon, and Horse ditch, in the high waie hee made knights these Aldermen, Sir Iohn Stokton Maior of London, Sir Ralph Verney, Sir Richard Lee, Sir Iohn Yong, Sir William Taylor, Sir George Ireland, Sir William Stocker, Sir Matthewe Philip, Sir William Hampton, Sir Thomas Stalbrok, Sir Iohn Crosby, Sir Bartlemew Iames, Sir T. or Richard Vrswike, Recorder of London, all these he made knights, in reward of ỹ good seruice the Londoners had don to him. On the 24. day of May king Edward after he had made banarets, Sir Thomas Grey, Sir Richard Hastings, Sir Iohn Courtney, Sir Nicholas Latimer, Sir Ralph Hastings, Sir Roger Tegets, Sir Iohn Stanley, Sir Simon Mountfort, Sir Iohn Heningham, Sir William Stanley, &c. he take his iourny into Kent, with all his army following the bastard, and other his complices to suppresse them, if they were in anie place assembled to resist him; but after they were once dispersed, they durst not shewe themselues again in armor, those onelie excepted that were withdrawne vnto Sandwich with the bastard, which for the more parte were mariners, an 8. or 9. hundred, with these he kept the town, hauing in the hauen 47. ships great and smal vnder his gouernance; but the K. approching, they sent to him for pardon, which the king granted, and being being in the citie of Canterburie, he sent vnto Sandwich his brother Richard duke of Gloucester, to receiue them to mercie, together with all the shippes, which they deliuered: whereupon king Edward not onlie pardoned the bastard, but made him knight, and Vice-admirall. The Lord Denham and sir John Fog, with other were left in Kent, to sit in iudgement of the rebels of Kent, Suller, and Eller, whereof were a greate number punished by the purse, some 200. marks, some 200. l'. some more, some lesse. Thus king Edward returned out of Kent with much good, and little loue. Nicholas Faut Maior of Canterbury (that had serued the earle of Warwike, and had of late perswaded the bastard to depart from his olle, and diuers other of his countrymen) were hanged and quartered, and the heads of Spising and Quinten were set vpon Aldegate of London.

On the 4. day of June, George Neuill archbishop of Yorke, and brother to the late earle of Warwik, and the Marques Mountacute, was deliuered out of the Tower of London, and discharged of his imprisonment.

The 1. of July Edward the son of king Edward, was made prince of Wales, duke of Lancaster, and earle of Cornewall.

In the moneth of September Thomas the bastarde Fauconbridge, was taken at Southampton by Richard Duke of Gloucester, hee was conueied to the Castell of Middleham in Yorkeshire, and there beheaded, notwithstanding that hee had the kings pardon, his head was sent to London, and set on London bridge.

Th. the bastard lost his head.

The earle of Penbroke and of Richmond fled into Britaine.

The 12. of November the lady Anne the kings sister, was diuorced from Henry Holland duke of Exceter, by meanes of her owne sute.

King Edwarde kept his Christmasse at Westminster, where hee with his quéne on the same feast date sate crowned, and likewise on the Twelfte date the king was again crowned, and went on procession crowned, but the quéne was not then crowned, because she was neere her time of deliuerance, but she went on procession with him; the king kept his estate in the White-hall, with his Prelates and noble estates, where also dined the Maior of London, the aldermen, and manie of the wealthy citizens. 1472

This yéere diuers bornes brast out of the earth, signifying great troubles to ensue, as was iudged; amongst the which bornes one was seauen miles, from Saint Albons, at Parkate, the water was called Wo Mere, or Wo Water, so that the running thereof was interpreted to signifie wo to come, as dearth, pestilence, or great battaile; this water had runne against euerie battell before fought, but neuer so much as nowe this yeere, for it begannne on the 19. date of Februarie, and continued running till the 14. of June in the yære next following. Also diuers other bornes brake out this yære, as at Leuesham in Kent, and at Canterburie, called Natelborn; at Croydon in Surrey. Also 6. miles besides Dudley castle in a place called Hungeruele, which last when it betokeneth battaile, runneth foule, and troubly water, and when it betokeneth dearth or pestilence it runneth cleére, but that yære it ran foule. There is also a pit in Langley Parke in Kent, which is alway full of water, be the weather neuer so dry, except against battel, and then it wil be dry, and so it was this yeer. Archbiſhop of Yorke ſpoiled, and ſent to priſon.

George Neuill Archbiſhop of Yorke, being at Windſore with king Edward on hunting, the king promiſed the Archbiſhop to come to the More (a place in Hartfordſhire, which the Archbiſhop had purchaſed and builded commodiouſly) there to hunt and make merrie with him, whereupon the Archbiſhop taking his leaue of the king, went home to his manor of the More, and there made great proviſion for the king, and ſent for much plate that he had hid, at the time of Barnet and Tewkeſburie fieldes, and beſides this, borrowed much of his friendes, and purueied for the king for two or three daies meate, drinke, and lodging, as royally as hee coulde: but the daie before the king had promiſed to haue come to the More, the king ſodainly ſent for the Archbiſhop to come to Windſor, where he was arreſted of Treaſon, that he ſhould helpe the earle of Orforde, and ſo ſent to Caleis, and to Hames, where he continued long after priſoner: all which time the king kept the Archbiſhoprieke in his owne handes. In this meane while Sir William Par knight, and Sir Thomas Vaughan Eſquire, and other were ſent to the More to ſeaſe all his goods for the king, which came there to the ſumme of 20000. l. and all other lordſhippes and lands that the ſaid Archbiſhop had within England, and all his ſtuffe and riches.

K. Edward at this time brake the biſhops miter, that had many rich ſtones, and made thereof a crowne for himſelfe. Thomas Bylling chiefe Iuſtice of the kings bench, and ſo continued till the firſt of Richard the third.

Ia. Vere earle of Oxford kept S. Michaelmas mount.

Alſo Sir Io. Vere earle of Oxford, that had withdrawen himſelfe from Barnet fielde, firſt into Scotland, after into France, then getting much goods on the Sea, landed in the Weſt Countrey, and entred S. Michaels Mount, with 77. men, the laſt of September, whereon he was, by the kings appointment, beſieged by Bodrigan and other, but with ſuch fauor, that the earle reuictualled the Mount. Then was Richard Forteſcue Eſquire for the bodie, and ſheriffe of Cornewall ſent thither to continue the ſiege, and king Edward ſending pardons to the earles men, ſo long practiſed with them, that at the laſt if the Earle had not ſubmitted himſelfe to king Edward, he had beene taken of his owne men, and ſo Forteſcue entring the Mount the 15. of Februarie, found victuall ynough there to haue ſerued them till Midſommer after: Iohn Vere earle of Orforde, the Lorde Beaumond, two brothers of the ſaide Earle, and Thomas Clifford were brought priſoners to the king. The earle of Orforde was ſent priſoner to Gwines, where he remained ſo long as this king raigned. In

In the moneth of September Lewes de Bruges Lord Granthuse, came into Englande from Charles Duke of Burgoigne, and on the thirteenth of October was created Earle of Winchester openlie in the Parliament chamber.

The first of October beganne a Parliament at Westminster by authoritie, whereby an aide was graunted to the king, towardes the charge of his warres, which was leuied of mens landes, as well of Lordes as of other. 1473 An. reg. 13. Parliament at Westminster.

The Duke of Burgoigne hauing great warres with the French king, sent Embassadours into Englande to require king Edward his brother in lawe to make warre on the French king, vnto the which request king Edward easily granted, because hee wished to be reuenged on the French king, as of his enemie, for aiding the Earle of Warwike, Queene Margaret and her sonne Prince Edwarde, and their complices: whereupon he promised and also determined in the beginning of the next yeere, to bring a great armie ouer to Caleis, and to inuade the kingdome of France. And forthwith with all diligence prepared all thinges readie for his iourney, making many shiftes for the prouision of money to serue his turne. And because the last yeere great summes of money were granted him by the Parliament, he deuised this shifte, to call afore him a great number of the wealthiest sort of the people of his Realme, and to them declared his neede, and the requisite causes thereof, hee demaunded of euerie of them some portion of money, which they sticked not to giue, and therefore the king willing to shewe that this their liberalitie was verie acceptable to him, hee called this grant of money, a Benevolence, notwithstanding that many grudged thereat, and called it a Malevolence: but the king vsed such gentle meanes towardes them for their assistance in his necessitie, that they could not otherwise doe, but frankely yeelde and giue him competent sums, wherewith he prepared a great armie.

This yeere Henry Holland the Duke of Exceter was found dead in the sea betweene Douer and Caleis, but howe he came there the certaintie could not be knowne.

King Edwarde hauing prepared his armie, led the same to Douer, from thence to crosse the seas to Caleis. The force that passed with him at this present was the greatest that euer came into France, most of them being horsemen, all in very good order well armed. All the nobles of the realme were there, a fewe excepted, they were fiftéene hundred men of armes very well mounted, and the most of them barded and richly trapped, after the manner of the French warres, and well accompanied with horsemen of their retinue, they were at the least fiftéene thousand archers on horse backe, and a great number of footemen and others, as well to pitch their tentes, whereof they were well furnished, as also to attend vpon their artillery, and inclose their campe, and 1474

An. reg. 14. in all their army they had not one pledge. Besides this, were 3000. English men appointed to land in Bzytaine.

When king Edwarde came to Douer, the duke of Burgoigne to helpe his passage, sent 500. Boates of Holland, and Zeland, called cuts, which are flatte and lowe, builte verie commodiously foz transpozting of hozses: but notwithstanding all this helpe they had from the Duke, and all the king of Englande coulde commande himselfe, hee was aboue thzée wéekes in passing betweene Douer and Caleis, one ship of Ewe tooke 2. oz 3. of his small passengers. Before king Edward embarqued, he sent from Douer to the king of France one Herault alone called Garter a Flozman bozne, who bzought a letter of defiance from the king of Englande, in verie good language, and so excellentlie well penned, that mine Authour was perswaded it was neuer Englishmans doing. The contentes thereof were, that the king shoulde yéelde vnto him the realme of France, being his inheritance, to the end he might restoze the cleargy and nobility to their ancient liberty, ease them of the great charges they sustained, and deliuer them of the miseries they were in, which if he refused to do, he protested what great mischiefe should ensue thereof, in maner and forme as in such cases is accustomed. The king read the letter softly to himselfe, and afterwarde all alone withdzewe himselfe into a Wardzobe, and commanded the Herault to be bzought to his pzesence, to whome he made this answere.

King Edward three weekes in passing between Douer and Caleis.

First, that he knew well that the king of England had not passed the seas of his owne frée motion, but by the perswasion of the duke of Burgundie, and the communaltie of England.

Secondly, that the summer was now almost past, and that the duke of Burgoigne was returned from Nunz, as a man discomfited and vtterlie vnfurnished of all things.

Thirdlie, as touching the Constable (of France) he knew well (he said) that the intelligence with the king of England, because he had married his Niece: but would deceiue the king his maister as he had him, notwithstanding all the great benefites that he had receiued of him, which hee then rehearsed, adding thereunto, that the saide Constable mente to liue in continuall dissimulation, and entertaine euerie man to make his pzofite of him.

Last of all, he alleaged to the Herault diuers reasons to perswade the king his maister to peace, and gaue him with his owne hand 300. crownes, pzomising him a thousand more if the peace were concluded: further openly he gaue him foz a pzesent, a goodly peece of crimson veluet of thirtie els. The Herault answered, that he would trauel the best he could foz peace, and thought the king his maister would easilie be won thereunto: but he willed the king of France, to send an Herault to the English campe to demand a safe conduct foz certain Ambassadours, that hee woulde sende to the king of England, and to direde his letters to the Lozd Howard, oz to the Lozde Stanley, and to himselfe also to conuete his Herault. At one time in a maner both the king of England landed at Caleis, and the duke of Burgoigne departed from before Nunz, who in great haste rid straight to Caleis, to the said king with a very smal train, foz he had sent his army to spoile the Countrey of Barrois and Lozaine. The king of of England departed from Caleis in company of the duke, and passed through Bolloigne, & from thence marched to Peronne, where the duke gaue the Englishmen but cold entertainment, for he caused the gates to be streightlie kept, and woulde suffer but fewe to enter, so that the greatest part of them lodged in the fields. After they were come to Peronne ỳ Constable of France sent to the duke of Burgoigne one of his seruants, by whome he excused himselfe for the withholding of S. Quintins, alleaging that if he had restored it hee could haue staid him in no stéede in the Realme of France, for he should vtterlie haue lost his credite and intelligence, but nowe séeing the king of England was come ouer in person, he promised to do hereafter all that the duke should command him, thereof the better to assure him, hee sent him a letter of credite to the declaration of the duke. Furthermore he gaue the duke his faith in writing, to serue and succor him, his friends, and confederates, as well the king of England as others, against all men none excepted.

A Sabinus Poet laureat to the pope Author of ye Epistles added to Ouid's Hor. at Rome

The duke deliuered the king of Englande his letter, and all the matter of credite, adding somewhat thereto of his owne heade: for hee assured the king, that the Constable woulde deliuer into his handes, both Saynt Quintins, and all his other places, which the king easilie beleeued, partlie because hee had married the Constables Niece, and partlie because hee sawe him in so greate feare of the king of Fraunce, that hee thought hee durst not fayle his promise made to the Duke and him: and the Duke beleeued it also. But the Constable ment nothing lesse, for the feare hee was in of the French king was not so great that it could force him thus far, but he vsed still his wonted dissimulation.

The king of Englande reioycing at this Message sente by the Constable, departed from Peronne with the duke of Burgoigne, towarde Saint Quintins, whereunto when hee approched, a greate Bande of English men ranne before, thinking that the Belles shoulde haue beene roong at their comming, and that the Citizens woulde haue receyued them with Crosse and Holie water, but when they drewe néere to the Towne, the Artillerie shot, and the souldiours issued foorth to the skirmish, both on Horsebacke and on foote, so that two or three Englishmen were slayne, and some taken: and in this state returned they in greate rage to their campe, murmuring against the Constable.

The next morning the duke of Burgondy would haue taken his leaue of the king of Englande to depart to his army in Barroys, promising to doe marualles in his fauor.

The French king sent a seruant of the Lorde Halles in the likenesse of an Herault, with a coate made of a Trumpets Banner, to the English campe, where when hee came, hee was brought to a Tente, and after dinner talked with the king: his message was chiefelie grounded vpon the greate desire the king had of long time to bee in peace with the king of Englande, saying further, that since hee was crowned king of Fraunce, hee neuer had attempted anie thing agaynst the king of Englande or his Realme.

Secondlie, he excused himselfe, for receiuing in times past the earle of Warwike into his dominions, saying, that he did it only against the duke of Burgoigne and not him.

Further, he declared that the said duke of Burgoigne had for no other cause called him into Fraunce, but that by the occasion of his comming, he might conclude a better peace for himselfe with the king: and if happilie anie other furthered the matter, it was onelie to amend the broken estate of their owne affaires, and for their owne priuate commoditie: but as touching the king of Englands good successe, they were altogether careles thereof. He put him also in minde of the time of the yeare, alleadging that winter approched, and likewise the great charges he sustained.

The warre betweene Charles yᵉ Bold duke of Burgundy and the king of England ceased by this meanes.

Lastlie hee saide, that notwithstanding a great number in Englande desired warre with Fraunce, yet if the king of Englande incline to peace, the king for his parte woulde condescende to such conditions as hee doubted not but hee and his Realme woulde allowe of: Finallie, hee demaunded a safe conduct for certaine Ambassadors, to come well enformed of his maisters pleasure.

The king of Englande and part of his nobles liking these ouertures verie well, graunted to the Heraulte of Fraunce, as large a safe conduct as hee demanded, and gaue him foure Nobles of Golde for a rewarde. He also sent an Englishe Heraulte with him to bring the like safe conduct. And in the next Morning in a Village nere to Amience, the Commissioners of both Princes mette, beeing these. For the king of Fraunce, the bastarde of Bourbon Admirall of France, the Lord of Saint Pierre, and the Bishop of Cureur, called Heberge: And for the king of Englande, the Lorde Howard, one Chalenger, and Doctor Morton. Manie Articles of peace were treated of, but the last resolutions were these: That the French king shoulde paie to the king of England presentlie before his departure out of France, seuentie two thousande Crownes, that the Dolphine shoulde marrie king Edwardes eldest daughter, and that shee shoulde haue the Duchie of Guien, for her maintenance, or fiue thousand Crownes yeerelie to be paid in the Tower of London, the space of nine yeares, which terme expired, the Dolphine shoulde peaceablie enioy the reuenues of the whole Duchie of Guien; and then the king of France to bee cleerelie discharged of all paymentes to the king of England. Further it was decreed, that the two Princes should meet together, and bee sworne to the treatie, which meeting was obserued in a Towne called Picquigny, on the 29. of August.

The king of England vpon receit of his mony, departed toward Caleis in great hast, fearing the duke of Burgoignes malice, and his subiects.

King Edward returning into England, landed at Douer.

At his departure he left for Hostages with the king of Fraunce, till his returne into England, the Lord Howard, and the master of his Horse called Sir John Cheyney. King Edward tooke Shipping at Caleis, and landed at Douer, and was receiued on the Black-heath by the Maior of London and his brethren in scarlet, and 500. commoners, all clad in Murrey, and so conueied to London through the city to Westminster, on the 28 of September.

The French king to compasse his purpose for the getting of the Constable into his handes, toke truce with the Duke of Burgoigne for nine yeres, as a contractour in the league, and not as a Prince alie. King Edwarde of Englande aduertised hereof, sent ouer Sir Thomas Mountgomerey to the French king offering to passe the seas again the next sommer to aid him, and to make warre on the duke of Burgoigne, so that the French king shoulde pate to him 50000. Crownes for the losse which he should sustaine in his custome, by reason that the wooles of Calais, could haue no vent: and also pate halfe the charges, and halfe the wages of his souldiers and men of war. The French king thanked king Edwarde for his offer: but hee alleaged that the truce was alreadie concluded, so that hee coulde not attempt anie thing against him, without reproch to his honor: so Sir Thomas Mountgomerey was with plate dispatched. There returned with him the Lord Howard, and Sir Iohn Cheyney, which were hostages with the French king, till the English armie were returned into England. 1475

King Edwarde hauing established all thinges in good order, both within his Realme and without, was yet troubled in his mind, for that the earle of Richmond, one of the blod of king Henry the first on the mothers side, was alive, and at libertie in Brytaine: therefore he sent ouer to Francis duke of Brytaine, one Doctor Stillington, and other Ambassadours laden with no small sum of golde. These Ambassadors declaring their message, affirmed that the king their master, willed to haue the earle of Richmond onlie to ioine with him in alliance by marriage, and so to plucke vp al the remnants of discord, bet wixt him and them of the contrary faction. The duke thought at the first, that king Edward woulde giue to the earle his eldest daughter the ladie Elizabeth in marriage, he therfore consented to deliuer him, and receiued of the English orators a great sum of money:

Malo, where the English Ambassadours then lay, staying for a conuenient winde: who complained that they were euill vsed to be spoyled both of their money and merchandise: yet because the matter was so handled, that it seemed the earle escaped into sanctuarie through their owne negligence, after that they had receiued him, they were answered that the earle should be safely kept, either in sanctuarie, or else as a prisoner in the Dukes house, and thus the king purchased for his money, the keeping of his money for a little time.

King Edward was somewhat displeased with the chance about the Earle of Richmond, but trusting that the D. of Britaine would according to promise keepe him from doing any grieuance to him, put all doubts thereof out of his minde, and began to study how to keepe a liberall princely house, and thereupon storing his chestes with money hee imployed no small portion in good house keeping.

An. reg. 16. This yeere K. Edward kept the feast of S. George, and order of the Garter at Windsore in most royall manner, first on the saturday before none, the king being Soueraigne with the knightes of the order, entred the chapiter within the castle, which Chapiter was also continued in the afternoone, in this manner, towards euensong time, being all mounted on horsebacke in their habites of blew, rode to the chapiter, from whence they went to the quire on foote, where they remained while euensong was done, and then rode againe to the Castle (in their habites as afore) where they had their voide of spices, &c.

Order of Saint Georges feast.

On Sunday morning, the Soueraigne with the knights rode to mattens, which being ended, they entred the chapiter, from whence they went to the Deans house to breakfast, and after to the quire againe euery man to his own stall. Then came the Quéene with the Lady Elizabeth her eldest daughter, the Dutchesse of Suffolke the kings sister, the Lady Marchionesse of Montagu, the Lady Marchionesse of Dorset, the lady Hastings, &c. all in one liuery of murrey embrodered with garters, except the Marchionesse of Montague, who rode in a gowne of silke, and these Ladies were placed in the rode loft. And in the same order and habite came the Soueraigne, and knights, with the Quene and her Ladies in the after none to euensong. The king this day dined in his great chamber, on whose right hand sate Richard Bewchamp bishop of Salisburie, Chancellor of the order, and on the left hand the D. of Clarence, and the D. of Suffolke. At a side table sate the Marquesse of Dorset, the Earles of Arundale, Northumberland, and Essex, the L. Maltrauers, the Earle Dowglas,

the Lordes Dudley, Ferrers, and Howard, and Sir Iohn Astely knight all on one side. And at a table on the other side, sate Master Dudley Deane of Saint Georges chappell, and with him all on one side, the Chanons of the same chappell in their mantles of murrey, and rundlet of S. George.

On the Munday the Soueraigne and knights of the order entred the chapter, where they had a short communication, frō whence they went to the quire, where euery knight stood before his stall whiles the king had offered a riche suite of vestments, and certaine coapes of the same suite, which the deane receiued: that done, the K. went to his stall, and euery knight sate him downe in their owne stals, till the offertory, and then the Marques Dorset and the D. of Suffolke offered the swords of Iohn Mowbray late D. of Norffolke deceased, the lords Maltrauers and Howard, his helme: which being done, & obeisance made, euery knight stode before their stals, while the K. had offered, and then euerie knight offered according to his stall, to wit, the D. of Clarence, the Marques Dorset, the Duke of Yorke, the earle of Arundell, the earle of Essex, and the D. of Suffolke, the Earle of Northumberland, the Earle of Dowglas, the L. Maltrauers, and the L. Howard, the L. Dudley, the Lord Ferrers, Sir Iohn Astley. The masse being ended, they went to the chapter, and thus the feast was ended, from the which were absent of the order out of the Realme, the K. of Cicell, the king of Portingale, the D. of Burgoigne, the D. of Urbin, the Battle of Granson, D. of Burgundy dealed by ye Swiss Lorde Riuers, the lorde Scrope, the lorde Durasse. Absent within the Realme, the Prince, the D. of Glocester, the Duke of Buckingham, the lord Hastings, and sir William a Par.

This yere Charles D. of Burgundy was slaine by the Switzers, before the towne of Nancy in Loraine, after whose death the French K. wan all the townes which the said D. had holden in Picardy and Artois, and because the towne of Boloigne, and county of Bolongnos appertained by right of inheritance vnto the L. Bertram de la Toure Earle of Auuergne, the French king bought of him his right and title in the same, and recompenced him with other lands in the county of Forests, and in other places. And because the fore named towne and county were holden of the earledome of Artois, he changed the tenor, and auowed to holde the same towne and county of our lady of Boloigne, and therof did homage in the great church of Boloigne, offering there an heart of gold, weying 2000. crownes, ordaining further, that his heires and successors at their entrie into their estates, by themselues or their deputies, should offer an heart of like waight and value, as a relefe and homage for the same towne and country. 1477

Burdet to inclose his wood of Arrow into his parke (as appeareth by patten in record:) And the Record also sheweth that the saide Thomas Burdet was accused of poysoning, sorcerie and inchantment, for the which he was attainted, by parliament condemned, drawne from the Tower of London to Tiborne, and there beheaded, and then buried in the Grey Friers church at London. This Thomas Burdet (by licence obtained of Edward the fourth in the twelfth yeare of his raigne) alienated his lands from his eldest sonne, and true heire, to others at his pleasure, whereof he after sore repented him: And being drawen from the Tower toward his ende (as is afore shewed) espying his said eldest sonne in west Cheape, ouer against the hospitall of Thomas Becket, he procured himselfe to be staied, and there asked his sonne forgiuenesse, confessing himselfe grieuously to haue offended God, in wronging him of his inheritance, which he tooke to be the cause that God had so iustly plagued him, by the Princes pleasure, to come to such an ende.

The 15. of January king Edward the fourth solemnized the matrimoniall feast of his son Richard the Duke of Yorke, and the Lady Anne daughter and sole heire to Iohn Mowbray Duke of Norfolke with great solemnitie. By which marriage, the said Richard was created Duke of Yorke and Norfolke, Earle marshall, Warren and Nottingham.

Parliament at Westminster, with the attaindor of George D. of Clarence.

The 16. day of January began a Parliament at Westminster, wherein George D. of Clarence king Edwards brother, was attainted of treason: In the which attaindor (which I haue read) is declared, that the said George Duke of Clarence, against the king his soueraigne Lord, had caused diuers his seruants to informe the people, that Thomas Burdet his seruant (which was lawfully and truly attainted of treason) was wrongfully put to death. To his seruants of such disposition he gaue large sums of money, venison, &c. therewith to assemble the kings subiects, to feast them, and then to induce them to beleeue, that the saide Burdet was wrongfully executed. He also by such his seruants, laboured to make the people beleeue that the king wrought by Negromancie, and vsed the craft to poyson his subiects, such as him pleased, to the great disclander of the king, and incouraging his subiects against him. And ouer that, the said D. being in full purpose to exalt himselfe and his heires to the regaltie and crowne of England, and clerely in opinion to put aside from the same for euer, the king and his heires, vpon one the falsest and most vnnaturall coloured pretence that man might imagine, falsely and vntruely published, that the king was a bastard, and not legitimate to raigne. And to continue this his most malicious and traiterous purpose after this seditious language among the people, he induced diuers of the kings naturall subiects to be sworn vpon the blessed sacrament, to be true to him and his heires, none exception reserued of their allegiance: and after the same oth so made, he shewed to many, that the king had taken his liuelode from him, and his men were disher-

And o-ner this, the saide Duke got an exemplication vnder the great seale of Henry the first late king, wherein was contayned, that if the saide Henry and Edward his sonne died without issue male, that the said Duke and his heires should bee kings, &c. Thus much for his attaindor.

Duke of Clarence put to death.

This George Duke of Clarence left behind him two young infants begot on his wife, the daughter of Richard earle of Warwike, which children succeeded their auncestors in semblable euill chance: for Edward his heire, whom king Edward had created earle of Warwike, was 24. yeares after in the time of Henry the 7. attainted of treason, and on the tower hill lost his head: And Magaret his sole daughter, married to sir Richard Pole knight, and by Henry the 8. restored to the earledome of Salisburie, was attainted 62. yeares after her father had suffered, and was in the tower beheaded: in whose person died the surname of Plantaginet. This yeare was a great mortality and death of the pestilence, not onlie in London, but in diuers partes of the realme, which began in the latter end of September, in the yeare last before passed, and continued all this yeare til the beginning of Nouember, which was about 14. monethes, in the which space died innumerable of people in the said citie and elsewhere.

Great pestilence.

William Grey bishop of Ely deceased at Downham, and was buried at Ely, betweene two pillars of marble: he gaue much money toward the reparation of the great steeple at Ely, Iohn Morton doctor of the ciuill lawe succeeded him in that Byshoprieke.

This yeare king Edward more then he was accustomed, began to search for the seitures of penall lawes and statutes, as well of the chiefe of his nobilitie, as of other gentlemen, being proprietories of great possessions or aboundantlie furnished with goods, likewise of merchants, and other inferior persons: by reason whereof, it was of all men iudged that he would prooue hereafter a sore and rigorous prince among his subiects: but this his new inuented practise, and couetous meaning (by reason of forraine affaires, and abridgement of his daies in this transitory life, which were within two yeares after consumed) tooke some but no great effect.

Penal lawes & statutes looked to.

This yeare king Edwarde began to keepe his feast of Christes natiuitie at Woking, but at fiue daies end remoued from thence to Greenewich, where he kept out the other part, with great royaltie.

The 22. of February 5. notable theeues were put to death at London, for robbing of Churches and other places, especially the College of S. Martins grand in London, for the which three of them were drawne to the tower hill, and there hanged and brent, the other two were pressed to death.

Church robbers hanged, burned, and pressed to death.

Ambassadours were sent to and fro betwixt the kinges of Englande and of France,

France, and still the French king fed the king of England with faire words, putting him in hope to match his sonne and heire the Dolphin with the Lady Elizabeth daughter to king Edwarde, according to the conclusions of agreement had and made priuily betwixt them, although in very deede hee meant nothing lesse: his embassadours euer made excuses if anie thing were amisse, and he vsed to send change of Embassadours, so that if those which had béene here afore, and were returned, had saide, or promised any thing (though they were authorized so to do) which might turne to their maisters hinderance, the other that came after mought excuse themselues by ignorance of that matter, affirming that they wanted commission once to talke or meddle with that matter, or if he perceiued that any thing was like to be concluded contrarie to his minde, for a shift, he would call his Embassadours home in great haste, and after send an other with new instructions, nothing depending on the old. Thus the French king by cloaking his inwarde determinate purpose, with great dissimulation and large promises, kept himselfe in friendship with the king of England, til he had wrought a great part of his wile against the yong Dutches of Burgoigne, which K. Edward would not haue suffered if hee had put any great doubt in the French kings faire promises, considering that the Crowne of France was in this meane time so much encreased in dominions, to the great reinforcement of that Realme.

On the 9. of November was borne king Edwards third daughter, named Briget at Eltham, and was christened in the chappell there by the Bishop of Chichester.

1481 Iames king of Scots sent into England Ambassage, for to haue the Ladie Cicely king Edwards second daughter, to be married to his eldest son Iames Prince of Scotland, Duke of Rothesey, and Earle of Carike. King Edward and his Councell, perceiuing that this affinitie should bee both honorable and profitable to the realme, did not onely grant to this his desire, but also before hand disbursed certaine sums of money, to the intent that the mariage should hereafter neither be hindered nor broken, with condition that if the said mariage proceeded not, then the prouost & merchants of the towne of Edenborow, should be bound for repayment of the saide summe againe. But king Iames was a man wedded to his owne will so much, that he could not abide any that would speake contrary to his fancie, by meanes whereof, diuers of the Nobilitie of his Realme were greatly troubled, amongst whome Alexander D. of Albany, brother to king Iames being exiled into France, & passing through England, tarried with king Edward, and vpon occasion moued him to make warre against his brother the saide king Iames, for that he forgetting his othe, promise and affinitie concluded with king Edward, caused his subiects to make roades into the English borders. King Edward set on by the Duke of Albanie determined to inuade Scotland, with an armie: hereupon all the winter season hee mustred his men, rigged his shippes, and left nothing vnprouided for such a iourney, so that in the beginning of the yéere, all things for the warre was in a readinesse: towards the charges whereof, king Edward had borrowed many great sums of money, amongst other, the Citizens of London don granted him 5000. markes, which was repaid to them againe in the next yéere following.

King Edward appointed to be his chiefetaine of his host toward Scotland, and lieutenant generall, Richard Duke of Glocester, and with him were adioyned as associates, Henry Earle of Northumberland, Thomas L. Stanley Lord steward of the kings house, the L. Louel, the L. Graystoke, and diuers other noble men, and worthy knights. These came to Alnewike in Northumberland about the beginning of the moneth of July, where they marshalled their host: The forewarde was led by the Earle of Northumberland, vnder whose standert were the Lorde Scrope of Bolton, sir Iohn Midleton, sir Iohn Dichfield and other, and souldiers to the number of 6700. In the middle ward was the Duke of Glocester, and with him the D. of Albany, the L. Louel, the L. Graystoke, sir Edward Wooduile, and other to the number of 5800. The L. Neuil was appointed to follow with 3000. The Lorde Stanley led the wing on the right hand of the Dukes battell with 4000. men. The Lord Fitz Hugh, sir William a Par, sir Iames Harington with the number of 2000. guided the left wing. And besides these, 1000. to attend the ordinance. This royall armie came sodainly by the water side to the towne of Berwike, & entred the towne: but Earle Bothwell captaine of the Castle, would in no wise deliuer it: wherfore the captaines planted a strong siege round about it. The two dukes and all the other souldiers (except the Lord Stanley, sir Iohn Elrington treasurer of the kings house, sir William a Par and foure thousand men left to kéepe the siege before the castle) departed toward Edenborough, and in marching brent many townes and bastiles. King Iames kept himselfe within the Castle of Edenborough. The Duke of Glocester entred the towne, and at the speciall desire of the Duke of Albany, saued the towne, and the inhabitants from fire, bloud, and spoile, taking onely such presentes as they offered to him and his captaines. The Lords of Scotland lying at Hadington, on the second of August wrote to the Duke of Glocester, requiring that the mariage betwixt the Prince of Scotland and K. Edwards daughter might be accomplished, according to the couenants: and further, that a peace from thencefoorth might bee concluded betwéene both realmes. The Duke of Glocester answered, that for the marriage he knew not his brothers pleasure, but hee required restitution of all the money prested out in loane vpon the same marriage: and for peace he would agrée to none, except the Castle of Berwike might be to him deliuered. The Scots excused the matter touching the repaiment of the money, for that the time of the contract of the saide marriage was not yet come: and as touching the Castle of Berwike, they affirmed it to appertaine to the realme of Scotland as of olde inheritance. The same time the Archbishop of S. Andrewes, the bishop of Dunkill, the Earle of Argile, Lord Cambell, and Andrew Lord of Auandall Chancellor of Scotland, wrote to the duke of Albany a solemne instrument signed and sealed with their seales, concerning a generall rall pardon to him and his seruants vpon certain conditions to be granted, so reasonable, that the duke of Albany willingly accepted of the same: but before he departed, he promised the duke of Gloucester to do and performe all whatsoeuer before he had sworne, and promised to king Edward: and for performance hereof, hée againe toke a corporall othe, and sealed a writting at Leuington the third of August.

After he was restored, the Lords of Scotland proclaimed him lieutenant of Scotland: and not long after the castle of Berwike was deliuered to the Lord Stanley and other, where the duke of Gloucester made Sir T. Molineux knight banaret. The duke of Albany also caused the prouost and burgesses of Edenborough to become bound for the repaiment of the mony lent by king Edward. And then the duke of Gloucester returned to Sherehutton, &c.

King Edward so greatlie fauored William Hariot Maior of London, that he toke him with certaine of his brethren the Aldermen, and Commons of the citie of London, into the forrest of Waltham, where was ordained for them a pleasant lodge of grene boughes, in the which lodge they dined, with great chéere, and the king would not go to dinner til he saw them serued. After dinner they went a hunting with the king, and slew many déere, as well red as fallow, whereof the king gaue vnto the Maior and his company good plentie, and sent vnto the Ladie Maioresse and her sisters the Aldermens wiues, two harts, fiue bucks, and a tunne of wine to make them merry with, which was eaten in the Drapers Hall.

K. Edw. banqueted the Maior and Aldermen of London.

1483 King Edward held his feast of the nativitie of Christ in his manor of Eltham, and kept his estate all the whole feast in his great chamber, and the Quéene in her chamber, where were dailie more then 2000. persons serued.

The same yéere on Candlemas day, he with his Quéene went on procession from S. Stephens chappell into Westminster hall, accompanied with the earle of Angusse, the Lord Grey and sir Iames Liddall Ambassadors from Scotland, and at his procéeding out of his chamber he made sir Richard Wood vnder treasurer of England, and sir William Catesby, one of the iustices of the Common place, knights.

An. reg. 23. Although king Edwarde reioyced much that his businesse was come to good conclusion with the Scots, yet hee was nowe sore disquieted in his minde towards the French king, whome hee now perceiued to haue dallied with him, as touching the agreement of the marriage to be had betwixt the Dolphine and his daughter Elizabeth: for the Lord Howard being returned out of Fraunce, certified the king of his owne knowledge, that he being present, saw the Lady Margaret of Austrich daughter to the duke Maximilian, sonne to the Emperor Frederike, receiued into France with great pompe and royaltie, and at Ambois to the Dolphine contracted and espoused. King Edward highlie displeased with such double dealing of the French king, called his nobles together, and opened vnto them his griefes, who promised him for redresse thereof to be readie with all their powers, to make warres in France at his pleasure and appointment. But whilest he was busie in hande to make his puruciance for warres thus against France, whether it was of melancholie and anger which hee had taken with the French kinges doinges, or it were by anie superfluous surfet, to the which he was greatlie giuen, he sodainely fell sicke, and was so grieuouslie taken, that he ended his life, as it were euen sodainelie, at Westminster on the ninth date of Aprill, the yéere of Christ 1483. at the age of 41. yeares, when hee had raigned 22. yeares, one moneth, and odde daies, and was buried at Windsore, where he had before prouided his resting place: for leauing the old chappel or colledge Church builded by king Henry the first, hee laid a newe foundation from the west end thereof, and builded the beautifull large newe chappell now frequented, almost to the rose, which the Lord Reginald Bray (with some small helpe of the knights of the order) afterward finished. King Edward the fourth toke from the colledge of Eaton, and the kings colledge in Cambridge, which king Henry the 6. had founded (saieth sir Tho. Smith) almost 1000. pounds by yéere, and gaue to the colledge of Windsor: he with sumptuous buildings repaired the castles of Nottingham and Douer, the Tower of London, the house of Eltham, and builded at Westminster.

Philip de Comineus writeth of the death of this king in manner following: Haue we not séene (saieth he) the late king of England Edward the 4. heire of the house of Yorke, vtterly destroy the house of Lancaster, vnder the which both his father and he had liued many yéeres? Further hee said, king Edwarde hauing done homage to king Henry the 6. being of the house of Lancaster, did he not afterward hold him prisoner many yéeres in the tower of London, where in the end he was murthered? Haue we not séene also, ỹ earle of Warwike, principall gouernor of all the saide king Edwards offices (after he had put to death all his enimies, especiallie the duke of Somerset) in the end became deadlie enimy to the king his maister, gaue his daughter in marriage to the Prince of Wales son to K. Henry, attempted to set vp again the house of Lãcaster, passed with the said prince into England, discomfited in the field and slain, both he and his brethren, and kinsmen, and diuers noblemen of England, who in time past had done the like to their enimies? After all this the children of these, when the world turned, reuenged themselues, and caused in like maner the other to die: which plagues we may be assured hapned not, but by the wrath of God. For after king Edward was quiet in his realme, and receiued yéerelie out of France 50000. crownes paid him in the tower of London, and was grown so rich, that richer he could not be, he died sodainelie, as it were of melancholie, because of the French kings marriage with the lady Margaret the D. of Austriches daughter, for so soone as he was aduertised thereof he fell sicke, and began then to perceiue how he had béene abused, touching the marriage of his daughter, whome he caused to be called the Lady Dolphinesse. Then also was the pension which he had receiued out of France taken from him, which he called tribute, although indéede it were neither the one nor the other. Thus much out of Comineus concerning the death of Edward the fourth, who also affirmeth, that within his remembrance in the Ciuill warres of Englande died aboue 80. persons of the Blood royall. King Edward left issue by Elizabeth his wife, two sons, Edward prince of Wales, and Richard duke of Yorke, and fiue daughters, to wit, Elizabeth that after was Q. married to king Henry the seuenth, Cicelie married to

KIng Edward, of that name the fourth, after that he had liued fiftie and three yéeres (it should bee fortie and one yeeres) seauen moneths, and fiue daies, and thereof raigned two and twentie yéeres, one moneth, and eight daies, died at Westminster the ninth day of Aprill, the yéer of our redemption a thousand foure hundred fourescore and three, leauing much faire issue, that is to witte, Edward the Prince, of thirteene yéeres of age: Richard D. of Yorke, two yéeres yonger: Elizabeth, whose fortune and grace was afterward to be queéne, wife vnto K. Henry the seuenth and mother vnto the eight: Cicely, not so fortunate as faire: Briget, which representing the vertue of her, whose name she bare, professed and obserued a religious life in Dertford, an house of close Nuns: Anne, that was after honourably married vnto Thomas then Lord Heyward, and after earle of Surrey: and Katherine, which long time tossed in either fortune, sometime in wealth, ofte in aduersitie, at the last, if this be the last, (for then she liued) is by the benignitie of her nephew king Henry the eight, in very prosperous estate, and worthie her birth and vertue.

The loue of the people.

This noble Prince deceased at his palace of Westminster, and with great funerall honour and beautnesse of his people from thence conueyed, was enterred at Windsore. A king of such gouernance and behauiour, in time of peace (for in war eche part must néeds be others enemie) that there was neuer any Prince of this land, attaining the crowne by battell, so heartily beloued with the substance of the people: nor he himselfe so specially in any part of his life, as at the time of his death: Which fauor and affection, yet after his decease by the crueltie, mischiefe, and trouble of the tempestuous world that followed, highly toward him more increased. At such time as he died, the displeasure of those that bare him grudge, for king Henries sake the first, whome he deposed, was well asswaged, and in effect quenched, in that, that many of them were dead in more than twenty yéeres of his raigne, a great part of a long life: and many of them in the meane season growne into his fauour, of which he was neuer strange. He was a goodly personage, princely to behold, of heart courragious, politike in counsell, in aduersitie nothing abashed, in prosperitie rather toyfull than prowd, in peace iuſt and merciſull, in warre ſharpe and fierce, in the field bold and hardy, and nathelesſe no further than wiſedome would, aduenturous, whoſe wars who ſo well conſider, hee ſhall no leſſe commend his wiſedome where he voyded, than his manhod where he vanquiſhed. He was of viſage louely, of bodie mightie, ſtrong, and cleane made: howbeit in his latter daies with ouer liberall diet, ſomewhat corpulent and bowzely, and nathelesſe not vncomely: he was of youth greatly giuen to fleſhly wantonneſſe; from which, health of body in great proſperitie and fortune, without a ſpeciall grace hardly refraineth.

This fault not greatly grieued the people: for neither could any one mans pleaſure ſtretch and extend to the diſpleaſure of very many, and was without violence, and ouer that, in his latter daies leſſed and well left. In which time of his latter daies, this realm was in quiet and proſperous eſtate, no feare of outward enemies, no war in hand, nor none toward, but ſuch as no man loked for: the people toward the prince, not in a conſtrained feare, but in a willing and louing obedience: among themſelues, the commons in good peace. The lords whom he knew at variance, himſelfe in his death bed appeaſed: he had left all gathering of money (which is the only thing that withdraweth the harts of Engliſhmen from the Prince) nor any thing intended he to take in hand, by which he ſhould be driuen thereto: for his tribute out of France he had before Tribute. obtained: and the yeere foregoing his death, he had obtained Berwike. And albeit, that all ỹ time of his raigne he was with his people, ſo benigne, ſo courteous, and ſo familiar, that no part of his vertues was more eſteemed: yet the condition, in the end of his daies (in which many princes by a long continued ſoueraignтie, decline into a prowd port from debonaire behauiour of their beginning) maruellouſly in him grew and increaſed: ſo far forth, that in ſummer the laſt that euer he ſaw, his highneſſe being at Windſore in hunting, ſent for the maior and aldermen of London, to him for none other errand, but to haue them hunt and be merry with him, where he made them not ſo ſtately, but ſo friendly and ſo familiar cheare, and ſent veniſon from thence ſo freely into the city, that no one thing in many daies before, gat him either mo harts or more hartie fauor amongſt the common people, which oftentimes more eſteeme and take for greater kindnes, a little courteſie, than a great benefit. So deceaſed (as I haue ſaid) this noble king, in ỹ time, in which his life was moſt deſired: whoſe loue of his people, and their entire affection toward him, had bin to his noble children, (hauing in themſelues alſo as many gifts of nature, as many princely vertues, as much godly towardnes as their age could receiue) a marueilous fortreſſe and ſure armor, if diuiſion & diſſention of their friends had not vnarmed them, and left them deſtitute, and the execrable deſire of ſoueraignty prouoked him to their deſtruction, which if either kind or kindneſſe had holden place, muſt néedes haue béene their chiefe defence. For Richard the D. of Gloceſter, by nature their vncle, by office their protector, to their father beholden, to themſelues by othe and allegiance bounden, all bands broken that binden man and man together, without any reſpect of God or the world, vnnaturally contriued to bereaue them, not only of their dignitie, but alſo their liues.

But forasmuch as this dukes demeanor ministreth in effect all the whole matter whereof this Booke shall entreat, it is therefore conuenient, somewhat to shew you ere we farther go, what maner of man this was, that could find in his heart so much mischiefe to conceiue.

Richarde duke of Yorke.

Richard duke of Yorke, a noble man and a mightie, began not by war, but by law to chalenge the crowne, putting his claime into ỹ parliament, where his cause was either for right or fauor so farre forth aduanced, that king Henry his blood (albeit he had a goodlie prince) vtterlie reiected, the crowne was by authoritie of parliament entailed to the duke of Yorke and his issue male in remainder, immediatlie after the death of king Henry. But the duke not enduring so long to tarrie, but intending vnder pretext of dissention and debate arising in the realme, to prenent his time, and to take vpon him the rule in king Henry his life, was with manie nobles of the realme at Wakefield slaine, leauing 3. sonnes, Edward, George, and Richard. All three as they were great States of birth, so were they great and stately of stomacke, greedy and ambitious of authoritie, and impatient of partners: Edward reuenging his fathers death, deposed king Henry, and attained the crowne: George duke of Clarence, was a goodlie noble Prince, and at all points fortunate, if either his owne ambition had not set him against his brother, or the enuie of his enimies his brother against him. For were it by the queene and lords of her blood which highly maligned the kings kinred (as women commonly not of malice, but of nature hate them whome their husbands loue) or were it a proud appetite of the Duke himselfe, intending to be king: at least wise heinous treason was there laide to his charge, and finallie, were he faulty, were he faultles, attainted was he by parliament, and iudged to death, and therupon hastily drowned in a But of malmsey, whose death K. Edward (albeit he commanded it) when he wist it was done, pitifully bewailed, and sorrowfully repented.

Edward.

George duke of Clarence.

The description of Richarde the third.

Richard the 3. son, of whome we now intreat, was in wit and courage egall with either of them, in body and prowesse far vnder them both, little of stature, ill featured of lims, croke backed, his left shoulder much higher than his right, hard fauored of visage, and such as is in states called warrely, in other men otherwise: he was malicious, wrathfull, enuious, and from afore his birth euer froward. It is for trueth reported, that the dutchesse his mother had so much ado in her trauell, that she could not bee deliuered of him vncut, and that hee came into the world with the feete forwarde, as men bee borne outwarde, and (as the fame runneth) also not vntothed, whether men of hatred report aboue the trueth, or else that nature chaunged her course in his beginning, which in the course of his life many thinges vnnaturallie committed. No euill Captaine was he in the war, as to which his disposition was more meetly, than for peace: sundry victories had he, and sometimes ouerthrowes, but neuer in default as for his owne person, either of hardinesse or politike order: free was hee called of dispence, and somewhat aboue his power liberall: with large giftes he gat him vnstedfast friendshippe, for which hee was fayne to pill and spoyle in other places, and gette him stedfaste hatred. He was close and secrete, a deepe dissembler, lowly of countenance, arrogant of heart, outwardly coumptinable

there he inwardly hated, not letting to kille whom he thought to kill: dispiteous and cruel, not for euill will alway, but often for ambition, and either for the surety or increase of his estate. Friend and foe was much what indifferent, where his aduantage grew: he spared no mans death, whose life withstode his purpose. He slew with his owne hands king Henry the sixt, being prisoner in the tower, as men constantly said, and that without commandement or knowledge of the K. which would vndoubtedly, if he had intended that thing, haue appointed that butcherly office to some other, than his owne borne brother. The death of king Henry the sixte.

Some wise men also weene, that his drift couertly conueyed, lacked not in helping forth his brother of Clarence to his death: which he resisted openly, howbeit somewhat (as men deemed) more faintly, than he that were heartily minded to his wealth. And they that thus deeme, thinke that hee long time in K. Edwards life, forethought to be king, in case that the king his brother (whose life he loked that euill died should shorten) should happen to decease (as indeed he did) while his children were yong. And they deeme, that for this intent hee was glad of his brothers death the duke of Clarence, whose life must needes haue hindered him so intending, whether the same duke of Clarence had kept him true to his nephew the yong king, or enterprised to be king himselfe. But of all this point, is there no certainty, & who so diuineth vpon coniectures, may as well shote too far as too short. Howbeit this haue I by credible information learned, that the selfe night in which K. Edward died, one Mistlebrooke long ere morning, came in great haste to the house of one Pottier dwelling in red Crosse streete without Cripplegate in London: and when he was with hastie rapping quickly letten in, he shewed vnto Pottier that king Edward was departed. By my truth man, quoth Pottier, then will my master the duke of Glocester be king. What cause he had so to thinke hard it is to say, whether he being toward him, any thing knew that he had such thing purposed, or otherwise had any inkling thereof: for he was not likely to speake it of nought. Reports vncertaine as spoken of hate, or affection.

But now to returne to the course of this history. Were it that the Duke of Glocester had of old fore-minded this conclusion, and was now at erst thereunto moued, and put in hope by ẏ occasion of the tender age of the yong princes his nephews (as opportunity and likelihood of speede, putteth a man in courage of that he neuer intended) certaine it is, that he continued their destruction, with the vsurpation of the regall dignity vpon himselfe. And forasmuch as, he well wist, and holpe to maintaine a long continued grudge & hart-burning betweene the queens kinred, and the kings bloud, either party enuying others authority, he now thought their diuision should be (as it was indeed) a furtherly beginning to the pursute of his intent, and a sure ground for the foundation of all his building, if he might first, vnder the pretext of reuenging old displeasure, abuse the anger and ignorance of the one partie, to the destruction of the other, and then winne to his purpose as many as hee could, and those that could not be won, might be lost ere they loked therefore: for of one thing was he certaine, that if his intent were perceiued, he should sone haue made peace betweene both the parties with his owne bloud.

somewhat irked him: yet in his good health he somewhat the lesse regarded it, because he thought whatsoeuer busines should fall betweene them, himselfe should alway be able to rule both the parties. But in his last sickenes, when he perceiued his natural strength so sore enfeebled, that he despaired al recouery, then he considering the youth of his children, albeit he nothing lesse mistrusted than that that happened; yet wel foreseeing that many harmes might grow by their debate, while the youth of his children should lacke discretion of themselues, and good counsell of their friends, of which either party should counsell for their owne commoditie, and rather by pleasant aduise to win themselues fauour, than by profitable aduertisement to do his children good, he called some of them before him that were at variance, and in especiall the Lord Marques Dorset, the queenes son by her first husband, & William the lord Hastings a noble man then lord Chamberlaine, against whom the queene specially grudged, for the great fauour the king bare him: and also for that she thought him secretly familiar with the king in wanton company. Her kinred also bare him sore, as well for that the king had made him captaine of Calais, which office the Lord Riuers brother to the queene claimed of the kings former promise, as for diuers other great gifts which he receiued, that they loked for. When these lords with diuers of both the parties were come in presence, the K. lifting vp himselfe and vnderset with pillowes, as it is reported, on this wise saide vnto them:

The oration of the king in his death bed.

My lords, my deere kinsmen and alies, in what plight I lie, you see, and I feele. By which, the lesse while I loke to liue with you, the more deepely am I moued to care in what case I leaue you, for such as I leaue you, such bee my children like to find you. Which if they should (that God forbid) find you at variance, might hap to fall themselues at war, ere their discretion would serue to set you at peace; yee see their youth, of which I reckon the onely suretie to rest in your concord: For it sufficeth not, that all you loue them, if each of you hate other. If they were men, your faithfulnes happily would suffice: but childhood must be maintained by mens authority, & slipper youth vnderpropped with elder counsell, which neither they can haue, but ye giue it; nor ye giue it, if ye grée not. For where eche laboreth to breake that the other maketh, & for hatred of eche of others person, impugneth eche others counsell, there must it néedes be long ere any good conclusion go forward. And also while either party laboreth to be chiefe, flatterie shall haue more place than plaine and faithfull aduise, of which must néeds insue the euil bringing vp of the prince, whose mind in tender youth infect, shal readily fal to mischiefe & riot, and draw down with his noble realme to ruine: but if grace turne him to wisedome, which if God send, then they that by euill means before pleased him best, shall after fall furthest out of fauor, so that euer at length euill drifts draw to nought, and good plaine waies prosper. Great variance hath there long bin betweén you, not alway for great causes: sometime a thing right wel intended, our misconstruction turneth vnto worse, or a smal displeasure don vs, either our own affection or euill tongs agreueth. But this wot I well, ye neuer had so great cause of hatred, as ye haue of loue: That we be all men, that we be christian men, this shall I leaue for preachers to tell you (& yet I wot nére whether any preachers words ought more to moue you, than his that is by and by going to the place that they all preach of.) But this shal I desire you to remember, that the one part of you is of my blood, the other of mine alies, & ech of you with other either of kinred or affinity, which spirituall kinred of affinitie, if the sacraments of Christs church beare that weight with vs, that would god they did, should no lesse moue vs to charitie, than the respect of fleshly consanguinity. Our Lord forbid, that you loue togither the worse for the selfe cause that you ought to loue the better: and yet that happeth, and no where find we so deadly debate, as among them, which by nature & law most ought to agree togither. Such a pestilent serpent is ambition, and desire of vainglorie and soueraignty, which among states where he once entreth, creepeth forth so far, till with diuision and variance bee turneth all to mischiefe, first longing to be next the best, afterward equall with the best, and at last chiefe and aboue the best. Of which immoderate appetite of worship, and thereby of debate & dissention, what losse, what sorrow, what trouble hath within these few yeres growen in this realme, I pray God as well forget, as we wel remember. Which things if I could as wel haue foreseen, as I haue with my more paine than pleasure proued, by Gods blessed lady (that was euer his othe) I would neuer haue won the courtesie of mens knees, with the losse of so many heads. But sith things passed cannot be gainecalled, much ought we the more beware, by what occasion we haue taken so great hurt afore, that we occasions fall not in that occasion againe. Now be those griefes passed, and all is (God be thanked) quiet, and likely right well to prosper in wealthfull peace vnder your cousins my children, if God send them life, and you loue. Of which two things, the lesse losse were they, by whom though God did his pleasure, yet should the realme alway finde kings, and peraduenture as good kings: but if you among your selues in a childes raign fall at debate, many a good man shal perish, and happily he too, and ye too, ere this land find peace againe. Wherfore in these last words that euer I woke to speake with you, I exhort you and require you all, for the loue that you haue euer borne to me: for the loue that I haue euer borne vnto you: for the loue that our lord beareth to vs all, from this time forward all griefes forgotten, ech of you loue other. Which I verely trust you will, if ye any thing eathly regard, either God or your king, affinitie or kinred, this realme your owne countrey, or your owne suretie. And therwithall the king no longer induring to sit vp, laid him downe on his right side, his face toward them: and none was there present that could refraine from weeping. But the Lords recomforting him with as good words as they could, and answering for the time as they thought to stand with his pleasure, here in his presence, as by their words appeared, ech forgaue other, and ioyned their hands togither, when (as it after appeared by their deedes) their harts were far asunder. As soone as the king was departed, the noble prince his son drew toward London, which at the time of his decease kept his houshold at Ludlowe in Wales, which countrey being far off from the law and recourse to iustice, was begun to be far out of good will, and waxen wilde robbers and reuers, walking at liberty vncorrected. Ambition.

And for this encheason the prince was in the life of his father sent thither, to the end that the authoritie of his presence, should refraine euill disposed persons fro the boldnes of their former outrages. To the gouernance and ordering of this yong Prince at his sending thither, was there appointed sir Anthonie Wooduile Lorde Riuers, and brother vnto the Quéene, a right honorable man, as valiant of hand, as politike in counsell. Adioined were there vnto him other of the same partie, and in effect euerie one as he was nérest of kinne vnto the Quéene, so was planted nert about the Prince.

Lord Riuers.

That drift by the Quéene not vnwiselie deuised, whereby her blod might of youth be rooted in the princes fauour, the duke of Gloucester turned vnto their destruction, and vpon that grounde set the foundation of all his vnhappie building. For whomesoeuer he perceiued either at variance with them, or bearing himselfe their fauor, he brake vnto thē, some by mouth, some by writing & secret messengers, that it was neither reason, nor in anie wise to bee suffered, that the yong king their maister and kinsman, should be in the hands and custodye of his mothers kinred, sequestred in maner from their company and attendāce, of which euerie one ought him as faythfull seruice as they, and manie of them far more honorable part of kin then his mothers side. Whose blod (quoth he) sauing the kings pleasure, was full vnmetely to be matched with his: which now to be as who saie remoued from the king, and the lesse noble to bee left about him, is (quoth he) neither honorable to his maiestie, nor vnto vs, and also to his grace no suretie, to haue the mightiest of his friends from him, and vnto vs no little ieopardie, to suffer our well proued euill willers to growe in ouer great authority with the prince in youth, namely which is light of beléefe & soone perswaded. Yée remember I trow king Edwarde himselfe, albeit hee was a man of age and discretion, yet was he in many things ruled by the bend, more then stood either with his honour, or our profit, or with the commoditie of anie man els, except only the immoderat aduancement of themselues. Which whether they sorer thirsted after their owne weale, or our woe, it were hard I weene to gesse. And if some folks friendship had not holden better place with the king, then anie respect of kinred, they might peraduenture easilie haue betrapped and brought to confusion some of vs ere this. Why not as easily as they haue done some other alreadie, as nére of his roiall blod as wee? But our Lorde hath wrought his will, and thanks be to his grace that perill is past. Howbeit as great is growing, if we suffer this yong king in our enimies hande, which without his witting might abuse the name of his commandement, to anie of our vndoing, which thing God and good prouision forbid.

Of which good prouision none of vs hath anie thing the lesse néede, for the late made attonement, in which the kings pleasure had more place then the parties wils: nor none of vs, I beléeue, is so vnwise ouer soone to trust a new friende made of an old foe, or to thinke ỳ an howerly kindnes, suddenly contract in one hower, continued yet scant a fortnight, should be déeper setled in their stomack, then a long accustomed malice manie yéeres rooted. With these wordes and writings and such other, the duke of Gloucester some-set a fire them that were of themselues eath to kindle, and in especiall twaine, Edwarde Duke of Buckingham, and William lord Hastings and chamberlaine, both men of honor and of great power: The tone by long succession from his ancestry; the other by his office, and the kings fauor.

These two not bearing each to other so much loue, as hatred both vnto the Quénes part, in this point accorded togither with the duke of Glocester, that they would vtterly amoue from the kings company all his mothers friendes, vnder the name of their enimies.

Vpon this concluded, the duke of Glocester vnderstanding that the Lords which at that time were about the king, intended to bring him vp to his coronation, accompanied with such power of their friends, that it should be harde for him to bring his purpose to passe, without the gathering a great assemble of people, and in maner of open war, whereof the end hee will was doubtfull, and in which the king being on their side, his parte should haue the face and name of a rebellion: he secretlie therefore by diuers meanes caused the quéene to be perswaded and brought in the minde, that it neither were néede, and also should be ieopardous, the king to come vp strong. For whereas nowe euerie Lord loued other, and none other thing studied vpon, but about the coronation and honor of the King; if the Lords of her kinred should assemble in the kings name much people, they shoulde giue the Lordes atwixt whome and them had béene sometime debate, to feare and suspect, least they should gather this people not for the kings safegarde, whome no man impugned, but for their destruction, hauing more regarde to their old variance, then their new attonement: for which cause they shoulde assemble on the other partie much people againe for their defence, whose power shee will well farre stretched. And thus shoulde all the Realme fall on a roze. And of all the hurt that thereof should ensue, which was likely not to be little, and the most harme there like to fall where the least would, all the world woulde put her and her kinred in the wight, and saye that they had vnwisely and vntruly also broken the amitie and peace, that the king her husband so prudently made betwéene his kin and hirs in his death bed, and which the other party faithfully obserued.

The Quéene being in this wise perswaded, such wordes sent vnto her sonne, and vnto her brother, being about the king, and ouer that the Duke of Glocester himselfe and other Lords the chiefe of his bende, wrote vnto the king so reuerentlie, and to the quénes friends there so louinglie, that they nothing earthlie mistrusting, brought the king vp in a great haste, not in good spéed, with a sober companie. Now was the king in his waie to London gone from Northampton, when the dukes of Glocester and Buckingham came thither, where remained behind the Lord Riuers the kings vncle, intending on the morowe to follow the king, and be with him at Stony Stratford, twelue miles thence, earlyere he departed. So was there made that night much friendly chére betwéen these two dukes and the lord Riuers a greate while: But incontinent after that they were openlie with great curtesie departed and the Lord Riuers lodged, the dukes secretlie with a fewe of their most priuie friendes, sette them downe in Councell, wherein they spent a great part of the night: and at their rising in the dawning of the daie, they sent out priuilie to their seruants in their Innes and Lodginges about, giuing them commaundemente, to make themselues shortly readie, for their Lords were to horse backe warde. Upon which messages, manie of their folke were attendant, when manie of the Lorde Riuers seruants were vnreadie. Nowe had these Dukes taken also into their custodie the keies of the Inne, that none should passe forth without their licence: And ouer this, in the high waie toward Stonie Stratford where the king laie, they had bestowed certaine of their folke, that should send backe againe, and compell to returne anie man that were gotten out of Northampton towarde Stonie Stratforde, till they shoulde giue other licence: For as much as the dukes themselues intended for the shew of their diligence, to bee the first that should that day attend vpon the kings highnes out of that Towne: thus bare they folke in hand. But when the Lorde Riuers vnderstood the gates closed, and the waies on euery side beset, neither his seruants nor himselfe suffered to go out, perceiuing well so great a thing without his knowledge not begunne for naught, comparing this maner present, with his last nightes cheere, in so fewe howers so great a change, marueilouslie misliked. Howbeit, sith hee coulde not get awaie, and kéepe himselfe close he would not, least hee should seeme to hide himselfe for some secret feare of his owne fault', whereof he sawe no such cause in himselfe: he determined vpon the surette of his owne conscience, to go boldly to them, and inquire what this matter might meane: whom as sone as they saw, they began to quarrell with him, and say, that he intended to set distance betweene the king & them, and to bring them to confusion, but it shoulde not lie in his power. And when he began (as he was a very wel spoken man) in goodly wise to excuse himselfe, they tarried not the ende of his answeare, but shortlie toke him, and put him in ward: and that done, forthwith went to horsebacke, and toke the waie to Stony Stratforde, where they founde the king with his company, ready to leape on horsebacke, and depart forwarde to leaue that lodging for them, because it was too streight for both companies. And as sone as they came in his presence, they alight downe with all their companie about them: To whome the duke of Buckingham said, go afore gentlemen, and yeomen kéepe your romes.

And thus in goodlie arraie they came to the king, and on their knées in verie humble wise salued his grace, which receiued them in very louous and amiable maner, nothing euthly knowing nor mistrusting as yet: But euen by & by in his presence they picked a quarrell to the Lorde Richard Grey, the kings other brother by his mother, saying, that he with the Lord Marques his brother, and the Lord Riuers his vncle had compassed to rule the king and the realme, and to set variance among the states, and to subdue and destroy the noble blod of the realme: Toward the accomplishing whereof, they said that the Lord Marques had entred into the tower of London, and thence taken out the kings treasure, and sent men to the Sea.

All which thinges these dukes well wist were done for good purposes and necessarie, by the whole councell at London, sauing that somewhat they must say. Vnto which words the king answered: What my brother Marques hath done I cannot say: but in good faith I dare well aunswere for mine vncle Riuers and my brother heere, that they bee innocent of any such matter. Yea my Liege, quoth quoth the duke of Buckingham, they haue kept their dealing in these matters farre from the knowledge of your good grace. And forthwith they arrested the Lorde Richarde and Sir Thomas Vaughan knight in the kinges presence, and brought the king and all backe vnto Northampton, where they tooke againe further counsell: And there they sent awaie from the king whome it pleased them, and set new seruants about him, such as liked better them then him: at which dealing he wept, and was nothing content, but it boted not. And at dinner, the duke of Glocester sent a dish from his owne table to the Lorde Riuers, praying him to be of good chéere, all should be well enough: and he thanked the duke, and praied the messenger to beare it to his nephew the L. Richard, with the same message for his comfort, as one to whom such aduersitie was strange, but himselfe had béene all his daies in vre therewith, and therefore could beare it the better. But for all this comfortable curtesie of the duke of Glouceſter, he sent the Lord Riuers and the Lord Richard, with Sir Thomas Vaughan, vnto the North country, into diuers places to prison, and afterwarde all to Pontfract, where they were in conclusion beheaded. The death of the Lord Riuers and others.

In this wise the duke of Glouceſter tooke vpon him selfe the order and gouernance of the yong king, whome with much honor and humble reuerence hee conueied vpward toward the citie. But anone the tidings of this matter came hastily to the Quéene a little before the midnight following, and that in the worst wise, that the king her son was taken, her brother, her sonne, and other friends arrested, and sent no man wist whither, to be don with, God wot what. With which tidings, the Quéene in great fright and beauines bewailing her childes raigne, her friendes mischance, and her owne infortune, damning the time that euer she dissuaded the gathering of power about the king, gate her selfe in all the hast possible with her yonger son and her daughters, out of the palace of Westminster, in which she then lay, into the sanctuarie, lodging her selfe and her company there in the abbots place. The Queene taketh sanuarie.

Now came there one likewise not long after midnight from the lord Chamberlaine, vnto the Archbyshop of Yorke then Chancellor of Englande, to his place not far from Westminster: And for that he shewed his seruants that he had tidings of so great importance, that his master gaue him in charge, not to forbeare his rest, they letted not to wake him, nor be to admit this messenger vnto his bed side. Of whome he heard that these dukes were gone backe with the kings grace from Stony Stratford vnto Northampton: Notwithstanding sir (quoth he) my Lord sendeth your Lordship word, that there is no feare, for he assureth you that all shall be well. I assure him, quoth the Archbishop, bee it as well as it will, it will neuer bee so well as we haue séene it: and thereupon by and by after the messenger departed; he caused in all the haste all his seruants to be called vppe, and so with his owne houshold about him, and euerie man weaponed, he tooke the great seale with him, and came yet before daie vnto the Quéene. About whome he found much heauinesse, rumble, haste, and busines, carriage and conueiance of her stuffe into sanctuarie, chests, coffers, packs, fardels, trussed all on mens backs, no man vnoccupied, some lading, some going, some discharging, some comming for more, some breaking downe the wals to bring in the next way, and some yet drewe to them to helpe to carry a wrong way.

The Quéene her selfe sate alone alowe on the rushes all desolate and dismaied, whome the archbishop comforted in the best manner he could, shewing her that he trusted the matter was nothing so sore as she tooke it for, and that he was put in good hope and out of feare by the message sent him from the lord Chamberlaine: Ah woo worth him (quoth she) for he is one of them that laboureth to destroy me and my blood.

Joh. Annius de Viterbo famous for palming false pieces of Antiquity on ye world flor. abt this time.

Madam (quoth he) be yee of good chéere, for I assure you, if they crowne any other king than your sonne, whom they now haue with them, we shall on the morrow crowne his brother whom you haue héere with you. And héere is the great seale, which in like wise as that noble prince your husband deliuered it vnto me, so here I deliuer it vnto you, to the vse and behoofe of your sonne, and therewith he betooke her the great seale, and departed home againe, yet in the dawning of the day. By which time, he might in his chamber window see all the Thamis full of boates of the duke of Glocesters seruants, watching that no man should go to sanctuary, nor none could passe vnsearched: Then was there great commotion and murmur, as well in other places about, as specially in the citie, the people diuersly diuining vpon this dealing. And some lords, knights, and gentlemen, either for fauor of the Quéene, or for feare of themselues, assembled in sundry companies, and went flockemeale in harnesse: and many also, for that they reckoned this demeanor attempted, not so specially against the other lords, as against the king himselfe in ỹ disturbance of his coronation. But then by and by the lordes assembled together, toward which méeting, the archbishop of Yorke fearing that it would be ascribed (as it was in déede) to his ouermuch lightnes, that he so sodainly had péelded vp the great seale to the Quéene, to whome the custodie thereof nothing pertained, without speciall commandement of the king, secretly sent for the seale againe, and brought it with him after the customable maner. And at this méeting, the Lorde Hastings, whose truth toward the king, no man doubted nor néeded to doubt, perswaded the lords to beléeue, that the duke of Glocester was sure and fastly faithfull to his prince, and that the lord Riuers and lord Richard, with the other knights, were for matters attempted by them against ỹ dukes of Glocester and Buckingham, put vnder arrest for their surety, not for the kings ieopardy: and that they were also in safeward, & there no longer should remaine than till the matter were, not by the dukes only, but also by all the other lords of the kings councell indifferently examined, and by other discretions ordered, and either iudged or appeased.

But one thing he aduised them beware, that they iudged not the matter to far forth ere they knew the truth, nor turning their priuate grudges into the common hurt, irking & prouoking men vnto anger, and disturbing the kings coronation, toward which the dukes were comming vp, that they might peraduenture bring the matter so far out of ioint, that it should neuer be brought in frame againe. Which strife if it should happen, as it were likely, to come to a fielde, though both parties were in all things equall, yet should the authority be on that side where the king is himselfe. With these perswasions of the lord Hastings, whereof part himselfe beléeued, of part hee wist the contrarie, these commotions were somewhat appeased, but specially by that, that the dukes of Glocester and Buckingham were so néere, and came so shortly on with the king, in none other maner, with none other voice or semblance than to his coronation, causing the fame to be blowen about, that these lords and knightes which were taken, had contriued the destruction of the dukes of Glocester and Buckingham, and of other the noble blood of the realme, to the end that themselues would alone demeane and gouerne the king at their pleasure.

And for the colourable purpose thereof, such of the dukes seruants as rode with the carts of their stuffe that were taken (among which stuffe no maruel though some were harnesse, which at the breaking vp of the houshold, must néeds either be brought away, or cast away) they shewed vnto the people all the waies as they went: Lo here bee the barrels of harnesse that these traitors had priuily conueied in their carriage to destroy the noble lords withall.

This deuice, albeit that it made the matter to wise men more vnlikely, well perceiuing that the intenders of such a purpose would rather haue had their harnesse on their backs, than to haue bound them vp in barrels: yet much part of the common people were therwith very wel satisfied, and said it were almes to hang them.

When the king approched néere to the city, Edmond Shaa Goldsmith then Maior, with William White and Iohn Matthew Sheriffes, and all the other Aldermen in scarlet, with 500. horse of the citizens in violet, receiued him reuerently at Harnsey, and riding from thence, accompanied him into the citie, which he entred the fourth day of May, the first and last yéere of his raigne. The kings coming to London.

The king was lodged in the Bishops palace, where was kept a great councell, and there was sworne to the king, the duke of Glocester, the duke of Buckingham, and all the lords.

But the duke of Glocester bare him in open sight so reuerently to the prince, with all semblance of lowlines, that from the great obloquie in which he was so late before, hee was suddenly fallen in so great trust, that at the councell next assembled, he was made the onely man, chose and thought most mete to be protector of the king and his realme, so that (were it destiny, or were it folly) the lambe was betaken to the wolfe to kéepe. At which councell also, the Archbishop of Yorke Chancellor of England, which had deliuered vp the great seale to the Quéene, was thereof greatly reproued, and the seale taken from him, and deliuered to doctor Russell bishop of Lincolne, a wise man and a good, and of much experience, and one of the best learned men vndoubtedly that England had in his time. Diuers lords and knights were appointed vnto diuers rowmes. The Lorde Chamberlaine and some other kept still their offices that they had before. The protector made. The bishop of Lincolne made lord Chancellor.

Now all were it, so that the protector so sore thirsted for the finishing of that he had begun, that thought euery day a yeare till it were atchieued, yet durst he no further attempt, as long as he had but halfe his pray in his hand: wel witting, that if he deposed the one brother, all the realme would fall to the other, if he

he either remained in sanctuarie, or should happilie be shortlie conueied to his farther libertie. Wherefore, incontinent at the next meeting of the Lords at the councell, he proposed vnto them, that it was a hainous deed of the Queene, and procéeding of great malice toward the kings Counceliers, that she should kéepe in Sanctuarie the kinges brother from him, whose spectall pleasure and comforte were to haue his brother with him. And that by her done to none other intent, but to bring all the Lordes in obloquie, and murmure of the people: as though they were not to be trusted with the kings brother, that by the assent of the nobles of the land, were appointed as the kings neerest friends, to the tuition of his owne roiall person. The prosperity whereof standeth (quoth he) not all in kéeping from enimies, or ill viand, but partlie also in recreation, and moderate pleasure, which he cannot in his tender youth take in the companie of ancient persons, but in the familiar conuersation of those that be neither far vnder, nor far aboue his age, nay the lesse of estate conuenient to accompanie his noble maiestie, wherefore, with whome rather, then with his owne brother? And if anie man thinke this consideration (which I thinke no man thinketh that loueth the king) let him consider, that somtime without small things, greater cannot stand. And verily, it redoundeth greatly to the dishonor both of the kings highnes, and of all vs that béene about his grace, to haue it run in euerie mans mouth, not in this Realme onelie, but also in other lands (as euill words walke far) that the kings brother should be faine to kéepe sanctuary. For euery man will wéene, that no man will so do for nought. And such euill opinion once fastened in mens harts, hard it is to wrest out, and many grow to more griefe then any man can here diuine: wherefore me thinketh it were not worst to send vnto the Queene for the redresse of this matter, some honorable trustie man, such as both tendereth the kings weale, and the honor of his councell, and is also in fauour and credence with her. For all which considerations, none séemeth me more méetelie, then our reuerende father here present, my Lorde Cardinall, who may in this matter do most good of anie man, if it please him to take the paine, which I doubt not of his goodnesse hee will not refuse for the kings sake and ours, and wealth of the yong duke himselfe, the kings most honorable brother, and after my soueraigne Lorde himselfe, my most déere Nephew, considered that thereby shall be ceased the slanderous rumour and obloquie now going, and the hurts auoided that thereof might ensue, and much rest and quiet growe to all the realme. And if she be percase so obstinate, and so precisely set vpon her own wil, that neither his wise & faithful aduertisement cannot moue her, nor any mans reason content her: then shall we by mine aduise, by the kings authoritie, fetch him out of that prison, and bring him to his noble presence, in whose continuall companie he shall be so well cherished, & so honorably intreated, that all the world shall to our honor and her reproch perceiue, that it was only malice, frowardnes, or folly that caused her to kéepe him there: this is my mind in this matter for this time, except anie of your Lordshippes anie thing perceiue to the contrary, for neuer shall I by GODS grace so wed my selfe to mine owne will, but that I shall be ready to chaunge it vpon your better aduises.

When

When the protector had said, all the Councell affirmed, that the motion was good and reasonable, and to the king and the Duke his brother, honorable, and a thing that should cease great murmure in the Realme, if the mother might be by good meanes induced to deliuer him. Which thing the Archbishoppe of Yorke, whome they all agréed also to bee thereto most conuenient, toke vpon him to moue her, and therein to doo his vttermost deuoire. Howbeit, if shee could be in no wise intreated with her good will to deliuer him, then thought he and such other as were of the spiritualty present, that it were not in any wise to be attempted to take him out against her will. For it woulde bee a thing that should turne to the great grudge of all men, and high displeasure of God, if the priuiledge of that holy place should now be broken, which had so many yeares béene kept, which both kings and popes so good had granted, so manie had confirmed, and which holy ground was more then 500. yéares agoe by S. Peter in his own person in spirit accompanied with great multitude of angels by night so specially hallowed, and dedicate to God (for the proofe whereof, they haue yet in the abbey, Saint Peters Cope to shew) that from that time hitherward, was there neuer so vndeuout a king, that durst that sacred place violate, or so holie a bishop, that durst it presume to consecrate. And therefore (quoth the Archbyshop of Yorke) god forbid that any man should for any thing earthly enterprise to breake the immunitie and liberty of the sacred sanctuarie, that hath béene the safegard of so many a good mans life. And I trust (quoth he) with Gods grace, we shall not nede it. But for any maner néed, I would not we should doo it. I trust that she shall be with reason contented, and all thinges in good maner obtained. And if it happē that I bring it not so to passe, yet shall I toward it so far forth do my best, that ye shall all well perceiue, that no lacke of my deuoire, but the mothers dread and womanish feare, shall be the let. Womanish feare, naie womanish frowardnes (quoth the D. of Buckingham) for I dare take it vpon my soule, she well knoweth she nedeth no such thing to feare, either for her son or for hir selfe. For as for hir, here is no man that will bee at war with women: Would God som of the men of hir kin were women to, and then should all be sone in rest. Howbeit there is none of hir kinne the lesse loued, for that they be hir kin, but for their owne euill deseruing. And natheles, if wee loued neither hir nor hir kin, yet were there no cause to thinke that we should hate the kings noble brother, to whose grace we our selues be of kin: whose honour, if shee as much desired, as our dishonor, & as much regard toke to his wealth, as to her owne will, she would bee as loth to suffer him from the King as anie of vs bee. For if she haue wit (as would God she had as good wil as she hath shrewd wit) shee reckoneth herselfe no wiser, then she thinketh some that bee heere, of whose faithfull mind she nothing doubteth, but verily beléeueth and knoweth, that they would be as sory of his harme, as hir selfe, & yet would haue him from her, if she bide there: and we al (I thinke) content, that both be with hir, if she come thence, and bide in such place, where they may with their honor be.

Sanctuary.

Now then, if she refuse in the deliuerance of him, to follow the counsaile of them, whose wisedome shee knoweth, whose truth shee well trusteth: it is eathe to perceiue, that frowardnes letteth her, and not feare. But go to, suppose that the feare (as who may let her to feare her owne shadowe) the more shee feareth to deliuer him, the more ought we feare to leaue him in her hands. For if she cast such fond doubts, that she feare his hurt: then will she feare, that he shall be fetcht thence. For she will some thinke, that if men were set (which god forbid) vpon so great a mischiefe, the Sanctuarie would little let them: which good men might (as me thinketh) without sinne, somewhat lesse regard than they doe.

she

Now then, if she doubt, least he might be fetched from her, is it not likelie ynough that she shall send him some where out of the Realme? Verily, I looke for none other. And I doubt not, but she now as sore mindeth it, as we she let therof. And if she might happen to bring that to passe, (as it were no great maistrie, we letting her alone) all the worlde would say, that we were a wise sort of Counsailours about a king, that let his brother be cast awaie vnder our noses. And therefore, I ensure you faithfully for my mind, I will rather maugre her minde, fetch him awaie, than leaue him there, till her frowardnesse and fonde feare conueie him awaie. And yet will I breake no Sanctuarie therefore. For verely, sith the priuiledges of that place and other like haue béene of long continued, I am not he that would be about to breake them. And in good faith, if they were now to begin, I would not be he that should bee about to make them.

Yet will I not saie naie, but that it is a déede of pittie, that such men as the sea, or their euill debtours haue brought in pouertie, should haue some place of libertie, to kéepe their bodies out of the daunger of their cruell creditours.

And also, if the crowne happen (as it hath done) to come in question while either part taketh other as traitors, I will well there be some places of refuge for both.

But as for théeues, of which these places be full, and which neuer fall from the craft, after they once fall thereto, it is pittie the Sanctuarie should serue them: And much more, manquellers, whome God bad to take from the Altar and kill them, if their murther were wilfull. And where it is otherwise, there nede wee not the Sanctuaries that God appointed in the olde lawe. For if either necessitie, his owne defence, or misfortune driueth him to that déede, a pardon serueth, which either the law granteth of course, or the king of pitie maie.

Then looke me now how few Sanctuarie men there be, whom anie fauourable necessitie compelled to go thither: and then sée on the other side, what a sort there be commonly therein of them, whom wilfull vnthriftinesse hath brought to naught.

Westminster and Saint Martins.

What a rabble of théeues, murtherers, and malicious haynous traitors, and that in two places specially? The tone at the elbow of the citie, the tother in the verie bowels. I dare well auow it, weye the good that they doe, with the hurt that commeth of them, and ye shall finde it much better to lacke both, than haue both. And this I saie, although they were not abused as they now be, and so long haue béene, that I feare me euer they will be, while men be afraid to set their

their hands to the mendment, as though God and S. Peter were the patrons of vngratious liuing.

Now vnthriftes riot, and run in debt, vpon the boldnes of these places, yea, and rich men run thither with poore mens goods, there they builde, there they spend, and bid their creditours go whistle them. The abuse of Sanctuaries.

Yens wiues run thither with their husbands plate, and saie, they dare not abide with their husbands for beating.

Theues bring thither their stollen goods, and there liue thereon.

There deuise they newe robberies, nightly they steale out, they robbe, and reaue, and kill, and come in againe, as though those places gaue them not only a safegard for the harme they haue done, but a licence also to do more. Howbeit, much of this mischefe, if wise men would set their handes to it, might be amended, with great thanks of God, and no breach of the priuiledge.

The residue, sith so long ago I wot neare what pope, and what prince more piteous than politike, hath granted it, and other men since, of a certaine religious feare, haue not broken it, let vs take a paine therwith, and let it a gods name stande in force, as farre forth as reason will, which is not fully so farre forth, as may serue to let vs of the fetching forth of this noble man, to his honour and wealth, out of that place, in which he neither is, nor can be a Sanctuarie man.

A Sanctuarie serueth alway to defend the body of that man that standeth in danger abroad, not of great hurt onely, but also of lawfull hurt, for against vnlawfull harmes, neuer pope nor king intended to priuiledge any one place, for that priuiledge hath euerie place: knoweth any man, any place wherein it is lawfull one man to do another wrong?

That no man vnlawfully take hurt, that libertie, the king, the law, and verie nature, forbiddeth in euerie place, and maketh to that regarde, for euerie man euerie place a Sanctuarie.

But where a man is by lawfull meanes in perill, there néedeth he the tuition of some speciall priuiledge, which is the onely ground and cause of all Sanctuaries: from which necessitie, this noble Prince is farre, whose loue to his king, nature and kinred prooueth, whose innocencie to all the worlde, his tender youth prooueth, and so Sanctuarie, as for him, neither none he néedeth, nor also none can haue.

Men come not to Sanctuarie, as they come to Baptisme, to require it by their Godfathers, he must aske it himselfe, that must haue it, and reason, sith no man hath cause to haue it, but whose conscience of his owne fault maketh him faine, néede to require it: what will then hath yonder babe? which and if he had discretion to require it, if néede were, I dare say would now be right angrie with them that kéepe him there: and I would thinke without any scruple of conscience, without any breach of priuiledge, to be somewhat more homely with them that be there Sanctuarie men indéede.

For if one go to Sanctuarie with another mans goods, why should not the king leaning his bodie at libertie, satisfie the parties of his goods, euen within the Sanctuary? for neither king nor pope can giue any place such a priuiledge, that it shall discharge a man of his debts, being able to paie: and with that, diuers of the Cleargie that were present, whether they saide it for his pleasure, or as they thought, agreed plainly, that by the law of God and of the Church, the goods of a Sanctuarie man should be deliuered in paiment of his debtes, and stollen goods to the owner, and onely libertie reserued him to get his liuing with the labour of his hands. Verily (quoth the Duke) I thinke you saie verie truth, and what if a mans wife will take Sanctuarie, because shee list to run from her husband? I woulde weene if shee coulde alleadge none other cause, hee maie lawfullie without anie displeasure to Saint Peter, take her out of Saint Peters church by the arme. And if no body may be taken out of Sanctuary, that (saith he) will bide there, then if a childe will take Sanctuarie, because he feareth to go to Schole, his maister must let him alone. And as simple as that sample is, yet is there lesse reason in our case than in that: for therein, though it bee a childish feare, yet is there, at the least-wise, some feare, and herein is there none at all. And verily, I haue often heard of Sanctuary men, but I neuer heard earst of Sanctuarie childzen. And therefore, as for the conclusion of my minde, who so may haue deserued to nede it, if they thinke it for their suertie, let them kepe it. But he can be no Sanctuarie man, that neither hath wisedome to desire it, nor malice to deserue it, whose life or libertie, can by no lawfull processe stande in ieopardie. And hee that taketh one out of Sanctuarie to doe him good, I saie plainly, that he breaketh no Sanctuarie.

When the Duke had done, the temporall men whole, and a good part of the spirituall also, thinking no hurt eathly ment toward the yong babe, condescended in effect, that if he were not deliuered he should be fetched: Howbeit, they thought it all best, in the auoiding of all maner of rumor, that the L. Cardinall should first assay to get him with her good will. And thereupon, all the councell came vnto the starr chamber at Westminster, and the L. cardinall leauing the Protector with the councell in the starre chamber, departed into the Sanctuarie to the Quéene, with diuers other lordes with him, were it for the respect of his honour, or that she should by presence of so manie perceiue that this errand was not one mans minde: or were it, for that the Protector intended not in this matter, to trust anie one man alone, or else, that if she finallie were determined to kepe him, some of that companie, had happely secret instruction incontinent, maugre her minde, to take him, and to leaue her no respite to conuey him, which she was likely to mind after this matter broken to her, if her time would in any wise serue her.

When the quéene, and these lordes were come togither in presence, the lord Cardinall shewed vnto her, that it was thought vnto the Protector, and vnto the whole councell, that her kéeping of the kings brother in that place, was the thing, which highly sounded, not onely to the great rumor of the people & their obloquie, but also to the importable griefe and displeasure of the kings royall Maiestie, to whose grace it were as singular comfort to haue his naturall brother in companie, as it was their both dishonor, and all theirs and hers also, to suffer him in Sanctuarie, as though the one brother stood in danger & perill

of the other. And he shewed her, that the councell therefore had sent him vnto her, to require her the deliuery of him, that he might be brought vnto the kings presence at his libertie, out of that place, which they reckoned as a prison, and there should he be demeaned, according to his estate, & she in this doing should both do great good to the realm, pleasure to the councell, and profit to her selfe, succour to her friends that were in distresse, and ouer that (which he wist well she specially tendred) not only great comfort and honor to the king, but also to the yong duke himselfe, whose both great wealth it were to be togither, as wel for many greater causes, as also for their both disport, and recreation: which thing, the Lord estéemed no sleight, though it séeme light, well pondering, that their youth without recreation and play, cannot endure, nor any stranger, for the coniecture of their both ages and estates, so méetely in that point for ante of them, as either of them for other. Protector.

My Lord (quoth the quéene) I say not naie, but that it were very conuenient that this gentleman whom yée require were in company of the king his brother: and in good faith, me thinketh it were as great commoditie to them both, as for yet a while, to bee in the custodie of their mother, the tender age considered of the elder of them both, but specially the yonger, which besides his infancie, that also néedeth good looking to, hath a while béene so sore diseased, vered with sicknes, and is so newly rather a little amended, than well recouered, that I dare put no person earthly in trust with his kéeping, but my selfe onely, considering that there is (as physitions saie) and as we also finde, double the perill in the reciduation, that was in the first sickenes, with which disease, Nature being sore laboured, forewearied and weakened, wareth the lesse able to beare out and sustaine a new surfeit. And albeit there might bee found other that would happily do their best vnto him, yet is there none that either knoweth better how to order him, than I that so long haue kept him: or is more tenderly like to cherish him, than his owne mother that bare him. No man denieth, good Madam (qd. the cardinall) but that your grace were of all folke most necessary about your children: and so would all the councell not only be content, but glad that yée were, if it might stande with your pleasure, to be in such place as might stand with their honour. But if you do appoint your selfe to tarrie héere, then thinke they it more conuenient that the Duke of Yorke were with the king honourably at his libertie to the comfort of them both, than here as a Sanctuarie man, to their both dishonour and obloquie, sith there is not alwaie so great necessitie to haue the childe to be with the mother: but that occasion maie sometime be such, that it should be more expedient to kéepe him elsewhere, which in this well appeareth, that at such time as your derest sonne then Prince, and nowe King, should for his honour, and good order of the countrey, kéepe houshold in Wales, far out of your companie: your grace was well content therewith your selfe. Not verie well content, quoth the quéene: And yet the case is not like, for the one was then in health, and the other is nowe sick: In which case, I maruell greatly, that my lorde protector is so desirous to haue him in his kéeping, where if the child in his sicknesse miscarrie by nature, yet might hee runne into slaunder and suspition of fraude.

And where they call it a thing so sore against my childs honour, and theirs also, that hee bydeth in this place: it is all their honours there to suffer him byde, where no man doubteth he shall be best kept, and that is here, while I am here, which as yet intende not to come foorth, & ieoparde my selfe after other of my friends, which would God were rather here in suretie with mee, than I were there in ieopardy with them. Why madam (quoth another lord) know you any thing why they should be in ieopardy? Nay verily sir, quoth she, nor why they should be in prison neither, as they nowe be. But it is I trowe, no great marueil though I feare, lest those that haue not letted to put them in durance, without colour, will let as little to procure their destruction without cause. The cardinall made a countenance to the other lord, that he should harpe no more vpon that string, and then said he to the Quéene, that he nothing doubted, but that those Lords of her honorable kinne, which as yet remained vnder arrest, should vpon the matter examined do well enough: and as towarde her noble person, neither was, neyther coulde hee ante manner ieopardie. Whereby should I trust that (quoth the Quéene) in that I am guiltles? as though they were guiltie, in that I am with their enimies better loued than they? When they hate them for my sake, in that I am so neere of kin to the king? and how far they be off, if that would helpe, as God send grace it hurt not, & therfore as for me, I purpose not as yet, to depart hence. And as for this gentleman my sonne, I mind that hee shall be where I am, till I sée further: for I assure you, for that I see some men so greedie, without anie substantiall cause to haue him: this maketh mee much the more fearder to deliuer him. Truelie madame, quoth he, and the fearder that you be to deliuer him, the fearder bene other men to suffer you to keepe him, least your causeleslesse feare might cause you farther to conuey him: and many be there that think he can haue no priuiledge in this place, which neither can haue will to aske it, nor malice to deserue it, and therefore, they reckon no priuiledge broken, though they fetch him out, which if ye finally refuse to deliuer him, I verily thinke they will. So much dread hath my Lorde his vncle, for the tender loue hee beareth him, least your grace should hap to send him away.

The Quéene. A sir (quoth the Quéene) hath the protector so tender zeale, that he feareth nothing but least hee should escape him? Thinketh hee that I would sende him hence, which neither is in the plight to send out, and in what place could I reckon him sure, if he be not sure in the Sanctuarie? Whereof was there neuer tyrant yet so diuelish that durst presume to breake. And I trust, GOD is as strong now to withstand his aduersaries, as euer he was. But my son can deserue no Sanctuary, and therefore he cannot haue it. For loth he hath found a goodly glose, by which that place that may defend a théefe, maie not saue an innocent. But he is in no ieopardie, nor hath no need therof: would God he had not. Troth the protector, I pray god he maie proue a protector, troweth he that I perceiue not whereunto his painted processe draweth? it is not honorable that the Duke here: it were comfortable for them both, that he were with his brother, because the king lacketh a plaiefellow be ye sure. I praie God sende them both better plaiefellowes than him, that maketh so high a matter vpon such a trifling trifling pretext: as though there could none bee found to plaie with the king, but if his brother that hath no luste to plaie for sickness, come out of Sanctuarie, out of his safegarde to plaie with him. As though Princes as yoong as they bee, coulde not plaie but with their péeres, or children coulde not plaie but with their kinred, with whome for the more part they agrée much worse than with strangers. But the child cannot require the priuiledge: who told him so? He shall heare him aske it, and he will. Howbeit this is a gaie matter, suppose he could not aske it, suppose he would not aske it, suppose hee would aske to go out, if I saie hee shall not: if I aske the priuiledge but for my selfe, I saie hee that against my will taketh him out, breaketh the Sanctuarie. Serueth this libertie for my person onelie, or for my goods too? Hee maie not hence take my Horse from me, and maie you take my child fro me? He also is my ward: for as my learned councell sheweth me, sith hee hath nothing by descent holden by knights seruice, the law maketh his mother his guardian. Then may no man I suppose take my warde from mee out of Sanctuarie, without the breach of Sanctuary. And if my priuiledge could not serue him, nor he aske it for himselfe, yet sith the law committeth to me the custody of him, I may require it for him, except the law giue a child a guardian only for his goods and lands, discharging him of the cure and safe kéeping of his body, for which only both lands and goods serue.

¶ And if examples be sufficient to obtaine priuiledge for my childe, I nede not far to séeke. For in this place in whiche now wee be (and which is nowe in question, whether my child maie take benefit of it) mine other son (now king) was borne, and kept in his cradle, and preserued to a more prosperous fortune, which I praie God long to continue. And as all you know, this is not the first time that I haue taken Sanctuarie. For when my Lord my husband was banished, and thrust out of his kingdome, I fled hither, beeing great with childe, and here I bare the prince. And when my Lorde my husbande returned safe againe, and had the victorie, then went I hence to welcome him home, and from hence I brought my babe the prince vnto his father, when hee first toke him in his armes. And I praie God that my sons palace may bee as great safegarde vnto him now raigning, as this place was sometime to the kings enimy. In which place I intend to kéepe his brother, sith, &c. * Wherefore here intend I to kéepe him, since mans law serueth the guardian to kéepe the infant. The law of nature wils the mother kéepe the child, Gods law priuiledgeth the Sanctuarie, and the Sanctuarie my son, sith I feare to put him in the protectors hands that hath his brother alreadie, and were (if both failed) inheritor to the crowne. The cause of my feare hath no man to doo to examine: And yet feare I no farther than the law feareth, which as learned men tell me, forbiddeth euerie man the custodie of them, by whose death hee may inherit lesse land than a kingdome. I can no more, but whosoeuer he be that breaketh this holy sanctuary, I pray God shortly send him néed of sanctuary, when he may not come to it: For taken out of sanctuary would I not my mortall enimy were.

This that is heere betweene this marke ¶ & this marke * was not written by him in English, but is translated out of this Historie which he wrote in Latine.

The Lorde Cardinall perceiuing that the Quéene wared euer the longer the further off, and also that shée beganne to kindle and chafe, and speake more biting biting wordes against the protector, and such as he neither beléeued, and was also loath to heare; he said to her for a finall conclusion, that he would no longer dispute the matter, but if she were content to deliuer the duke to him, and to the other Lords present, he durst lay his own body and soule both in pledge, not only for his surety, but also for his estate. And if she would giue them a resolute answere to the contrary, he would forthwith depart the withall, and shift who so would with this businesse afterwards, for hee neuer intended more to moue her in that matter, in which she thought that he and all other also saue herselfe lacked either wit or trueth: Wit, if they were so dull that they could nothing perceiue what the protector intended; trueth, if they shoulde procure her son to be deliuered into his hands, in whom they should perceiue towarde the child any euill intended.

The Quéene with these words stood a good while in a great studie: And forasmuch as hir seemed ẏ cardinall readier to depart then some of the remnant, and the protector himselfe readie at hand, so that she verilie thought she could not kéepe him there, but that he shoulde incontinent bee taken thence; and to conuete him else where, neither hadde shee time to serue her, nor place determined, nor persons appoynted, all thinges vnready, this Message came on her so sodaynelie, nothing lesse looking for, than to haue him fetchte out of Sanctuarie, which shee thoughte to bee nowe besette in such places about, that hee coulde not bee conueyed out vntaken; and partelie (as shee thought) it mighte fortune, her feare to bee false, so well shee wiste it was either needelesse, or bootelesse: wherefore, if shee shoulde needes goe from him, shee déemed it beste to deliuer him. And ouer that, of the Cardinals fayth shee nothing doubted, nor of some other Lords neither, whome she there sawe. Which as shee feared leaste they might bee deceyued; so was shee well assured they woulde not bee corrupted: then thought shee it shoulde yet make them the more warilie to looke to him, and the more circumspectlie to see to his surtie, if shée with her owne handes betoke him to them of trust. And at the last shée tooke the yoong Duke by the hand, and said vnto the Lordes: My Lordes (quoth shée) and all my Lords, I neither am so vnwise to mistrust your wits, nor so suspitious to mistrust your truthes: of which thing I purpose to make you such a proofe, as if eyther of both lacked in you, might turne both me to great sorrow, the realme to much harme, and you to great reproch. For lo, here is (quoth she) this gentleman, whome I doubt not but I could here kéepe safe, if I would, what soeuer anie man saie: ẏ I doubt not also, but there be some abroad so deadlie enimies vnto my blood, that if they wist where any of it lay in their owne bodie, they woulde let it out. Wee haue also experience that the desire of a Kingdome knoweth no kinred: The Brother hath béene the Brothers bane: and may the nephewes bee sure of their vncle? Each of these children is the others defence while they bee asunder, and eache of their liues lieth in the others bodie. Kéepe one safe and both bee sure, and nothing for them both more perrilous, than to bee both in one place. For what wise merchant aduentureth all his goods in one Shippe? All this notwithstanding, heere I deliuer him, and his Brother in him, to keepe, into your handes, of whome

I shall aske them both afore God and the worlde. Faythfull yee be, that wot I well, and I knowe well yée bee wise. Power and strength to keepe him if you liste, neither lacke yée of your selfe, nor can lacke helpe in this case: And if ye cannot els where, then may you leaue him here. But onlie one thing I beseech you, for the trust which his father put in you euer, and for the trust ý I put in you now, that as far as yée thinke that I feare too much, be you well ware that you feare not as farre too little. And therewithall shée said vnto the child, farewell mine owne swéete sonne, God sende you good keeping: let mee kisse you yet once ere you goe, for God knoweth when wee shall kisse together againe: And therewith shée kissed him, and blessed him, turned her backe and wept, and went her waie, leauing the childe wéeping as fast. When the lord Cardinall and those other Lords with him had received this yoong duke, they brought him into the Starre Chamber, where the Protector tooke him in his armes and kissed him, with these wordes: Nowe welcome my Lorde, euen withall my verie heart: And hee sayde in that of likelyhoode as hee thought. Thereupon forthwith they brought him vnto the king his Brother, into the Bishoppes Palace at Paules, and from thence through the citty honourablie into the Tower, out of the which after that daie they neuer came abroade. O dissimulation.

¶ When the Protector had both the children in his handes, he opened himselfe more boldly, both to certaine other men, and also chiefelie to the Duke of Buckingham. Although I knowe that manie thought that this duke was priuie to all the protectors counsell, euen from the beginning, and some of the protectors friends said, that the duke was the first mouer of the protector to this matter, sending a priuy messenger vnto him, straight after K. Edwards death. But other againe which knew better the subtill wit of the protector, denie that hee euer opened his enterprise to the duke, vntill hee had brought to passe the things before rehearsed. But when he had imprisoned the quéenes kinsfolks, and gotten both hir sons into his owne handes, then hee opened the rest of his purpose with lesse feare to them whome he thought méete for the matter, and specially to the duke, who being won to his purpose, hee thought his strength more then halfe increased. The matter was broken vnto the duke by subtil folks, and such as were their craftes masters in ý handling of such wicked deuises: who declared vnto him that the yong K. was offended with him for his kinsfolks sake, & if he were euer able he would reueng them: who would prick him forward thereunto if they escaped (for they would remember their imprisonment) or else if they were put to death, without doubt the yong K. would be carefull for their deathes, whose imprisonment was grieuous vnto him. And that with repenting the D. should nothing auaile, for there was no way left to redéem his offence by benefits, but he should sooner destroy himselfe then saue the king, who with his brother and his kinsfolks he saw in such places imprisoned, as the protector might with a becke destroy them all: and that it were no doubt but hee would do it indéede, if there were anie newe enterprise attempted. And that it was likelie, that as the Protector had prouided priuie garde for himselfe, so had hee spyalles for the Duke, and traynes to catch him, if hee should be against him, and that peraduenture from them, whom he least suspected. For the state of things and the dispositions of men were then such, that a man could not well tell whom he might trust, or whom he might feare.

This that is beere betweene this marke ¶ & this marke was not written by him in English, but is translated out of this Historie which he wrote in Latin.

These things and such like, being beaten into the dukes mind, brought him to that point, that where he had repented ỹ way that he had entred, yet would he go forth in the same, and since he had once begunne, he would stoutly go through. And therfore to this wicked enterprise which he beleeued could not be voided, he bent himselfe, and went through and determined, that since the common mischiefe could not be amended, he would turne it as much as he might to his owne commoditie.

When it was agreed, that the Protector should haue the Dukes aide to make him king, and that the Protectors only lawfull sonne should marrie the dukes daughter, and that the Protector should grant him the quiet possession of the Earledome of Hertford, which he claimed as his inheritance, and could neuer obtaine it in king Edwards time: Besides these requests of the Duke, the protector of his owne mind promised him a great quantitie of the kings treasure, and of his houshold stuffe. And when they were thus at a point betweene themselues, they went about to prepare for the coronation of the yong king as they would haue it séeme: And that they might turne both the eies and mindes of men from perceiuing of their drifts other where, the Lordes being sent for from all parts of the realme, came thicke to the solemnity: But the Protector, and the duke after that, that they had sent the lord Cardinall, the archbishop of Yorke then lord Chancellor, the bish. of Ely, the L. Stanley, and the L. Hastings then lord Chamberlaine, with many other noble men to commune and deuise about the coronation in one place, as fast were they in another place contriuing the contrarie, and to make the protector king. To which Councell, albeit there were admitted very few, and they were secret: yet began there here and there about, some maner of muttering among the people, as though all should not long be well, though they neuer wist what they feared, nor therfore, were it that before such great things mens harts of a secret instinct of nature misgiue them, as the sea without wind swelleth of himselfe sometime before a tempest: or were it that some one man happily somewhat perceiuing, filled many men with suspition, though hee shewed fewe men what he knewe. Howbeit, somewhat the dealing it selfe made men to muze on the matter, though the councell were close. For by little and little, all folke withdrew from the tower, and drew to Crosbies in Bishops gate streete, where the protector kept his houshold. The protector had the resort, the king in maner desolate.

While some for their businesse made suite to them that had the doing, some were by their friends secretly warned, that it might happily turne them to no good, to be to much attendant about the king without the protectors appointment, which remoued also diuers of the princes olde seruants from him, and set new about him.

Thus manie thinges comming together partly by chance, partly of purpose, caused at length not common people onely, that wound with the winde, but wise men also, and some lords eke to marke the matter, and muze thereon,

so farre forth, that the Lord Stanley that was after earle of Darby, wisely mistrusted it, and saide vnto the Lorde Hastings, that he much misliked these two seuerall Councels. For while we (quoth he) talke of one matter in ỹ one place, little wot we whereof they talke in the other place. Ye Lord (quoth the Lorde Hastings) of my life neuer doubt you: for while one man is there, which is neuer thence, neuer can there bee thing once moued, that shoulde sound amisse toward me, but it should be in mine eares ere it were well out of their mouthes.

This meant he by Catesby, which was of his nére secret counsell, and whom he verie familiarly vsed, and in his most weightie matters put no man in so speciall trust, reckoning himselfe to no man so liefe, sith hee well wist there was no man so much to him beholden as was this Catesby, which was a man wel learned in the lawes of this land, and by the speciall fauor of the L. Chamberlaine, in good authoritie, & much rule bare he in all the countie of Leicester, where the lord Chamberlains power chiefly lay. But surely great pitie was it, that he had not had either more truth or lesse wit: for his dissimulation only, kept all that mischiefe vp. In whom if the lord Hastings had not put so speciall trust, the lord Stanley and he had departed with diuers other lordes, and broken all the daunce, for many ill signes that he saw, which he now construes all to the best. So surely thought he, that there could be no harme toward him in that councell intended where Catesby was. Catesby.

And of truth the Protector and the Duke of Buckingham made verie good semblance vnto the Lord Hastings, and kept him much in companie: And vndoubtedly the protector loued him well, and loth was to haue lost him, sauing for feare least his life should haue quailed their purpose. For which cause hee moued Catesby to proue with some wordes cast out a far off, whether he could thinke it possible to win the Lord Hastings vnto their part: But Catesby whether he assaied him, or assaied him not, reported vnto them, that he founde him so fast, and heard him speake so terrible wordes, that he durst no further breake.

And of truth the lord Chamberlaine of very trust shewed vnto Catesby the distrust that other began to haue in the matter: And therefore he fearing least their motion might with the Lord Hastings minish his credence, whereunto onely all the matter leaned, procured the protector hastily to ridde him. And much the rather, for that he trusted by his death to obtaine much of the rule that the lord Hastings bare in his countrey: the onely desire whereof was the allectiue that induced him to be partner and one speciall contriuer of all this horrible treason.

Whereupon some after, that is to wit, on the fridaie the thirteenth daie of June, many lords assembled in the tower, and there sate in councell, deuising the honorable solemnitie of the kings coronation, of which the time appointed then so nére approched, that the pageants and subtilties were in making daie and night at Westminster, and much victuall killed therefore, that afterward was cast away.

These Lordes so sitting together communing of this matter, the Protector came came in amongst them first about nine of the clocke, saluting them courteously, and excusing himselfe that he had bene from them so long, saying merilie, that he had bene a sleeper that day.

And after a little talking with them, he said vnto the bishoppe of Ely: My Lord, you haue very good strawberies at your garden in Holborne, I require you let vs haue a messe of them. Gladly my lord (quoth he) would God I had some better thing as ready to your pleasure as that. And therewith in all the haste he sent his seruant for a messe of strawberies.

The Protector set the Lordes fast in communing, and therupon praying them to spare him for a little while, departed thence: And soone after one houre, betweene 10. and 11. he returned into the chamber among them all, changed with a wonderfull sower angrie countenance, knitting the browes, frowning and fretting, and gnawing on his lips, and so sate him downe in his place, all the lords much dismaied and sore marueiling of this maner of sudden change, and what thing should him aile. Then, when he had sitten still a while, thus he began: What were they worthie to haue that compasse and imagine the destruction of me, being so neere of blood vnto the king, and protector of his royall person and his realme? At this question, all the lords sate sore astonied, musing much by whom this question should bee meant, of which euery man was himselfe cleere.

Then the lord Chamberlaine, as he that for the loue betweene them thought he might be boldest with him, answered and said, that they were worthy to be punished as hainous traitors, whatsoeuer they were: And all the other affirmed the same. That is (quoth he) ponder sorceresse my brothers wife, and other with her, meaning ỹ queene. At these words many of the other lords were greatly abashed that fauored her. But the L. Hastings was in his mind better content that it was moued by her, than by any other whom he loued better: albeit his hart somwhat grudged, that he was not afore made of counsell in this matter, as he was of the taking of her kinred, and of their putting to death, which were by his assent before deuised to bee beheaded at Pontfract this selfesame day, in which he was not ware that it was by other deuised, that himself should be beheaded the same day at London. Then said the protector, We shall all see in what wise that sorceresse, and that other witch of her counsell Shores wife with their affinity, haue by their sorcerie and witchcraft wasted my body: And therwith he plucked vp his doublet sleeue to his elbow vpon his left arme, where he shewed a weerish withered arme, and small, as it was neuer other. And thereupon euery mans minde sore misgaue them, well perceiuing that this matter was but a quarrell: For they well wist, that the Queene was to wise to go about any such folly. And also if she would, yet would she of all folke least make Shores wife of counsell, whom of all women she most hated, as that concubine whom the king her husband had most loued: And also, no man was there present but well knew ỹ his arme was euer such since his birth. Nathelesse the lord Chamberlaine (which from the death of king Edward kept Shores wife, on whom he somewhat doted in the kings life, sauing (as it is saide) bee that while forbare her of reuerence toward the king, or else of a certaine kind of fidelity to his friend) answered and said: Certainly my lord, if they haue so heinously done, they be worthy heinous punishment.

What (quoth the protector) thou seruest me I weene with ifs and with ands, I tell thee they haue so done, and that I will make good on thy bodie traitor: and therewith as in a great anger, he clapped his fist vppon the bord a great rap. At which token giuen, one cried treason without the chamber: therewith a doore clapped, and in come there rushing men in harnesse, as many as the chamber might holde. And anone the protector said to the lord Hastings, I arrest thee traitor: What me my lord (quoth he?) yea thee traitor, quoth the Protector. And another let fly at the lord Stanley, which shrunke at the stroke, and fell vnder the table, or else his head had been cleft to the teeth: for as short ly as he shranke, yet came the blond about his eares. Then were they all quickely bestowed in diuers chambers, except the lord Chamberlaine, whom the protector bad spéede and shriue him apace, for by S. Paul (quoth he) I will not to dinner till I sée thy head off. The lord Stanley wounded.

It booted him not to aske why, but hastily toke a priest at auenture, and made a short shrift, for a longer would not be suffered, the Protector made so much haste to dinner, which he might not go to, till this were done, for sauing of his oth. So was he brought forth into the greene beside the chappell within the tower, and his head laide downe vpon a long log of timber, and there striken off, and afterward his body with the head enterred at Windsor beside the body of king Edward.

A marueilous case is it to heare either the warnings of that he should haue voided, or the tokens of that he could not voide, for the selfe night next before his death, the L. Stanley sent a trustie secret messenger vnto him at midnight in all the haste, requiring him to rise and ride away with him, for he was disposed vtterly no longer to bide, he had so fearfull a dreame, in which him thought, that a Boare with his tushes so rased them both by the heads, that the blond ran about both their shoulders. And for as much as the protector gaue the Boare for his cognisance, this dreame made so fearfull an impression in his hart, that he was throughly determined no longer to tarrie, but had his horse readie, if the L. Hastings would go with him to ride yet so far the same night, that they should be out of danger ere day. Ha good Lord (quoth the lord Hastings to this messenger) leaneth my lord thy master so much to such trifles, & hath such faith in dreames, which either his owne feare fantasieth, or doe rise in the nightes rest by reason of his daie thoughts? Tell him it is plaine witchcraft to beléeue in such dreames, which if they were tokens of thinges to come, why thinketh he not that we might be as likely to make them true by our going, if we were caught and brought backe (as friends faile fliers) for then had the Boare a cause likely to race vs with his tushes, as folke that fledde for some falshood: therefore either is there no perill, nor none there is in deede, or if any be, it is rather in going than biding. And if we should needes fall in peril one way or other, yet had I leiser that men should sée that it were by other mens falsehood, than thinke it were either by our owne fault, or faint heart: And therefore go to thy master man and commend me to him, and pray him to be merry, and The lord Stanleies dreame.

haue no feare: for I ensure him I am as sure of the man that he woteth of, as I am of mine owne hand. God send grace Sir, quoth the messenger, and went his waie.

Certaine it is also, that in riding towards the tower the same morning in which hée was beheaded, his horse twise or thrise stumbled with him, almost to the falling: which thing albeit each man wot well daily happeneth to them to whome no such mischance is toward, yet hath it bene of an olde rite and custome obserued as a token oftentimes notablie foregoing some great misfortune.

Now this that followeth was no warning, but an enuious scorne.

The same morning ere he was vp, came a knight vnto him as it were of curtesie, to accompany him to the councel, but of truth sent by the protector to haste him thitherwards, with whom he was of secret confederacy in that purpose, a meane man at that time, and now of great authoritie.

This knight when it happened the Lord Chamberlaine by the waie to staie his horse, and commune a while with a priest whom he met in the Tower strat, brake his tale, and said merrilie to him, what my Lorde, I praie you come on, whereto talke you so long with that priest, you haue no néed of a priest yet: and therewith he laughed vpon him, as though hee woulde say, ye shall haue some. But so little wist the other what he meant, and so little mistrusted, that he was neuer merrier, nor neuer so full of good hope in his life, which selfe thing is often séene a signe of change. But I shall rather let any thing passe me, than the vaine surety of mans mind so nére his death.

Vpon the very tower wharfe, so nére the place where his head was strake off soon after, there met he with one Hastings a pursuant of his own name: and of their méeting in that place, he was put in remembrance of another time, in which it had happened them before to mét in like manner together in the same place. At which other time the Lorde Chamberlaine had bene accused vnto king Edward by the Lorde Riuers the Quénes brother, in such wise as hee was for the while, but it lasted not long, farre fallen into the kings indignation, and stood in great feare of himselfe: And for as much as he nowe met this pursuant in the same place that ieopardie so well passed, it gaue him great pleasure to talke with him thereof, with whome hee had before talked thereof in the same place, while hee was therein. And therefore hee saide: Ah Hastinges, art thou remembred when I met thee heere once with an heauie heart? Yea my Lorde quoth he, that remember I well, and thanked be God, they got no good, nor you no harme thereby. Thou wouldest say so, quoth he, if thou knewest as much as I know, which few know else as yet, and mo shall shortly. That meant he by the Lords of the Quénes kinred that were taken before, and should that daie bee beheaded at Pontfract: which he well wist, but nothing ware that the Axe hong ouer his owne head. In faith man, quoth hee, I was neuer so sorie, nor neuer stood in so great dread in my life, as I did when thou and I met here: And lo how the world is turned, now stand mine enimies in the danger, as thou maist hap to heare more hereafter, and I neuer in my life so merrie, nor euer in so great suretie.

O good God, the blindnes of our mortal nature, when he most feared, he was in good suretie: when he reckoned himselfe surest he lost his life, and that within two howers after.

Thus ended this honourable man, a good knight and a gentle, of great authoritie with his prince, of liuing somewhat dissolute, plaine, and open to his enimy, and secret to his friend, easie to beguile, as he that of good hart and courage fore studied no perils: a louing man, and passing well beloued: very faithfull and trustie enough, trusting too much. Now flew the fame of this Lordes death swiftlie through the citie, and so forth further about like a wind in euery mans eare. The description of the Lord Hastings.

But the protector immediatlie after dinner, intending to set some colour vpon the matter, sent in all haste for manie substantiall men out of the Citie into the tower: And at their comming, himselfe with the duke of Buckingham, stood harnessed in old ill faring Briganders, such as no man should weene that they would vouchsafe to haue put vpon their backs, except that some sudden necessitie had constrained them.

And then the protector shewed them, that the lord chamberlaine and other of his conspiracie had contriued to haue suddenlie destroied him and the Duke, there the same daie in the Councell. And what they intended further was as yet not well knowne. Of which their treason he neuer had knowledge before. 9. of the clocke the same Forenoone, which sudden feare drone them to put on for their defence such harnesse as came next to hand. And so had God holpen them, that the mischiefe turned vpon them that would haue done it. And this he required them to report.

Euerie man answered him faire, as though no man mistrusted the matter, which of troth no man beleeued. Yet for the further appeasing of the peoples mind, he sent immediatly after dinner in all haste, an Herault of armes, with a proclamation to bee made through the Citie in the kings name, containing that the Lord Hastings with diuers other of his traiterous purpose, had before conspired the same daie, to haue slaine the Lorde protector and the duke Buckingham, sitting in the Councell, and after to haue taken vpon them to rule the King and the Realme, at their pleasure, and thereby to pill and spoile whom they liste vncontrolled. And much matter there was in that Proclamation, deuised to the slaunder of the Lord Chamberlaine, as that he was an euill Counseller to the kinges father, inticing him to manie thinges highlie redounding to the minishing of his honour, and to the vniuersall hurt of his Realme by his euill companie, sinister procuring, and vngracious ensample, as well in manie other thinges, as in the vicious liuing and inordinate abusion of his bodie, both with manie other, and also especiallie with Shores wife which was one also of his most secrete Counsell of this heinous treason, with whome hee late nightlie, and namelie, the night last past nert before his death, so that it was the lesse maruell, if vngracious liuing brought him to an vnhappie ending, which he was now put vnto, by the most dreade commaundement of the kinges highnesse, and of his honourable and faithfull Councell, both for his demerites, being so openly taken in his fallie conceiued treason, and The protectors proclamation.

also least the delaying of his execution might haue encouraged other mischieuous persons partners of his owne conspiracie, to gather and assemble themselues togither, in making some great commotion for his deliuerance: whose hope being now by his well deserued death politikely repressed, all the Realme should by Gods grace rest in good quiet and peace.

Now was this proclamation made within two howers after that hee was beheaded, and it was so curiously indited, and so faire written in parchment, in so well a set hand, and therewith of it selfe so long a processe, that euerie childe might well perceiue that it was prepared before. For all the time betweene his death and the proclaiming could scant haue sufficed vnto the bare writing alone, all had it beene but in paper, and scribled forth in haste at aduenture. So that vpon the proclaiming thereof, one that was schoolemaister of Paules, of chance standing by, and comparing the shortnes of the time with the length of the matter, said vnto them that stood about him: Heere is a gaie goodlie cast, soule cast awaie for haste: and a marchant answered him, that it was written by prophesie. Now then by and by as it were for anger, not for couetise, the protector sent into the house of Shores wife (for her husband dwelled not with her) and spoiled her of all that euer she had, aboue the value of two or three thousand marke, & sent her bodie to prison: And when he had a while laid vnto her (for the maner sake) that she went about to bewitch him, and that shee was of counsell with the Lord Chamberlaine to destroie him: in conclusion, when that no colour could sasten vpon these matters, then he laid heinously to her charge, that thing that herselfe coulde not denie, that all the worlde wist was true, and that naitheles euerie man laughed at, to heare it then so suddenly, so highly taken, that she was naught of her bodie.

The sheriffes of London, William White & John Mathew let Shores wife out of hir house, by commandement of the protector, & led her thoroughout the citie of London to the Tower, where she answered certaine points laid to her charge, and from thence she was committed to Ludgate, there to remain prisoner, &c.

And for this cause (as a good continent prince, cleane and faultlesse of himselfe, sent out of heauen into this vicious world for ỹ amendment of mens maners) he caused the Bishop of London to put her to open penance, going before the crosse in procession vpon a sundaie with a taper in her hand. In which shee went in countenance and pace demure so womanlie, and albeit shee were out of all araie saue her kirtle onely, yet went she so faire and louely, namely while the wondering of the people cast a comely rud in her cheekes (of which shee before had most misse) that hir great shame wanne hir much praise, among those that were more amorous of hir body, than curious of hir soule. And many good folke also that hated hir liuing, and glad were to see sin corrected: yet pitied they more hir penance, than reioiced therein, when they considered that the protector procured it more of a corrupt intent, then any vertuous affection.

The description of Shores wife.

This woman was borne in London, worshipfully friended, honestly brought vp, and verie well married, sauing somewhat too soone, her husbande an honest citizen, yong and godly, and of good substance: But for as much as they were coupled ere she were well ripe, she not very feruently loued, for whom she neuer longed, which was happily the thing that the more easily made hir incline vnto the kings appetite, when he required her. Howbeit the respect of his royalty, the hope of gay apparell, ease, pleasure, and other wanton wealth, was able soone to pierce a soft tender hart.

But

But when the king had abused her, anone hir husband (as he was an honest man, and one that could his good, not presuming to touch a Kings Concubine) left her vp to him altogither.

When the king died the Lord Chamberlaine toke her, which in the kinges daies, albeit he was sore enamoured vpon hir, yet he forbare her, either for reuerence, or for a certaine friendly faithfulnes: proper she was and faire, nothing in her bodie that you would haue changed, but if you would haue wished her somewhat higher. The L. Chamberlaine kept Shores wife after the death of Edward the 4.

Thus saie they that knewe hir in her youth, albeit some that now se hir (for yet thee liueth) deme hir neuer to haue bene well visaged, whose iudgement semeth me somewhat like, as though men should gesse the beautie of one long before departed, by her scalpe taken out of the charnell house: for now is thee old, leane, withered, and dried vp, nothing left but riueld skin & hard bone. And yet being euen such: who so well aduise hir visage, might gesse and deuise, which parts how filled would make it a faire face: yet delited not men so much in her beautie as in her pleasant behauior. For a proper wit had she, & could both read well and write, merry in companie, ready and quick of answere, neither mute nor full of babble, sometime taunting without displeasure, and not without disport. Shores wife liued when sir T. More wrote this history in the raigne of H. the 8.

The king would say that he had three Concubines, which in three diuers properties diuerslie excelled. One the merriest, another the wiliest, the third the holiest harlot in his realme, as one whome no man coulde get out of the Church lightly to any place, but it were to his bed. The other two were somwhat greater personages, & naitheles of their humility content to be nameles, and to forbeare the praise of those properties. But the merriest was this Shores wife, in whome the king therefore toke speciall pleasure. For manie hee had, but her he loued, whose fauor to saie the troth (for sin it were to belie the diuell) she neuer abused to anie mans hurt, but to manie a mans comfort and reliefe, where the king toke displeasure, shee would mittigate and appease his mind: where men were out of fauour, she would bring them in his grace. For manie that had highlie offended shee obtayned pardon: Of great forfeitures shee gat men remission: And finallie, in manie weighty suites she stod many men in great stead, either for none or verie small rewardes, and those rather gaie then rich: either for that she was contente with the dede it selfe well done, or for that she delited to bee sued vnto, and to shewe what shee was able to doue with the king, or for that wanton Women and wealthie bee not alwayes couetous. K. Edwards 3. Concubines.

I doubt not some shall thinke this woman too sleighte a thing to bee written of, and set among the remembraunces of great matters: which they shall specially thinke, that happilie shall esteme hir onelie by that they now se her. But mee seemeth the chaunce so much the more woorthie to bee remembred, in howe much shee is nowe in the more beggerlie condition, vnfriended and worne out of acquayntaunce, after good substaunce, after as greate fauour with the Prince, after as greate suite and seeking to with all those that those dates had businesse to spede, as manie other men were in their times, which be nowa nowe famous onely by the infamie of their ill déedes. Yet doings were not much lesse, albeit they be much lesse remembred because they were not so euill. For men vse if they haue an euill turne, to write it in marble: and who so doth vs a good turne, we write it in dust, which is not worst proued by her: for at this day the beggeth of many at this day liuing, that at this day had begged if she had not béene.

Shores wife begged of them, that had begged themselues, had she not beene their friend.

Nowe was it so deuised by the Protector and his counsaile, that the selfe daie in which the Lorde Chamberlaine was beheaded in the Tower of London, and about the selfe same houre, was there (not without his assent) beheaded at Pontfraite, the forerembred Lordes and knightes that were taken from the king at Northampton and sonie Stratforde. Which thing was done in the presence, and by the order of Sir Richard Ratcliffe knight, whose seruice the Protector specially vsed in that counsell, and in the execution of such lawlesse enterprises, as a man that had bèen long secret with him, hauing experience of the world, and a shrewd wit, short and rude in spéech, rough and boysterous of behauiour, bolde in mischiefe, as farre from pitie as from all feare of God.

Sir Richard Ratcliffe.

This knight bringing them out of the prison to the scaffolde, and shewing to the people about that they were traitors, not suffering them to declare and speake their innocencie, least their words might haue inclined men to pitie them, and to hate the Protector and his part: caused them hastily without iudgement, processe, or maner of order, to be beheaded, & without other easily guilt, but onely that they were good men, too true to the king, and too nigh to the quéene.

The lord Riuers and other beheaded.

Nowe when the lord Chamberlaine and these other lords and knights were thus beheaded and rid out of the way: then thought the Protector, that while men mused what the matter ment, while the lordes of the Realme were about him out of their owne strengthes, while no man wist what to thinke, nor whome to trust, ere euer they should haue space to dispute and digest the matter and make parties, it were best hastily to pursue his purpose, and put himselfe in possession of the crowne, ere men coulde haue time to deuise any way to resist.

But nowe was all the studie by what meane this matter being of it selfe so heynous, might be first broken to the people, in such wise that it might bee well taken.

To this counsell they toke diuers, such as they thought méetely to be trusted, likely to be induced to that part, and able to stand them in stéede either by power or policie.

Among whome they made of counsaile Edmond Shaa knight then maior of London, which vpon trust of his owne aduancement, whereof he was of a prowd hart highly desirous, should frame the city to their appetite. Of Spirituall men they toke such as had wit, and were in authoritie among the people for opinion of their learning, and had no scrupulous conscience.

Edmond Shaa maior of London.

Among these had they Iohn Shaa Clearke, brother to the maior, and Frier Pinke, prouincial of the Augustine Friers, both doctors of Diuinitie, both great great preachers, both of more learning than vertue, of more fame than learning. For they were before greatly esteemed among the people: but after that neuer. Of these two the tone had a sermon in praise of the protector before the coronation, the tother after, both so full of tedious flattery, that no mans eares could abide them.

Pinke in his sermon so lost his voice, that hee was faine to leaue off and come downe in the midst. Doctor Shaa by his sermon lost his honestie, and sone after his life, for verie shame of the worlde, into which he durst neuer aftercome abroad. But the frier forced for no shame, and so it harmed him the lesse. Howbeit some doubt and many thinke, that Pinke was not of counsaile of the matter before the coronation, but after the common maner, fell to flatterie after: namely sith his sermon was not incontinent vpon it, but at Saint Marie Hospitall at the Easter after. But certaine it is, that Doctor Shaa was of counsaile in the beginning, so farre forth, that they determined that he should first breake the matter in a sermon at Paules Crosse, in which hee should by the authoritie of his preaching, incline the people to the Protectors ghostly purpose.

But nowe was all the labour and studie, in the deuise of some conuenient pretext, for which the people should be content to depose the Prince, and accept the protector for king. In which diuers things they deuised. But the chiefe thing and the weight of all that inuention rested in this, that they should alleadge Bastardie, either in king Edward himselfe, or in his children, or both. So that he should seeme disabled to inherite the crowne, by the Duke of Yorke, and the Prince by him.

To lay bastardie in king Edward sounded openly to the rebuke of the Protectors owne mother, which was mother to them both: for in that point coulde be none other colour but to pretend that his own mother was an aduoutresse, which notwithstanding, to further this purpose he letted not: but nathelesse, he would that point should be lesse and more fauourablie handled, not euen fullie plaine and directlie, but that the matter should be touched aslope craftilie, as though men spared in that point to speake all the troth, for feare of his displeasure.

But the other point concerning the bastardy that they deuised to surmise in king Edwards children, that would he should be openly declared, and inforced to the vttermost. The colour and pretext whereof, cannot be well perceiued, but if we first repeate you some things long before done about king Edwards marriage.

After that K. Edward the 4 had deposed K. Henry the first, and was in peaceable possession of the realme, determining himselfe to marry, as it was requisite both for himselfe and for the realme, he sent ouer in ambassade the earle of Warwike, with other noble men in his companie vnto Spaine, to intreate and conclude a marriage betweene king Edward and the kings daughter of Spaine. In which thing the Earle of Warwike found the parties so towarde and willing, that he speedily according to his instructions without anie difficultie, brought the matter to very good conclusion.

Dame Elizabeth.

Nowe happened it, that in the meane season there came to make suite by petition to the king dame Elizabeth Grey, which was after his Quæne, at that time a widow, borne of noble blood, speciallie by her mother, which was Duchesse of Bedford ere she married the Lord Wooduile her father. Howbeit this dame Elizabeth her selfe, beeing in seruice with Quæne Margaret wife vnto king Henry the sixt, was married vnto one Iohn Grey an esquire, whom king Henry made knight, vpon the field that he had on Barnet heath by S. Albons against king Edward. And little while enioied he that knighthood, for he was at the same field slaine.

After which dome, and the earle of Warwike being in his ambassade about the afore remembred marriage, this poore Ladie made humble suite vnto the king, that shee might bee restored vnto such small landes as her late husband had giuen her in iointure. Whome when the king beheld, and heard her speake, as she was both faire and of a goodlie fauor, moderate of stature, well made, and verie wise: he not onelie pitied her, but also waxed enamoured of her: and taking her after secretlie aside, beganne to enter in talking more familiarlie. Whose appetite when shee perceiued, shee vertuouslie denied him. But that did shee so wiselie, and with so good manner, and wordes so well set, that she rather kindled his desire than quenched it.

And finallie, after manie a meeting, much woing, and many great promises, she well espied the kings affection toward her so greatly increased, that she durst somewhat the more boldlie saie her mind, as to him whose heart she perceiued more feruentlie set, than to fall off for a word.

And in conclusion, shee shewed him playne, that as shee was her selfe to simple to bee his wife, so thought shee her selfe too good to bee his Concubine. The king much marueiling at her constancie, as he that had not beene wont elsewhere to bee so stiffelie sayde naie, so much esteemed her continencie, and chastitie, that hee sette her vertue in steade of possession and riches, and thus taking counsayle of his desire, determined in all possible haste to marrie her.

And after hee was thus appointed, and had betweene them twaine ensured her: then asked hee counsaile of his other friendes, and that in such manner, as they might then perceiue, it boted not greatlie to saie naie. Notwithstanding the Dutches of Yorke his mother was so sore moued therewith, that she dissuaded the marriage as much as she possibly might, alleadging that it was his honour, profite, and suretie also, to marrie in a noble progenie out of his Realme, whereupon depended great strength to his Estate, by the affinitie and great possibilitie of encrease of his possession. And that hee coulde not wel otherwise do, standing that the earle of Warwike had so far moued already, which were not likely to take it wel, if all his voiage were in such wise frustrate and his appointments deluded. And she saide also, that it was not princelie to marrie his owne subiect, no great occasion leading thereunto, no possessions, or other commoditie depending thereupon, but onlie as it were a rich man that woulde marrie his maide, onlie for a little wanton dotage vpon hir person. In which mariage many mo commend the maidens fortune than the masters wisedome.

wisedome. And yet therein shee saide there was more honestie than honour in this marriage: for as much as there is betweene no merchaunt and his owne maide so great difference, as betweene the king and this Widowe. In whose person, albeit there was nothing to be misliked, yet was there (shee saide) nothing so excellent but that it mought be found in diuers other that were more meetelie (quoth she) for your estate, and maidens also, whereas the onelie Widowhead of Elizabeth Grey, though she were in all other thinges conuenient for you, should yet suffice, as me seemeth, to refraine you from her marriage, sith it is an vnfitting thing, and a verie blemish and high disparagement to the sacred maiestie of a prince, that ought as nigh to approch priesthood in cleannesse as he doth in dignity, to be defouled with bigamie in his first marriage.

The king when his mother had saide, made her aunswere, part in earnest, part in plaie merrilie, as hee that wiste himselfe out of her rule. And albeit, hee woulde gladlie that shee should take it well, yet was at a point in his owne minde, tooke shee it well or otherwise. Howbeit somewhat to satisfie her, he said, that albeit marriage being a spirituall thing, ought rather to be made for the respect of GOD, where his grace enclineth the parties to loue together, as he trusted it was in his, than for the regard of anie temporall aduantage: yet nathelesse, him seemed that this marriage euen worldlie considered, was not vnprofitable. For he reckoned the amitie of no earthlie nation so necessarie for him, as the friendship of his owne, which he thought likelie to beare him so much the more heartie fauour, in that he disdayned not to marrie with one of his owne land. And yet if outwarde aliance were thought so requisite, he woulde finde the meanes to enter thereunto, much better by other of his kin, where all the parties coulde be contented, than to marrie himselfe whome hee shoulde happilie neuer loue, and for the possibilitie of more possessions, leese the fruite and pleasure of this that he had alreadie. For small pleasure taketh a man in all that euer he hath beside, if he be wiued against his appetite. And I doubt not (quoth he) but there be as ye say other, that be in euerie point comparable with hir: and therefore I let not them that like them to wed them: No more is it reason, that it mislike any man, that I marrie where it liketh mee. And I am sure that my Cousin of Warwike neyther loueth mee so little, to grudge at that I loue, nor is so vnreasonable to looke that I should in choise of a wife, rather bee ruled by his eie, than by mine owne: as though I were a ward that were bound to marrie by the appointment of a guardian. I would not be a king with that condition, to forbeare mine owne libertie in choyse of mine owne marriage.

The kings aunswere to his mother.

As for possibilitie of more inheritance by new affinitie in strange lands, is oft the occasion of more trouble than profite: and we haue alreadie title by that meanes, to so much as sufficeth to get and keepe well in one mans daies. That she is a widow and hath already children, by gods blessed lady I am a batcheler and haue some too, and so each of vs hath a proofe that neither of vs is like to be barrain. And therfore (madam) I pray you be content, I trust in God she shall bring forth a yong prince that shall please you. And as for the Bigamie, let the Bishop hardlie lake it in my wale when I come to take orders: For

I vnderstand it is forbidden a Priest, but I neuer wist it yet, that it was forbidden a Prince.

The dutches with these wordes nothing appeased, and seeing the king so set thereon, that she could not pull him backe, so highly she disdained it, that vnder pretext of her dutie to godward, she deuised to disturb this mariage, and rather to helpe that he should marrie one dame Elizabeth Lucie, whom the king had also not long before gotten with childe. Wherefore the kings mother openlie obiected against his marriage, as it were in discharge of her conscience, that the king was sure to dame Elizabeth Lucie, and her husband before God. By reason of which words, such obstacle was made in the matter, that either the bishops durst not, or the king would not proceede to the solemnization of this wedding, till these same were clearely purged, and the troth well and openlie testified. Whereupon dame Elizabeth Lucie was sent for.

Elizabeth Lucie.

And albeit that she was by the kings mother and manie other put in good comfort, to affirme that she was ensured vnto the king: yet when she was solemnly sworne to saie the troth, shee confessed that they were neuer ensured, Howbeit she said his grace spake so louing words vnto her, that she verily hoped he would haue maried her. And that if it had not been for such kind words, she would neuer haue shewed such kindnes to him, to let him so kindly get her with childe.

This examination solemnelie taken, when it was clearely perceiued that there was none impediment: the K. with great feast and honorable solemnity, married dame Elizabeth Grey, and her crowned queene that was his enemies wife, and manie time had prated full heartily for his losse, in which God loued her better than to grant her her bone.

But when the earle of Warwike vnderstood of this marriage, he tooke it so highly that his ambassage was deluded, that for verie anger and disdaine, he at his returning assembled a great puissance against the king, and came so fast vpon him or he could be able to resist, that he was faine to void the realme, and flee into Holland for succor, where he remained for the space of two yeers, leauing his new wife in Westminster in Sanctuarie, where she was deliuered of Edward the Prince, of whom we before haue spoken. In which meane time the earle of Warwike tooke out of prison, & set vp again K. Henry the fift, which was before by K. Edward deposed, and that much what by the power of the earle of Warwike which was a wise man, and a couragious warrior, and of such strength, what for his lands, his alliance, and fauor with all people, that he made kings, and put downe kings almost at his pleasure, and not impossible to haue attained it himselfe, if hee had not reckoned it a greater thing to make a king than to be a king. But nothing lasteth alway: for in conclusion K. Edward returned, and with much lesse number than he had at Barnet on the Easter day field, slew the erle of Warwike, with many other great estates of that partie, and so stablie attained the crowne againe, that he peaceably enioyed it vntill his dying daie: and in such plight left it, that it could not be lost, but by the discord of his very friends, or falsehod of his fained friends. I haue rehearsed this businesse about this marriage somewhat the more at length, because because it might therby the better appeare vpon how slipper a ground the protector builded his colour, by which he pretended king Edwards children to be bastards: But that inuention simple as it was, it liked them to whom it sufficed to haue somewhat to saie, while they were sure to be compelled to no larger proofe than themselues list to make.

Now then (as I began to shew you) it was by the protector and his counsel concluded, that this Doctor Shaa should in a Sermon at Pauls crosse signifie to the people, that neither king Edwarde himselfe, nor the Duke of Clarence, were lawfullie begotten, nor were not the verie children of the duke of Yorke, but begotten vnlawfullie by other persons, by aduoutrie of the dutchesse their mother. And that also dame Elizabeth Lucy was verilie the wife of king Edward, and so the prince and all his children bastards, that were begotten vpon the Quéene. According to this deuise doctor Shaa the Sondaie after, at Pauls Crosse in a great audience (as alwaie assembled greate number to his preaching) he toke for his theame Spuria vitulamina non agent radices altas. That is to saie: Bastard slips shall neuer take deepe roote. Doctor Shaas sermon on Sunday the 19 of June.

Whereupon when he had shewed the great grace that God giueth, and secretlie infundeth in right generation after the lawes of matrimonie, then declared he that commonly those children lacked that grace, and for the punishment of their parentes were for the more part vnhappie which were gotten in base, and speciallie in aduoutrie, of which though some by the ignorance of the world and the truth hid from knowledge inherited for the season other mens lands, yet GOD alwaie so prouideth, that it continueth not in their bloode long, but the trueth comming to light, the rightfull inheritors bee restored and the bastarde slippe pulled vp ere it can bee rooted deepe. And when he had laide for the proofe and confirmation of this sentence certaine examples taken out of the olde Testament, and other auncient Histories, then beganne he to descende into the praise of the LORD Richarde late Duke of Yorke, calling him Father to the lord protector, and declared the title of his heires vnto the Crowne, to whome it was after the death of king Henry the first entailed by authoritie of Parliament. Then shewed hee that his verie right heire of his bodie lawfullie begotten was onlie the Lord protector: For he declared then, that king Edwarde was neuer lawfullie married vnto the Quéene, but was before God husband vnto dame Elizabeth Lucie, and so his children bastards. And besides that, neither king Edward himselfe, nor the duke of Clarence, among those that were secret in the household, were reckoned verie surely for the children of the noble Duke, as those that by their fauors more resembled other knowne men than him. From whose vertuous conditions he saide also that king Edward was far off. But the Lord protector he said, the verie noble prince, the speciall paterne of knightly prowes, as well in al princely behauior, as in the lineaments and fauor of his visage, represented the very face of the noble duke his father. This is quoth he, the fathers owne figure, this is his owne countenance, the very print of his visage, the very sure vndoubted Image, the plaine expresse likenes of that noble duke.

Now was it before deuised, that in the speaking of these wordes, the Protector teacher shoulde haue come in among the people to the Sermon warde, to the end that those meeting with his presence, might haue béene taken among the hearers, as though the holie Ghost had put them in the preachers mouth, and shoulde haue moued the people euen there to crie, king Richard, king Richard, that it might haue béene after sayde, that hee was speciallie chosen by God, and in maner myracle. But this deuise quailed, eyther by the Protectors negligence, or the Preachers ouermuch diligence. For while the Protector founde by the waie tarrying, least hee shoulde preuent those wordes, and the Doctor fearing that hee shoulde come ere his Sermon coulde come to theis wordes, hasted his matter thereto, who was come to them, and passe them, and entred into other matters ere the Protector came. Whome when hee beholde comming, hee sodaynelie left the matter with which hee was in hande, and without anie deduction thereunto, out of all order, and out of all frame, beganne to repeate those wordes agayne: This is the verie Noble Prince, the speciall paterne of knightlie prowes, which as well in all Princely behauiour, as in the lineamentes and fauour of his visage, representeth the verie face of the noble duke of Yorke his father: this is the fathers owne figure, this is his owne countenaunce, the verie print of his visage, the sure vndoubted image, the plaine expresse likenes of the noble duke, whose remembrance can neuer die while he liueth. While these words were in speaking, the Protector accompanied with the duke of Buckingham, went through the people into the place where the doctors commonly stand in the vpper story, where hee stode to hearken the Sermon. But the people were so far from crying king Richarde, that they stood as they had béene turned into stones, for wonder of this shamefull Sermon.

Preacher. After which once ended, the Preacher gat him home, and neuer after durst looke out for shame, but kept him out of sight like an Owle. And when hee once asked one that had béene his old friend, what the people talked of him, all were it that his owne conscience well shewed him that they talked no good, yet when the other answered him, that there was in euerie mans mouth spoken of him much shame, it so stroke him to the hart, that within fewe daies after he withered and consumed awaie.

The 21. of June. Then on the Tuesdaie following this sermon, there came into the Guilde hall in London the duke of Buckingham, accompanied with diuers Lordes and knightes, more than happilie knew the message that they brought. And there in the East ende of the hall, where the Maior kéepeth the Hustings, the maior & all the Aldermen being assembled about him, all the commons of the citie gathered before them: after silence commaunded vpon great pain in the protectors name, the duke stood vp, and (as he was neither vnlearned, and of nature maruellously well spoken) he said vnto the people with a cleare and a loud voice in this maner of wise.

The Duke of Buckinghams Oration. Friends, for the zeale and heartie fauor that we beare you, wee bee come to breake vnto you, of a matter right great and weightie, and no lesse weightie than pleasing to God, and profitable to all the Realme: nor to no part of the realme more profitable, than to you the Citizens of this noble Citie. For why, that that thing that we wot well ye haue long time lacked, and ſore longed for, that ye would haue giuen great good for, that yee woulde haue gone farre to fetch, that thing we be come hither to bring you without your labour, paine, coſt, aduenture or ieopardie. What thing is that? Certes the ſuretie of your owne bodies, the quiet of your Wiues and your Daughters, the ſafegarde of your goods: of all which thinges in time paſt ye ſtood euer more in doubt. For who was there of you all, that would reckon himſelfe lord of his own goods among ſo many grens and traps as were ſet therfore, among ſo much pilling and polling, among ſo manie tares and tallages, of which there was neuer end, and oftentimes no néed: or if anie were, it rather grew of riot, and vnreaſonable waſt, than anie neceſſarie or honorable charge? So that there was daillie pilled from good men and honeſt great ſubſtance of goods to be laſhed out among vnthrifts, ſo farre forth that fiftéenes ſufficed not, nor anie vſuall manner of knowne Tares: but vnder an eaſie name of benevolence and good will, the Commiſſioners ſo much of euerie man tooke, as no man could with his good will haue giuen: as though that name of benevolence, had ſignified that euery man ſhould pay not what himſelfe of his owne good will liſt to grant, but what the king of his good will liſt to take. Which neuer aſked little, but euery thing was haunſed aboue the meaſure, amercements turned into fines, fines into ranſoms, ſmall treſpaſſes into miſpriſion, miſpriſion into treaſon. Wherof I think no man loketh that we ſhould remember you of examples by name, as though Burdet were forgotten, that was for a word ſpoken in haſte cruelly beheaded, by the miſconſtruing of the lawes of this realme for the princes pleaſure; with no leſſe honour to Marcam then chiefe Juſtice, that left his office rather than he would aſſent to that iudgement, than to the diſhoneſty of thoſe that either for feare or flatterie gaue that iudgement. What Cooke your own worſhipfull neighbor, alderman and maior of this noble citie, who is of you either ſo negligent that he knoweth not, or ſo forgetfull that he remembreth not, or ſo hard harted that he pitieth not that worſhipful mans loſſe? what ſpeake we of loſſe? his vtter ſpoile and vndeſerued deſtruction, onelie for that it happened thoſe to fauor him whome the prince fauoured not. We néed not I ſuppoſe to rehearſe of theſe anie mo by name, ſith there bee (I doubt not) manie heere preſent, that either in themſelues, or in their nigh friendes haue knowne as well their goods as their perſons, greatlie indangered, either by fained quarrelles, or ſmall matters agréeued with heynous names. And alſo there was no time ſo greate, of which there coulde lacke a pretext. For ſith the king preuenting the time of his inheritance attayned the Crowne by battell: it ſufficed in a rich man for a pretext of treaſon, to haue béen of kinred or aliance, nére familiaritie, or longer acquaintance with anie of thoſe that were at anie time the kinemies, which was at one time & other, more than halfe the realm. Thus were neither your goods in ſurety, & yet they brought your bodies in ieoparty, beſide the common aduenture of open war, which albeit that it is euer the will & occaſion of much miſchiefe, yet it is neuer ſo miſcheuous as where anypeople fall at diſſance among themſelues, nor in none earthly nation, ſo deadly & ſo peſtilent, as when it happeth among vs: & among vs neuer ſo long continued dissention, nor so manie battailes in that season, nor so cruell and so deadlie foughten, as was in that kings daies that dead is, God forgiue it his soule. In whose time, and by whose occasion, what about the getting of the garlande, képing it, leesing, and winning againe, it hath cost more English bloud, than hath twice the winning of France. In which inward warre among our selues, hath béene so great effusion of the ancient noble bloud of this Realme, that scarcely the halfe remaineth, to the great enfæbling of this noble land, beside many a good towne ransacked and spoiled by them that haue béene going to the fielde or comming from thence: And peace long after not much surer then warre. So that no time was there, in which rich men for their money, and great men for their landes, or some other for some feare, or some displeasure were not out of perill. For whome trusted he that mistrusted his owne brother? whome spared he that killed his owne brother? or who could perfitly loue him, if his owne brother could not? What manner of folke he most fauoured we shall for his honor spare to speake of, howbeit, this wot you well all, that whoso was best, bare alwaie least rule, and more suite was in his daies vnto Shores wife, a vile and an abhominable strumpet, than to all the lordes in Englande, except vnto those that made her their Protector: which simple woman was well named and honest, till the king for his wanton lust and sinfull affection bereft her from her husbande, a right honest substantiall yong man among you. And in that point, which in good faith I am sorie to speake of, sauing that it is in vaine to kéepe in counsel that thing that all men know, the kings grædy appetite was insatiable, and euery where ouer all the realme intolerable: for no woman was there any where, yong or olde, rich or poore, whom he set his eie vpon, in whom he any thing liked, either person or fauor, spéech, pace, or countenance, but without any feare of God, or respect of his honour, murmure or grudge of the world, he would importunely pursue his appetite, and haue her, to the great destruction of many a good woman, and great dolor to their husbands and their other friends, which being honest people of themselues, so much regard the cleannesse of their house, the chastity of their wiues and their children, that them were leauer to lése all that they haue beside, than to haue such a villany done them. And all were it that with this and other importable dealings, the realme was in euerie part annoied: yet specially ye here the citizens of this noble city, as wel for that amongst you is most plenty of all such thinges as minister matter to such iniuries, as for that you were nearest at hand, sith that nére heereabout was commonly his most abiding. And yet be ye the people whom he had as singular cause well and kindly to intreat, as any part of his realme, not only for that the prince by this noble city, as his especiall chamber, & the speciall well renowmed city of his realm, much honorable fame receiueth among all other nations: but also for that ye, not without your great cost, and sundry perils and ieopardies in all his wars, bare euen your speciall fauor to his part, which your kinde mindes borne vnto the house of Yorke, sith he hath nothing worthily acquited, there is of that house that nowe by Gods grace better shall, which thing to shewe you, is the whole summe and effect of this our present errand. It shall not, I wot well, need that

I rehearse to you againe that yée haue alreadie heard, of him that can better tell it, & of whom I am sure ye will better beléeue it: and reason is that it so be. I am not so prowd to loke therefore, that yée should reckon my wordes of as great authoritie as the preachers of the word of God, namely, a man so cunning and so wise, that no man better wotteth what he should saie, and therto so good and vertuous, that he would not saie the thing which he wist bee should not saie, in the pulpet, namely, into the which no honest man commeth to lie, which honourable Preacher yée well remember substantiallie declared vnto you at Paules Crosse, on Sundaie last passed, the right and title, that the most excellent Prince Richard Duke of Gloucester, nowe Protector of this realme hath vnto the crowne and kingdome of the same. For as the worshipfull man groundly made open vnto you, the children of king Edward the 4. were neuer lawfully begotten, for as much as the king (leauing his very wife dame Elizabeth Lucie) was neuer lawfully married vnto the Quéene their mother, whose bloud, sauing that he set his voluptuous pleasure before his honor, was full vnméetely be matched with his, and the mingling of whose bloods together, hath béene the effusion of great part of the noble bloud of this realm. Whereby it may well séeme the marriage not well made, of which there is so much mischiefe growne: For lacke of which lawfull accoupling, and also of other thinges which the saide worshipfull doctor rather signified than fullie explaned, and which thinges shall not be spoken for mee, as the thing wherein euerie man forbeareth to say that he knoweth in auoiding displeasure of my noble Lorde Protector, bearing, as nature requireth, a filiall reuerence to the Dutchesse his mother, for these causes I saie before remembred, that is to wit, for lacke of other issue lawfully comming of the late noble prince Richard Duke of Yorke, to whose rotall bloud the crowne of England and of France, is by the high authoritie of parliament entailed, the right and title of the same, is by the iust course of inheritance according to the common lawes of this lande, deuolute and commen vnto the most excellent Prince the Lord Protector, as to the verie lawfully begotten sonne of the forerememberd noble Duke of Yorke. Which thing well considered, and the great knightly prowesse pondered, with manifolde vertues which in his noble person singularly abound, the nobles and commons also of this realme, and specially of the north part, not willing anie bastard bloud to haue the rule of the land, nor the abusions before in the same vsed anie longer to continue, haue condescended and fully determined to make humble petition to the most puissant prince the lord protector, that it may like his grace at our humble request, to take vpō him the guiding and gouernance of this realm, to the wealth and encrease of the same, according to his very right and iust title. Which thing I wote it well, he will be loath to take vpon him, as he whose wisedome well perceiueth the labour and studie both of minde and bodie, that shall come therewith, to whomsoeuer so will occupie the rowme, as I dare saie he will, if he take it. Which rowme I warne you well is no childes office: And that the great wise man well perceiued when he said: Væ regno cuius rex puer est: Woe is that realme that hath a childe to their king. Wherefore so much the more cause haue wee to thanke

God,

God, that this noble personage which is so righteously intituled thereunto, is of so sad age, and thereunto so great wisedome ioyned with so great experience, which albeit he will be loath (as I haue said) to take it vpon him, yet shal he to our petition in that behalfe the more gratiously incline, if yee the worshipfull citizens of this the chiefe city of this realme, ioine with vs the nobles in our said request. Which for your owne weale we doubt not but ye will: and nathelesse I heartily praie you so to do, wherby you shall do great profit to all this realme beside, in chosing them so good a king, and vnto your selfe speciall commoditie, to whom his Maiestie shall euer after beare so much the more tender fauor, in how much he shall perceiue you the more prone and benevolently minded toward his election. Wherein deare friends what minde you haue, we require you plainly to shew vs.

When the Duke had said, and loked that the people whom he hoped that the Maior had framed before, should after this proposition made, haue cried king Richard, king Richard, all was husht and mute, and not one word answered thereunto: wherwith the duke was maruellously abashed, & taking the maior nearer to him, with other that were about him priuie to that matter, said vnto them softlie, what meaneth this, that this people bee so still? Sir (quoth the Maior) perchase they perceiue you not well. That shall we mend (quoth he) if that will helpe.

And by and by somewhat louder he rehearsed them the same matter againe in other order and other words so wel and ornately, and nathelesse so euidently and plaine, with voice, gesture, and countenance so comely, and so conuenient, that euerie man much marueled that heard him, and thought that they neuer had in their liues heard so euill a tale so well tolde.

But were it for wonder or feare, or that each lokt that other should speake first; not one word was there answered of all the people that stode before, but all was as still as the midnight, not so much as rowning amongst them, by which they might seeme to commune what was best to doe. When the Maior saw this, he with other partners of that Councell drew about the Duke, and said that the people had not beene accustomed there to be spoken vnto, but by the Recorder, which is the mouth of the citie, and happily to him they will answere. With that the Recorder called Fitz William, a sad man and an honest, which was so newcome into that office, that he neuer had spoken to the people before, & loath was with that matter to begin; notwithstanding, thereunto commanded by the Maior, made rehearsall to the Commons of that the duke had twice rehearsed to them himselfe. But the Recorder so tempered his tale, that he shewed euerie thing as the Dukes wordes, and no part of his owne. But all this noting, no change made in the people, which alway after one, stod as they had beene men amased. Whereupon the Duke rowned vnto the Maior and said: this is a marueilous obstinate silence, and therewith he turned vnto the people againe with these wordes: Deare friendes, we come to moue you to that thing which peraduenture we not so greatly needed, but that the Lords of this Realme, and the Commons of other parties might haue sufficed: sauing that we such loue beare you, and so much set by you, that we would not gladlie doe without you, that thing in which to be partners is your weale and honor, which as it seemeth, either you see not, or wey not. Wherefore we require you giue vs answere one or other whether yee be minded as all the nobles of the realme be, to haue this Noble Prince nowe Protector to be your king or not.

At these wordes the people began to whisper among themselues secretly, that the voice was neither lowde nor distinct, but as it were the sounde of a swarme of Bées, till at the last in the neather ende of the Hall, a bushment of the Dukes seruants and Ashfields, and other longing to the Protector, with some prentises and laddes that thrust into the Hall among the prease, began sodainly at mens backes to crie out as lowde as their throates would giue, king Richard, king Richard, and threw vp their caps in token of ioy. And they that stode before cast backe their heads marueiling thereat, but nothing they saide.

And when the Duke and the Maior saw this manner, they wisely turned it to their purpose, and said it was a goodly crie, and a ioyfull to heare, euery man with one voice, no man saying nay. Wherfore friends (quoth the Duke) since that we perceiue it is all your whole mindes to haue this Noble man for your king, wherof we shall make to his grace so effectuall report, that we doubt not but it shall redound vnto your great weale and commoditie: we require yet that ye to morrow go with vs, and we with you vnto his noble grace, to make our humble request vnto him in manner before remembred. And therewith the Lordes came downe, and the companie dissolued and departed, the more part all sad, some with glad semblance that were not verie merrie, and some of those that came thither with the Duke not able to dissemble their sorrowe, were faine at his backe to turne their face to the wall, while the dolour of their heart burst out of their eies.

The Maiors comming to Baynards Castle the 22. of June.

Then on the morrow after, the Maior with all the Aldermen and chiefe commoners of the Citie in their best maner apparelled, assembling themselues together, resorted vnto Baynardes Castle, where the Protector laie. To which place repayred also according to their appointment, the Duke of Buckingham, with diuers Noble men with him, beside manie knights and other Gentlemen. And thereupon the Duke sent worde vnto the Lord Protector of the being there of a great and honorable companie, to moue a great matter vnto his grace.

Whereupon the Protector made difficultie to come out vnto them, but if he first knew some part of their errand, as though he doubted, and partly distrusted the comming of a number vnto him so sodainly, without any warning or knowledge whether they came for good or harme. Then the D. when he had shewed this vnto the Maior and other, that they might thereby see howe little the Protector loked for this matter, they sent vnto him by the messenger such loning message againe, and therewith so humbly besought him to vouchsafe, that they might resort to his presence, to propose their intent, of which they would vnto none other person part disclose, that at the last he came forth of his Chamber, and yet not downe vnto them, but stode aboue in a Galleris

ouer them, where they might see him, and speake to him', as though he would not yet come too nére them, till hee wist what they meant. And thereupon the duke of Buckingham first made humble petition vnto him on the behalfe of them all, that his grace would pardon them, and licence them to propose vnto his grace the intente of their comming without his displeasure, without which pardon obtained, they durst not be bold to moue him of that matter. In which, albeit they meante as much honour to his Grace, as wealth to all the realme beside, yet were they not sure how his grace would take it, whom they would in no wise offend. When the protector (as hee was verie gentle of himselfe, and also longed sore to wit what they meant) gaue him leaue to propose what him liked, verlie trusting for the good mind that hee bare them all, none of them anie thing woulde intende vnto him warde, wherewith he ought to be grieued.

When the Duke had this leaue and pardon to speake, then ware hee bold to shew him their intent and purpose, with all the causes moouing them thereunto, as ye before haue heard, & finally to beséech his grace, that it would like him of his accustomed goodnes and zeale vnto the realme nowe with his eie of pitie, to behold the long continued distresse and decay of the same, and to set his gratious hands to redresse an amendment thereof, by taking vpon him the crowne and gouernance of this realm, according to his right and title lawfullie descended vnto him, and to the laude of God, profite of the land, and vnto his grace so much the more honor, and lesse pain, in that that neuer prince raigned vpon any people, that were so glad to liue vnder his obeisance, as the people of this realme vnder his.

A. 1482. This time Mary heire of Burgundy & wife of Maximilian dyes by a fall from her horse in hunting

When the Protector had hearde the proposition, he loked verie strangelie thereat, and answered: That albeit it were that he partlie knewe the thinges by them alledged to bee true, yet such entire loue hee bare vnto king Edwarde and his children, that so much more hee regarded his honor in other realmes about, than the Crowne of anie one, of which hée was neuer desirous, that hee coulde not finde in his heart in this point to encline to their desire. For in all other nations where the truth were not well knowne, it shoulde peraduenture bee thought, that it were his owne ambitious mind and deuise, to depose the Prince, and take himselfe the Crowne, with which infamie hee woulde not haue his honour stayned for anie Crowne, in which he had euer perceyued much more labour and payne than pleasure to him that woulde so vse it, as he that would not, were not worthie to haue it: Notwithstanding he not onelie pardoned them the motion that they made him, but also thanked them for the loue and heartie fauor they bare him, praying them for his sake to giue and beare the same to the prince, vnder whome hee was, and would bee content to liue, and with his labour and counsell, as farre as shoulde like the king to vse him, he would do his vttermost deuoire to set the Realme in good state, which was alreadie in this little while of his Protectorship (the praise giuen to God) well begun, in that the malice of such as were before occasion of the contrary, and of newe intended to be, were nowe partly by good policy, partly more by gods speciall prouidence, than mans prouision repressed.

Vpon

Upon this answere giuen, the duke by the Protectors licence, a little rowned, as well with other noble men about him, as with the Maior and Recorder of London. And after that vpon like pardon desired and obtained, he shewed aloude vnto the protector, that for a finall conclusion, by the realme it was appointed King Edwards line should not anie longer raigne ouer them, both for that they had so farre gone, that it was now no suretie to retreate, as for that they thought it for the weale vniuersall to take that waie, although they had not yet begun it. Wherefore if it would like his grace to take the crown vpon him, they would humblie beseech him thereunto. If he would giue them a resolute answeare to the contrarie, which they would be loath to heare, then must they needes seeke, and should not faile to find some other noble man that would.

These wordes much moued the Protector, which else as euerie man maie wit, would neuer of likelyhood haue enclined thereunto. But when he sawe there was none other waie, but that either he must take it, or else he and his both go from it, he said vnto the lords and commons: Sith we perceiue well that all the realme is so set, whereof we be very sorie that they will not suffer in anie wise king Edwards line to gouerne them, whome no man earthly can gouerne against their wils, and we well also perceiue, that no man is there, to whome the Crowne can by iust title appertaine, as to our selfe, as verie right heire lawfullie begotten of the bodie of our most deare father Richard late D. of Yorke, to which title is now ioined your election, the nobles & commons of this realme, which we of all titles possible take for the most effectuall: We bee content and agree fauorably to encline to your petition and request, and according to the same, heere we take vpon vs the Royall Estate, preeminence and kingdome of the two noble realmes, England and France, the one from this day forward, by vs and our heires to rule, gouerne, & defend: the other by gods grace, and your good helpe, to get againe and subdue, & establish for euer in due obedience vnto this realme of England, the aduancement whereof we neuer aske of God longer to liue than we intend to procure.

The protector taketh vpon him to be king.

With this there was a great shoute, crying, king Richarde, king Richarde. And then the Lordes went vp to the king (for so was hee from that time called) and the people departed, talking diuerslie of the matter, euerie man as his fantasie gaue him. But much they talked and maruelled of the maner of this dealing, that the matter was on both partes made so straunge, as though neyther had euer communed with other thereof before, when that themselues well there was no man so dull that heard them, but he perceiued wel enough, that all the matter was made betweene them. Howbeit some excused that againe, and saide all must be done in good order: and men must sometime for the manners sake, not be alknowne what they know: for at the consecration of a bishop, euery man wotteth well by the paying for his buls, that he purposeth to be one, and though he pay for nothing else: and yet must he bee twise asked whether he wil be bishop or no, and he must twise say nay, and at the third time take it, as compelled thereunto by his own wil. And in a stage plaie the people know right wel, that he that plaieth the Sowdain, is percase a sowter, yet yet if one should know so little good, to shew out of season what acquaintance he hath with him, and call him by his owne name while he standeth in his maiestie, one of his tormentors might hap to breake his head, and worthie, for marring of the play: And so they said, that these matters be kings games, as it were stage plaies, and for the more part, plaied vpon scaffolds: in which poore men be but the lokers on. And they that wise be, will meddle no further; for they that sometime step vp, and play with them, when they can not plaie their partes, they disorder the play, and do themselues no good.

1483 An. reg. 1. The 25. of June. This that is heere betweene this marke ¶ & this marke * was not written by Master Moore in this historie written by him in English, but is translated out of this Historie which he wrote in Latin.

¶ The next daie, the protector with a great traine, went to Westminster hall, and there when he had placed himselfe in the court of the kings bench, declared to the audience, that he would take vpon him the crown in that place there, where the king himselfe sitteth and ministreth the lawe, because he considered, that it was the chiefest duty of a king to minister the lawes. Then with as pleasant an oration as he could, he went about to win vnto him, the nobles, the merchants, the artificers, and in conclusion, all kind of men, but especially the lawyers of this realme. And finally, to the intent that no man should hate him for feare, and that his deceitfull clemencie might get him the goodwill of the people, when he had declared the discommoditie of discord, and the commodities of concord and vnitie, he made an open proclamation, that he did put out of his minde all enmities, and that he there did openly pardon all offences committed against him. And to the intent that he might shew a proofe thereof, he commanded that one Fogge, whom he had long deadly hated, should be brought then before him, who being brought out of the sanctuarie (for thither had he fled for feare of him) in the sight of the people, he toke him by ỹ hand: which thing the common people reioyced at, and praised, but wise men toke it for a vanitie. In his returne homeward, whomsoeuer he met, he saluted: for a mind that knoweth it selfe guiltie, is in a maner deiected to a seruile flatterie.

King Richard, to be sure of all enemies, had sent for out of the north fiue thousand men to bee at his coronation, vnder the leading of Robert of Ridsdale; these being but meanely apparrelled, and woorse harneised, mustered in Finsberie field.

On the fourth of Iuly, hee came to the Tower by water with his wife, and on the fift day he created T. lord Howard duke of Norffolke, sir T. his sonne earle of Surrey, William lord Barkeley earle of Nottingham, Francis lord Louel, vicount Louel and the kings chamberlaine: the lord Stanley was deliuered out of warde, and made steward of the kings housholde. Also the archbishop of Yorke was deliuered, uered, but Morton Bishop of Ely was committed to the Duke of Buckingham to be kept in warde, who sent him to his mannor of Brecknocke in Wales, there to be kept. The same night the king made knights of the Bathe to the number of seuenteene.

On the sixt of Iuly he rode through the Citie of London toward Westminster with great pompe: and on the morrow being the seuenth, he with his wife queene Anne were crowned.

When he had begunne his raigne in July, after this mockish election, then was he crowned the sixt, or rather the seuenth day of the same moneth. And that solemnitie was furnished for the most part, with the selfe same prouision that was appointed for the coronation of his nephew.*

After this were taken for rebels against the king Robert Ruffe sergeant of London, William Dauy pardoner of Hounslow, John Smith groome of king Edwards stirrop, and Stephen Ireland wardrober in the Tower, with many other, that they should haue sent writings into the parts of Britaine to the earles of Richmond and of Penbrooke, and the other lords: and how they were purposed to haue set fire on diuers partes of London, which fire, whilest men had beene stanching, they would haue stolen out of the Tower, the prince Edward, and his brother the duke of Yorke, &c. Robert Ruffe, William Dauy, John Smith, and Stephen Ireland, were at Westminster iudged to death, and from thence drawne to the Tower hill, and there beheaded, and their heads were set on London bridge.

Now fell there mischiefes thicke. And as the thing euill gotten is neuer wel kept, through all the time of his raigne neuer ceased there cruell death and slaughter, till his owne destruction ended it. But as he finished his time with the best death and the most righteous, that is to wit, his owne, so began hee with the most piteous and wicked, I meane the lamentable murther of his innocent nephewes, the young king and his tender brother, whose death and finall infortune hath naytheles commen so far in question, that some remaine yet in doubt, whether they were in his daies destroyed or no. Not for that onely that Perkin Werbecke by manie folkes malice, and moe folkes folly, so long space abusing the world, was aswell with princes as the power people, reputed and taken for the yonger of these two, but for that also that all things were in late daies so couertly demeaned, one thing pretended, and another meant, that there was nothing so plaine and openly prowed, but that yet for the common custome of close and couert dealing, men had it euer inwardly suspect, as manie well counterfeited iewels make the true mistrusted. Howbeit concerning the opinion, with the occasions mouing either partie, we shal haue place more at large to intreat, if we hereafter happen to write the time of the late noble prince of famous memorie K. Henry the 7. or percase that historie of Perkin in any compendious processe by it selfe. But in the meane time for this present matter, I shall rehearse you the dolorous end of those babes, not after euery waie that I haue heard, but by such men, and by such meanes, as me thinketh it were hard but it should be true.

King Richard after his coronation, taking his way to Glocester to visite in his newe honour, the towne of which he bare the name of his olde, deuised as he rode to fulfill the thing which he before had intended. And forasmuch as his minde gaue him, that his nephewes liuing, men woulde not reckon that hee coulde haue right to the Realme, he thought therefore without delaie to ride them, as though the killing of his kinsmen coulde amende his cause, and make him a kindlie king. Whereupon hée sent one Iohn Greene, whome hee specially trusted, vnto sir Robert Brakenbury Constable of the tower, with a letter and credence also, that the same sir Robert should in any wise put the two children to death. This Iohn Greene did his errand vnto Brakenburie, kneeling before our Ladie in the Tower, who plainelie answered, that hee woulde neuer put them to death to dy therefore: with which answere Iohn Greene returning, recounted the same to king Richard at Warwike yet in his wate. Wherewith he tooke such displeasure and thought, that the same night he said vnto a secret page of his: Ah whome shall a man trust? Those that I haue brought vp my selfe, those that I had weened would most surelie serue me, euen those faile me, and at my commandement will do nothing for mée. Sir (quoth his page) there lieth one on your pallet without, that I dare well saie, to do your grace pleasure, the thing were right hard that he would refuse, meaning this by Sir Iames Tirell, which was a man of right goodlie personage, and for natures giftes woorthie to haue serued a much better prince, if hee had well serued GOD, and by grace obtayned as much trueth and good will as hee had strength and wit. The man had an high heart, and sore longed vpwarde, not rising yet so fast as he had hoped, being hindered & kept vnder by the meanes of Sir Richard Ratcliffe, and Sir William Catesby, which longing for no mo partners of the Princes fauor, & namelie not for him, whose pride they wiste would bear no péere, kept him by secret driftes out of al secret trust, which thing this page well had marked and knowne: wherefore this occasion offered, of verie speciall friendship he toke his time to put him forward, and by such wise to do him good, that all the enimies he had, except the diuell, could neuer haue done him so much hurt. For vpon this pages woordes king Richard arose (for this communication had hee sitting at the draught, a conuenient Carpet for such a counsell) and came out into a pallet chamber, on which hee found in bed Sir Iames and Sir Thomas Tirels, of person like, and brethren of blood, but nothing of kinne in conditions. Then saide the king merrilie to them, what sirs, bee yée in bed so sone? And calling vp Sir Iames, brake to him secretlie his mind in this mischieuous matter: in which he found him nothing strange. Wherefore on the morrowe hee sent him to Brakenburie with a letter, by which hee was commanded to deliuer Sir Iames all the keies of the tower for one night, to the end hee might there accomplish the kinges pleasure, in such thinges as he had giuen him commandement. After which letter deliuered, and the keyes receyued, Sir Iames appointed the night next ensuing to destroie them, demising before and preparing the meanes. The Prince as soone as the protector left the name, and toke himselfe as king, had it shewed vnto him, that he shoulde not raigne, but his vncle shoulde haue the Crowne. At which woords the prince sore abashed, began to sigh and said: Alas, I would my vncle would let me haue my life yet, though I leese my kingdome. Then he that told him the tale, vsed him with good words, and put him in the best comfort he could. But forthwith was the prince and his brother both shut vp, and all other remoued from them, onlie one called Black Will, or William Slaughter except, set to serue them and see them sure. After which time the prince neuer tied his points, nor aught rought of himselfe, but with that young babe his Brother, lingred with thought and heauines, till this traiterous death deliuered them of that wretchednes: for sir Iames Tyrell deuised that they should be murthered in their beddes. To the execution whereof, he appointed Miles Forrest, one of the foure that kept them, a fellowe fleshed in murther before time. To him he ioined one Iohn Dighton his owne horse-keeper, a bigge, broad, square, strong knaue.

The yoong K. & his brother murthered.

Then all the other being remooued from them, this Miles Forrest, and Iohn Dighton, about midnight (the seelie children lying in their beds) came into the Chamber, and sodainlie lapped them vp among the clothes, so to bewrapped them and intangled them, keeping down by force the featherbed and pillowes hard vnto their mouths, that within a while, smothered and stifled, their breath failing, they gaue vp to God their innocent soules into the ioies of heauen, leauing to the tormentors their bodies dead in the bed. Which after that the wretches perceiued, first by the strugling with the paines of death, and after long lying still, to be throughlie dead, they laid their bodies naked out vpon the bed, and fetched sir Iames to see them, which vpon the sight of them, caused those murtherers to burie them at the staire foot, meetelie deepe in the grounde, vnder a great heape of stones.

Then rode sir Iames in great haste to K. Richard, and shewed him all the maner of the murther, who gaue him great thanks, and (as some say) there made him knight. But hee allowed not as I haue heard, the burying in so vile a corner, saying, that he would haue them buried in a better place, because they were a kings sonnes. Lo the honorable courage of a king. Whereupon they saie, that a priest of S. Robert Brakenbury toke vp the bodies againe, and secretlie enterred them in such place, as by the occasion of his death, which onelie knew it, could neuer since come to light. Verie troth it is, and well known, that at such time as Sir Iames Tyrell was in the Tower for treason committed against the most famous Prince king Henrie the seuenth, both Dighton and hee were examined, and confessed the murther in manner aboue written, but whither the bodies were remooued, they coulde nothing tell. And thus, as I haue learned of them that much knew, and little cause had to lie, were these two noble Princes, these innocent tender children, borne of most royall blod, brought vp in great wealth, likelie long to liue, raigne, and rule in the realm, by traiterous tyrannie taken, depriued of their estate, shortly shut vp in prison, and priuilie slain and murthered, their bodies cast God wot where, by the cruel ambition of their vnnatural vncle and his dispiteous tormentors. Which thinges on euerie part well pondered, God neuer gaue this world a more notable example, neyther in what vnsuretie standeth this worldelie weale, or what mischiefe worketh the proude enterprise of an hie heart, or finallie, what wretched ende ensueth such dispiteous crueltie. For first to beginne with the miniſters, Miles Forreſt at Saint Martins péecemeale rotted awaie: Dighton indeede yet walketh on aliue in good poſſibilitie to be hanged ere he die: but ſir Iames Tyrell died at the Tower hill beheaded for treaſon: King Richard himſelfe, as yée ſhall hereafter heare, ſlaine in the field, hacked and hewed of his enemies handes, carried on horſebacke dead, his haire in deſpight torne and tugged like a Curre Dogge: and the miſchiefe that he toke was within leſſe than three yéeres of the miſchiefe that he did, and yet all the meane time ſpent in much paine and trouble outward, much feare, anguiſh, and ſorrow within. For I haue heard by credible report of ſuch as were ſecret with his chamberlaine, that after this abhominable deed done, he neuer had quiet in his mind: He neuer thought himſelfe ſure: where he went abroad, his eien whirled about, his body priuily fenced, his hand euer vpon his dagger, his countenance & maner like one alwaies readie to ſtrike againe; he toke ill reſt a nights, lay long waking and muſing, ſore wearied with Care & Watch, rather ſlumbred than ſlept, troubled with fearefull dreames, ſodainelie ſometime ſtart vp, leapt out of his bed, and ran about the chamber, ſo was his reſtles heart continually toſſed and tumbled with the tedious impreſſion and ſtormy remembrance of his abhominable déede.

Now had he outward no long time in reſt: for hereupon, ſone after began the conſpiracy, or rather, good confederation betweene the Duke of Buckingham and many other gentlemen againſt him.

The occaſion whereupon the king and the duke fell out, is of diuers folke diuers wiſe pretended.

This Duke (as I haue for certaine béene enformed) as ſone as the Duke of Glouceſter, vpon the death of King Edward came to Yorke, and there had ſolemne funerall ſeruice for king Edward, ſent thither in the moſt ſecret wiſe he could, one Perſall his truſtie ſeruant, who came to Iohn Ward, a chamberer of like ſecret truſt with the duke of Glouceſter, deſiring, that in the moſt cloſe and couert maner, he might be admitted to the preſence and ſpéech of his maſter. And the duke of Glouceſter aduertiſed of his deſire, cauſed him in the dead of the night, after all other folks auoided, to be brought vnto him in his ſecret chamber, where Perſall after his maſters recommendation, ſhewed him, that he had ſecretly ſent to ſhew him in his new world, he would take ſuch part as he would, and waite vpon him with a thouſand good fellowes, if néede were. The Meſſenger ſent backe with thankes, and ſome ſecrete inſtruction of the protectors mind: yet met him againe with farther from the duke his maſter, within fewe dayes after at Nottingham: whither the Protector from Yorke, with many gentlemen of the north country, to the number of ſix hundred horſes, was come on his way to London ward, and after ſecret meeting and communication had, eſtſoone departed. Whereupon at Northampton, the duke met with the Protector himſelfe with 300. horſes, and from thence ſtill continued with him partner of all his deuiſes, till that after his Coronation they departed, as it ſeemed very great friends at Glouceſter: from whence, as ſone as the duke came home, he ſo lightly turned from him, and ſo highly conſpired againſt him, that a man would maruell whereof the change grew. And ſurely, the occasion of their variaunce is of diuers men diuerslie reported. Some haue said (I heard saie) that the Duke a little before the Coronation, among other thinges, required of the protector the Duke of Hertfords Lands, to the which he pretended himselfe iust inheritor. And for as much as the title which hee claymed by inheritance, was somewhat enterlaced with the Title to the crowne, by the line of king Henry before depriued, the protector conceiued such indignation, that he reiected the dukes request with many spitefull and minatory words, which so wounded his hart with hatred and mistrust, that he neuer after could endure to looke aright on king Richard, but euer feared his owne life, so far forth, that when the protector rode through London toward his coronation, he fained himselfe sick, bicause he would not ride with him. And the other taking it in euil part, sent him word to rise, & come ride, or he would make him be carried: whereupon he rode on with euil wil, and that notwithstanding on the morrow, rose from the feast, fayning himselfe sick, and king Richard said it was done in hatred and despight of him. And they said, that euer after continuallie each of them liued in such hatred and distrust of other, that the Duke verilie loked to haue bene murthered at Glocester. From which naitheles, he in faire maner departed. But surely some right secret at that day denie this: and manie right wise men thinke it vnlikelie (the deepe dissembling nature of both those men considered, and what neede in that greene world the Protector had of the Duke, and in what perill the duke stood, if he fell once in suspition of the tyrant) that eyther the Protector woulde giue the duke occasion of displeasure or the duke the protector occasion of mistrust. And verily men think that if king Richard had anie such opinion conceiued, hee woulde neuer haue suffered him to escape his hands. Very troth it is, the duke was an high minded man, and euill could beare the Glorie of another, so that I haue heard of some that saie they sawe it, that the duke at such time as the Crowne was first set vpon the protectors head, his eie could not abide the sight thereof, but wryed his head another waie. But men say, that he was of troth not well at ease, and that both to king Richard well known, and not ill taken, nor any demand of the dukes vncourteously reiected, but hee both with great giftes and high behests, in most louing and trustie maner, departed at Glocester. But sone after his comming home to Brecknocke, hauing there in custodie by the commandement of king Richard doctor Morton Bishop of Ely, who (as ye before heard) was taken in the councell at the tower, ward with him familiar: whose wisedome abused his pride to his owne deliuerance and the dukes destruction. The bishop was a man of great naturall wit, verie well learned, and honorable in behauiour, lacking no wise waies to winne fauor. Hee had bene fast vpon the part of K. Henry, while that part was in wealth, and naytheles left it not, nor forsoke it in wo, but fled the realm with the quéene and the prince, while king Edward had the king in prison, neuer came home, but to the field: After which losse, and that part vtterly subdued, the other, for his fast faith and wisedome, not onelie was content to receyue him, but also wooed him to come, and had him from thence forth both in secret trust, and verie speciall fauour, which hee nothing deceyued. For he beeing (as ye haue heard) after king Edwards death firſt taken by the tyrant, for his truethe to the king, found the meane to ſet this Duke in his toppe, ioined gentlemen togither in aide of King Henrie, deuiſing firſt the marriage betweene him and king Edwardes daughter, by which his faith, hee declared the good ſeruice to both his maſters at once, with infinit benefite to the Realme, by the Coniunction of thoſe two bloods in one, whoſe ſeuerall titles had long vnquieted the lande, hee fled the realme, went to Rome, neuer minding more to meddle with the world, til the noble prince king Henry the 7. gat him home againe, made him Archbiſhop of Canterburie and Chancellor of England, whereunto the Pope ioined the honor of Cardinall. Thus liuing manie daies in as much honour as one man might well wiſh, ended them ſo godlie, that his death with Gods mercie well changed his life.

This man therefore, as I was about to tell you, by the long and often alternate proſe, as well of proſperitie as aduers fortune, had gotten by great experience the verie mother and miſtreſſe of wiſedome, a deepe inſight in politike worldlie drifts. Whereby, perceiuing now this duke glad to commune with him, fedde him with faire wordes, and manie pleaſant praiſes. And perceiuing by the proceſſe of their communication, the Dukes pryde, nowe and then balke out a little bread of enuie, toward the glorie of the king, and thereby feeling him eaſie to fall out if the matter were well handled: hee craftilie ſought the waies to pricke him forwarde, taking alwaies the occaſion of his comming, and ſo keeping himſelfe ſo cloſe within his boundes, that hee rather ſeemed to followe him, than to leade him. For, when the Duke firſt beganne to praiſe and boaſte the King, and ſhewe howe much profite the realme ſhoulde take by his raigne: My Lorde Morton anſwered: Surely my Lord, folly it were for me to lie, for if I would ſweare the contrarie, your Lordſhip would not I weene beleeue, but that if the world would haue gone as I would haue wiſhed, king Henries ſon had had the crown, & not king Edward. But after that God had ordered him to loſe it, & king Edward to raign, I was neuer ſo mad that I would with a dead man ſtriue: againſt the quicke. So was I to K. Edward a faithfull chaplaine, and glad would haue bin that his child had ſucceeded him. Howbeit, if the ſecret iudgement of God haue otherwiſe prouided, I purpoſe not to ſpurne againſt a pricke, nor labor to ſet vp that god pulleth downe. And as for the late Protector and now king. And euen there he left, ſaying, that he had alreadie meddled too much with the world, and would from that daie meddle with his booke and his beades, and no further. Then longed the duke ſore to heare what he would haue ſaid, becauſe he ended with the King, and there ſo ſodainelie ſtopped, and exhorted him ſo familiarlie betweene them twaine, to bee bold to ſay what ſoeuer he thought, whereof hee faithfullie promiſed, there ſhould neuer come hurt, and peraduenture more good than he woulde weene, and that himſelfe intended to vſe his faithfull ſecrete aduiſe and counſel, which he ſaid was the onelie cauſe for which he procured of the king to haue him in his cuſtody, where hee might reckon himſelfe at home, and elſe had hee beene put in the hands of them with whome he ſhould not haue founde the like fauour. The Biſhop right humblie thanked him, and ſaide: In good saith my Lord, I lone not to talke much of Princes, as a thing not all out of perill, though the word be without fault, forasmuch as it shall not be taken as the partie meant it, but as it pleaseth the Prince to construe it. And euer I thinke on Aesopes tale, that when the Lion had proclaymed, that on payne of death, there shoulde none horned beast abide in that wood: one that had in his forehead a bunch of flesh, fled awaie a great pace. The fore that saw him run so fast, asked him whither hee made all that haste? And hee answered, in sayth I neither wot, nor recke, so I were once hence, because of this proclamation made of horned beasts. What fole? quoth the fore, thou mayest abide well ynough, the Lion meant not by thée, for it is none horne that is in thine heade. Nomarrie (quoth he) that wot I well enough: but what and he call it an horn, where am I then? The Duke laughed merrilie at the tale, and said, My lord, I warant you, neither the Lion nor the Boare shall pick ante matter at ante thing heere spoken, for it shall neuer come to their eares. In good faith Sir, said the Bishop, if it did, the thing that I was about to sate, taken as well (as afore God I meant) it could deserue but thanks: and yet taken as I wéene it would, might happen to turne me to little good, and you to lesser. Then longed the duke yet much more to wit what it was: whereupon the bishop said, In good faith my L. as for the late protector, sith hee is now king in possession, I purpose not to dispute his title, but for the weale of this realme, whereof his grace hath nowe the gouernance, and whereof I am my selfe one poore member, I was about to wish, that to those good abilities whereof hee hath alreadie right manie, little néeding my prayse, it might yet haue pleased God for the better store, to haue giuen him some of such other excellent vertues mete for the rule of a realme, as our Lord hath planted in the person of your grace: and there left againe.

The Duke somewhat marueiling at his sodaine pauses, said: My Lord, I note your often breathing and sodaine stopping in your communication, so that to my intelligence, your words neither come to ante direct or perfect sentence in conclusion, whereby either I might haue knowledge what your intent is now toward the king, or what affection you beare toward me. For the comparison of good qualities ascribed to vs both, maketh mee not a little to muse, thinking that you haue some other priuy imagination imprinted in your hart which you bee abashed to disclose, and especiallie to mee, which on my honour do assure you to be as secret in this case as the deafe and dumbe person to the singer, or the trée to the hunter. The Bishop beeing somewhat bolder, considering the dukes promise, but most of all animated, because hee knew the duke desirous to be magnified, & also he perceiued the inward hatred which he bare towarde king Richarde, hée opened his stomacke to the bottome, and said: My singular good Lord, sith the time of my captiuitie, which being in your graces custody, I may rather call it a libertie, than a straight imprisonment, in auoiding of idlenes ỳ mother of all vices, in reading bookes & ancient pamphlets I haue found this sentence written, That no man is borne free and at libertie of himselfe onely: for one part of dutie hee oweth to his parents, another part to his friendes and kinsfolkes: but the natiue countrie, in the which hee first tasted this pleasant and flattering world, demandeth a debt not to bee forgotten. Which saying causeth me to consider in what case this Realme my native country now standeth, and in what estate and assurance before this time it hath continued: what gouernor we now haue, and what ruler we might haue: for I plainelie perceiue (the realme being in this case) must nedes decaie, and bee brought to confusion: but one hope I haue, that is, when I consider your noble personage, your iustice and indifferencie, your feruent zeale and ardent loue toward your naturall country, and in like maner the loue of your countrie toward you, the great learning, pregnant witte, and eloquence, which so much doth abound in your person, I must nedes thinke this realme fortunate which hath such a prince in store, mete and apt to be gouernour. But on the other side, when I call to memorie the good qualities of the late Protector, and now called king, so violated by tyrannie, so altered by vsurped authoritie, so clouded by blind ambition, I must nedes say, that hee is neither mete to bee king of so noble a realme, nor so famous a realme met to be gouerned by such a tyrant. Was not his first enterprise to obtaine the crown begun by the murther of diuers noble personages? Did he not secondarily proceede against his owne naturall mother, declaring hir openly to be a woman giuen to carnall affection and dissolute liuing? declaring furthermore his two brethren and two nephewes to be bastards, and to be borne in adulterie? yet not contented, after he had obtained the garland, he caused the two poore innocents his nephewes committed to him, to be shamefullie murthered, the blood of which little babes daylie crie to God from the earth for vengeance: what suretie shall be in this realme to anie person, either for life or goods vnder such a cruell Pinee, which regardeth not the destruction of his owne blode, and then the lesse, the losse of other? But now to conclude what I meane toward your noble person, I say and affirme, if you loue GOD, your linage, or your native countrey, you must your selfe take vpon you the Crowne of this realme, both for the maintenance of the honour of the same, as also for the deliuerance of your naturall countreymen from the bondage of such a tyrant. And if your selfe will refuse to take vpon you the crown of this realme, then I adiure you by the faith that you owe to God, to deuise some way how this realm may be brought to some conuenient regiment, vnder some good gouernor. When the bishop had ended his saying, the duke sighed, and spake not of a greate while, so that night they communed no more. The next day the D. sent for the bishop, to whom he saide, My Lord of Ely, I must nedes in hart thinke, and with mouth confesse, that you be a sure friend, a trustie counsellor, and a very louer of your country. And sith at our last communication, you haue disclosed the secretes of your heart, touching the new vsurper of the crowne, and also haue a little touched the aduancement of the two noble families of Yorke and Lancaster, I shal likewise declare vnto you my priuie intentes and secret cogitations: and to beginne, when king Edwarde was deceased, I then beganne to studie, and with deliberation to ponder in that manner this Realme shoulde bee gouerned. I perswaded with my selfe to take parte with the Duke of Gloucester, whome I thought to bee as cleane without dissimulation, as tractable without iniurie,

and so by my meanes hee was made Protector both of the king and Realme, which authoritie beeing once gotten, hee neuer ceased priuilie to require mee and other Lordes, as well spirituall as temporall, that hee might take vpon him the Crowne, till the Prince came to the age of foure and twentie yeeres, and were able to gouerne the Realme as a sufficient king: which thing, when he sawe me somewhat sticke at, he then brought in Instrumentes, autentike Doctors, proctors & notaries of the law, with depositions of diuers witnesses, testifying K. Edwards Children to bee Bastardes: which depositions then I thought to bee as true, as now I know them to be fained. When the said depositions were before vs read and diligentlie heard, hee stode vp bare headed saying: Well my Lordes, euen as I and you would, that my Nephewes houlde haue no wrong: so I praie you do me nothing but right, for these witnesses and sayinges of famous Doctors be true: for I am onelie the vndubitate heire to Richard Plantagenet duke of Yorke, adiudged to be the very heire to the crown of this realme by authority of parliament. Which thinges so by learned men for verity to vs declared, caused me and other to take him for our lawfull and vndoubted prince and soueraign lord: so againe by my aid he of a protector was made a king: but when he was once crowned king, and in full possession of the realm, he cast away his old conditions. For when I my selfe sued to him for my part of the earle of Herefords lands, which his brother king Edw. wrongfully detained from me, and also required to haue the office of the high Constableship of Englande, as diuers of my noble ancestors before this time haue had, and in long descent continued: in this my first suit, he did not only first delay me, and afterward deny me, but gaue me such vnkind words, as though I had neuer furthered him, all which I suffered patiently: but when I was informed of the death of the two yong innocents, O Lord my hart inwardlie grudged, in so much that I abhorred the sight of him. I toke my leaue of the court, & returned to Brecknock to you, but in the iourny as I returned I had diuers imaginations how to depriue this vnnaturall vncle. First I fantasied, that if I list to take vpon me the crown, now was the way made plain, and occasion giuen. For I saw he was disdained of the Lordes temporall, and accursed of the Lordes spirituall. After diuers cogitations of this matter, as I rode betweene Worcester & Bridgenorth, I encountred with the ladie Margaret Countesse of Richmond, now wife to the Lord Stanley, which is the very daughter and sole heire to Iohn duke of Somerset my grandfathers elder brother: so that she and her sonne the earle of Richmond, be both betweene me and the gate, to enter into the maiestie royall, and getting of the crown: and when we had a little communed concerning her son, and were departed, I then began to dispute with my selfe, whether I were best to take vpon me, by the election of the nobilitie & communalty, or to take it by power. Thus standing in the wauering ambiguitie, I considered first, the office, dutie, and paine of a king, which surelie I thinke that no mortall man can iustly and truly obserue, except he be elected by God as king Dauid was: but further I remembred, that if I once toke on me the gouernance of the realm, the daughters of king Edward and their allies, being both for his sake much beloued, & also for the great iniury done to them much pitied, would neuer ceasse to barke at the one side of me. Semblably my cousen the Earle of Richmond his aydes and kinsfolke, will surely attempt either to bite or pierce me on the other side, so that my life and rule shoulde euer hang vnquiet in doubt of death or deposition. And if the sayde two Linages of Yorke and Lancaster shoulde ioyne in one against me, then were I surely matched. Wherefore I haue clerely determined vtterly to relinquish all imaginations concerning the obtaining of the crown: for as I told you, the countesse of Richmonde in my returne from the newe named king, meeting me in the high waie, prayed mee first for kinred sake, secondlie for the loue I bare to my grandfather duke Humfrey, which was sworn brother to her father, to moue the king to be good to her son Henry earle of Richmond, and to licence him with his fauour to returne againe into England, and if it were his pleasure so to do, she promised that the earle her son should marry one of king Edwardes daughters at the appoyntment of the king, without anie thing demanded for the saide espousalles, but onelie the kings fauor, which request I soone ouerpassed and departed, but after in my lodging I called to memorie more of that matter I am bent, that the earle of Richmond heire of the House of Lancaster, shall take to Wife Ladie Elizabeth eldest Daughter to king Edward, by the which marriage both the houses of Yorke and Lancaster maie be vnite in one: when the duke had said, the Bishop Morton, which fauored euer ỹ house of Lancaster was wonderous joifull, for all his imagination tended to this effect, and least the Dukes courage shoulde swage, or his mind alter, hee sayde to the Duke: My Lorde of Buckingham, sith by GODS prouision, and your incomparable wisedome, this Noble coniunction is first mooued, it is necessarie to consider what persons we shall first make priuy of this politike conclusion. By my troth (quoth the Duke) wee will beginne with my ladie of Richmond the earles mother, which knoweth where he is in Brytaine: sith you will beginne that waie (sayde the Byshoppe) I haue an old friende with the Countesse, called Reynolde Bray, for whome I shall send if it bee your pleasure: so the Bishop wrote for him to come to Brecknocke: who straight came backe with the messenger, where the duke and the bishop declared what they had deuised for the preferment of the earle of Richmond son to his Ladie and mistresse: willing her first to compasse howe to obtaine the good will of Quéene Elizabeth, and also of her eldest daughter, and after secretlie to sende to hir son in Brytaine, to declare what high honor was prepared for him, if he would sweare to marrie the Lady Elizabeth as soone as hee was king of the realme. Reinold Bray with a glad hart returned to the countesse his Lady. When Bray was gone, the Bishop tolde the Duke, that if hee were in his Ile of Ely, he could make many friendes to further their enterprise. The duke knew this to be true, but yet loath to lose the companie of such a counseller, gaue the bishop faire words, saying, he shoulde shortly depart well accompanied for feare of enimies, but the bishop ere the dukes company were assembled, secretlie disguised, in a night departed, and came to Ely, where he found money and friendes, and so sayled into Flaunders, where hee did the Earle of Richmond good seruice. When Reinold Bray had declared his message to the

countesse, no maruell if she were glad, wherefore she deuised a meanes how to breake this matter to Quéene Elizabeth then being in Sanctuary at Westminster, and hauing in her family a certaine Welchman called Lewes learned in physicke, now hauing opportunitie to breake her minde vnto him, declared that the time was come that her son should be ioined in marriage with lady Elizabeth daughter and heire to K. Edward: and that king Richard should out of all honour and estate be deiected: and required him to go to Quéene Elizabeth, not as a messenger, but as one that came friendly to visite her, and as time and place should serue, to make her priuie of this deuice. This physition with good diligence repaired to the Quéene, and when he saw time conuenient, he said vnto her: Madam, although my imagination be very simple, yet for the entire affection I beare to you and to your children, I am so bolde to vtter vnto you a secret conceit that I haue compassed in my braine. When I remember the great losse that you haue sustained by the death of your louing husband, and the great sorrow that you haue suffered by the cruell murther of your innocent children, I can no lesse do than dailie studie how to bring your hart to comfort, and also to reuenge the quarrell of you & your children on that cruell tyrant K. Richard. And first consider what battel and what mischiefe hath risen by the dissention betwéene the two houses of Yorke and Lancaster, which two families if they maie bee ioyned in one, I doubt not but that your line shall be againe restored to your great ioy and comfort. You know Madame, that of the house of Lancaster the earle of Richmond is next of blood, and to the house of Yorke your daughters nowe are heires: If yee could inuent the meane how to couple your eldest daughter with the earle of Richmond in matrimonie, no doubt but the vsurper should be shortly deposed, and your heire againe to her right restored. When the Quéene had heard this friendly motion, she instantly besought him that as he had béene the first inuenter of so good an enterprise, that now he would not desist to follow the same, requiring him further, that he would resorte to the countesse of Richmond mother to the earle Henry, and to declare to her on the quéenes behalfe, that all the friends of king Edward her husband should assist and take part with the earle of Richmond hir son, so that he would take an oth, that after the kingdome obtained, to espouse the lady Elizabeth her daughter, &c. Maister Lewes so sped his businesse, that he made a finall end of this businesse betwéene the two mothers: so the lady Margaret countesse of Richmond brought to a good hope of the preferment of her son, made Reinold Bray chiefe solicitor of this conspiracy, giuing him in charge secretly to inueigle such persons of nobilitie to ioin with her, and take her part, as he knew to be faithfull.

This Reinold Bray within few daies brought to his lure, Sir Giles Daubeney, Sir Iohn Cheinie, Richard Guilford, and Thomas Ram Esquires, and others. In the meane season the countesse of Richmond sent Christopher Vrswike into Britaine to the earle of Richmond, to declare to him all agréements betwéene her and the Quéene agreed: but she remembring that the Duke of Buckingham was one of the first inuenters of this enterprise, sent Hugh Conway esquire into Britaine with a great sum of mony to hir son, giuing him in charge to declare to the earle the great loue that the moſt part of the nobilitie of the realme bare toward him, willing him not to neglect ſo good an occaſion offered, but with all ſpeed to ſettle his mind how to returne into England, giuing him counſell to take land in Wales. When the earle had receiued this ioyfull meſſage, he brake to the duke of Britaine al his ſecrets, aduertiſing him that he was entred into a ſure and ſtedfaſt hope to obtain the crowne of England, deſiring him of helpe toward the atchieuing of his enterpriſe, which the duke promiſed, and after performed. Whereupon the earle ſent into England Hugh Conway, and Thomas Ram, to declare his comming ſhortly into England. In the meane ſeaſon the chiefe of the conſpiracy in England began many enterpriſes, which being neuer ſo priuily handled, yet knowledge therof came to king Richard, & becauſe he knew the Duke of Buckingham to be the chiefe head and aide of this commination, he thought it moſt neceſſarie to pluck him from that part, whereupon he addreſſed his louing letters to the Duke, to exhort the Duke to come to the Court: but the Duke required the king to pardon him, excuſing himſelfe that he was not well. King Richard not content with this excuſe, directed to the duke other letters with checking words, commanding him without delay to repaire to his preſence. The Duke made to the meſſenger a determinate anſwere, that he would not come to his mortall enemie: and immediately prepared war againſt him, and by this means, Thomas marques Dorſet came out of Sanctuarie, gathered a great band of men in Yorke ſhire, ſir Edward Courtney and Peter his brother biſhop of Exceſter raiſed another army in Deuonſhire and Cornwall. In Kent ſir Richard Guilford and other Gentlemen raiſed a companie.

But king Richard in the meane time had gotten together a great ſtrength, with whome he remoued from London toward Saliſburie, to the intent hee might ſet on the Dukes armie, the king was ſcarce two daies iourney from Saliſburie, when the duke of Buckingham accompanied with a great power of wilde Welchmen, which in the ende forſoke him. The Duke with his power marched through the forreſt of Deane, intending to haue paſſed the riuer of Seuerne at Gloceſter, and there to haue ioyned in armie with the Courteneis, and other Weſtern men, which if he had done, no doubt but king Richard had

But before he could attaine to Seuerne ſide, by force of continuall raine the riuer roſe ſo high, that it ouerflowed all the countrey adioining, which rage of water laſted ten daies: by which inundacie the paſſages were ſo cloſed, that neither the Duke could come ouer Seuerne to his complices, nor they to him: during which time the Welchmen lingering idle and without money or victuall, ſuddenly ſcaled and departed. The Duke thus left almoſt alone, was of neceſſitie compelled to flie, and conueied himſelfe into the houſe of Humfrey Baniſter his ſeruant beſide Shrewſbury, whom he had tenderly brought vp, which when it was known to his adherents, euerie man thifted for himſelfe and fled. And ſome of them ſayled into Britains, among the which were Peter Courtney Biſhop of Exceſter, and ſir Edward Courtney his brother, Thomas marques Dorſet, Iohn lorde Wels, Sir Iohn Bourchier, Sir Edmond Wooduile brother to quæne Elizabeth, Sir Robert Willoughby, Sir Giles Daubney, Sir Thomas Arundell, Sir Iohn Cheinie and his two brethren, Sir William Barkeley, Sir William Brandon and Thomas his brother, Sir Richard Edgecombe, and Iohn Halwell, Edward Pownings, &c. Proclamation was made, and a thousand pound promised to who so could bring out the duke of Buckingham, whereupon Humfrey Banister bewraied his ghest and maister to Iohn Mitton then sheriffe of Shropshire, which with a strong power apprehended the Duke in a little grone adioining to the manors of Humfrey Banister, and in great haste conueied him to the citie of Salisbury, where king Richard then kept his houshold. This Banister after he had betraied his maister, his sonne and heire waxed mad, and died in a beares skie, his eldest daughter was suddenly stricken with a fowle leperie, his second son maruellously defourmed of his limbs and made lame, his yonger son in a small puddle was drowned, and he himselfe being of extreame age arraigned and found guiltie of a murther, and by his cleargie saued. And as for his thousand pound, K. Richard gaue him not one farthing, saying, that he which would be vntrue to so good a maister, would be false to all other.

The duke after he had confessed all the whole conspiracie vpon the second of November without arraignment or iudgement, was at Salisbury beheaded. At the same time that the duke of Buckingham was vp in the west countrey, there were manie vp in Kent, to wit, Sir George Browne, Sir Iohn Gilford and his sonne, Foge, Scot, and Hants, after Clifforde, Bonting yeoman of the crowne, with manie other, to the number of fiue thousand: these made a fray at Gauelend in the faire, where Bonting slewe maister Mowbray, with diuers other, but when they heard that the duke of Buckingham was dead they were faine to flie to saue themselues.

Whilest these things were thus handled in England, Henry Earle of Richmond prepared an army of fiue thousand Britons, and fortie well furnished ships. When all thinges were prepared, and the daie of setting forward was appointed, which was the twelfe of October, the whole armie hoysed vp sailes and take the sea, but toward night the winde turned, and so huge a tempest arose, that the shippes were dispersed asunder: some driuen into Normandie, some againe into Britain. In the morning after when the tempest was asswaged, the earle approached to the south part of England, at the mouth of the hauen of Pole in Dorset, where he might see all the banks full of men of war, appointed to defend his arriuall, wherfore he gaue charge that no man should land, vntill such time as the whole navie were assembled, but after that he perceiued none of his ships to appeare, he hoised vp anchors and away, where he arriued safe in Normandy, and returned by land into Britaine, where he was soone aduertised that the duke of Buckingham had lost his head, and that the marques Dorset, and a great number of noble men in England had a little before inquired for him there.

In the meane season king Richard apprehended in diuers partes of this Realme certaine Gentlemen of the Earle of Richmonds faction, amongst whome Sir George Browne, Sir Roger Clifford, and foure other were put to death at London the third of December. Sir Thomas Sendegar, which had married married the Dutchesse of Excester the kings owne sister, and Tho. Ram, with diuers other were executed at Excester.

The 30. of December was a great fire at Leaden hall in London, where through was brent much housing, and all the stocks for guns and other like prouision belonging to the city.

After this king Richard called a Parliament, in the which he attainted the earle of Richmond, and all other persons, which were fled out of the realme for feare, or any other cause as enemies to him, and to their naturall country, and all their lands and goods was confiscate to the kings vse, and yet notwithstanding he laid on the people a great taxe.

An. reg. 2.

In this troublesome season, nothing was more maruelled at than that the Lord Stanley had not béene taken, considering the working of the Ladie Margaret his wife mother to the earle of Richmond: but for as much as the enterprise of a woman was of him reputed of no regarde or estimation, and that the Lord Stanley her husband had purged himselfe to bee innocent of all attempts by her committed, it was giuen him in charge to kéepe her in some secret place at home, without hauing anie seruant or companie, so that from thencefoorth she should neuer send letter to her son, or to anie of his friends, by the which the king might be molested, which commandement was a while put in execution.

King Henry the first remoued to Windsor.

This yéere king Richard began the high tower at Westminster, which remaineth yet vnfinished. Also he caused the bodie of king Henry the first to be remoued from Chertsey abbey in Surrey, and to be buried at Windsor on the twelfth of August.

In these daies were chiefe rulers about the king, the Lorde Louel, and two Gentlemen being named sir Richard Ratcliffe, and sir William Catesby, of the which persons was made a seditious rime, & fastned vpon the crosse in cheape, and other places of the Citie, whereof the sentence was as followeth:

The Cat, the Rat, and Louel our dogge:
Rulen all England, vnder an hogge.

Which was to meane these three persons, ruled this land vnder the king, which bare a white Boare for his cognisance. For the deuisers of this rime much search was made and sundry accused to their great charges. But finally two Gentlemen, Turburuile, and Collingborne, were for that and other things laid to their charge, arrested and cast in prison, for whom shortly was holden at the Guildhall an Oyer determiner, where the two Gentlemen were arraigned, and that one of them called William Collingborne Esquire, conuict of that crime and other, for the which he was drawne vnto the Tower hill, and there full cruelly put to death, as first hanged, and straight cut downe and ripped, and his bowels cast into the fire, the which torment was so spéedily done, that when the butcher pulled out his heart, he spake and saide Jesus Jesus. This man was greatly moaned of the people, for his goodly personage and fauor of visage, he had bene sometime, to wit the 15. of Edward the fourth, sheriffe of Wiltshire, and in the 17 sheriffe of Somerset shire, and Dorset shire.

King Richard considering the amities concluded betwéene princes are the cause

cause that their realmes are fortified with a double power, that is to say, with their owne strength, and the aide of their friendes, practised a league with the king of Scots, which not long before had made diuers incursions and roades into the realme of England, and therefore sued to haue a truce or peace concluded. Wherfore commissioners were appointed, which met at Nottingham, and there in the end concluded for three yéeres on certaine articles, 15. in number. This peace thus concluded, King Richard now doubting his owne people, was continually vexed with feare of the returne of the earle of Richmond and his complices: Wherefore, nothing was for his purpose more, than once againe with price and praier, to attempt the duke of Britaine, in whose territorie the earle then abode, to deliuer him into his hands: wherfore incontinent he sent certaine ambassadors to the Duke of Britaine, which toke vpon them that king Richard should yéerely paie and answere the duke of Britaine of all the reuenues, rents and profits of the lands and possessions, as well belonging to the earle of Richmond, as to any other noble or gentleman which then were in the earles companie, if he after that time would keepe them in continuall prison and restraine them from liberty. The Orators furnished with these and other instructions arriued in Britaine, but could not speake with the duke, by reason that he being weakned by a long and dailie infirmitie, began to ware idle of his remembrance, for which cause Peter Landoyse his chiefe treasurer, ruled all things at his pleasure, vnto whom the English ambassadors moued to him their message, offering to him the same rewardes and landes that they should haue offered the Duke. This Peter faithfully promised to accomplish king Richards request, so that he kept promise with him: but fortune was so fauourable to the publike weale of England, that this deadly compact toke none effect, for Iohn Morton bishop of Ely sojourning then in Flanders, was of all this craftie deuise certified: wherefore he sent Christopher Vrswike, to declare to the Earle of Richmond all the deceit, giuing him charge in all hast possible with his companie to retire out of Britaine into France. When these newes came to the earle, he incontinent sent to Charles the French king, requiring that he and his might safely passe into France, which desire was granted, & the earle with the rest dispatched as priuilie as mought be into France, no man suspecting their departure. After this, the Earle toke his iourney to Charles the French king, to whome after great thanks giuen, he disclosed the occasion of his accesse to his person. After that he required of him helpe and succor, to the intent he might returne to the nobilitie of his realm, of whom he was generally called to take vpon him the crowne: King Charles promised him aide, and bad him bee of good comfort, for he assured him that he would gladly shewe to him his bountifull liberalitie. Whiles the earle of Richmond thus attended on the French Court, Iohn Vere Earle of Oxford so perswaded Iames Blunt Captaine of Hames Castle, and sir Iohn Forteskewe porter of the towne of Caleis, that he himselfe was not onely set at libertie, but they also leauing their fruitfull offices condescended to go with him into France to the Earle of Richmond.

In the meane season K. Richard was credibly aduertised what promises and and othes the Earle and his confederates had made and sworne, and howe by the Earles meanes, all the Englishmen were passed out of Brytaine into France. Wherefore being in maner desperate, imagining how to infringe the Earles purpose by another meane, so that by the marriage of ladie Elizabeth his niece, he should pretende no claime to the crowne, there came to his minde a thing not only detestable, but much more cruell to be put in execution, for he clérely determined to reconcile to his fauour his brothers wife Quéene Elizabeth, and so by that meanes the Earle of Richmond, of the affinitie of his Niece should be vtterly defrauded, and if no ingenious remedie could be otherwise inuented, if it should happen Quéene Anne his wife to depart out of this world, then he himselfe would rather take to wife his cousin and niece the ladie Elizabeth, than for lacke of that affinitie the whole realme should run to ruine. Wherefore he sent to the Quéene being in Sanctuarie, diuers and often messengers which should excuse him of all things before against her attempted, and after should so largely promise promotions, not onely to her but to her son Thomas Marquesse Dorset, that they should bring her (if it were possible) into some wan hope. The messengers so perswaded the quéene, that she began somewhat to relent, in so much that she faithfully promised to yeld her selfe to the kings will and pleasure. And so she first deliuered vnto king Richards hands her fiue daughters: Afterward she sent letters to the Marquesse her sonne being then at Paris with the Earle of Richmond, willing him in anie wise to repaire into England, where for him were prouided great honors, ascertaining him that all offences on both parties were forgiuen and forgotten: After that king Richard had thus pleased the mutable minde of Quéene Elizabeth, he caused all her daughters to be conueyed into his Palace with solemne receiuing. Now nothing was contrary to his purpose, but that his mansion was not void of a wife: and first he abstained both from the bed and companie of his wife: after he complained to manie of the infortunate barrennesse of his wife. After this, he procured a common rumour to be published among the common people, that the Quéene was dead. When the N. heard tell that so horrible a rumor of her death was sprong amongst the communaltie, she sore suspected the worlde to be almost at an end with her, and not long after, to witte, the 16. of March, in the lent season, howsoeuer it fortuned, the quéene departed out of this life, and was with due solemnitie buried at Westminster.

Beatus Rhenanus the German Historian born

The King thus losed out of the bondes of Matrimonie, began to call a fancie to lady Elizabeth his niece, making much suite to haue her ioined with him in lawfull Matrimonie: but because all men, and the maiden her selfe most of all detested this vnlawfull copulation, he determined to deferre the matter till he were in a more quiet case, for all this season he was oppressed with weightie affaires on euerie side, considering that daily part of the Nobilitie sayled into France, other priuilie fauoured the earle of Richmond, amongst the noble men whom he most suspected, these were the principall, Thomas lord Stanley, sir William Stanley his brother, Gilbert Talbot, and fiue hundred other, of whose purpose, though king Richard were ignorant, yet he gaue no euidence dence to anie one of them, and least of all to the Lorde Stanley, because he was ioined in matrimonie with the Ladie Margaret mother to the Earle of Richmond, for when the Lorde Stanley would haue departed into his countrey, the king in no wise would suffer him to depart, before hee had left as in hostage in the courte George Stanley Lorde Strange, his first begotten sonne and heire. An. reg. 3.

While king Richard was thus troubled, sodainly he heard newes that the Castle of Hames was deliuered into the handes of the Earle of Richmond, by the meanes of the Earle of Orforde, and that not onely he, but also Iames Blunt, captaine of the castle, were fled into France to aide the Earle of Richmond.

Henry Earle of Richmond obtaining of king Charles a small crue of men, and borrowing certaine sums of money of him, and of diuers other his priuate friendes, he departed from the French Court, and came to the Citie of Roane. While he tarried there, making prouision at Hareflete, in the mouth of the Riuer of Seyne, for all things necessarie for his Nauie, tydings were brought to him, that king Richard being without children, and a widower, intended shortlie to marrie with Ladie Elizabeth, his brothers daughter, which newes he toke of no small moment, for this thing onely toke awaie from all his companions their hope to obtaine an happy enterprise, by reason whereof, he iudged that all his friendes in England would shrinke from him, yet notwithstanding, earle Henrie of Richmond, because he would no longer linger & wearie his friendes, liuing betweene hope and feare, determined in all haste conuenient to set forward, and carried to his shippes armour, weapons, vitaill, and all other ordinances expedient for warre, which being done, onely accompanied with two thousand men, and a small number of shippes, weyed vp his Anchors, and in the Kalendes of August, he sayled from Hareflete with so prosperous a winde, that the seuenth day after he arriued in Wales in the euening, at a Port called Milford Hauen, and incontinent toke land, and came to a place called Dale, and at the sunne rising remoued to Herefordwest, where he was receiued of the people with great ioy. Henry Earle of Richmond landed at Milforde Hauen.

From thence, he remoued to Cardigan twentie mile from Herefordwest, whither came to the Earle Richard Griffith with all his men and power. After him the same date came Iohn Morgan with his men. When the Earle aduanced forwarde, making no abode in anie place, and sodainly he was ascertained that sir Walter Herbert, and Rice ap Thomas, were in harnesse before him, readie to encounter with his armie, and to stop their passage. Wherefore he first determined to set vpon them, and either to destroie or take them into his fauour, and after with all his power to giue battaile to king Richard. But to the intent his friends should knowe with what dexteritie he attempted his enterprise forward, he sent messengers with letters and instructions to the Lady Margaret his mother, to the Lord Stanley and his brother, to Talbot and to other, declaring to them, that he holpe with the aide of his friends, intended to passe ouer the Riuer of Seuerne at Shrewsbery, and so to passe directly to the Citie of London, requiring them as his speciall trust was in the hope of their fidelitie, fidelitie, that they would meete him by the way with all diligent preparation. When these messengers were departed, he marched forward towards Shrewsbury, and in his passage there met and saluted him Rice ap Thomas with a goodly band of Welshmen, which submitted himselfe wholie to his order and commandement. In the meane time the messengers laden with rewardes returned to him the same day that he entred into Shrewsburie, and made relation to him that his friends were readie in all points to do all things for him which they might doe. The earle Henrie continued his iourney and came to a little towne called Newport, and pitched his campe on a little hill adioyning, reposing himselfe there that night. In the euening of the same daie came to him sir Gilbert Talbot, with the whole power of the yong Earle of Shrewsburie, then being in warde, which were accounted two thousand men: and thus his power increasing he arrriued at the towne of Stafford, and there paused. To whom came sir William Stanley, accompanied with a fewe persons: After that the Earle departed from thence to Litchfielde, and lay without the walles in campe all that night. The next morning he entred the towne and was like a Prince receiued. A daie or two before, the Lord Stanley hauing in his band almost fiue thousand men, lodged in the same towne, but hearing that the earle of Richmond was marching thitherward, gaue to him place, dislodging him and his, and repaired to a towne called Adrestone, there abiding the comming of the Earle: and this hee did to auoide all suspition, being afraide least if he should be seene openly to be a fauorer or aider to the Earle his sonne in law before the daie of battaile, that king Richard which yet did not vtterly put in him mistrust, would put to some cruell death his sonne and heire apparant, George Lord Strange, whom king Richard had in hostage. King Richard at this season keeping his house in the Castle of Nottingham, was informed that the Earle of Richmond with such banished men as were fled out of England to him, were arriued in Wales, and that all things necessarie to his enterprise were vnprouyded and verie weake, nothing meete to withstand the power of such as the king had appointed to resist him, yet notwithstanding hee sent to Iohn Duke of Norffolke, Henrie Earle of Northumberland, Thomas Earle of Surrey, and to other of his trustie friendes, willing them to muster and viewe all their seruants and tenants, and to elect the most courragious and actiue persons of the whole number, and with them to repaire to his presence with all speed. Also he wrote to Robert Brakenburie Lieutenant of the Tower, commanding him with his power to come to his army, and to bring with him his fellowes in armes Thomas Bourchier, and sir Walter Hungerford, and diuers other knights and esquires, in whom he had no small suspition. While he was thus ordring his affaires, tidings came that the Earle of Richmond was passed Seuerne, and come to Shrewsbury without anie detriment or encombrance. At which message he was sore moued, and cried out on them that contrarie to their othe had deceiued him. And in all haste sent out to viewe what waie his enemies kept and passed, it was declared to the king, that the Earle was incamped at the Towne of Litchfielde. Whereof, when he had perfect knowledge, he hauing continuall repaire of his subiectes to him, he incontinently mently made his battailes to set forwarde towarde the waie, where his enemies as was to him reported, intended to passe, and keeping his arraie, hee with great pompe entred the Towne of Leycester after the Sunne set. The earle of Richmond raised his campe from Lichfield to Tamworth, and in the mid-waie passing, there saluted him Syr Walter Hungerforde, & Syr Thomas Bourchier knights, and diuers others, which submitted themselues to his pleasure. Diuers other noble personages likewise resorted to him with al their power. There hapned in this progression to the earle of Richmonde a straunge chance, for he was not a little afraide, because hee could not bee assured of his father in lawe Thomas Lord Stanley, which as yet inclined to neither partie, therfore the earle, accompanied with twenty light horsemen, lingring in his iourney behinde his hoste, in the meane while the whole armie came before the towne of Tamworth, and when he for darkenesse could not perceiue the steps of them that passed on before, and had wandred hither and thither seeking after his companie, he abode in a little Village, about three myles from his army, there he tarried all night. The next morning in the dawning, hee returned, and by good fortune came to his army, excusing himselfe, not to haue gone out of his waie by ignorance, but of purpose: this excuse made, he priuily departed againe to the towne of Aderstone, where the Lord Stanley and Syr William his brother with their bands, were abiding. then the Earle came to his father in law, in a little Close, where he saluted him and sir William his brother, and after consulted how to giue battaile to king Richard, if hee woulde abide, whome they knew not to be farre off with an huge armie. In the euening of the same daie, Syr Iohn Sauage, sir Brian Sanford, sir Simon Digby, and many other, leauing king Richard, turned and came to the earle of Richmonde with an elect companie of men. In the meane season, king Richarde marched to a place called Redmore meete for two battels to encounter, by a Village called Bolworth, not far from Leycester, and there hee pitched his fielde, refreshed his armie, and toke his rest. The nert daie after, king Richard being furnished with men, and all abilliments of warre, bringing all his men out of their campe into the plaine, ordered his forewarde in a maruellous length, in which he appointed both horsemen and footemen, and in the Forefront he placed the Archers. Battel at Bolworth.

Ouer this battell was captaine Iohn duke of Norffolk, with whom was Th. earle of Surrey his son. After this long vantguard followed K. Richard with a strong company of approued men of warre, hauing horsemen for wings on both sides of his battell.

After that the earle of Richmonde was returned from the communication with his friends, he with all diligence pitched his field tall by the campe of his enemies, and there hee lodged that night. In the morning betime, hee caused his men to put on their armour, and apparell themselues to fight, and giue Battaple, and sent to the Lorde Stanley, requiring him with his men to approch neere to his Armie, and to helpe to sette the Souldiors in arraie: hee aunswered, the Earle shoulde sette his owne men in good order, while hee woulde come to him in time conuenient. The Earle made his Forewarde somewhat single and slender, according to the small number of his people. In the front he placed the archers, of whome he made Captaine Iohn Earle of Oxford. To the right wing of the battaile he appointed sir Gilbert Talbot to be the leader. To the left wing he assigned sir Io. Sauedge, and hee with the aide of the Lord Stanley, accompanied with the Earle of Penbrooke, hauing a good companie of horse-men, and a small number of fote-men, for all his whole number exceéded not fiue thousand men, beside the power of the Stanleyes, whereof thrée thousande were in the fielde vnder Sir William Stanley: The kings number was double so much, or more. When both these armies were thus ordered, and all men readie to set forward, king Richarde called his chiefetaines togither, perswading them to be valiaunt, &c. But his people were to him vnfaithfull in his end, as he was to his nephewes vntrue and vnnaturall in his beginning. When the Earle of Richmond knew that the king was so néere embattailed, he rode about his armie giuing comfortable words to all men, after the which he made to them a pithie Oration perswading them to haue the victorie, for that they were to fight in a iust quarrell, he had scantly finished his saying, but the one armie espied the other, betwéene both armies there was a great marrish which the erle left on his right hand, and so doing he had the Sun at his backe, and in the face of his enemies. When the king saw the earles companie was passed the marrish, hee commanded with all haste to set vpon them, the terrible shotte on both sides passed, the armies ioyned and came to hand strokes, at which incounter the lord Stanley ioyned with the earle.

The earle of Oxford in the meane season fearing least while his companie was fighting, they should bee compassed of the enemies, gaue commandement that no man should goe aboue tenne fote from the Standard, which commandement once knowne, they knitte themselues together and ceased a little from fighting: the enemies sodainly abashed at the matter and mistrusting some fraude, began also to pause. The Earle of Oxford bringing all his band togither on the one part, set on his enemies freshlie: againe the aduersaries perceiuing that, placed their men slender and thinne before, and thicke and broade behinde, beginning againe the battaile. While the two forewardes thus mortallie fought, king Richard was admonished that the Earle of Richmond accompanied with a small number of men of armes was not farre off, and as he approached to him, hee perfectlie knewe his personage, and being inflamed with yre, he put his spurres to his horse and rode out of the side of the range of his battaile, leauing the vauntgards fighting, and with speare in wrest ranne towarde him. The Earle perceiued well the king furiouslie comming toward him, and because the whole hope of his wealth and purpose was to be determined by battaile, he gladly proffered to encounter with him bodie to bodie and man to man: King Richard set on so sharpelie at the first brunt that he ouerthrew the earles standard, and slewe sir William Brandon his standardbearer, and matched hand to hand with Sir Iohn Cheiney, a man of great force and strength, which would haue resisted him, and the saide Iohn was by him manfully ouerthrowne, and so he making Stanley, which came to ſuccour with 3000. tall men, at which verie inſtant, king Richards men were driuen backe and ſledde, and he himſelfe manfully fighting in the middle of his enemies was ſlaine. In the meane ſeaſon the Earle of Oxforde, with the aide of the Lorde Stanley after no long fight diſcomfited the forewarde of king Richarde, whereof a great number were ſlaine in the chaſe, but the greateſt number that came to the field neuer gaue ſtroke. In this battaile died on king Richards part, about the number of 4000. men, and on the other ſide but ten perſons, as ſir Gilbert Talbot then wrote from the campe, and of the nobilitie were ſlaine Iohn Duke of Norffolke, Walter Lorde Ferrers of Chartley, Sir Richarde Ratcliffe, ſir William Coniers, ſir Richard Claringdon, and Robert Brakenburie, lieuetenant of the Tower, and not manie Gentlemen moe: Sir William Caresby learned in the lawes of the Realme, and one of the chiefe Counſellours to the late king, with diuers other were two daies after beheaded at Leiceſter. Amongſt them that ran awaie were ſir Frauncis Vicount Louel, and Humfrey Stafford with Thomas Stafford his brother, which toke Sanctuarie in S. Johns at Glocester. On the Earle of Richmonds part that was ſlaine, the principall was ſir William Brandon his ſtandardbearer. This battaile was fought at Boſworth in Leiceſterſhire, the 22. of Auguſt, in the yere of our Lorde, 1485. the whole conflict indured little aboue two houres. When the earle had thus obtained the victorie, he rendred thankes to God, and after to his ſouldiers for their fidelity: then the people cried king Henry, king Henry. When the lorde Stanley ſawe the good will of the people, he toke the Crowne of king Richard, which was found amongſt the ſpoile in the field, and ſet it on the earles head, as though he had béene elected king by the voice of the people. King Henry at this time made knights, as followeth: ſir Gilbert Talbot, ſir Iohn Mortimer, ſir Rice ap Thomas, ſir Robert Points, ſir Humfrey Stanley, ſir Iohn Turbaruile, ſir W. Willoughby, ſir Hugh Peſhall, ſir R. Hegecombe, ſir Iohn Bikenyle, ſir de Baron de Carow.

After this, the whole campe remoued to the towne of Leiceſter, where hee reſted two daies. In the meane ſeaſon, the dead corpes of king Richard was as ſhamefully carried to the towne of Leiceſter, as he gorgeouſly the day before with pompe departed out of the ſame towne: for his bodie was naked to the ſkinne, not ſo much as one clout about him, and was trulled behinde a Purſuant of armes, like a hogge or calfe, the head and armes hanging on the one ſide of the horſe, and the legs on the other ſide, and all ſprinckled with myre and blood, was brought to the Grey Friers Church within the Towne, and there homely buried, when he had raigned two yeares, two moneths and one day.

Henry Earle of Richmond.

An. reg. 1. HEnrie the seuenth, borne in Penbroke Castle, began his raigne the 22. of August, in the yéere of our Lord God, 1485. He was a Prince of marueilous wisedome, policie, iustice, temperance, and grauitie, and notwithstanding manie and great occasions of trouble and warre, he kept his Realme in right good order, for the which he was greatly reuerenced of forraine princes.

Parson of S. Mildreds burnt. On the forenamed 22. of August, was a great fire in Bread-streete of London, in the which fire, was burnt the Parson of Saint Mildreds, and one other man in the Parsonage there.

King Henry, before his departure from Leicester, sent sir Robert Willough. by knight to the Manor of Sherbutton in the countie of Yorke, for Edwarde Plantagenet earle of Warwike, son and heire to George Duke of Clarence, then being of the age of 15. yéeres, and sent him vp to the Tower of London, where he was put vnder sure custodie.

In the meane season the king remoued towards London, and when he had approched the citie, on the 27. of August, the Maior, Magistrates, and companies, all clothed in violet, met him at Shoredich, and with great pompe conueied him through the citie to S. Pauls church, where he offred his three standards, one of S. George, the second a red Dragon, the third a dun Cow, after his praiers said and Te Deum sung, he departed to the bishops palace where he soiourned a season.

The sweating began the 21. of September, and continued till the ende of October: of the which sickenes a wonderfull number died, and in London besides other, died Thomas Hill maior, in whose place was chosen William Stocker, who likewise deceased about seuen daies after: in which space departed other foure Aldermen, Thomas Ilam, Richard Rawson, Thomas Norland, and Iohn Stocker, and then was chosen maior Iohn Warde, who continued till the feast of Simon and Iude.

On the éeuen of Saint Simon and Iude, king Henry came from Kenington vnto Lambeth, and there dined with Thomas Bourchier Archbishoppe of Canterburie, Cardinall of S. Ciriac in Thermis. And after dinner with a goodly companie of the estates of this realme both spirituall & temporall, from thence wet by land toward London, his nobles riding after the guise of Fráce vpon small hackneies, two and two vpon a horse, and at London bridge end, the the Maior of London with his brethren and the crafts, met and receiued the king, and the king proceeded to Grace-church corner, and so to the Tower. On the morrowe being the feast date of Simon and Iude, king Henrie created Thomas lorde Stanley Earle of Darby, Edward Courtney Earle of Deuonshire, and Iaspar earle of Penbrooke was created Duke of Bedford, all at one time in the tower of London. Banerets made at this creation, Sir Gilbert Talbot, sir Iohn Cheinie, sir William Stonar, sir W. Troutbeke, sir Iohn Mortimer, sir Richard Crosby, sir Iohn Forteſcue, sir Edward Bedingfield, sir Thomas Cokeſey, sir Iames Baskeruile, sir Humfrey Stanley, sir Richard de la Bere.

On the 30. of October king Henry was crowned at Weſtminſter, by the hands of Thomas Bourchier archbiſhop of Canterburie, and ordained a number of choſen archers, being ſtrong and hardie perſons, to giue dailie attendance on his perſon, whome he named yeoman of the Gard.

The 7. of November began a parliament at Weſtminſter, for the eſtabliſhing of all things, in the which he cauſed to be proclaimed, that all men were pardoned of all offences, and ſhould be reſtored to their lands and goods, which would ſubmit themſelues to his clemencie. After this he began to remember his eſpeciall friendes, of whom ſome he aduanced to honour and dignitie, and ſome he enriched with poſſeſſions and goods: and to begin, the lorde Chandew of Britaine, he made earle of Bathe: ſir Giles Daubeney was made lord Daubeney: ſir Robert Willoughby lord Brooke: and Edward Stafford eldeſt ſonne to Henry late duke of Buckingham, he reſtored to his dignitie & poſſeſſions: ſir T. Molineux knight, baneret, he made Conſtable of Beaumariee, where ſhortly after he ended his life. The parliament being diſſolued, the king redéemed the marques Dorſet, and ſir Iohn Bourchier, whom he had left as pledges at Paris, for money there before borrowed: and ſent alſo into Flanders for Iohn Morton biſhop of Ely. Parliament at Weſtminſter.

The eightéenth day of Ianuary king Henry married the ladie Elizabeth eldeſt daughter to Edwarde the fourth, by which meanes the two families of Yorke and Lancaſter, which had long béene at great diuiſion, were vnited and made one. king Henry married the lady Elizabeth.

King Henrie ſent the Lorde Treaſurer with maiſter Bray and other, vnto the lord Maior of London, requiring him and the citizens of a preſt of 6000. markes, wherefore the Maior with his brethren and commons granted a preſt of two thouſand pound, which was leuied of the companies, and not of the wardes, which preſt was repaied againe in the yéere next following, euerie pennie. 1486 Loue to the king.

In the moneth of September Quéene Elizabeth was deliuered of her firſt ſonne named Arthur, at Wincheſter.

This yéere deceaſed Thomas Bourchier archbiſhop of Canterbury, and was buried at Canterburie: Iohn Morton Biſhop of Ely, a man of excellent wit, learning, and vertue, was tranſlated, and ſucceeded him in the archbiſhoprick of Canterbury, and Iohn Alcock ſucceeded in the biſhoprick of Ely.

Sir Richard Simon, a wily priest, came to Geralde earle of Kildare, and deputy of Ireland, and presented to him a lad his scholler named Lambert, whom he fained to be the sonne of George duke of Clarence lately escaped the towre of London. And the childe had learned of the priest such princely behauiour, that he lightly moued the earle, and many nobles of Ireland, tendering the bloud royall of Richard Plantagenet and George his son, as also maligning the aduancement of the house of Lancaster in Henry the seuenth, either to thinke or make the world weene, they thought verily this childe to be Edward earle of Warwike, the duke of Clarence lawfull son. And although K. Henry more than halfe marred their sport, in shewing the right earle thorough all the streetes of London: yet the Lady Margaret dutchesse of Burgoigne sister to Edward the fourth, Iohn de la Pole her nephew, the Lord Louel, sir Thomas Broughton knight, and other captaines of this conspiracie, deuised to abuse the colour of this yong earles name, for preferring their purpose: which, if it came to god, they agréed to depose Lambert, and to erect the verie earle in déde, now prisoner in the towre: for whose quarrell, had they pretended to fight, they deemed it likely, he should haue béen made away: wherefore it was blazed in Ireland, that the king, to mocke his subiectes, had scholed a boy to take vpon him the earle of Warwikes name, and had shewed him about in London, to blinde the eies of simple folke, and to defeate the lawfull inheritor of the Duke of Clarence their countriman and protector during his life, to whose linage they also deuised a title of the crowne.

E. Hall. In this meane time, the earle of Lincolne, and the lorde Louel, had gotten by the aid of Margaret, about 2000. Almaines, with Martin Swart a German, and in martiall acts verie expert, to be their captaine, and so sailing into Ireland, and at the citie of Diuelin caused yong Lambert to be proclaimed king of England, & so with a great multitude of Irishmen, of whom Thomas Gerardine was captaine, they sayled into England with the new king, and landed at Fowdrey within a little of Lancaster, trusting there to be aided with money by sir Thomas Broughton, one of the chiefest of this conspiracie.

King Henry not slæping in his matters, when he had gathered his host together, ouer the which the duke of Bedford, and the earle of Oxford were chiefe captaines, he went to Couentrie, where he being certified, that the earle of Lincolne was landed at Lancaster with his new king, he remoued to Nottingham, to whome shortly after came George Talbot earle of Shrewsbury, the lord Strange, sir Iohn Cheney, with many other.

Stoke field. In this space the earle of Lincolne being entered into Yorkeshire, directed his way to Newarke vpon Trent, and at a little village called Stoke, three or foure miles from Newarke, nigh to the king and his armie planted his campe.

The

The next daie following, the king diuided his number into three battailes, and after approached nigh the towne of Stoke, where both the armies ioyned and fought egerly on both parts: but at the length the kings forward set vpon the aduersaries with such a violence, that they slew many, and put the rest to flight. For there their chiefe captaines, the earle of Lincolne, and the lorde Louel, sir Thomas Broughton, Martin Swart, and the lord Gerardine, (or after Campion, Morice Fitz Thomas) captaine of the Irishmen, were slaine, and other aboue foure thousand. This battell was fought on the 16. of June. Lambert and the priest were both taken, to the no small griefe of Margaret Dutchesse of Burgoigne.

Lambert, after that he had béene a turne-broch for a space in the kings kitchen, was at length made one of the kings falconers.

Now when the king had got the vpper hande of his enemies (as yée haue heard) he remoued to Lincolne, and there tarried three daies, causing solemne processions to be made, in rendring thankes to God for his fortunate victory. Then caused he execution to be don on such as were taken in the field, either at the battell, or in the chase. And shortly after he went into Yorkshire, and there coasted the countrey, searching out such as had aided his enemies, whome hee punished, some by long imprisonment, some by large fines, and some by death. An. reg. 3.

About the midst of August the king came to Newcastle vpon Tine, and from thence sent ambassadors into Scotland, Richard Fox bishop of Winchester, and Richard Edgecomb knight, controller of his house, to conclude some peace, or truce with king Iames of Scotland. The English ambassadors were honorably receiued, and entertained of the king, who gladly would haue concluded a perpetuall peace, but his people would not agrée thereto: but in the end concluded vpon a truce for seuen yéeres. Truce with the Scots.

King Henrie, after the ambassadors were returned out of Scotland, came backe from Newcastle toward Yorke, and so to London: and in the waie being at Leicester, there came to him ambassadors from Charles the French king, which declared both the recouerie of certaine townes out of the hands of Maximilian K. of Romans, which he had wrongfully detained from the crown of France before that time: and also that their master king Charles had now wars in hand against Francis duke of Britain, because that he succoured and maintained the duke of Orleance and others that were rebels against him. Wherefore his request was that for the olde familiaritie which had béene betweene them, he would now either assist and helpe him, or else stand as neuter betwixt them, neither helping or hurting the one or the other. The king answered the ambassadors, that he would neither spare paine nor cost to set some reasonable stay betwixt them. And as the ambassadors were returned home, the king sent his Chaplaine Christopher Vrswicke ouer into France to king Charles, as well to shew, that he was glad of the victorie which he had against Maximilian, as to declare what a tempestuous storme of euill rebelion himselfe had escaped, and ouercome héere in England. But the chiefe point of Vrswikes errand consisted in this, that he should intimate to the French king, howe his maister king Henry offered himselfe as a mediator betwixt him and the Duke of Britaine, to make them friends, and if he perceiued the French king to giue eare thereunto, then he should go into Britain to moue the duke there to bee contented, that some reasonable order might bee taken betwixt them.

Whilest Vrswike was trauelling in this matter, king Henry for the accomplishing of the coronation of his wife Quéene Elizabeth, returned towarde London, and on the saturdaie next before the feast of All Saints he began his iournie with the Quéene from Warwike, and in his waie at S. Albons kept the feast of All Saints: and on the next morrow remoued to Barnet, where he rested: & on the next morrow as he was comming toward London, in Harnesey parke hee was met by the Maior, Aldermen, Sheriffs, and principal commoners of the citie of London, all on horsebacke, and in one liuerie to attende vpon him, where he dubbed Sir Wil. Horne Maior of London knight. And betwixt Iserdon and London, he dubbed sir Iohn Perciuall alderman knight. Against the kings comming into London, the stréetes were grauelled, and the crafts in their liueries stood on both sides from Bishopsgate vnto Pauls church. The quéene with the kings mother, and manie ladies stood in a house without Bishopsgate nére to the Spittle, and sawe the king with his traine come toward the city: Who rode through the citie to Pauls church, whereinto he was receyued: Te Deum song for ioie of his victorie, and then lodged in the Bishops palace. On the morrow he went in procession, and hear de a sermon at Pauls crosse. On the next sundaie, the Quéene with her Ladies and other Estates, came from Grénewich to the tower of London, where she was receiued by the king: and on the 25. of Nouember she was crowned at Westminster with great solemnity. And shortly after king Henry deliuered lord T. marques Dorset out of the tower, receiuing him again to his former fauor because his truth had béene throughly tried.

Immediatlie after came the Lord Barnard Deaubeney a Scot borne, which in the French kinges behalfe required king Henry to make some manner of end of those Brittish wars, whatsoeuer it were. King Henry therefore sent ouer into France Iohn Abbot of Abingdon, Sir Richard Edgecombe knight, and the sayde Christopher Vrswike, with commission to driue some agrément betwixt the Frenchmen and the Britons. These went first to the French king, and after to the Duke of Britaine, with whome they coulde doe no good, and so signified to the king their maister. Now in the meane time Edward lord Wooduile vncle to the Quéene, sued to king Henry that he might haue a power of men appointed to him, with the which he would steale priuilie ouer without licence or passport, so that euery man should thinke that hee were fledde the realme, without knowledge of the K. & although this request was outwardlie denied, yet the L. Wooduile withdrew himselfe into the Isle of Wight, whereof he was made ruler, he there gathered a crew of tall & hardy personages, to the number of 400. ꝑ arriued in Britain, where he ioined himselfe with the Britons against the Frenchmen. The French K. aduertised hereof, was not well pleased towards the K. of England, till K. H. by messengers excused himself to be guiltles, ꝑ then he was pacified. And so the English ambassadors renewing the league ꝑ amity betwixt ẏ two K. for 12. moneths, returned into England.

The king of England forthwith called his high court of Parliament, in the which it was not onely determined, that the duke of Britain shoulde be aided with power of men, but also there were diuers sums of money granted to the furnishing forth of the same. Parliament.

About the 27. day of July the duke of Britaines army gaue battell to the French hoste nére to a towne called S. Albin, hauing apparelled 1700. of the Britons in coates with redde crosses after the English fashion, although they had but 400. English men with the lord Wooduile. The victory in this battell fell to the French, so that almost all the English men were slaine with the lord Wooduile, besides 6000. Britons. The Duke of Orleance, and the Prince of Orenge were taken prisoners, which were there on the Britons part. The French men lost 1200. men, with their valiant Captaine an Italian, named Iames Galiot. The newes hereof being heard in England, caused king Henry to make haste in sending forth his army, and therefore was the lord Brooke with Sir Iohn Cheinie, Sir Iohn Midleton, Sir Ralfe Hilton, Sir Richarde Corbet, Sir Thomas Leighton, Sir Richard Laton, and Sir Edmond Cornewall, sent ouer into Britaine with all conuenient spéede, hauing with them 8000. men well appointed, and furnished in warlike sort to aide the duke of Brytaine. These arriued in Britaine, and marched forward til they came nér to their enimies, where they pitched their field. But while this war was thus set forward, Francis duke of Britaine departed this life, and then the Rulers of that contry falling at dissention amongst themselues, tended not the defence of their country, so that the Englishmen perceiuing themselues to be danger, and beeing in the middest of Winter, they returned into Englande within fiue monethes after their first setting forth, so that finally the French king gat the vpper hande of the Brytons, and did ioyne that Dutchie to his Realme of France. Lord Wooduile slaine. An. reg. 4.

We haue heard howe there was in the last Parliament money granted for the furnishing forth of the armie into Brytaine, to witte, that euerie man shoulde bee taxed to paie the tenth penie of all landes and goods: which money the most of them that dwelled in the Bishoprick of Durham, and in the parts of Yorkeshire refused vtterlie to paie, for that they thought themselues ouercharged with the same. Wherefore such as were appoynted collectors, complayned to Henry earle of Northumberland cheefe ruler of the north parts. The earle forthwith signified to the king all that matter, and the king not willing to pardon one peny, commanded the earle to distresse, or other wise to levy the mony, as he should thinke méetest. The rude people hearing of this answeare from the king, by and by with great violence set vpon the earle, by the exciting of one named Iohn a Chamber, whome the earle with faire wordes sought to appease: but they alleaging all the fault to bee in him, as chiefe Author of that tax, 1 Skelton. 1489 taxe, furiouslie slue him, and certaine of his houshould seruantes in a place called Cocklodge by Thirske, eightéene miles from Yorke, on the 28. of April. Then the northren men got them to armor, assembling togither, chose them a captaine called sir Iohn Egremond knight: and passing by the countries, they published that they would bid the king battell, onelie in defence of their liberties. The king sent forth Thomas earle of Surrey, whom not long before he had deliuered out of the Tower, with a crewe of men, to chasten those rebels of the North, who skirmished with a company of them, whome they discomfited, and toke sir I. a Chamber, the first beginner of this rebellion. Then the northren men came to the citie of Yorke, where they remained 3. or 4. daies, vnto the time they heard of the comming of the king, and then they fled out of Yorke, som one waie, som another: but diuers of them were taken and brought to the king, who caused them that were captaines to be hanged and quartered. Iohn a Chamber was hanged at Yorke, vpon a gibbet set vpon a foure square paire of gallowes, and the other his complices were hanged on the gallowes round about him: but sir Iohn Egremond fled into Flanders to Margaret dutches of Burgundy. After this the king returned to London, leauing the earle of Surrey to rule the countrie of the north, and appointed sir Rich. Tunstall to gather the subsidy to him due of the people.

Iames the third king of Scots was slain by his rebellious subiects, after they had vanquished him in battell.

About the same time, Adrian an Italian was sent ambassador from Pope Innocent the eight, into Scotland, there to haue taken vp the variance betwixt the king and his people: But being arriued in England, he was informed that king Iames was slaine, and therefore remained here certaine moneths, and for that he was a man of excellent learning and humanitie, and commended by Iohn Morton Archbyshop of Canterburie, the king made him first Bishop of Hereford, and shortlie after, that being resigned, he was made bishop of Bath and Wels.

1490 This yéere came ambassadors from the French king, the Lordes Francis of Lutzenburge, Charles Marignane, and Robert Gagwine, to haue concluded a peace with king Henry, and that the French king might dispose of the yong dutches of Brytaine, as hee should thinke best: but thereto would not king Henry consent: notwithstanding at length it was agréede, that a forme of league should be drawn with conditions, whereupon the French ambassadors being dismissed, Th. earle of Dimonde, and Thomas Goldston prior of Christs church in Canterbury were appointed to follow into France for conclusion of ỳ same league, but they returned without agréeing vpon anie league at al.

Parliament at London.

King Henry determining no more with peaceable messages, but with open war to determine all controuersies betwixt him and the French king, called a parliament, and therein declared that he was iustly prouoked to make warre against the French men, and therefore desired them of their benevolence of monie, and men toward the maintenance thereof. In this season, Charles the French king receiued the lady Anne of Britain, and with great solemnitie wedded her, hauing with her in dowrie the dutchie of Britaine. Thus was Maximilian in a great chafe toward the French king: Wherefore he sent vnto king Henrie, desiring him with all spéede to passe the seas with his armie, that they might pursue the warre against their aduersaries with fire, sworde, and blood. King Henry hearing this, and hauing no mistrust in the promise of Maximilian, with all spéede leuied an armie, and rigged his naule: and when all things were readie, he sent his Almoner Christopher Vrswike, and sir Iohn Riseley knight, vnto Maximilian, to certifie him that the king was in a readinesse, and would arriue at Caleis, as soone as he should be aduertised, that Maximilian and his men were readie to ioine with him.

This peace greatly displeased the English men, because they were readie prest to haue set on their enemies, and brought into great hope to haue béene enriched by the spoile to haue fallen to their lots of their enemies goods, besides the glorious fame of renowmed victorie: and namelie for that diuers of the Captaines, to set themselues and their bandes the more gorgeouslie forward, had borrowed large summes of money, and for the repayment had mortgaged their landes, &c. Now sprang there vp a newe found son to king Edward the fourth in this maner. The Dutchesse of Burgoigne espying a certaine yong man, of visage beautifull, of countenance demure, of wit subtill, called Perken Werbeke, this yong man trauailing manie Countries, could speake English, and diuers other languages: the Dutchesse glad to haue got so meete an instrument for her purpose, as one not vnlike to be taken, and reputed for the Duke of Yorke, sonne to her brother king Edward, which was called Richard, kept him a certaine space with her priuitie, and him with such diligence instructed, both of the secrets, and common affaires of the Realme of England, and of the linage, descent, and order of the house of Yorke, that like a good scholler, he could tell all that was taught him without any staggering or staie in his wordes: and besides that he kept such a Princely countenance, that all men in maner did firmely beleeue, that he was extracted of that noble familie of the Duke of Yorke: when the Dutchesse sawe her time, shee sent this Perken first into Portingale, and so into Ireland, where shortly after his arriuall, he entred so farre in credite with the people, that his wordes were taken to be true. The ambassadors hauing done their message, were answered, that to haue the king of Englands loue, the archduke would neither aid or assist Perken, nor his complices, in any cause or quarrell.

They that were sent did so earnestly applie their businesse, that they brought to passe all thinges at their owne desires, for they learned who were the chiefe conspiratours, and perswaded Sir Robert Clifforde to giue ouer that enterprise. When the king had knowledge of the chiefe Captaynes of the conspiracie, hee caused them to bee apprehended. K. H. lodged in the Tower.

The Morrowe after the Epiphanie, King Henry went to the Tower of London, and there remained till such time, as Sir Robert Clifford was there presented, which was done for a policie, that if Sir Robert accused anie of the Nobilitie, they mought be called thither, without suspition of anie euill, and there attached, and laid fast: now at the comming of Syr Robert Clifforde to the kinges presence, he besought him of pardon, and obtained it, and therwith opened the manner of the conspiricie, and who were the ayders, fautors, and chiefe beginners of it. Amongst whome he accused sir William Stanley, whome the king had made his chiefe Chamberlaine, and one of his priuie Councell: but nowe the king caused him to bee restrained from his libertie in his owne Chamber, within the Square Tower, and there appoynted him by his priuie Councell to be examined, where he wiselie agreed to all thinges layde to his charge, if hee were therein faultie & culpable. The report is, that this was his offence, when communication was had betweene him and the forementioned Syr Robert Clifford, as concerning Perken, Sir William Stanley saide, that if he certainelie knewe that the yong man was the vndoubted sonne and heire of king Edward the fourth, hee woulde neuer fight nor beare armour against him, wherefore he was charged that he bare no heartie good will toward king Henry. The king hauing thus an hole in his coat, doubted first what he should do with him, for loath he was to lose the fauor of his brother the earle of Darby: but arraigned he was at Westminster and adiudged to die, according to which sentence, he was brought to the Tower hill on the fifteenth date of February, and there beheaded. This Syr William Stanley was the chiefe and principall helper of King Henry to the Crowne at Bosworth Fielde, against king Richarde: Hee was a man of greate power in his Countrey, and also of greate wealth, insomuch, as the common fame ran, there was in his castle of Holte, found in readie coine and plate, to the value of fortie thousand markes or more, and his land and fees extended to three thousand pounds by yeare.

whome he made Chancellor of that Ile, and Sir Edward Poinings knight, with an armie of men, whereof when the fauorers of Perken heard, they straight fled to the woods and marishes. Syr Edward Poinings with his whole Armie marched against the wild Irish, because the other being culpable were fled to them for succour: but when hee sawe himselfe and his power, not able to followe his enemies in the woodes, marishes and mountaines, he was constrained to recule backe, sore disquieted against Geralde Earle of Kyldare, breeding then the Kinges Deputie, whome hee suspected to bee the cause that hee hadde no succours sent him, and therefore sodaynelie hee caused the Earle to bee apprehended, and as a Prisoner brought him into Englande, which Earle so cleared himselfe of all thinges layde to his charge, that he was dismissed and sent into Ireland agayne, there to bee deputie and Lieutenant as before.

But Perken woulde not sette one foot out of his Shippe, till he sawe all thinges sure: yet he permitted some of his Souldiors to go on lande, which beeing trained forth a prettie waie from their Shippes, and seeing they coulde haue no comfort of the Countrey, they withdrewe againe to their Shippes: at which withdrawing, the Maior of Sandwich, with certaine commons of the Countrey bickered with the residue that were vpon lande, and tooke aliue of them 169. persons, among the which were fiue Captaines, Mountfort, Corbet, White Belt, Quintyn, and Geuine. King Henry being in his progresse north, sent sir Richard Guilford to commend the fidelitie and manhod of the Kentishmen, and also to render to them most hartie thankes for the same: he also caused order to be taken for the erecting of bikenings or beacons, and watching of them. Beacons set vp and watched.

Perken Werbeke sayled into Ireland, trusting there to augment his number: but perceiuing that the hope of victorie consisted not in naked people without furniture or armor, he toke the sea againe at Cork, and sayled into Scotland, where comming to the presence of King Iames, hee forged such a painted processe, that the king of Scots began to haue Perken in great honor, and caused him to be called Duke of Yorke, and to perswade the world that he was so indéede, he caused the ladie Katherine daughter to Alexander Earle of Huntley, his nigh kinsman to be espoused to him. 1496 Perken Werbeke went into Ireland.

And shortly after in companie of this Perken, he entered into England with a puissant armie, and caused proclamation to be made to spare all those that would submit themselues vnto Richard Duke of Yorke, and heere-with they began to war in most cruell maner, with slaughter of men, brenning of townes, and committing detestable enormities, so that all the Countrey of Northumberland, was by them in maner wasted and destroyed. The nobles came to London with as manie men of war as they could put in a readines, to aide the king againſt his rebelles, if néede ſhould be. In the mean time Iames Twichet L. Audley, being confederat with the rebels of Cornwall, ioined with them, being come to Wels, and toke vpon him, as their chiefe Captaine and leader: from Wels they went to Saliſbury, and from thence to Wincheſter, & ſo into Kent, where they hoped to haue had great aid, but they were deceiued: for the earle of Kent, George L. Burgueny, Iohn Brooke, L. Cobham, ſir Edward Poinings, ſir Ric. Guilford, ſir T. Bourchier, Iohn Peche, William Scot, and a great number of people were readie to defend the countrey, which thing maruellouſlie diſmaied the Corniſhmen, ſo that manie of them fled from their companie. The Captaines brought their people to black heath, and there ordered their battels, either ready to fight with the king, if he would aſſaile them, or elſe to aſſault the citie of London. The king ſent Iohn Earle of Oxforde, Henry Bourchier earle of Eſſex, Edmonde de la Pole Earle of Suffolke, Sir Riſe ap Thomas, and Sir Humfrey Stanley, Noble warriours, with a great companie of Archers, and horſemen, to incloſe the hill on either ſide, to the intent that all by-waies being ſtopped, all hope of flight ſhoulde bee taken from them: and incontinentlie, hee himſelfe beeing furniſhed with a greate armie, ſette forewarde out of the Citie, encamped himſelfe in Saint Georges fielde, where he lodged that night, and on the nexte morning ſent the Lord Dawbeney with a great company to ſet vpon them earlie in the morning, which firſt gat the bridge of Dartford ſtrand, while the earles ſet on them on euery ſide, the lord Daubeney came into the field with his companie, and without long fighting, on the 22. of June, the Cornithmen were ouercome: but firſt they toke the Lorde Dawbeney priſoner, but let him go at libertie, without hurt or detriment. There were ſlain of the rebels about three hundred, and taken of them about fiftene hundreth. There was giuen to them that toke them their goods: amongſt them the blacke Smith and other their Captaynes were put to death. And when this battayle was ended, the king wanted of all his number but three hundreth men, which were ſlayne.

don and other places: knights and banerets made at Blackheath, and at London bridge foot, when the K. returned from Blackheath, as I haue set down in my larger chronicle.

In the moneth of July K. Henry sent an army into Scotland, vnder the guiding of the earle of Surrey, and the lord Neuill, which made sharp warre vpon the Scots: but by the labor of Peter Helias sent from the king of Spaine, a truce was concluded betwixt the two kings of England and of Scotland, with condition that Iames King of Scots shoulde conuey Perken Werbeke out of his realme and signiories. Ann. reg. 13. The earle of Surrey went into Scotland with a great power.

About the same time king Henry receiued the ambassadors that were sent to him from the French king. Also the Lord of Camphere, and other orators of Philip Archduke of Austrich, and Duke of Burgoigne, came to him for the conclusion of amitie, and to haue the English Merchantes to resort againe into their Countrey, which request he granted. And so did the English men resort againe into the Archdukes dominions, and were receiued (saieth Hall) into Andwerpe with Generall procession, so glad was that towne of their returne. Ambassadors for an amitie with the duke of Burgundy.

Perken Werbek being willed by the king of Scots to depart out of the Scottish dominions, sailed with his wife and familie into Ireland, where while hee remained hee had knowledge from the Cornishmen, that they were ready to renew the war againe. Whereupon he hauing with him fowre small ships, and not aboue an hundreth and twentie men, sailed into Cornewall, and there landed at Whitesande Baie on the 7. of September, from whence he went to Bodmyne, where hee gathered to him aboue three thousande persons. Then Perken made Proclamations in name of King Richarde the fourth, as son to king Edwarde the fourth. And by the aduise of his three Counsellers, Iohn
Heron Mercer, a Banquerout, Richarde Skelton Taylor, and Iohn Askeley Scriuener, determined first of all to assayle the winning of Excester, and so hasning thither, he laid siege to it. The citizens perceiuing themselues to be in danger, let certaine messengers downe by cordes ouer the wall, that mought certifie the king: And herewith caused faggots to be brought and laid to the inward part of their gates, and set them all on fire, to the intent to keepe their e-nimies from entring in, and their Citizens from flying out, and that they in the meane season might make trenches & rampiers to defend their enimies in stead of gates. Perken set vp Ladders to scale the walles: but the Citizens, with helpe of such as were come forth of the countrey to their aid, so valiantly defended the walles, that they slue aboue 200. of Perkens souldiours at that assaulte. The King hasted forth with his Hoste, and sent the Lorde Dawbeney with certaine bands of light horsemen to aduertise all men of his com-ming. Perken Werbeke landed in Cornwall. The city of Excester besieged.

But in the meane season Edward Courtney earle of Deuonshire, and William his sonne, accompanied with sir Edmond Carew, sir T. Trenchard, sir William Courtney, sir Tho. Fulford, sir I. Haliwell, sir I. Crokar, Walter Courtney, Peter Edgecombe, W. Snaure, came into the citie of Excester to helpe the citizens, so that the earle was hurt in the arme with an arrow, and so were many of his men, but fewe slaine. When Perken sawe he could not winne the citie of Excester, he went from thence to Taunton, and there mustering his men, he perceiued them to be minished, he began to mistrust the remnant: in dede diuers the people that followed him in hope that no small number of the nobilitie would ioyne with him, saw no such matter come to passe, they stale awaie from him. When the king heard that Perken was gone to Taunton, he followed after him with all spéede, and by the way there came to him Edward Duke of Buckingham, and a great companie of noble men. But as sone as Perken was informed that the king was at hand, he with a 60. horsemen fled from Taunton to a sanctuary at Betwdley beside Southampton. King Henry sent the lord Dawbeney with 500. horsemen after Perken to apprehend him, so that many of his captaines were taken. Also diuers horsemen rode to Saint Michaels mount, and there toke the lady Gorden wife to Perken, and brought her to the king. At whose beauty and amiable countenance the king much marueiled, and sent her to London to the Quéene. The common people submitted themselues to the kings mercie.

After this the king rode to Excester, and there executed diuers Cornish men: he also caused the sanctuary wherein Perken was inclosed, to be inuironed with bands of light horsemen, to watch that Perken shoulde not escape, wherfore Perken vpon promise of pardon committed himselfe to the king, and then the king returned to London.

Perké brought vp to London.

The 28. of Nouember, Perken was conueied on horseback through cheape, and Cornhill vnto the Tower of London, & from thence back againe through Candle wéeke streete to Westminster.

Lady Katherin arriued in England.

In this meane time the lady Katherin of Spaine was sent by her father K. Ferdinando, with a puissant nauy of ships into England, where she arriued in the hauen of Plimmouth, the 2. of October.

The 9. of Nouember prince Arthur with a goodlie companie came through Fleetstreet of London to S. Pauls, and so to the wardrobe by the Black friers, and there was lodged. And the same date came the Ladie Katherine Princesse vnto vnto Lambeth, where she with hir ladies was lodged, in the archbishops Inne of Canterburie: and vpon the Fridaie next following about two of the clock at afternoone, the said ladie princes accompanied with many lords and ladies, in most sumptuous manner apparrelled, came riding from Lambeth into Southwarke, and so to London bridge, where was ordeined a costlie pageant of S. Katherine and Saint Vrsala, with many virgins; from thence she rode to Grace stréete, where was ordeined a second pageant, from thence to the conduct in Cornhill, where was another pageant. The great conduct in cheape ran with Gascoine wine, and was furnished with musick. Against Soperlane end was the fourth pageant. At the standard in cheape was ordeined the fift pageant. At Pauls gate was the 6. pageant: by the which the princesse rode through Pauls church-yard vnto the bishop of Londons palace, where she and hir people were lodged.

On the 4. of December deceased the lord Strange, eldest son to the earle of Derby at his place in London, beneath Paules chaine, nowe called Gartar place, and was buried within the parish church of S. James at Garlike-hithe. Ann. reg. 19.

The 25 of January began a parliament at Westminster, of the which was chosen speaker for the commons master Edmond Dudley. Parliament. 1504

A new coine was by parliament appointed, that is to say, groat and halfe groat, which bare but halfe faces: the same time also was coined a groat, which was in value 12. d. but of those were but few coined. New coine.

This yere allume, which many yeres before had bene sold for 6. s. an hundred, and lower, arose to 5. nobles an hundred, and after to 4. markes, &c. Allume deere. Ann. reg. 20.

About Christmasse, the more part of the prisoners of the Marthalsey in Southwarke brake out, and manie of them being shortly after taken, were put to execution, specially those which had laine for felony or treason: among the which two of them being sea rouers were hanged on a tree in the Thamis, a little from Wapping in the Wose, and hung there long after. 1505 Prisoners of the Marthalsey brake out.

This yere on S. Georges euen or 21. of Aprill, king Henry with an honorable companie of knights of the order of the Garter, all in their habits, rode through the citie from the Tower of London vnto Paules church, and there heard euensong, his chappell being there, and hauing rule of the quere, and after euensong the king and those knights rode vnto Wainards castle, & there lodged that night: and vpon the morrowe in the same habits came againe to the said church of S. Paul, and went on procession, and after the diuine seruice and offering being done, returned. S. Georges day the king rode to Paules. Jon Knox the Reformer of Scotland born at Gifford neer Haddington

The 25. of Aprill a coiner for making of false money was drawne from the Tower vnto Tiborne, and there hanged.

About Midsummer Pope Iulius the 2. sent to the K. a cap of maintenance, and a sword, as to a defender of the church, the which cap and sword were receiued with many and great ceremonies, which I ouerpasse. A cap of maintenance. An. reg. 21.

The 5. of January in the night, the kings chamber was fired at Richmond, the which might not be quenched, till many curtaines, carpets, rich beds, and much other stuffe was consumed. 1506 Richmond on fire.

Through great tempest of winde being at the southwest, which began the 15. of January, & continued till the 26. of the same, Philip king of Castile and his wife were weather driuen, and landed at Falmouth in England, as they were passing on the 16. of Januarie out of Flanders toward Spaine, who were honorably receiued by the earle of Arundel at the kings appointment with 300. horses, all by torch light. This tempest was strange to many men, because the violence thereof had blowne downe the eagle of brasse from the spire of Paules church in London, and in the falling, the same eagle brake and battered the blacke eagle which hung for a signe in Paules churchyard, that time being but low houses, where now is the schole of Paules. The king of Castile landeth in England. *Francis Guicciar. In the beginning of the moneth of July, a gallerie newe builded at Richmonde, wherein the king and the Prince his sonne had walked not one houre before, it fell sodainlie downe about midnight, but no christian man perished thereby.

The 21. of August the weather-cocke of Paules being of copper, ouer gilt, in weight 40. pounds, in length 4. foote, in breadth 3. foote and a halfe, was set vpon the spire of Paules steeple.

King Henry sickened.

This yeere the king began to be diseased of a certaine infirmitie, which thrice euery yeere, but especially in the spring time, sore vexed him.

M. Anton. Coccius Sabellicus Author of ye Enneads, from ye beginning of ye world to 1504 wrote of ye Pox at Venice 1507

Also the sweating sicknes, which (as ye haue heard) in the first yeere of this kings raigne first afflicted the people of the realme, now assailed them again, howbeit, by the remedy found at the beginning of it, nothing the like number died thereof, now this second time, as did the first.

This yeere in the Lent season, the king deliuered manie prisoners out of sundrie prisons, insomuch, that as many as lay in Ludgate, and both Counters for 40. shillings and vnder, he redeemed and deliuered: and ouer that he redeemed many that lay for ten pound, and other larger sums as was said.

The kings promoters.

But true it is, that this yeere or rather somewhat sooner, sprang much sorrow through the land, for by meane of graceles persons, which named themselues the kings Promoters, many forgotten statutes, made hundreds of yeeres passed, were nowe quickened, and sharpely called vpon, to the great vnquietnesse of many the kings subiects, aswell the rich as the other that had competent substance. And albeit that other yeeres before passed, since the time of sir William Caples trouble, which was in the 10. yeere of this kings raigne, many times were called to sundrie reckonings, and were faine to seeke their endes to their charge: yet now, since Empson and Dudley were set in authoritie, many mo in number were called before them, for many surmised causes, of the which none escaped without paying of fines. And if it were such a matter, as some would abide the triall of the law, then had they false Iurors so fired vnto them, that they were well assured that they would not passe against their wils, for all was done in the kings name, and yet the most profit came to other mens coffers.

False Iurors.

Thomas Sauage archbishop of Yorke deceased at his castle of Cawod, his body was buried at yorke, his hart at Macklefield in Cheshire where he was borne, in a chappel by him founded, which he minded to haue made a colledge: he was not elected after the ancient custome, but by nomination of the K. and fauor of the Pope Alexander. This Th. was daily employed about temporall matters at the kings pleasure, he vsed hunting, and bestowed much cost in repairing and new building at his castle of Cawod, and his manor of Scroby, he maintained manie tall yeomen in his house, and was neuer installed, but after a secret maner at Yorke, and by his deputy at Beuerlake, he was the first that brake the custom of solemn feasting at their installing at Yorke, he he was 7. yeers archbishop: and to him succeeded Christopher Bambridge doctor of both lawes, born neer to Apleby in Westmerland, first maister of the Roles, then deane of Yorke, and after bishop of Durham.

The 25. of Aprill, a great part of the city of Norwich was brent. And again in the moneth of June on the euen and day of the ascension of our Lorde, another part of the same city of Norwich was fired, and sore perished and neere consumed with fire, that began in a French mans house named Peter Iohnson a chirurgion, in the parish of Saint George. 1508 Norwich defaced by fire.

This yeere amongst manie other was sir W. Caple againe newly troubled, for things don in time of his being maior of London, wher of the report was, for that false money came to his sight, and hee did not due correction vpon the partie that to him was accused to be the coiner of it: but were this the cause or other, truth it is, that in great trouble he was for it, and finally, for he would fall to no agreement, he was by Derby, Simson, and other of their companie, which as then the whole Iurie of them, were faithfully bounde to the girdles of Empson and Dudley, that as they would, the verdit alwaies passed, and so was he by them indicted, and after by Dudley at the kings commandement put in prison, and so continued long time, and at length, forsomuch as he would not agree to paie to the king 2000. l'. was by the forenamed Dudley commanded to the tower, where hee laie till it was neere Whitsontide after, before which time king Henry was deceased, and then was he deliuered free. Also Thomas Knesworth late Maior of London, with both his sherifs, after great veration and imprisonment, being accused that they had misused the charge of their offices, were deliuered for great sums of mony, as it was said, 1400. l'. Christopher Hawis mercer and alderman of London, had bin so long vered by the said promoters, that it shortned his life by thought taking. Sir Laurence Ailmer late Maior of London, and his two Sheriffes were put to their fine of 1000. pounde to the king: but Sir Laurence after great trouble susteined at the handes of Empson,, was committed to prison, and continued prisoner till the saide Empson was himselfe sent to the Tower. This yeere was finished the goodlie Hospitall of the Sauoy neere vnto Charing crosse, which was a notable foundation for the poore, don by king Henry the 7. vnto the which he purchased and gaue Landes for the releeuing of 100. poore people. This house was first named Sauoy place, by Peter earle of Sauoy the first builder thereof, brother to Boniface archb. of Canterbury about the 29. yeere of king Henry the 3. who made the said Peter earle of Richmond. This house belonged since to the Dukes of Lancaster, and at this time being in the kings handes, was conuerted to an hospitall, retaining the first name of Sauoy. K. Henry builded 3. houses of Franciscan friars, which were called Obseruantes, at Richmond, Greenwich, and Newarke, and 3. other of the same family of Franciscan friars, called Couentualles, at Canterburie, Newcastle, and Southampton. HEnrie the eight, borne at Grénewich, second sonne to king Henry the seuenth, about the age of eighténe yéeres beganne his raigne by the decease of his father, on the two and twentieth of Aprill: but was proclaimed on the foure and twentieth, in anno Christi 1509. and the same daie in the after none hee was conueyed to the Tower of London, where hee lodged for a season. Of personage he was tall and mightie, in wit and memorie excellent, of such maiestie and humanitie as was comely in such a prince. By the aduise of his grandmother Margaret countesse of Richmond and Derby, diuers graue personages were elected to bee of his priuie councell, whose names were William Warham Archbishop of Canterburie and Chancelor of England, Richarde Foxe bishop of Winchester, Thomas Howard Earle of Surrey and treasurer of England, George Talbot earle of Shrewsbury & lord steward of the kings houshold, Charles Sommerset Lord Chamberlaine, Sir Thomas Louel, Sir Henry Wyat, doctor T. Ruthall, sir Edward Poinings. These graue counsellors, fearing least such abundance of riches & wealth as the king was now possessed of, might moue his yong yéeres vnto riotous forgetting of himselfe, gate him to be present with them whē they sate in councell, to the intent to acquaint him with matters pertaining to the politike gouernment of the realme, with the which at the first he could not well endure to be much troubled, being rather inclined to

On the same 24. day of Aprill, the lord Henry Stafford brother to the Duke of Buckingham, was arrested and committed to the Tower: and doctor Ruthall was nominated bishop of Durham. Henry lord Stafford arrested.

The fiue and twentieth of Aprill was proclaimed the kings consent to the generall pardon granted by his father, and that himselfe was contented to forgiue al such persons as had bin vexed for any cause, so that it touched not felony or treason: and ouer that, in the same proclamation was comprised, that all vagabonds and sturdy beggers should auoid the city of London, and resort into such countries as they were borne in, vpon paine appointed. Also proclamation was made, that if any man could prooue himselfe to be depriued of his goods wrongfully by the late commissioners of the forfeitures, hee should present his plaint to the king, who was ready to satisfie euery one of all iniuries sustained. After which publication many such as had beene constrained, either by right or wrong to pay any thing for forfeitures of lawes or customes by them transgressed, flocked to the court, and there declared their griefes: the counsell heard euery mans complaint, and such as were found to haue paide any thing without plaine proofe of iust cause, such order was taken that they had their money again: but the complainants came in so thicke, that the commissioners and other that had dealt in the forfeitures perceiuing that it was hard, and almost impossible to satisfie them all, refused to heare any further complaints or suites for restitution, but thought it best to commit those to prison, by whom the complainants pretended themselues to haue been wronged, and thereupon was sir Richard Empson knight, and Edmund Dudley esquire, by a politike meane brought into the tower, where they were accused of treason, and so remained there prisoners, thereby to quiet mens minds, that made such suite to haue their money againe restored. And shortly after were manie of their promoters (for so they tearmed themselues) called to a reckoning, and cast into sundry prisons, as Page, Michell, Canby, Henry Tost, Smith, and sundrie others, but Baptist Grimald the most cruell wretch of them all, went to Westminster, and there registred himselfe a sanctuary man. Pardon for trespasses proclaimed. The K. of Fr. & Ioh. Albret K. of Navarre excomunicated by ye Pope. Empson and Dudley sent to the Towr. Promoters apprehended.

The third day of June, king Henry in his closet at Greenwich married the lady Katherine his first wife, who had been late the wife of prince Arthur deceased, and was dispensed with by Pope Iuly. King Henry married.

The 6. of June Io. Derby, Io. Smith, I. Simson, ringleaders of false inquests in London, rode about the citie, with their faces to the horse tailes, and papers on their heads, and were set on the pillorie in Cornhill, and after brought againe to Newgate, where they died for very shame. Common quest-mongers for money set on the pillory.

On the 21. of June king Henry came from Greenewich by land, and so rode to the tower of London, with whom came many well apparelled noble men, but especially the duke of Buckingham, who rode in a gowne of Goldsmiths worke, a thing of great riches: the king rested there from thursday till saturday, in which season he made 24. knights of the Bathe. And vpon Saturday the 24. of June, K. Henry with queene Katherine, and their nobilitie rode from the Tower through the citie in most honourable wise, before whome rode the King Henry crowned.

said knightes of the Bathe, the Duke of Buckingham rode next before the king, except the Maior, and certeine Sergeants and Heraultes: the which D. rode in a long gown wrought of needle worke right costly and rich, and bare a little staff of siluer in his hand, in token that he was high Steward of that feast of coronation, and the said D. had about his neck a broad and flat close chaine of a new deuise, not before vsed, fret with pretious rubies, and other stones of great value. On the morrow being sunday, and Midsommer day, the king and quéene were crowned at Westminster in most solemn maner, by the archbishop of Canterbury and other assisting.

Dudley arraigned and condemned.

The seuentéenth of July Edmond Dudley was arraigned in the Guildhall of London, where he was condemned, and had iudgement to be drawn, hanged and quartered, and committed to the Tower againe, where hee lay long after, insomuch, that the fame went the Quéene had purchased his pardon, but that was not so, as after shall appeare. And like as in this while to the comfort of the kings subiects many things were ordered, as generall pardons for all forepassed offences, treason, felony, and debt by specialties, and a few other excepted: so in like manner, to the disturbance of all the forenamed Promoters, was manie and diuers meanes sought and found to vexe and trouble them right wisely, that before had vexed manie a true man wrongfully: by meanes whereof, they were dailie taken in diuers counties of England, and brought to the Tower and other prisons, where they remained long. In the which time manie opprobrious rimes in despite of them were made, whereof I haue séene some, especially one against Sir Richard Empson, made by Cornish of the kinges chappell, at the request of the earle of Kent, forsomuch, as the saide Empson had deceiued him of a part of his Lande, and in sinister waies had so informed the king of him, that he was long holden vnder, and put to great hinderance. But (saieth mine Authour) what cause soeuer moued the saide Earle and other at that time, let no man thinke, that for anie cause bee hath remembred it, saue onelie, that wise men maie, by the sodaine rising and falling of these men, bee well ware howe they guide them, when they bee put in greate authoritie, and especially such as this man was, the which which sodainely rose from pouertie (as being the sonne of a sleeue-maker, in Coceter) vnto inestimable authoritie and riches. And such other as were of his affinitie, especially Dudley, that at the time of his fall had in possession of lands and fées, with offices, to the yéerely value of 800. pound, and in readie coine 20000. pound, ouer many moe riches, as iewels, plate, and rich stuffe of houshold, the which was shortly gathered, for not thirtéene yéeres before hee was by labor of friends brought into the office of vndersherifewike of London, where he continued with fauour of the citizens, by the space of fiue yéeres or more, after which season he sold his office, and drew him to the kings court, where shortly after he grew in such fauour, that he was chosen speaker of the parliament, in the nineteenth yéere of king Henry the seuenth, and sone after the kings president, by reason of which office, he had such authoritie, that the cheefe lords of England were glad to be in his fauour, and were faine to sue to him for many vrgent causes, whereupon the lords and all men, as they durst, had him in disdaine, which was his ouerthrow in the end. Thus much for example may suffice.

On the 29. of July was arraigned in the guildhall of London one Smith for a promoter, and with him were inquired of by inquests, H. Tost, Page, Canby, &c. but for that they laide for themselues, they were seruingmen, and did but as they were commãded, they were all reprieued to such prisons as they came from, where they remained long after.

In the moneth of October sir Richard Empson was conueied into Northamptonshire, and there arraigned, and lastly déemed to be drawne, hanged, and quartered, and then was brought againe to the Tower. Empson arraigned.

This yéere K. Henry kept his Christmas at Richmond with great roialtie.

The 21. of January began a parliament, whereof sir Thomas Ingleby was chosen speaker: in the which parliament, Sir Richard Empson, and Edmond Dudley were attainted of high treason. 1510 Parliament. Empson and Dudley attainted.

King Henry kept his Shrouetide at Westminster, with great banquetings, dauncings, and other pastimes.

This yéere came ambassadors not onely from the king of Arragon and Castile, but also from the kings of France, Denmarke, Scotland, and other princes, which were highly welcomed, and royally entertained. And on the 20. of Aprill a peace was proclaimed betwixt England and France, during the liues of king Henry the 8. of England, and Lewis the French king. An. reg. 2. Peace proclaimed.

On Midsummer éeue at night, king Henry came priuily into Westcheape of London, being clothed in one of the coates of his guard: and on S. Peters night the king and quéene came royally riding to the signe of the kings head in Cheape, & there beheld the watch of the citie, which watch was set out with diuers gwdly shewes, as had bene accustomed. King Henry and Queene Katherine beheld the watch at London.

King Henry riding on his progresse for his disport, there was brought before him and his councell many grieuous bils of complaints against Empson and Dudley, wherefore he sent commandement to the constable of the tower, charging him that they should shortly after be put to execution. Whereupon the sheriffes of London were sent for, and commanded by a speciall writ to sée the said execution perfo:med and done. And they vpon that went to the tower and receiued them on the 17. of August, and from thence b:ought them

This Edmond Dudley in the time of his imp:isonment in the tower compiled one notable booke, which he intituled, the Tree of common wealth, dedicated vnto king Henry the eight, but neuer came to his hand. A copie whereof faire w:itten (reseruing the o:iginall to my selfe) I gaue vnto the honourable Lo:d Robert earle of Leicester, about the yeere 1562. Archers sent against the Po:es. In the month of Feb. came ambassado:s from the K. of Aragon & Castile, to require an aid of 1500. archers to be sent to the same king, hauing at that time war with the Po:es, enemies to the chr:stian faith: the king granted their request, and because the lo:d Thomas Darcy a knight of the gartar made humble suite to the king to be generall of that crue, the king granted his desire: there were appointed to go with him, the lo:d Anthony Grey, b:other to the marques Do:set, Hen. Guilford, Weste, Browne, and William Sidley Esquires of the kings house, sir Rob. Constable, sir Roger Hastings, and sir Ralph Elderton, with diuers other gentlemen to be captaines.

Ann. reg. 3. They departed out of Plimmouth hauen with 4. ships royall, and on the first of June arriued at Cales in south Spaine, where they were honourably receiued by a bish. and other of the kings councell: but an abstinence of war being taken, the L. Darcy and the rest were required to returne home againe, money was sent to pay the soldiers their wages, fo: their conduction againe into England, with diuers gifts giuen to the Lo:d Darcy and the other gentlemen, and after returned into England.

Archers sent to aide the ladie Margaret dutches of Sauoy. During the time that the L. Darcy was in Spaine, the lady Margaret dutches of Sauoy, & daughter to Maximilian the empero:, and gouerno: of Flanders, Brabant, Holland, Zeland, and other the low countries, appertaining to Charles the yong prince of Castile, sent in the end of May to the K. of England, requiring to haue 1500. archers to aide her against the D. of Gelders, which so:e troubled the countries afo:esaid: the king granting her request, appointed sir Edw. Poinings knight of the gartar, and controller of his house, a valiant captaine, to be lieutenant and leader of the said 1500. archers, which accompanied with his sonne in lawe the Lo:de Clinton, sir Mathew Browne, sir Iohn Digby, Iohn Werton, Richard Wetherall, and Shirley Esquires, with other gentlemen and yeomen to the foresaide number: they toke their ships beside Sandwich the eightéenth of July, and landed at Armew on the nineténth, from whence they were conduced to Warrow, &c. whither the lady Regent came to welcome them, on the seuen and twentieth of July they departed to Rosseyndale, and on the last of July they came to Bulduke, and the next daie the whole army of Almaine, Flemings and other appertaining to the said lady, met with our Englishmen without Bulduke, where they set forth in order, the lady Regent being there present, which toke her leaue of all the Captaines, and departed to Bulduke. The army to the number of 10000. beside the 1500. Englishmen, passed forward, and the 10. of August came before a little Castle, standing on the higher side of the maze, called Bzimnoisk, belonging to the bastard of Gelderland.

The same night Thomas Hart, chiefe gouernour of the English ordinance, made his approach, and in the morning made battery, so that the assault thereupon being giuen, the fortresse was won, and the captaine with 80. and odde men were slaine, and xix. taken, of the which xi. were hanged.

Iohn Morton captain of an hundred English men, and one Guyet an esquire of Burgoigne, crying, S. George, were the first that entred, at which assault there was but one English man slaine.

On the 14. of August, the armie ferried ouer the riuer of Maze into Gelderland, the next daie they came to a little Towne called Aysike, the people were fled, but there was a little castle, raised and cast downe: vpon the next daie they burnt the saide Towne of Aysk, and all the countrey about it, and came at the last to a towne called Strannle being verie strong, double diked, and walled, within it were 360. good men of war beside the inhabitants. At the first they shewed good countenance of defence, but when they saw their enemies approach nére vnto them with rampiers and trenches, they yelded by composition, so that the souldiers might depart, but ỳ townesmen rested prisoners, at the will of the Prince of Castile. And so on S. Bartholmews day, the admirall of Flanders, and sir Edward Poynings entred the towne with great triumph.

The 26. of August the army came before Uenlow and sent an Herault called Arthoys to summon the towne: but they within would not heare, and yet they shot guns at him. Sir Edward Poynings, at this siege had ordinance pertaining to K. Henry as followeth, Serpentines the xii. signes: Armes of England, the Antelope, the Greyhound, the Dragon, the Griffon, the Snake, the Permaide, the Vise, the Doze, the Cocatrise, the Slange, the Unicorne, the Panter, the Hart, the Hinde, the Mewnant, the Faulcon, the Marlion, Of Cortenes, the Dozke, the Somerset, the Richmond, the March, the Normandy, the Rose, the Cales, in all 36. pieces. The army remoued vnto the north side of Uenlow, and part went ouer the water, & made trenches to the water, and so besieged the towne, but for all they could do without, they within kept one gate open. At length the English captaines perceiuing that they lay there in vaine, considering the strength of the towne, and also how the army was not of number sufficient to inuiron the same on each side, wrote to the king, who willed willed them with all spéede to returne, and so they did. Sir Edwarde Poynings went to the Court of Burgoigne, where he was receiued right honorably of the yong Prince of Castile and of his Aunt the ladie Margaret. Iohn Norton, Iohn Fogge, Iohn Scot, and Thomas Lynde were made knightes by the Prince. And the lady Margaret, séeing the souldiers coates to be worne, and foule with lying on the ground, gaue to euerie yeoman a coate of wollen cloth coloured white and gréene, red and yealowe, the white and gréene for the king of Englands liuerie, the redde and yealowe for the Duke of Burgoignes liuerie, and these foure colours were medled togither, this shée did to her great commendation: after that sir Edward Poynings had bin highly feasted, he returned with his crew into England, and had not lost fully one hundred persons.

King Henry being at Leicester, heard tydings, that one Andrew Barton a Scottish man, and pyrate of the sea, séeing that the king of Scots had warre with the Portingales, robbed euery nation, and stopped the kings streames that no merchant almost could passe, and when he toke Englishmens goods, he bare them in hand that they were Portingales goods, and thus he robbed at euery hauens mouth. The king displeased herewith, sent sir Edw. Howard lord admirall of England, the lord Thomas Howard son and heire to the earle of Surrey, and Iohn Hopton to the sea, which made ready two ships, and taking sea, by chance of weather were seuered. The lord Howard lying in the Downs, perceiuing wher Andrew was making toward Scotland, and so fast the said lord chased him, that he ouertoke him, so there was a sore battell betwixt them, Andrew euer blew his whistle to incourage his men: but at length the lord Howard and the Englishmen did so valiantly, that by cleane strength they entred the maine decke. The Scots fought sore on the hatches: but in conclusion Andrew was taken, and so sore wounded, that he died there, the remnant of the Scots were taken with their ship called the Lion. All this while was the lorde admirall in chase of the barke of Scotland called Jenny Perwin, which was wont to saile with the Lion in company, and he with other did so much, that he laid them aboord, and though the Scots manfully defended themselues, yet at length the English men entred the barke, slew many, and toke all the residue. Thus were these two ships taken and brought to Blackwall, the second of August. The Scots taken prisoners were sent to London, where they were kept as prisoners, in the Archbishop of Yorkes place, nowe called White hall, and after sent into Scotland.

About this season the French king made sharpe warre against Pope Iuly: wherefore the king of England wrote to the French king, that he should leaue of to vexe the pope in such wise being his friend and confederate: but when the French king séemed little to regard that request, the king sent him worde, to deliuer to him his inheritance, both of the dutchy of Normandie and Guien, and the counties of Anjow & Main, and also of his crowne of France, or else he would come with such a power, that by fine force he would obtaine his purpose: but notwithstanding the French king pursued his wars in Italy: thereupon the king of England ioyned in league with Maximilian the Emperour, and Ferdinando king of Spaine, and with diuers other princes, resolued by the aduice of his counsel, to make war on the French king and his countries, and made preparation both by sea and land, setting forth shippes to the sea for safegard of his merchants.

King Henry kept his Christmasse at Grenwich, with great and plentifull cheere. The 4. of Februarie began the Parliament at Westminster, vpon the which daie, the king and his lordes spirituall and temporall, with manie of the common house being present in the Parliament chamber, the archbishop of Canterbury then Chancellor of England, made a famous and clearkly proposition, grounded on this Text, Iustitia & pax osculatæ sunt, whereupon hee stood well a large houre and an halfe, declaring howe iustice shoulde bee ministred, and peace shoulde be nourished, and by what meanes iustice was put by, & peace turned into war. The which hee approued by examples of the olde and new testament in right sufficient wise, to his great commendation, & singular comfort of the hearers. On the next morrow began a conuocation in Pauls church: and on the next daie sir Robert Sheffield knight, and somtime recorder of London, was chosen speaker of the Parliament, and on the next morrowe being the 8. of Februarie, before the king and lordes hee made his proposition, excusing himselfe, and beseeching the king (as the maner is) to be dismissed of that office, for the which proposition he was well allowed and admitted. On the same day the K. dubbed sir Henry Guilford and sir Charles Brandon knights. In this parliament was granted two fiftæenes of the temporalty, and of the clergy two dismes or tenths. During which parliament, a yeoman of the crowne named Newbolt, slue within the palace of Westminster a seruant of Maister Willoughby, for the which fact, the king commanded to be set vp a paire of gallowes in the same place where the said seruant lost his life: and vpon the same, the saide Newbolt was hanged, and remained on the gallowes by the space of two daies.

S. Lateran Council in opposition to ye Council of Pisa

The king of Arragon hauing warre with the French king, wrote to king Henry of England to send ouer an army into Biscay, and so to inuade France on that side, for the recouery first of his dutchy of Guien, and hee woulde ayde them with ordinance, horsemen, beasts and cariages, with other necessaries appertaining to the same.

Ann. reg. 4.

K. H. sent an army into Biscay against the French.

The K. of England and his Councell putting their affiance in this promise of king Ferdinando prepared a noble army al of footmen, and smal artillery, appointed L. Th. Grey marques Dorset to be chiefe conductor of the same. Moreouer king Henry daily studying to set forward the war which hee had begun against the French K. caused sir Edmond Howard admirall, with all diligence to make ready diuers goodly ships, as the Soueraigne and others, to the number of 18. besides smaller vessels, and therewith hauing in his company Syr Weston Brown, Griffith Dun, Edward Cobham, T. Windham, T. Lucy, William Perton, Henry Shirborne, Stephen Bull, George Witwage, Iohn Hopton, William Gunstone, Thomas Draper, Edmonde Cooke, Iohn Burdet, and diuers other, he toke the sea, and scouring the same about the midst of May he came before Portsmouth. About the same time the L. marques Dorset, & other noble men appointed for the iourney to Biscay, as the Lord Howard son and heire to the earle of Surrey, the L. Brook, the L. Willoughby, the L. Ferrers, the L. Iohn, the L. Anthony, the L. Leonard Grey, all three brethren to the marques, sir Griffith ap Rice, sir Maurice Barkley, sir W. Sands, the baron of Burford, sir Richard Cornwall brother to the said baron, W. Husse, Io. Molton, W. Kingstone esquires, sir Henry Willoughby, and diuers other, with the number of 10000. soldiers, amongst the which were 500. Almains, all clad in white, vnder the leading of a Fleming named Gwint, came to Southampton, & there mustered their bands. The 16. of May they were shipped in Spanish vessels, and landed in Biscay, where they were bidden welcome, but had no such aide sent to them as was promised, whereby they lost the doing of some great exploite against the French men on the confiers of Gascoigne: after the army had laine 30. daies in the campe, there came from the king of Arragon messengers to desire the marques and his people to take patience for a while, and they should see that such preparation should be made for the furnishing of their enterprise. In the meane time the English men for the most part, were victualled with garlike, and dranke hote wines, and eate hote fruits, which procured their blood to boile in their bodies, whereby they fell sicke, and died more than 800. persons: in the end many promises being made by the king of Spaine, and none performed, the English men embarked, and landed in England in the moneth of December. The king of Spaine seemed to be sore discontented with their departure, affirming that if they had tarried till the next spring, he would in their cumpanie haue inuaded France.

The Regent of England, a ship, burned.

About the moneth of August the nauies of England and France meeting at Britaine bay, fought a cruell battell, in the which the Regent or soueraigne of England, and a carike of Brest in France, being grappled togither, were burned, and their captains with their men all drowned: the English captaine was sir Thomas Kneuet, who had with him sir Iohn Carew, and 700. men. In the French carike was sir Pierce Morgan, with nine hundred men, were all brent or drowned.

Great harrys ship made.

King Henry hearing of the losse of the Regent, caused a great ship to bee made, such a one, as the like had neuer béene seene in England, and named it, Henry grace de Dieu.

Scala temp. Kings palace at Westminster brent.

By fire this yéere a great part of the kings palace of Westminster, and the chappell in the Tower of London, and many other places in England were brent.

Parliament at Westminster.

In the moneth of November the king called his high court of parliament, in the which it was concluded, that the king himselfe in person with an army royall should inuade France, whereupon notice thereof being giuen to such as should attend, they made their purueiance with all diligence that might be.

Great payment to the king.

In this parliament was granted to the king two fifteenes, and foure demies, and had money, of euery duke ten markes, an earle fiue pound, a lorde foure pound, a knight foure markes, and euerie man valued at 800. pound in goods to paie foure markes, and so after that rate, till him that was valued at fortie shillings paid twelue pence, and euery man that woke forty shillings lings wages twelue pence, and euery man and woman of 15. yéres or vpward foure pence.

The king kept his Christmas at Grenwich with great solemnity, daunsing, disguisings, and mummeries in most princely maner. 1513

In the moneth of March was the kings Naute of ships roiall, and other set forth to the number of 42. beside balengers, vnder the conduct of the L. Admirall, accompanied with sir Walter Deuereux, L. Ferrers, sir Wolstan Brown, sir Edw. Ichingham, sir Anthony Poins, sir Iohn Wallope, sir Thomas Windham, sir Steuen Bull, William Fitz Williams, Arthur Plantagenet, William Sidney, esquires, and diuers other valiant captaines. Nauy sent to the sea. Ioh. de Medicis Pope by y name of Leo X. Mar. 11. 1513.

These made saile into Britaine, and came to Barthram bay, where they lay at anchor for a time, at length minding to enter the hauen of Brest on the 25. of Aprill, the L. admirall with a pike of the enemie, was throwen ouer bord, and so drowned, al the other escaped very hardly away, for if they had tarried the tide had failed them, and then al had bin lost. The L. Ferrers and the other captaines sorrowfull of this chance, returned into England. King Henry being sory for the losse of his admirall, called to him T. Howard eldest brother to the late admirall, and son and heire apparant to the earle of Surrey, whom he made admirall, willing him to reuenge his brothers death. The lorde Howard humbly thanked his grace of the trust that he put in him, and so immediately went to the sea, and scoured the same, that no French man durst shew himselfe on the coast of England. An. reg. 5. Edward Howard L admirall drowned.

On May euen Edmond de la Pole earle of Suffolke was beheaded on the tower hill, his brother Richard de la Pole, called the white Rose, was afterward slaine before the citie of Pauie, in anno 1524. Earle of Suffolke de la Pole beheaded.

King Henry hauing all his prouisions ready for the warre, and meaning in person to passe the sea, appointed George Talbot earle of Shrewsburie, high steward of his houshold, to be capteine generall of his forward, and in his companie were appointed to go Thom. Stanley earle of Darby, lord Docwray prior of S. Johns, sir Robert Ratclife lord Fitzwater, the lord Hastings, the lorde Cobham, sir Rice ap Thomas, sir Thomas Blunt, sir Richard Sacheuell, sir Iohn Digby, sir Iohn Askew, sir Lewes Bagot, sir Thomas Cornwall, and many other knights and esquires, and souldiers to the number of 8000. men, these passed the sea, and came to Caleis about the midst of May. Charles Somerset L. Herbert chamberlaine to the king, in the end of that moneth followed with 6000. men, and so forth.

King Henry hauing sent ouer a great and puissant army into France to beslege the citie of Turwine, himselfe accompanied with manie noble men, and fiue hundred archers of his garde, all in white gabberdines, toke his shippe at Douer on the last of June in the morning. When the king was shipped and made saile, all his army followed, to the number of foure hundred shippes, and the winde was so, that they were brought the same night into Caleis hauen. King Henry beseegeth Turwine.

On the next morrow, being the first of July, Thomas L. Howard, admirall of England, landed at Whitsand bay, and entred, spoiled, and brent the town, and returned to his ships.

The 21. of July, the king pulled out of the towne of Caleis in goodly array of battell, and toke the field, & notwithstanding that the forward of the kings great army were before Turwine, yet the king of his owne battell made 3. battels: the lord Lisle marshall of the host, was captaine of the forward, and vnder him 3000. men: sir Richard Carew with 300. men, was the right hand wing to the forward, & the lord Darcie with 300. men, wing on the left hand. The scourers and fore-riders of this battell, were the Northumberland men on light geldings. The earle of Esser was lieutenant generall of the speares, and sir Iohn Pechy was vice-gouernor of the horsemen. Before the king went 800. Almaines all in a plumpe: after them came the standard with the red dragon, next the banner of our Ladie, & next of the Trinitie, vnder the which were all the kings houshold. Then went the banner of the armes of England, borne by sir Iohn Gifford, vnder which banner was the king himselfe, with diuers noble men, and other, to the number of three thousand men. The Duke of Buckingham with fiue hundred men, was on the kings left hand. On the right hand was sir Edward Poynings with other fiue hundred men, equall with the Almaines. The lorde of Burgasnie with eight hundred men was wing on the right hand: sir William Compton with the retinue of the Bishop of Winchester Fox, and master Thomas Wolsey, afterward cardinall, of eight hundred, was in maner of a rereward: Sir Anthony Oughtred and sir Iohn Neuill with the kings speares that followed, were foure hundred, and so the whole army was eleuen thousand and three hundred men. The master of the ordinance set forth the kings artillerie, as faulcons, slings, bombardes, powder, stones, bowes, arrowes, and such other things necessary for the field, the whole number of the carriages were 13. hundred, the leaders and driuers of the same were nineteene hundred men. The king lay the first night betwixt Calkwell and Freidon: the nert night before the Castle of Guisnes at Vocard: the nert night he lay beside Arde a good way without the English pale, and when he was a little beyond Dernome, there came a great host of Frenchmen, that purposed to haue set vpon him: but the king with his host kept their ground, and shotte their great ordinance, wherewith the aray of the Frenchmen was broken.

The 4. of August, the king in good order of battell came before the citie of Turwine, and planted his siege in warlike wise.

The 11. date of August, Maximilian the Emperour came to king Henrie, who was receiued with great triumph betweene Aire and the campe. The Emperour and his retinue were in blacke, as mourners for the Empresse lately deceased.

The Emperor and all his seruants were reteined with the king of England in wages by the day, euery person according to his degree, and the Emperor as the kings souldier ware a crosse of S. George with a rose, and so he and all his traine came to the kings campe the 13. of August, and there was receiued with great magnificence.

The 23. of August, the towne of Turwine was giuen ouer vnto the king of England, with condition, that all men in the towne might safely passe with horse and harnesse: and so on the 24. of August there came out of the towne 4000. men of war and mo well appointed, whereof 600. were wel horsed, their standards borne before them. Turwine yeelded to king Henry.

The 26. of August, the king remoued to Stingate, and there it was agréed, that the walles, gates, bulwarkes, and towers of Turwine should be defaced, razed, and cast downe: of which conclusion, the Emperor sent word to S. Omers and to Aire, which being ioious of that tidings, sent thither pioners, and so they and the English pioners brake downe the walles, gates, and towers, and filled the ditch, and fired the towne, except the cathedrall church and the palace, and all the ordinance was by the king sent to Aire to bee kept to his vse. Turwine raced and brent.

After this it was concluded, that the king in person should laie his siege to the citie of Turney, wherefore he set forward three goodly battels: the first was conducted by the Earle of Shrewsburie: the second battell led the king himselfe, with whom was the Emperor: the rereward was conducted by the lord Harbert, and so the first night they lay in campe beside Aire.

The 14. of September, the king and his army came to Beatwin, and on the morrowe passed forwarde, and came to a strait where was a fowde, which with great difficultie they passed: and the next day they passed a bridge called Fount Anandieu, &c.

The one and twentieth day of September the king remoued his campe towarde Turney, and lodged within three miles of the Citie, the which night came to him the Emperour and the Palsgraue: the people about Turney were with their goods fledde to the citie, and yet the citie had no men of warre to defend it, but with multitude of inhabitants the citie was well replenished. K. Henry beseged Turney.

The king came in aray of battell before Turney, planted his ordinance rounde about the citie, diuers trenches were cast, and rampiers made, so that no Citizens coulde issue out, nor no aide come to them. Whereupon at length, to wit, on the nine and twentieth of September the citie was yelded. Turney yeelded to K. Henry.

Then the king appointed the lorde Lisle, the lorde Burgeyny, and the Lorde Willoughby to take possession, which with fiue thousand men entred the Citie, and toke the market place and the wals, and then maister Thomas Wolsey the kings almoner called before him all the citizens, and sware them to the king of England: the number of which citizens were fourescore thousand.

On the 2. day of October the king entred the citie of Turney, and there ordained sir Edward Poinings, knight of the order of the Garter, to be his lieutenant, with captaines, horsemen, archers, and artillery conuenient: he made his almoner Thomas Wolsey bishop of Turney, and then returned to Caleis, and sailed from thence to Douer on the 24. of October; from whence he rode post to Richmond, where the Quéene lay. Thomas Wolsey bishop of Turney.

In

James king of Scots besieged Norham.

In this meane time, Iames K. of Scots assembled the whole power of Scotland, wherewith he approched to the borders, and comming to Norham castle, laid siege thereunto, and after he had beaten this castle with his ordinance, by the space of fiue daies, the same was deliuered vppe into his handes.

And hee (sayeth Paulus Iouius) made the same to bee layde leuell with the grounde, and from thence marched (wasting with Fire and Sworde) to besiege the strong towne of Berwike.

Now had the earle of Surrey, Lieutenant of the north, in absence of king Henry, giuen order to assemble a power of 26000. men, and comming to Alnwike, tarried there till the whole number of his people were come: amongst other, his son the lord admirall with 5000. souldiers and men of war, which had bin at sea, came to his father, whereof he greatly reioiced. The earle appointed his battels, with wings, and horsemen necessary: first of the foreward was ordained captain the L. Howard admirall, with the L. Clifford, the L. Coniers, the L. Latimer, the L. Scrope, the lord Ogle, the lord Lumley, sir Nicholas Appleyard, master of the ordinance, sir Stephen Bull, sir Henry Sherborne, sir William Sidney, sir Edward Echingham, Sir William Bulmere, with the power of the Bishopricke of Durham, Syr William Gascoigne, sir Christopher Warde, sir Iohn Eueringham, sir Th. Metham, sir Walter Griffith, &c. Of the wing on the right hand of the forewarde was captaine, syr Edmond Howard, knight marshall of the hoste, and with him Brian Tonstall, Ralfe Brearton, Iohn Laurence, Richarde Bold Esquires, Syr Iohn Bothe, Syr Thomas Butler Knightes, and other. Of the Wing on the left hande was Captaine, Syr Marmaduke Constable with his sonnes, Syr William Percy, and of Lancashire, a thousande men. Of the Rerewarde was Captaine the Earle of Surrey, the Lord Scrope of Bolton, syr Philippe Tilney, syr George Darcie, syr Thomas Barkeley, syr Iohn Rocliffe, syr Christopher Pickering, Richarde Tempest, syr Iohn Stanley, &c. Nowe the Earle of Surrey was informed that king Iames laye imbattayled vpon a great Mountaine, called Flodon, a place of such strength, as was impossible for the Englishmen to come neere them, he sent Rouge Crosse pursuant to the king of Scots, to shew him, that where he had contrary to his oth and league, inuaded this his brothers realme, and done greate hurt, in casting downe castles, towers, and houses, burning and destroying the same, &c. The said earle would be ready to try the right wisenes of the cause with the king in battel, by friday next comming, if he of his noble courage would giue him tarrying and abode. Rouge Crosse went and did his message to Iames king of Scots, as he was appointed: And hereupon king Iames sent to the earle an herault named Ilay, who deliuered to the earle a letter written by the kings secretarie, as followeth.

Flodon field.

K. Iames letter to ye earle of Surrey.

As to the causes alleadged of our comming into England, against our band and promise (as is alleadged) thereto we answere: Our brother was bound as far to vs as we were to him. And when we sware last before his ambassador, in presence of our councel, we expressed specially by oth, that we would keepe to our brother, if our brother kept to vs, and not else: we sweare our brother brake first to vs, & sith his breake, we haue required diuers times him to amend: and lately

lately we warned our brother, as he did not vs or he brake, and this wee take for our quarrel, & with Gods grace shal defend the same, at your assired time, which with Gods grace we shall abide.

Earle of Surreys letter to Iames king of Scots.

Right high and mightie Prince, so it is that latelie I sent vnto you Rouge Crosse pursuant at armes, and by him aduertised your grace, that I and other my soueraign lords subiects, were come to repelle & resist your inuasions of this the kings my soueraigne Lordes realme, and for that intent I offered to giue you battell, on this halfe friday next comming: which my message, your grace toke pleasure to heare, as I am informed, and by your herault Ilay, yee made answree, that ye were right toious of my desire, and would not fayle to accomplish the same, and to abide me there, where yee were at the time of my message, so shewed vnto your grace. And albeit it hath pleased you to chaunge your said promise, and put your selfe into a grounde, more like a Fortresse or campe, than vpon any indifferent ground for battel to be tried, wherefore considering the day appointed is so nigh approching, I desire you of your grace, that for the accomplishment of your honorable promise, you will dispose your selfe for your part, like as I shall do for mine, to be to morrow with your host in your side of the plain of Milfield, in like wise as I shall do for mine, and shal be with the subiects of my soueraigne lord on my side of the plaine of the sayd field, to giue you battell betweene twelue of the clock and 3. in the after none, vpon sufficient warning by you to be giuen by eight or nine of the clock in the morning by the said pursuant. And like as I and other noble men my companie, binde vs by our writing subscribed with our handes to keepe the same time, to the intent aboue said: It may like your grace, by your honorable Letters subscribed with your hand, to bind your grace for the accomplishment of this our desire, trusting ye will dispatch our said pursuant immediatly: for the long delaie of so honorable a iourny, we thinke should sound to your dishonor. Written in the field in Woller Haugh the 7. day of September, at fiue of the clock in the after noon. Subscribed, Thomas Surrey, Thomas Howard, Thomas Dacre, Clifford, Henry Scrope, Ralfe Scrope, Richard Latimer, William Coniers, Iohn Lumley, R. Ogle, W. Percie, E. Stanley, W. Molineux, Marmaduke Constable, William Gascoigne, W. Griffith, George Darcie, W. Bulmer, Thomas Strangwais, &c.

Now the time of battell being come, the earle of Surrey diuided his army into three battailes: vnto the vantguard whereof, the Lord Howard was captaine, his brother sir Edmond Howard was ioined as a wing, the earle himselfe led the middle warde, and the rereward was guided by sir Edward Stanley. The Lord Dacres with a number of horsemen stood apart by himselfe to succour where neede should appeere to be. The Ordinance was placed in the front of these battels, and in places betweene, and in this order they marched forward.

In the meane time Iames king of Scottes beholding the behauiour of the Englishmen from the height of the hill, commanded his standards to be raised and spred, and euerie man to resort to his place, that they might foorthwith encounter with their enimies: And without delay K. Iames putting his horse from him, all other as well Nobles as meane men did the like, that the danger beeing equall, and all hope of succor taken awais, they might be the more willing to shewe their manhood: Then was the armie diuided into 5. wards, to the intent that the battell wherein the king himselfe stood with his standard, might bee inclosed, as it were, with two winges: their ordinance was lodged in places most conuenient, though by reason they marched downe the hill, their shot did small damage to the Englishmen comming vpwards. And heerewith Syr Edmonde Howard with his wing was got vp on the hill side, with whome the Lord Hume, and the two earles of Lineor and Argill incountred with such violence, that this Battayle of Scottes with Speares on foote beate downe and broke that Wing of Englishmen in such wise, that Sir Edmond Howard was in manner left alone, and felled to the earth: but baſtard Heron came to his rescue, or else hee had béene slayne. This Baſtarde Heron brought with him a strong troupe of horsemen, which hee beeing of late banished both from England and Scotland, had cunninglie trained vp in robberies. And on the other side, the Lorde Dacres watching to ayde where néede shoulde happen, came in on the sides of the Scots, and gaue a charge on them with his Horsemen, whereby Syr Edmond Howard escaped to the Englishe Vauntguard, which was ledde by his brother the Lorde Howard, who beeing nowe also got aloft on the hill, prested still forward to renew the battayle and to succour those whome hee sawe put to the worst, whereby they took courage vnto them and layde about. Herewith the Earle of Crawfort, and Mountrose came with their battaile of speares, also on foote, and encountring with the sayde Lorde Howard, after sore fight on both sides, both the sayde Earles were slayne, besides a great number of other, the whole battayle which they ledde, beeing put to flight, and chased out of the field. On the left hande, Syr Edward Stanley, and with him Syr William Molineux, Syr Henry Kighile, and other of Lancashire, Cheshire, hauing begunne to encounter with the Scots on that side, forced them to come downe into a more éeuen grounde, and brought to that point, with such incessant shot of arrowes, that to auoide that sharpe storme, the Scottes were constrained to breake their arraie, and to fight one separate from another: which thing when Syr Edwarde Stanley perceiued, forthwith bringing about thée Bandes which hee had kept in store, he inuaded the open sides of his enimies, by a fresh onsette, and put them in sunder in such disorder, that they were not able anie longer to abide the violence of the Englishmen, so that taking themselues to flight, and running downe the hill, they escaped to the wood: but the Earles of Argile and Lenior were slayne in the same place. In the meane time the King, who a little before had ioyned with the Earle of Surrey, perceyuing that the Winges of his Battayles were distressed, and that his enemies beganne to enclose him on each side, herewith rushing forth vpon his enemies, a newe battayle beganne to rise, for that battayle beeing well armed, passed little for the Arrowes of the Englishmen, insomuch, that pearsing the earles Battayle, they entered well néere so farre within the same, that they were at a poynt to haue ouerthrown his Standardes. The king himselfe on foote, euen in the foremost Ranke, fought fought right valiantly, encouraging his people, as well by example as by perswasions to do their best. Neither did the earle of Surrey faile in the dutie of a worthie Generall: but whilest the battell was thus foughten about the standards, with doubtfull chance of victorie, the Lorde Howarde and sir Edwarde Stanley, hauing vanquished the enimies in either wing, returned to the middleward, and finding them there thus occupied, they fette on, in two seuerall parts, with great violence, and at the same time the lorde Dacres came with his horsemen vpon the backs of the Scots, so that they being thus assailed behind and before, and on either side, were constreined to fight in a rounde compasse. King Iames as he beheld sir Adam Forman his standard bearer beaten downe, thought surelie there was no waie for him but death: wherefore to deliuer himselfe from the reproch as was like to follow, he rushed forth into the chiefest preasse of his enimies, and there fighting in most desperate maner, was beaten downe and slain, and a little beside him, there died with like courage diuers honorable prelates, as the archbishop of S. Andrewes, & two other bishops, besides two abbots, 12. earles, & 17. lords, besides knights and gentlemen: and about 8000. Scots slain, and almost so manie taken, saith Iouius. All their ordinance and stuffe was taken by the English.

Thus on the 9. of September, king Iames the fourth of that name, king of Scots was slaine at Bramstone vpon Piperd hill, and his armie discomfited by the earle of Surrey lieutenant to Henry the 8. king of Englande: There was taken prisoner sir William Scot chancellor to the saide king, and Sir Iohn Forman his serieant porter, with diuers other. Also in maner all the Scottish ensignes were taken, and 22. peeces of greate ordinance, amongst the which were seauen culuerings, verie faire peeces, whome the king for their likenes one vnto another, had named the seauen sisters. There was slaine and taken of our men aboue 1500. men (saith Hall) during the time of the fight, & in the night following, manie Englishmen lost their horses, and such stuffe as they left in their tents, by the robbers of Tindale, & Tiuidale: When the field was done, the earle gaue thanks to God, and made knightes to the number of 35. whose names I ouerpasse in this place. The body of the king of Scots was not found till the next daie, and then being found and knowne by the lord Dacres, there appeared in the same diuers deadly woundes, his throat cut halfe asunder, his left hand in two places almost cut off, and manie other woundes, as well with arrowes, as other wise: his body was bowelled, rebowelled, and inclosed in lead, and so kept at Barwike, till the kings pleasure were knowne. After that the earle of Surrey had taken order, and set the north in good quiet, he returned to the queene, with the dead bodie of the Scottish king, which bodie inclosed in lead (as before is shewed) as I haue beene informed, was conueied to Shine, a monasterie in Surrey, founded by king H. the 5. where it remained for a time, in what order I am not certaine, but since the dissolution of that house, to wit, in the raigne of king Ed. the 6. Henry Grey then duke of Suffolk, there keeping house, I haue beene shewed the same body (as was affirmed) so lapped in lead, throwen into an old waste roome, amongst old timber, stone, lead, and other rubble.

The kings letters to sir Will. Molineux, of Lancashire.

When King Henry was returned into England, from his conquest made in France, of the Cities of Tirwin, and Turney, he forgate not the good seruice of those that hadde beene with the Earle of Surrey, at the Battayle of Bramstone, wherefore hee wrote to them his louing letters, with such thanks and fauourable words, that euerie man thought himselfe well rewarded. The tenure of his letter was this. Trustie and welbeloued we greete you well, and vnderstand aswell by the report of our right trustie cosen and counsailer the Duke of Norffolke, as otherwise, what acceptable seruice you amongst other latelie did vnto vs, by your valiant towardnesse in the assisting of our said cosen against our great enemie, the late king of Scottes: and howe couragiouslie you as a verie heartie louing seruaunt, acquited your selfe, for the ouerthrowe of the sayde late King, and distressing of his malice and power to our greate honour, and the aduaunceing of your no little fame and prayse, for which wee haue good cause to fauour and thanke you, and so wee full heartylie doe. And assured maie you bee, that wee shall in such effectuall wise remember your sayde seruice in anie your reasonable pursutes, as you shall haue cause to thinke the same right well employed, to your comfort, and weale hereafter. Giuen vnder our signet, at our Castell of Windsore, the 27. of Nouember. To our trustie and welbeloued, William Molineux Knight.

Whereupon the Popes letters, the French King by an Herault at Armes sent to the king of Englande, requiring of him a safe Conduct for his ambassadors, which should come to intreat for a peace to bee concluded betwixt them and their Realmes. Upon graunt thereof attayned, the French King sent a Comumission with the President of Roane, and others, to entreate of peace. And because they vnderstoode that the mariage was broken betweene the prince of Castile and the lady Marie, they desired that the sayde Ladie might bee soyned in marriage with the French King, offering a greate Dowrie, and suretie for the same, so much was offered, that the King moued by his Counsaile consented vpon condition, that if the French king dyed, then shee shoulde, if it stoode with her pleasure, returne into Englande with her Dowrie and Riches. They set out from Douer with foureteene greate Shippes, and had not sailed past a quarter of their voiage in the sea, but that the winde rose, and seuered the shippes, driuing some of them to Calais, some into Flaunders, and her shippe and three other, with greate difficultie, was brought to Boloigne, not without greate ieopardy at the entring of the Hauen, for the Master ranne the shippe harde on shore, but the Boates were readie, and receiued the Ladie out of the shippe, and syr Christopher Garnish stode in the water, and tooke her in his armes, and so bare her to land, where the Duke of Vandosme, and a Cardinall, with manie other greate Estates, receiued her with greate honour. In this voiage king Henries greate shippe with foure tops, called the Lubeke, was broken and lost, a little from Sangate west toward Calais: there was in her at that time almost fiue hundred men, souldiours and marriners, whereof more than foure hundred were lost, for there escaped not one hundred of that companie. From Boloigne the Ladie Mary was conueied vnto Abuile, and there entered the eight of October, and on the nert morrowe, the marriage was solemnized betwixt the French king and the saide ladie, with all honour and royaltie: When the feast was ended, the English Lordes returned with greate rewardes into Englande: Before whose departure from Abuile, the Dolphine of France, Francis duke of Valois caused solemne Iustes to bee proclaimed, to be kept at Paris, in the moneth of Nouember nert ensuing: the saide Dolphine with his nine aides, to answeare all commers, beeing Gentlemen of name and armes. The K. of England being thereof aduertised, caused a solemne obsequie to bee kept for him in S. Pauls church of London, with a costly hearse, at the which obsequy manie nobles were present. Then the K. sent a letter to comfort the Quéene his sister, requiring to know her pleasure, whether she would continue still in France, or returne into England. And when hee was aduertised of her minde, which was to returne into England, the Duke of Suffolke, sir Richard Wingfield depatie of Caleis, and doctor West, with a goodly band of gentlemen, and yeomen all in blacke, were sent into France, and comming to Paris, were well entertained of Francis the new French K. to whome they declared the effect of their commission, which was to receiue the M. The councell of France by the kings appointment, assigned forth hir dowrie, and the duke of Suffolke put in officers, and then was the M. deliuered to the duke, who behaued himselfe so towards her, that he obtained hir good will, to be hir husband. It was thought, that when the K. created him duke of Suffolke, he perceiued his sisters good will toward the said duke, and that hee ment then to haue bestowed hir on him, but that a better offer came in the way, but howsoeuer it was, nowe hee wan hir loue, so as by her consent, hee wrote to the K. hir brother, meekelie beséeching him of pardon in his request, which was humbly to desire him of his good will and contentation. The K. after some sute, agréed that the duke should bring hir into England vnmaried, and at his return to marry her in England: but for doubt of change, he maried her secretly at Paris, as was said. 1515 The French king deceaseth.

And on the 13. of May, they were solemnelie married at Grénewich.

In the moneth of November, the king assembled a Parliament at Westminster, especiallie for order in apparell. In the end of which parliament, doctor Warham archbishop of Canterbury, and then L. Chancellor, gaue vp into the kings hands his office of chancellor, and deliuered to him the great seale, which seale incontinentlie the K. deliuered vnto the L. cardinall, and so made him chancellor. And here I thinke good to set downe for example to posteritie, some part of the proceedings of this so oft named Tho. Wolsey archbishop, his ascending vnto honorius estate, and sodaine falling again from the same, as I haue béene informed by persons of good credite. Truth it is, this Cardinall to the Vniuersitie of Oxford, where hee shortlie prospered so in learning, as himselfe reported, as he was made Batcheler of Art, when he passed not 15. yéeres of age, and was called most commonly through the Vniuersity the boy Bacheler. Thus prospering in learning, hee was made fellowe of Maudelin colledge, and afterward appointed to be schoolemaster of Maudelin Schole, at which time, the L. Marques Dorset had 3. of his sonnes there at Schole, committing vnto him as well their education, as their instruction. It pleased the said L. Marques against a Christmas season to send as well for the schoolemaster, as for his children home to his house for their recreation, in that pleasant and honorable feast. Then being there, the lord their father perceiuing them to be right well employed in learning for their time, hee hauing a benefice in his gift being at that time void, gaue the same to the schoolemaster in rewarde of his diligence, at his departure after Christmas to the Vniuersity, and hauing the presentation therof repaired to the Ordinary for his institution or induction, & being furnished of all his ordinarie instruments, made spéed to the benefice to take the rof possession, and being there for that intent, one sir Amias Poulet knight dwelling the reabout, tooke an occasion of displeasure against him,

vpon what ground I know not, but sir by your leaue he was so bold to set the schoolemaster by the eéte, during his pleasure, which after was neither forgotten nor forgiuen: for when the schoolemaster mounted the dignity to be chancellor of England, he was not obliuious of his old displeasure cruelly ministred vnto him by M. Poulet: but sent for him, and after many sharp words, enioined him to attend vntill he were dismissed, & not to depart out of London without licence obtained, so that he continued there within the middle temple the space of 5. or 6. yéres, who lay then in the gatehouse next the stréet, which he reedified verie sumptuously, garnishing the same all ouer both side with the cardinals armes, with his hat, cognisances, and other deuises in so glorious a sort, that he thought thereby to haue appeased his old displeasure. Now may this bee a good example and president, to men in authoritie (which will sometime worke their will without witte) to remember in their authoritie, howe authoritie maie decaie. And whome they doe punish of will, more then of iustice, maie after be aduanced to high honor and dignities in the Common Weales, and they based as lowe: who will then séeke the meanes to bee reuenged of such wrongs, which they suffered before? Who would haue thought then when sir Amias Powlet punished this poore scholler, the scholmaster that euer he should haue mounted to so high dignitie, as to bee Chancellor of England, considering his baseness in euerie degree? These be wonderfull works of God and fortune. Therefore I would wish all men in authoritie and dignitie to know and feare God in all their triumphes and glorie, considering in all their doings, that authorities be not permanent, but maie slide and vanish, as Princes pleasures alter and chaunge. When as all liuing things must of verie necessitie pate the due debt of nature, which no earthlie creature canne resist, it chaunced the sayde Lord Marques to departe out of this present life, after whose death, this Schoolemaster then considering with himselfe, to bee but a simple beneficed man, and to haue left his fellowship in the College (for I vnderstand, if a fellowe of that house be once promoted to a benefice, hee shall by the rules of the same be dismissed of his fellowshippe) and perceiuing himselfe also to be destitute of his singular good Lorde, and also of his fellowship, which was much of his releefe, thought not long to bee vnprouided of some other helpe, or Mastership to defende him from all such stormes, as hee lightlie was vexed with, and in his trauell thereabout, hee fell in acquayntaunce with one sir Iohn Naphant, a very graue and ancient knight, who had a greate rome in Calais vnder K. Henry the 7. this knight he serued, and behaued himselfe so discrételie, that hee obtayned the especiall fauour of his master, insomuch, that hee committed all the charge of his office vnto his Chaplaine, and as I vnderstand, the office was the Treasurelship of Calais, who was in consideration of his greate age discharged of his rome, and returned agayne into Englande, intending to liue more in quyet, and through his instant labor and good fauour, his Chaplaine was promoted to be the kinges chaplaine, and then he had once cast anchor in the port of promotion, how he wrought, I shal somewhat declare. He hauing there a iust occasion to be in the sight of the king daily, by reason he attended and said masse before him in his closet, and that being done, he spent not the daie forth in idlenesse, but woulde attende vpon those whom he thought to beare most rule in the counsell, and to be most in fauour with the king, the which at that time was doctor Fox, bishop of Winchester, Secretarie, and lord of the priuie seale: And also sir Tho. Louell knight, a verie sage counsellor, a wittie man, being maister of the Wardes, and constable of the tower: these ancient and graue counsellers in processe of time perceiued this chaplaine to haue a verie fine wit, and thought him a méete person to be preferred to wittie affaires: It chanced at a certaine season that the king had an vrgent occasion to send an ambassador vnto the Emperour Maximilian, who lay at that present in the low countrey of Flaunders, not far from Caleis. The bishop of Winchester and sir Thomas Louell, whome the king most esteemed as chiefe of his Counsell, the king counselling and debating with them vpon this ambassage, saw they had a conuenient occasion to preferre the kings chaplaine, whose wit, eloquence, and learning they highlie commended vnto the king: the king giuing eare vnto them, & being a prince of an excellent iudgement and modestie, commanded them to bring his chaplaine, whome they so much commended, before his presence, with whom he fell in communication of great matters, and perceiuing his wit to be verie fine, thought him sufficient to be put in trust with this ambassage, commanding him thereupon to prepare himselfe to this iourney. And for his depeche to repaire to his grace and his Counsell, of whom he should receiue his commission and instructions, by meanes whereof he had then a due occasion to repaire from time to time into the kings presence, who perceiued him more and more to be a verie wise man, and of a good intendiment. And hauing his depeach, toke his leaue of the king at Richmond about none, and so came to London about foure of the clocke, where the barge of Graues-end was ready to launch forth, both with a prosperous tide and winde, without anie abode he entered the barge, and so passed forth with such happie spéede, that he arriued at Graues-ende within little more than three houres, where he tarried no longer than his post horses were prouiding, and then trauelled so spédily, that he came to Douer the next morning, whereas the passengers were readie vnder saile to Caleis, into the which passenger without tarrying he entered, and sayled forth with them, that long before none he arriued at Caleis, and hauing post horses in a readinesse, departed from thence without tarrying: and he made such hastie spéede, that he was that night with the Emperor. And he hauing vnderstanding of the comming of the K. of Englands ambassador, would in no wise delaie the time, but sent for him incontinent, his affection to king Henry the seuenth was such, that he was glad when he had anie occasion to shewe him pleasure. The ambassadour disclosed the whole summe of his ambassage vnto the Emperor, of whom he required spédie erpedition: the which was granted him by the emperor, so that the next day he was clérely dispatched, with all the kings requests fully accomplished and granted. At which time he made no longer delay, but toke post horses that night, and rode toward Caleis, conducted thither with such persons as the emperor had appointed, and at the opening of the gates of Caleis he came thither, where where the passengers were as readie to returne into England, as they were before at his iourney forward, insomuch, that hee arriued at Douer by ten or eleuen of the clock before noone, and hauing post horses in a readines, came to the court at Richmonde the same night, where hee taking some rest vntill the morning, repaired to the king at his first comming from his bed-chamber to his closet to masse, whome when the king saw, he checked him, for that he was not on his iourney: Sir (quoth he) if it maie please your highnes, I haue alreadie beene with the emperor, and dispatched your affaires, I trust to your graces contentation, & with that presented ỹ king his letters of credence from the emperor. The king beeing in a greate confuse and wonder of his spedie returne and procedinges, dissembled all his wonder and imagination in that matter, and demanded of him, whether hee encountred not his Purseuant the which he sent vnto him, supposing him not to be scantlie out of London, with letters concerning a verie necessarie matter neglected in their consultation, the which the king much desired to haue dispatched amongst the other matters of ambassage: Yes forsoth (quoth the chaplaine) I met with him yesterdaie by the waie, and hauing no vnderstanding by your graces letters of your pleasure, haue notwithstanding bene so bolde vpon mine discretion (perceyuing that matter to bee verie necessarie in that behalfe) to dispatch the same: and forasmuch as I haue exceded your graces commission, I most humblie quite your graces remission ỹ pardon: & king reioicing inwardlie not a little, said: Wee doe not onelie pardon you thereof, but also giue you our Princelie thanks, both for the proceeding therein, & also for your good and spedy exploit, commanding him for that time to take his rest, and repaire againe after Dinner, for the further relation of his ambassage. The king then went to masse, and after a conuenient time went to dinner. It is not to bee doubted, but that this ambassador hath in all this time bin with his great friends the bishop, and sir Tho. Louell, to whom he hath declared the effect of all his sped, nor yet what ioy they receiued thereof.

The ambassador when he saw time, repaired before the king and councell, where he declared the effect of all his affaires so exactlie, with such grauitie and eloquence, that all the councel that heard him, commended him, esteeming his expedition to be almost beyond the capacitie of man. The k. gaue him at that time the deanery of Lincoln, which was at that time one of the worthiest promotions that he gaue vnder degree of a bishoprick: & thus from thence forward he grew more and more into estimation and authority, and after was promoted by the king to be his almoner.

Heere maie all men note the chaunces of fortune that followeth some, whome shee intendeth to promote, and to some her fauour is cleane contrarie, though they trauell neuer so much with all the possible diligence that they canne deuise or imagine, whereof for my parte, I haue tasted the experience. Nowe ye shall vnderstande that all this tale that I haue declared of the good expedition of the kings ambassador, was reported by his owne mouth after his fall, lying at that time in the great parke of Richmond, vnto George Cauandish his gentleman Vsher, taking then occasion vpon diuers communications to tell this iourney with all the circumstances, as I haue here before rehearsed.

When death, that fauoureth none estate, had taken king Henry the seuenth out of this present life, who for his wisedome was called the second Salomon, what practises and compasses were then vsed about king Henry the eight: and the great prouision made for the funerals of the one, and the costly deuises of the coronation of the other, I omit. After the finishing of these solemnities and costly triumphs, and that our naturall yong and lustie courragious prince king Henry the eight, entering into the flower of lustie youth, and taking vpon him the royall scepter and imperiall diademe of this realme, which at that time flourished in all abundance and riches, whereof the king was inestimably furnished, called then the golden worlde, such grace raigned then within this realme.

T. Wolsey of the priuy counsell.

Nowe the almoner hauing a head full of subtill wit, perceiuing a plaine path to walke in toward his iourney to promotion, handled himselfe so politikely, that he found the meanes to be made one of the kings counsell, and to grow in fauour and good estimation with the king, to whome the king gaue an house at Westwell in Kentestréete, sometime sir Richard Empsons, where he kept house for his familie, and so daily attended vpon the king, and in his especiall fauour, who had great suite made vnto him, as counsellors in fauour most commonly haue. His sentences and wittie perswasions in the counsell chamber were alwaies so pithie, that the counsell as occasion moued them, continually assigned him to be the expositor to the king in all their procéedings: in whome the king receiued such a leaning fantasie, and in especiall for that he was most earnest and readiest of all the counsell, to aduance the kings will and pleasure, hauing no respect to the cause: the king therfore perceiuing him to be a méete instrument for the accomplishment of his deuised pleasures, called him more nére vnto him, and estéemed him so highly, that all the other counsellors were put from the great fauour that they before were in: insomuch, that the king committed all his will vnto his disposition, which the almoner perceiuing, toke vpon him therefore to discharge the king of the waightie and troublesome businesse, perswading the king, that he shoulde not nede to spare anie time of his pleasure for anie businesse that shoulde happen in the counsell: and whereas the other counsellors would diuers times perswade the king to haue sometime recourse into the counsell chamber, there to heare what was done, the almoner would perswade him to the contrarie, which delighted him much: and thus the almoner ruled all that before had ruled him: such did his policie and wit bring to passe. Who was nowe in high fauour but maister almoner? Who had all the suite but maister almoner? And who ruled all vnder the king, but maister almoner? Thus hee persewered in fauour, vntill at last in came presents, giftes, and rewardes so plentifully, that I dare saie he lacked nothing that might either please his fantasie, or enrich his cofers: fortune smiled so fauourably vpon him, but to what end she brought him, yee shall heare hereafter. Therefore let all men to whome fortune extendeth her grace, not trust to her subtill fauour, and pleasant promises, mises, vnder colour whereof, shée carrieth venemous gall.

This almoner thus proceeding in fortunes blisfulnes, it chanced the wars betweene the realmes of England and France to be open, in so much, as the king being fully perswaded in his most roiall person, to inuade his forreine enemies with a puissant army, wherfore it was necessarie that this roiall enterprise should be spéedily prouided and furnished in euerie degrée of things apte and conuenient for the same, the expedition whereof, the king thought no mans wit so mete for policie and painfull trauell, as was his almoner, to whome therefore he committed his whole trust therein, and he being nothing scrupulous in anie thing that the king would commaund him to doe, although it séemed to other verie difficill, toke vpon him the whole charge of all the businesse, and brought all thinges to good passe in a decent order, as all maner of victuals, prouisions, and other necessaries conuenient for so noble a voiage and armie.

All things being by him perfected, the king aduanced to his roiall enterprise, passed the seas, and marched forward in good order of battell, vntill he came to the strong towne of Turwine, to the which he laid his siege, and assailed it verie strongly continually with such vehement assaults, that within shorte space it was yéelded vnto his maiestie: vnto the which place, the Emperour Maximilian repaired vnto the king with a great army like a mightie prince, taking of the king his graces wages, which is a rare thing, and but seldome séene, an emperor to fight vnder a kings banner.

Thus after the king had obtained this puissant fort, and taken the possession thereof, and set all things there in due order, for the defence and preseruation thereof to his vse, he departed thence, and marched towarde the citie of Turney, and there laide his siege in like maner: to the which he gaue so fierce and sharpe assault, that they were constrained of fine force to render the towne vnto his victorious maiestie: at which time, the king gaue the almoner the bishoprieke of the same sea towards his paines and diligence sustained in that iourney. And when the king had established all things agréeable to his will and pleasure, and furnished the same with noble captaines and men of warre for the safegarde of the towne, he returned againe into England, taking with him diuers noble personages of France being prisoners, as the duke of Longuile, and vicount Clarmont, with other, which were taken there in a skirmish. After whose returne, immediatly the sea of Lincolne fell voide by the death of doctor Smith late bishop there: the which benefice his grace gaue to his almoner, late bishop of Turney elect, who was not negligent to take possession thereof, and made all the spéede he could for his consecration. The solemnization whereof ended, he found the meanes that he gate the possession of all his predecessors goods into his hands. It was not long after that doctor Bambridge archbishop of Yorke died at Rome, being there the kings ambassador, vnto the which sea, the king immediately presented his late and new bishop of Lincolne: so that he had three bishoprickes in his hands in one yeare giuen him: then prepared he for his translation from the sea of Lincolne vnto the sea of Yorke: after which solemnization done, he being then an archbishop Primas Anglia, thought himselfe sufficient to compare with Canterbury, and thereupon erected his crosse in the court, and euery other place, as well within the precinct and iurisdiction of Canterbury, as in any other place. And for as much as Canterbury claimeth a superioritie ouer Yorke, as ouer all other bishoprickes within England, and for that cause claimeth as a knowledge of an ancient obedience of Yorke, to abate the aduancing of his crosse, in presence of the crosse of Canterbury: notwithstanding, Yorke nothing minding to desist from bearing thereof in maner as I said before, caused his crosse to bee aduanced, as well in the presence of Canterbury as elsewhere: wherefore Canterbury being moued therewith, gaue vnto Yorke a certaine checke for his presumption, by reason wherof, there engendered some grudge betweene Yorke and Canterburie. Yorke intending to prouide some such meanes, that he would be rather superior in dignitie to Canterbury, than to be either obedient or equall to him: wherefore hee obtained to be made priest cardinall, and Legatus de Latere: vnto whom the Pope sent a cardinals hatte with certaine buls for his authority in that behalfe: Yet you shall vnderstand, that the Pope sent him this worthy hat of dignitie, as a iewell of his honour and authoritie, the which was conueied in a verlets budget, who seemed to all men to be but a person of small estimation.

Wherefore Yorke being aduertised of the baseneſſe of this messenger, and of the peoples opinion, thought it meete for his honor, that this iewell should not be conueied by so simple a person, and therefore caused him to be stopped by the way immediately after his arriuall in England, where he was newly furnished in all manner of apparell, with all kinde of costly silkes, which seemed decent for such an high ambassador: and that done, he was encountred vpon Black-heath, and there receiued with a great assembly of prelates, and lusty gallant gentlemen, and from thence conducted through London with great triumph. Then was great and spéedy preparation made in Westminster Abbey, for the confirmation and acceptance of this high order and dignitie, the which was executed by all the Bishops and Abbots about or nigh London, with their rich miters and copes, and other ornaments, which was done in so solemne a wise, as had not béene séene the like, vnlesse it had béene at the coronation of a mighty prince or king. Obtaining this dignity, he thought himselfe meete to beare authoritie among the temporall power, as among the spirituall iurisdiction: wherefore, remembring as well the taunts sustained of Canterburie, as hauing a respect to the aduancement of worldly honour and promotion, found the meanes with the king, that he was made lord Chancelor of England, and Canterbury which was Chancelor dismissed, who had continued in that roome since long before the decease of Hen. the seuenth. Nowe being in possession of the Chancelorship, and indued with the promotions of the archbishoppe, and cardinall De Latere, hauing power to correct Canterburie, and all other bishops & spirituall persons, to assemble his conuocation when he would assigne, he toke vpon him the correction of matters in all their iurisdictions, and visited all the spirituall houses, hauing in euery Diocelle all manner of spirituall ministers, as commissaries, scribes, apparitors, rito:s, and all other officers to furnish his courtes, and p:esented by p:euention whom he pleased vnto all benefices th:oughout all this realme. And to the aduaunc:ing fur:ther of his legantine iurisdiction, and honour, he had maisters of his faculties, maisters Ceremoniarum, and such other to the glo:ifying of his dignitie.

Then had he his two great crosses of siluer, the one of his Archbisho:pike, the other of his legacie, bo:ne before him whither soeuer hee went o:r rode, by two of the tallest p:iestes that he could get within the realme. And to increase his gaines, he had also the bishop:icke of Durham, and the Abbey of Saint Albons in Comendam. And after, when doct:or Foxe Bysh:op of Winchester died, he surrend:red Durham into the kings handes, and toke to him Winchester. Then had he in his hand (as it were in farme) the bishop:icks of Bathe, Wo:cester, and Here:ford, fo:asmuch as the incumbents of them were strangers, and made their abode continually beyonde the seas in their owne countries, o:r else at Rome, from whence they were sent in legation to this realme vnto the king, and fo:r their reward at their departure, King Henry the seuenth gaue those bishop:ickes: and they being strangers, thought it mo:re mete fo:r the assurance, to suffer the cardinall to haue their benefices fo:r a conuenient summe of money paide them yeerely where they remained, than either to be troubled with the charges of the same, o:r to be yeerely burdened with the conueiance of their reuenues vnto them: so that all the spirituall p:omotions and p:esentations of these bishop:ickes were fully in his disposition, to p:eferre whom he listed. He had also a great number daily attending vpon him, both of noble men and wo:thy gentlemen, with no small number of the tallest yeomen that he could get in all the realme, insomuch, that well was that noble man & gentleman, that could p:efer a tall yeoman to his seruice. He shall vnderstand that he had in his hall continually thr:ee boords, kept with thr:ee seuerall p:incipall officers, that is to saie, a Stewarde which was alwaies a p:iest, a treasurer a knight, and a controller an esquire: also a coferer being a doct:or, thr:ee marshals, thr:ee yeomen vshers in the hall, besides two gromes, and almoners. Then in the hall kitchen, two clearkes of the kitchen, a clearke controller, a surueio:r of the d:esso:r, a clearke of the spicerie, the which togither kept also a continuall messe in the hall. Also in his hall kitchen he had of maister cookes two, and of other cookes, labourers, and childr:en of the kitchen, twelue persons: foure yeomen of the scullerie, and foure yeomen of the siluer scullerie: two yeomen of the pastrie, with two other pastelers vnder the yeomen. Then in his p:iuie kitchen a maister cooke, who went daily in velu:et o:r in sattin, with a chaine of golde, with two other yeomen and a grome: In the scalding house a yeoman and two gromes; In the pantrie two persons: In the butterie two yeomen, two gromes, and two pages: And in the pew:rie likewise: In the seller thr:ee yeomen and thr:ee pages: In his chaunderie two: In the wafarie two: in the ward:robe of beds, the maister of the ward:robe, and tenne other persons: In the launderie a yeoman, a grome, thirtie pages, two yeomen purueio:rs, and one grome: In the bake-house a yeoman and two gromes: In the wood-yarde a yeoman:

yeoman and a grome: In the barne one: In the Garden a yeoman and two gromes: Porters at the gate, two yeomen and two gromes: A yeoman of his barge, and a maister of his horse: A Clearke of the stable, a yeoman of the same: the saddler, the farrier: a yeoman of his chariot: a sumpter man: a yeoman of his stirrop: a muleter: sixteene gromes of his stable, euerie of them kept foure geldings: In the almorie a yeoman and a grome: In his chappell he had a deane, a great diuine, and a man of excellent learning: a subdeane, a repeater of the quire: a Gospeller, a Pistteller, of singing Priests ten: a maister of the Children: Seculars of the Chappell, singing men twelue: singing children ten, with one seruaunt to waite vpon the children: in the Reuestrie a Yeoman and two Gromes, ouer and besides diuers retainers that came thither at principall feasts. For the furniture of his chappell, passeth my capacitie to declare, the number of costlie ornamentes and rich iewels that were to bee occupied in the same continuallie: there hath béene seene in procession about the hall, 44. verie rich Coapes of one sute worne, besides the rich Crosses and candlesticks, and other ornaments to the furniture of the same. Hee had two crosse bearers, and two pillar-bearers in his great chamber: and in his priuie chamber these persons: first the chiefe chamberlaine, and vicechamberlaine: of gentlemen vshers, besides one in his priuy chamber, he had twelue daily waiters: and of gentlemen waiters in his priuie chamber he had six, and of lords nine or x. who had each of them ii. men allowed them to attende vpon them, except the Earle of Darbie, who had allowed fiue men: then had hee of gentlemen, of cupbearers, caruers, and sewers both of the priuie chamber and of the great chamber, with Gentlemen dailie waiters there, fortie persons: of yeomen vshers 6. of gromes in his chamber 8. of yeomen in his chamber fiue and fortie daily: he had also almes men, sometime more in number than other sometime.

K. Wolleys Chappell.

There was attending on his bord of doctors and chaplaines, besides them of his chappell, sixteene dailie: a clearke of his closet: secretaries two: and two clearks of his signet, and foure counsellers learned in the law. And forasmuch as it was necessarie to haue diuers officers of the chauncerie to attende vpon him, that is to saie, the clearke of the crowne, a riding clearke, a clearke of the hamper, and a chafer of the wax: then a clearke of the checke, as well vpon the Chaplaines, as of the yeomen of his chamber: he had also foure Footemen, which were garnished in rich running coats, when soeuer he rode in anie iourney: then had he an herault of armes, and a sergeant of armes, a Phisition, an apothecarie, foure minstrels, a keeper of his tents, an armorer, an instructer of his wards, two yeomen of his wardrobe of his robes, and a keeper of his chamber continually in the court: he had also in his house the structure of Yorke, and a clearke of the greene cloth. All these were daily attending, downe lying, & vprising, & at meales: he kept in his great chamber a continuall bord for the Chamberers and Gentlemen officers, hauing with them a messe of the yong Lordes, and another of Gentlemen: and besides all these, there was neuer an Officer, Gentleman, or woorthie person, but he was allowed in the house some 3. some 2. and all other one at the least, which grew to a great number of persons,

persons. Thus far out of the Check rol, besides other officers, seruants, retayners, and suters that most commonly dined in the hall.

T. Wolsey twice ambassador to the emperor Charles.

After that hee was thus furnished, hee was sent twice in ambassage to the emperor Charles the fift, for diuers vrgent causes touching the kinges Maiestie, it was thought, that to so noble a prince (the cardinall) was most meete to be sent: wherefore, being readie to take vpon him the charge thereof, was furnished in all degrees and purposes, most like a great prince: for first he proceeded forth furnished like a cardinall, his gentlemen being very many in number, were clothed in liuery coates of crimsen veluet of the best, with chains of gold about their neckes, and his yeomen and meane officers in coates of fine scarlet, garded with black veluet a hand broad.

Thus furnished, he was twice sent into Flanders to the emperor, then lying in Bruges, whome he did most highlie entertain, discharging all his charges and his mens. There was no house within the towne of Bruges, where in any gentleman of the cardinals were lodged, or had recourse, but the owners were commanded by the emperors officers, that they, vpon pain of their liues should take no monie for anything that the cardinals seruants did take of any kind of victuall, no although they were disposed to make anie costlie banquets: commanding furthermore their said hosts, to see that they lacked no such things as they honestly required for their honestie and pleasure. Also the emperors officers euery night went through the town from house to house, where as any English gentlemen did repast or lodged, and serued their liueries for all night, which was done in this maner. First, the officers brought into the house a cast of fine manchet, and of siluer two great pots with white wine, and sugar to the weight of a pound; white lightes and yellow lightes of wax; a boll of siluer with a goblet to drink in, and euery night a staffe torch. This was the order of the liueries euery night; and in the morning when the same officers came to fetch away their stuffe, then would they account with the hosts for the gentlemens costes spent in the day before.

Thus the emperor entertained the cardinall and all his traine for the time of his ambassage there. And that done, he returned into England with great triumph.

Now of his order in going to Westminster Hall dailie in the terme; first ere he came out of his priuy chamber, he harde seruice in his closet, and there saide his seruice with his Chaplaine; then going againe to his priuie Chamber, hee woulde demande, if his seruauntes were in a readines, and had furnished his Chamber of Presence, and wayting Chamber, beeing thereof then aduertised, came out of his Priuie Chamber about eyght of the clocke, apparelled all in redde, that is to saie, his vpper garment eyther of fyne Scarlet, or else fyne Crymsen Taffita, but most commonlie of fyne Crymsen Satten engrayned, his Pillion of fyne Scarlet, with a necke sette in the inner side with blacke Veluet, and a Tippet of Sables about his necke, holding in his hand an Orenge, whereof the substance within was taken out, and filled vppe againe with the parte of a Spoonge, wherein was Vineger and other confections against the Pestilent Ayres, the which hee moste commonlie

helde to his nose when he came among anie preſſe, or elſe that hee was perfumed with manie ſuters: and before him was borne firſt the Broade Seale of England, and his Cardinals Hatte, by a Lorde, or ſome Gentleman of worſhip, right ſolemnelie: and as ſoone as he was once entered into his chamber of Preſence, his two great Croſſes were there attending to bee borne before him: then cryed the Gentlemen Vshers, going before him bare headed, and ſaide: On before my Lords and maſters, on before, make waie for my lords grace. Thus went he downe through the hall with a Serieant at armes before him, bearing a greate Mace of ſiluer, and two gentlemen carrying two greate pillers of ſiluer, and when hee came at the Hall doore, there was his mule, being trapped all in crimſen veluet, with a ſaddle of the ſame, and gilt ſtirrops.

Then was there attending vpon him, when hee was mounted, his two Croſſe Bearers, and his Piller bearers in like caſe, vpon great horſes, trapped all in fine Scarlet. Then marched hee forwarde with a Traine of noble men and Gentlemen, hauing his footemen, foure in number about him, bearing each of them a gilt Polar in their hands: and thus paſſed hee forth, vntill he came to Weſtminſter Hall doore, and there lighted, and went vp after this maner into the Chauncerie, or into the Star Chamber: howbeit, moſt commonlie hee woulde go into the Chauncerie, and ſtay a while at a Barre made for him beneath the Chancerie on the right hand, & there commune ſomtime with the Iudges, and ſometime with other perſons: and that doone, hee woulde repaire into the Chauncerie, and ſitting there vntill eleuen of the clocke, hearing of ſuites, and determining of other matters, from thence hee woulde diuers times go into the Star Chamber as occaſion ſerued. There he neither ſpared high ne lowe, but iudged euerie ſtate according to his merits and deſert. Hee vſed alſo euerie Sundaie to reſorte to the Courte, then being for the moſte parte of all the yeere at Greenewich, with his former tryumphes, taking his Barge at his owne Stayres, furniſhed with yeomen, ſtanding vpon the Bayles, and his Gentlemen beeing within about him, and landed agayne at the three Cranes in the Vintrie: and from thence hee rode vpon his Mule, with his Croſſe, his Pillars, his Hatte and Broad ſeale caryed afore him on Horſe-backe through Thamis Streete, vntill he came to Billinſgate, and there tooke his Barge again, and ſo was rowed to Greenwich, where hee was receiued of the lords and chiefe officers of the kings houſe, as the Treaſurer, Controller, and other, and ſo conueyed into the kings chamber: then the Court was woonderfullie furniſhed with Noble men and gentlemen: and after dinner among the Lordes, hauing ſome conſultation with the King, or with the Counceil, hee woulde depart homewarde with the like triumph.

Thus in greate honour, tryumphe, and glorie, hee raygned a long ſeaſon ruling all thinges within the Realme appertayning vnto the King. His houſe was alwaies reſorted to with Noblemen and Gentlemen, feaſting and banqueting Ambaſſadours diuers times, and all other right noblie: and when it pleaſed the king for his recreation, to repaire to the Cardinals houſe, as he did diuers times in the yéere: there wanted no preparations, or furniture: Banquets were set forth with maskes and mummeries, in so gorgeous a sort, and costly maner, that it was an heauen to behold. There wanted no Dames or Damosels, méete or apte to daunce with the maskers, or to garnish the place for the time: then was there all kinde of musicke, and harmony, with fine voices both of men and children.

A maske and a banquet.

One time the king came sodainely thither in a maske with a dosen maskers all in garments like Shéepeheardes, made of fine cloth of Golde, and Crimosin Satten paned, and Cappes of the same, with Vysars of good bisnomie, their haires and beardes, either of fine golde-wire silke, or blacke silke, hauing fiuetéene torch-bearers, besides their drums, and other persons with visars, all clothed in Satten of the same colour: and before his entering into the Hall, he came by water to the water gate, without anie noise, where were laid diuers chambers and guns charged with shot, and at his landing they were shot off, which made such a rumble in the aire, that it was like thunder: It made all the Noblemen, Gentlemen, Ladies, and Gentlewomen, to muse what it should meane, comming so sodainly, they sitting quiet at a solemne banquet, vnder this sort: First yée shall vnderstande, that the Tables were set in the Chamber of Presence iust couered, and the Lorde Cardinall sitting vnder the cloth of Estate, there hauing all his seruice alone: and then was there set a Ladie with a Noble man, or a Gentleman and a Gentlewoman throughout all the Tables in the Chamber on the one side, which were made and ioyned as it were but one Table, all which order and deuice was done by the Lorde Sandes then Lorde Chamberlaine to the king, and by sir Henry Guilford Comptroller of the kings Maiesties house. Then immediatelie after the great Chamberlaine, and the saide Comptroller, sent to loke what it shoulde meane, (as though they knewe nothing of the matter,) they looking out of the windowes into the Thamis, returned againe and shewed him, that it seemed they were Noblemen and straungers, arriued at his bridge, comming as Ambassadors from some forreine Prince: with that quoth the Cardinall, I desire you, because you can speake French, to take the paines to go into the hall, there to receiue them according to their Estates, and to conduct them into this Chamber, where they shall sée vs, and all these Noble Personages, being merrie at our Banquet, desiring them to sit downe with vs, and to take part of our fare. Then went he incontinent downe into the Hall, whereas they receiued them with twentie newe Torches, and conueyed them vppe into the Chamber, with such a noyse of Drummes and Flutes, as seldome had béene hearde the like. At their entering into the Chamber two and two togither, they went directlie before the Cardinall where he sate, and saluted him reuerentlie, to whome the Lorde Chamberlaine for them saide: Sir, for as much as they be straungers, and can not speake English, they haue desired mee to declare vnto you, that they hauing vnderstanding of this your triumphant Banquet, where was assembled such a number of excellent Dames, they coulde doe no lesse vnder supporte of your Grace, but to repayre hither, to viewe

as well their incomparable beautie, as for to accompanie them at Pummechance, and then to daunce with them: and sir, they require of your Grace licence to accomplish the said cause of their comming. To whom the Cardinal said, he was very well content they should so doe.

Then went the Maskers, and first saluted all the Dames, and returned to the most worthiest, and there opened their great cuppe of golde filled with crownes, and other pieces of golde, to whom they set certaine pieces of gold to caste at.

Thus perusing all the Ladies and gentlewomen, to some they loste, and of some they won: and perusing after this maner all the ladies, they returned to the Cardinall with great reuerence, powring downe all their golde so left in their cup, which was aboue two hundred crownes: At all (quoth the Cardinall) and so cast the dice and wan them, whereat was made a great noise and toy. Then quoth the lord cardinal to the lord Chamberlaine, I pray you (quoth he) that you would shew them, that me séemeth there should be a Nobleman amongst them, who is more méete to occupie this seate and place then I am, to whome I would most gladly surrender the same according to my dutie, if I knewe him. Then spake the lorde Chamberlaine to them in French, and they rounding him in the eare, the lorde Chamberlaine said to my Lord Cardinall: Sir (quoth hee) they confesse that among them there is such a noble personage, whom if your grace can appoint him out from the rest, he is content to disclose himselfe, and to accept your place: with that the cardinall taking good aduisement among them, at the last quoth he, me séemes the gentleman with the blacke beard should be euen hee: and with that he arose out of his chaire, and offered the same to the gentleman in the blacke beard, with his cap in his hand. The person to whom he offered the chaire was sir Edward Neuill, a comely knight, that much more resembled the kings person in that maske than any other.

The king perceiuing the cardinall so deceiued, could not forbeare laughing, but pulled downe his visar and maister Neuils also, and dashed out such a pleasant countenance and chére, that all the noble estates there assembled perceiuing the king to be there among them, reioyced verie much. The cardinall excusses desired his Highnesse to take the place of Estate: to whom the king answered, that he would go first and shifte his apparell, and so departed into my lorde Cardinals chamber, and there newe apparelled him: in which time, the dishes of the banquet were cleane taken vppe, and the Tables spread againe with newe cleane perfumed clothes, euerie man and woman sitting still, vntill the king with all his maskers came among them againe all newe apparelled: then the king toke his seate vnder the cloth of Estate, commaunding euerie person to sit still as they did before: In came a newe banquet before the king, and to all the rest throughout all the Tables, wherein were serued two hundred diuers dishes, of costly deuises and subtilties. Thus passed they forth the night with banquetting, daunсing, and other triumphes, to the great comfort of the king, and pleasant regarde of the Nobilitie there assembled. Thus passed this Cardinall his time from daie to daie, dale, and yeare to yeare, in such great wealth, ioie, triumph, and glorie, hauing alwaies on his side the kings especiall fauour, vntill fortune enuied his prosperous estate, as is to the world well knowne, and shall be partly touched hereafter.

Ladie Marie king Henries daughter was borne at Greenewich on the 11. of Februarie. Lady Mary the kings daughter borne.

Margaret Queene of Scottes, king Henries eldest sister, who had after the death of her first husband (Iames king of Scots slaine at Bramstone) married Archibald Douglas earle of Anguise, fled into England, for feare of the duke of Albany, that had taken her two sons, she lay at Harbottle, where shee was deliuered of a childe called Margaret. But shortlie after Archibalde Douglas her husband went home againe into Scotlande without leaue taking: therefore the king sent for her to London, where she was royally receiued and lodged at Baynards Castle, and there shee tarried a whole yeare ere she returned. The Queene of Scots fled into England.

The king for the honor of his sister Margaret queene of Scots, on the 19. and 20. day of May, prepared and kept solemne Iusts, wherein the king himselfe, the duke of Suffolke, the Earle of Essex, and Nicholas Carew esquire, answered all commers.

This yeare the Cardinall caused all those to be called to accompts, that had dealt with the kings money, and had the occupying thereof in the wars, or otherwise. This audit troubled manie, for some were found in arerages, and some saued themselues by policie, & surely he so punished periurie with open infamie, causing the offenders to weare papers, and so forth, that in his time it was lesse vsed then in long time before: he punished also lords, knights, and men of all degrées, for riots, for bearing out wrongs, and for maintenance practised in their countries, whereby the poore men liued quietly, and no man durst vse bolstering, for feare of imprisonment. It was a strange matter to see, a man not trained vp in the lawes, to sit in the seate of iudgment, to pronounce the law, being aided at the first by such as according to the ancient custome did sit as associates with him: but he would not sticke to determine sundrie causes, neither rightly decided, nor iudged by order of law: and again such as were cleere cases he would some time prohibite the same to passe, call them into iudgement, frame an order in controuersies, and punish such as came with vntrue surmises, afore the iudges themselues, which had receiued such surmises, and not well considered of the controuersies of the parties: he ordained by the kings commission, diuers vnder courts, to heare complaints by bill of poore men, that they might the soner come by iustice: so that wise men haue reported, neuer to haue seene this realme in better obedience, and quiet, then it was in the time of his authoritie and rule, ne iustice better ministred, with indifferencie. Dealers with the kings money called to accompt. Periurie and other vices punished. Courts to heare complaints of the poore erected.

The duke of Norffolke departed home into his Countrie, and also the duke of Suffolke followed shortly, for he hauing spent liberally in his iourneies into France, as also in the solemnization of his mariage, and in house keeping sith he was married, borrowed great summes of money of the king, which he hoped hoped should haue béene forgiuen him: but the cardinall had called him as all other to account.

K. Henry procureth Martian to warre vpon the French.

In the moneth of October, Matthew bishop of Sion or Sitten, a cardinall of the Swisses, came into England from the emperor Maximilian: At the contemplation of which cardinall, the king lent to the emperor a great summe of money: but the greatest matter that moued the king to be so free to Maximilian, was because the same money should bee imploied on men of warre against the French king, toward whome of late the K. had conceiued a grudge. Herevpon was Richard Pace sent first into Germanie with a great sum of money to wage the Swissers, which vnder the conduct of the emperor Maximilian, inuaded the dutchie of Millaine, but without anie greate gayne returned from thence, leauing Millaine in the Frenchmens hands at that time. And now for a newe reliefe was this Cardinall sent from Millaine, at whose instance mony was assigned to be deliuered, and certaine Genowaies vndertoke the exchange, which made not paiment at the day, although they had receiued it of the king.

A greate drouth in winter, and a great frost.

This yére was a great drouth, for there fell no rain to be accounted of, from the beginning of September, till the moneth of May in the nert yére, wherethrough in some places, men were faine to driue their Cattell 3. or 4. mile to water.

Also for a time the Thamis was frozen, that men with horse and carts might passe betwixt Westminster and Lambeth.

The number of strangers in London millited.

About this season, there grew a great hart-burning, and malicious grudge amongst the Englishmen of the city of London against strangers, and namelie the artificers founde themselues sore grœued, for that such numbers of strangers were permitted to resort hither with their Wares, and to exercise handie craftes, to the great hinderance and impouerishing of the kings liege people: and this malice grew to such a point, that one Iohn Lincolne a Broker, busied himselfe so farre in the matter, that about Palme Sundaie or the fift of Aprill, this eight yœre of the kings raigne, he came to one doctor Henrie Standish, with these words: Sir I vnderstande that you shall preach at the Spittle on mundaie in Easter wœke, and so it is, that Englishmen, both merchants and other are vndone, by strangers, who haue more liberty in this land than they, which is against all reason, and also against the common Weale of this Realme: I beseech you therefore to declare this in your Sermon, and in so doing, yee shall deserue greate thankes of my Lorde Maior, and of all his Brethren, and herewith hee offered vnto the sayde Doctor a Bill, conteining the matter more at large: but Doctor Standish (wiselie considering that there might more inconuenience rise thereof, than hee woulde wishe, if hee shoulde deale in such a sorte) both refused the Bill, and told Lincolne plainelie, that he ment not to meddle with anie such matter in his sermon. Whereupon the saide Lincolne went vnto one doctor Bell, a Chanon of the foresaide Spittle, that was appointed likewise to preach vpon Tuesdaie in Easter wœke, at the same Spittle, whom he perswaded to reade his sayde bill in the pulpet, which bill in effect contayned the grœfes that manie founde with straungers for taking the liuings awaie from artificers, and the entercourse from merchants, the redzesse whereof must come from the commons knit in one: for as the hurt touched all men, so must all set to their helping hands: which letter he read, or the chiefest part thereof, comprehending much seditious matter, and then he began with this sentence, Cœlum, cœli Domino, terram autem dedit filijs hominum, and vpon this text he entreated, how this land was giuen to Englishmen, and as birds defend their nestes, so ought Englishmen to cherish and maintaine themselues, & to hurt and grieue aliens for respect of their common-wealth: and vpon this text, Pugna pro patria, he brought in how by Gods law it was lawfull to fight for their countrey: and thus he subtilly moued the people to rebell against strangers: by this sermon manie a light person toke courage, and openlie spoke against strangers. And as vnhappe would, there had béene diuers euill parts plaide of late by strangers, in and about the citie of London, which kindeled the peoples rancor the more furiously against them.

The 28. date of Aprill, diuers yong men of the Citie picked quarrels to certaine strangers, as they passed by the streetes, some they did strike, and buffeted, and some they threwe into the channell: wherefore the Maior sent some of the Englishmen to prison, as Stephen Studley skinner, Stephenson, Bets and other. Then sodainelie rose a secret rumour, and no man coulde tell howe it beganne, that on Maie date next, the Citie woulde slaie all the aliens, insomuch, that diuers strangers fledde out of the citie. This rumour came to the knowledge of the kings Counsell, whereupon the Lorde Cardinall sent for the Maior and other of the counsell of the Citie, giuing them to vnderstande what he had heards. The Maior, as one ignorant of the matter, tolde the Cardinall that he doubted not but so to gouerne the Citie, as peace should be obserued. The Cardinall willed him so to do, and to take good héede that if anie riotous attempt were intended, he should with good policie preuent it. The Maior comming from the Cardinals house about foure of the clocke in the afternoone on Maie éeue, sent for his brethren to the Guildhall, yet was it almost seauen of the clocke ere the assemblie was set. Vpon conference had of the matter, some thought it necessarie that a substantiall watch should be set of honest Citizens, which might withstand the euill doers, if they went about anie misrule: other were of contrarie opinion, but rather thought it best, that commaundement shoulde bee giuen to euerie man to shut in his doores, and to kéepe his seruants within. Before eight of the clocke the Recorder was sent to the Cardinall, with these opinions, who hearing the same, allowed the latter. And when the Recorder and Sir Thomas More, late vndersheriffe of London, and nowe of the kings counsell came to the Guild-hall, halfe an houre before nine of the clocke, and there shewed the pleasure of the Kings Counsell: whereupon euerie Alderman sent to his warde, that no man should stir after nine of the clocke out of his house, but to kéepe his doores shut, and his seruants within till nine of the clocke in the morning. After this commaundement giuen, in the éuening, as sir Iohn Mundie Alderman came from his warde, and founde tiue yong men in cheape playing at the bucklers, and a great many of yong men loking on them (for the cõmandement was scarce published) he commanded them to leaue off, & for that one of thẽ asked him why, he would haue sent him to the counter: but the prentises resisted the alderman, taking the yong man from him, and cried prentises & clubs, then out at euery doore came clubs and other weapons, so that the alderman was faine to flie. Then more people arose out of euery quarter, and forth came seruingmen, watermen, courtiers and other, so that by 11. of the clocke there were in cheape, 6. or 700. and out of Paules churchyard came about 300. so out of all places they gathered, & brake vp the counter, toke out the prisoners that had bẽn thither committed by the Maior, for hurting of strangers. Also they went to Newgate, and toke out Studley and Petis, committed thither for the like cause: the Maior and Sheriffes were present, and made Proclamation in the kings name, but nothing was obeyed. Herewith being gathered in plumps, they ran through S. Nicholas Shambles, and at Saint Martins gate, there met with them sir Thomas More, and other, desiring them to go to their lodgings: and as they were thus entreating, & had almost perswaded the people to depart, they within S. Martins threw out stones and bats, so that they hurt diuers honest persons, that were with sir Thomas More, perswading the rebellious persons to cease: insomuch as at length, one Nicholas Dennis a Serieant at armes, being there sore hurt, in a furie cried downe with them, and then all the misruled persons ran to the doores and windowes of the houses within Saint Martins, and spoiled all that they found. After that they ranne into Corne-hill, and so forth to an house east from Leaden Hall, called the Grẽne gate, where dwelt one Mewtas a Picard or Frenchman, within whose house dwelled diuers Frenchmen, whom they likewise spoyled, and if they had founde Mewtas they would haue stricken off his head: some ran to Blanchapleton, and there brake vp the strangers houses and spoyled them: they continued thus till three of the clocke in the morning, at what time they began to withdraw: but by the way they were taken by the Maior and other, and sent to the Tower, Newgate, and Counters, to the number of 300. The Cardinall was aduertised by S. Tho. Parre, whom in all haste he sent to Richmond to informe the king, who incontinently sent to vnderstand the state of the city, and was truely informed. Sir Richard Cholmeley lieutenant of the tower during the time of this busines, shot off certaine pieces of ordinance against the citie, but did no great hurt. About fiue of the clocke in the morning, the Earles of Shrewsbury, and Surrey, T. Dokwrey L. Prior of S. Johns, George Neuill L. Burgaueny, and other came to London, with such powers as they could make, so did the Innes of Court: but before they came the busines was done as ye haue heard. Then were the prisoners examined, and the sermon of Doctor Bell called to remembrance, and he sent to the Tower. A commission of Oyre and determiner directed to the duke of Norffolke, and other lords, for punishment of this insurrection. The 2. of May the commissioners with the L. Maior, Aldermen, and Iustices went to the Guild-hall, where many of the offenders were indicted, whereupon they were arraigned, and pleaded not giltie, had day giuen till the fourth fourth of May: on the which daie the L. Maior, the duke of Norfolke, the earle of Surrey, and other came to sit in the Guild-hall. The Duke of Norfolke entered the Citie with 1300. men: the prisoners were brought through the streetes tied in ropes, some men, some lads, but 13. or 14. yeares olde, to the number of 278. persons: that daie Iohn Lincolne and diuers other were indicted. The next day 13. were adiudged to be hanged, drawne and quartered, for execution whereof, were set vp 10. paire of gallowes in diuers places of the citie, as at Aldgate, Blanchapleton, Grace-streete, Leaden-hall, before either counters, at Newgate, S. Martins, at Aldersgate, & at Wilhops gate, these gallowes were set on wheeles to be remoued from streete to streete, and from doore to doore, whereunto the prisoners were brought, and there executed. On the 7. of Maie was Lincolne, Shirwin, and two brethren called Bets, and diuers other adiudged to die. They were on herdels drawne to the standart in Cheape, and first was Lincolne executed, and as the other had the rope about their neckes, there came a commandement from the king to respite the execution, and then were the prisoners sent againe to prison, and the armed men sent out of London. For it is to be noted that three Quenes, to witte, Katherine Quene of Englande, and by her meanes Marie the French Quene, and Margaret Quene of Scottes, the Kings sisters, (then resident in Englande) long time on their knees before the king had begged their pardon, which by perswasion of the Cardinall Wolsey (without whose counsell hee woulde doe nothing) the king graunted vnto them.

Three queenes obtained pardon for the Londoners.

On the thirteenth of Maie, the king came to Westminster hall, and with him the Lorde Cardinall, the Dukes of Norfolke and Suffolke, the earles of Shrewsbury, Esser, Wiltshire, and Surrey, with many lordes, and other of the kings counsell, the Maior of London, Aldermen and other chiefe Citizens, were there in their best liueries by nine of the clocke in the morning: Then came in the prisoners, bound in ropes in a ranke one after another in their shirtes, and euerie one had a halter about his necke, being in number 400. men and 11. women. When they were thus come before the kings presence: the Cardinall laid sore to the Maior and Aldermen their negligence, and to the prisoners he declared how iustly they had deserued death. Then all the prisoners togither cried to the king for mercie, and therewith the Lords besought his grace of pardon, at whose request the king pardoned them all. The generall pardon being pronounced, all the prisoners throwted at once, and cast their halters towards the roofe of the hall. The prisoners dismissed, the gallowles were taken downe, and the Citizens toke more heede to their seruants.

The 18. of Maie, Margaret Quene of Scots departed from London towards Scotland, richly appointed and prepared of all things necessary for her estate through the kings great liberality. She entred into Scotland the 13. of June and was receiued at Berwike, by Archibald Dowglas earle of Angoise her husband. Sweating ſickneſs.

About the feaſt of Lammas began the ſweating ſickneſs, of the which many men died ſodainly in the beginning thereof, and this plague continued till Michaelmas, many died thereof in the court, as the lord Clinton, the lord Grey of Wilton, and many other knights and gentlemen, by reaſon of which contagious ſickneſs, Michaelmas terme was adiorned. After this, to wit, in the winter was a greate death of peſtilence, almoſt ouer all Englande in euerie towne more or leſſe, wherefore the K. kept himſelfe with ſmall companie about him, willing to haue no reſort to the court for feare of infection.

Cardinall Campeius came into England.

In the moneth of July Laurence Campeius born in Bologne la grace, commonly called cardinal Campeius legate de latere, from pope Leo the 10. to require and exhort king H. to make war on the Turke.

Cardinall Wolſey made legate

At the requeſt of the K. of England, and alſo of the French K. (which ſought now to be receiued into friendſhip with the K. of England) pope Leo conſtituted cardinal Wolſey his legate in England, ioining him in commiſſion with the foreſaid cardinal Campeius,

There was at the ſame time other legates ſent into other parts of chriſtendome, about the ſame matter, as into France, Spain, and Germany: but cardinal Campeius bearing that their ſuit took no place in other parts, left off his ſuite about it, and returned to Rome.

After long ſuit made of the French king and his counſel, it was agreed, that the citie of Tourney ſhould be deliuered to the French K. he paying 600000. crownes for the citie, to be paid in 12. yeares, 400000. crowns for the caſtle, the which the K. had builded, (which was not fully performed:) and alſo he ſhould pay 23. thouſand pound Turnois, the which ſometime the citizens of Tourney ought to the king of Englande, for their liberties and franchiſes. More the French king ſhoulde pate to the Cardinall of England 1000. marke of yeerelie penſion, in recompence of his Biſhoprieke of Tourney. It was further agreede, that the yoong Dolphine ſonne and heire to the French king, ſhoulde marrie with the Ladie Marie king Henries Daughter of Englande, if they both ſo liked each other when they came to age. And then Charles Bewforde earle of Worceſter, Lord Chamberlaine of England, with the biſhop of Ely and other, were ſent into France, to make deliuery of the ſaid City of Tourney, which was done on the 10. of Februarie. The captaine ſir Richard Iernyngham was diſcharged, and the French men ſuffered to enter, the Engliſhmen returned into England ſore diſpleaſed, for thereby many a tall yeoman lacked liuing, the which woulde not labour after their returne but fell to robbing, and lewd life.

The 8. of March ſolemne iuſtes were holden, the king himſelfe and 8. yong gentlemen, taking vpon them to anſwere the D. of Suffolk and 8. other commers with him.

This

This yeere K. Henry held his feast of S. George at Windsor, with as great solemnitie as it had beene the feast of a coronation, where were present all the knights of the order then within the realme. An. reg. 11.

Shortly after certaine gentlemen of the priuy chamber, which through the kings lenity in bearing with their lewdnes, forgetting themselues, and their duty towards his grace, in being too familiar with him, not hauing due respect to his estate and degree, were remoued, by order taken by the Councell, vnto whome the K. had giuen authoritie to vse their discretions in that behalfe, and then were foure sad and ancient knightes put into the kinges priuy chamber, whose names were, sir Richard Wingfield, sir Richard Iernyngham, sir Richarde Weston, and sir Wil. Kingstone, and besides these diuers officers were changed in other places. Zuinglius flor. Theod. Beza born this yeare at Vezelay in Burgundy

The French K. desirous to continue the friendship latelie begunne betwirt him & the K. of England, made meanes to the cardinal, that they might in som conuenient place come to an enterview together, that he might haue farther knowledge of king Henry, and K. Henry likewise of him. The cardinall therefore breaking with the king of this matter, declaring how honorable, necessarie, and conuenient it should be for him to gratifie his friend herein. And thus the K. conceiued an earnest desire to see the French K. and thereupon appointed to go ouer to Caleis, and so into the Marches of Guisnes, to meete with the French king. Then were sent vnto Guisnes, syr Nich. Vaux, Sir Edm. Belknape, syr Wil. Sands knights of the garter, commissioners to ouersee the making of a palace before the castle gate of Guisnes: these landed at Caleis on the 16. of March. There were also sent, the kinges master mason, master carpenter, 300. masons, 500. carpenters, 100. ioiners, besides many painters, glasiers, taylors, smithes, and other artificers, both out of England, and prouided in Flanders, in all to the number of more than 2000. Ferdinand Magellan the famous Portingall sailor flor. he was seruant to Ch. V. he left y^e K. of Portugal abt half a crown a day in his wages 1520

The said palace was begun on the 19. of March, for the which palace the timber was before bought in Holland, and was so long, for the most part, that the same was faine to be bound together and drawne after ships to Caleis, for no ship might receiue it. The other timber and worde was conueied out of England. This palace was framed in diuers places, all the roses whereof was couered within with canuas curiously painted and also the wals from the second plat downward: it was also glased with the best and cleerest glasse that could be gotten, from the ouer plat vnto the second plat of the stone worke, and round about were houses of office, as pantry, buttry, sellar, and other. And thus was there builded the goodliest Palace of timber, that euer was wrought in these westerly parts of the world. The palace builded before Guisnes castle.

Then was prouision made in England and in Flanders for victuall, wine, and all other things necessary for the furniture of feasts and banqueting.

Herewith were letters written to all such lords, ladies, gentlemen and gentlewomen, which should giue their attendance on the K. and Quene, which incontinently put themselues in a readines, after the most sumptuous sort. Also it was appointed that the king of England and the French king, in a campe betweene Arde and Guisnes, with 18. aydes, should in the moneth of June nert ensuing abide all commers, being gentlemen, at the tilt, at the tourney, and at barriers. Then came into England Orliance K. of armes in France, and made proclamation at the court, that the king of England and the French K. in campe betweene Arde and Guisnes with 18. aydes, in June nert insuing, should abide all commers, being gentlemen, at the tilt & tourney, and at barriers. And the like proclamation was made in the court of France, by Clarencius king of armes of England: also in the court of Burgoign, in Almain, and Italy. For the furnishing of those iusts there was deuised a tilt, and all things necessarie for that enterprise, in a goodly plaine betweene Guisnes and Arde. About the which was cast a great dike or trench, and a costly house or gallery for the kings and quéenes, lords and ladies for to stand in and beholde the iusts and other things there done.

King Henry with his traine remoued on the 21. of May, from his manor of Greenewich towardes the Sea, first to Dteforde, then to Leedes, then to Charing, and so on the 25. came to Canterbury intending there to keepe his Whitsontide.

On the nert morrow, the emperor Charles the fift returning out of Spaine, arriued with his naule of ships at Hithe in Kent, where he was saluted by the Vice-admirall of England, sir W. Fitz William, with fiue of the kings great ships, which lay for the safegard of passengers betwixt Calets and Douer, toward euening the Emperor entred his boat, and comming toward land was met and receiued of the lord Cardinall. Thus landed Charles the Emperor at Douer, vnder his cloth of estate of the blacke Eagle all fret on rich cloth of gold, in whose company was the queene of Aragon, with diuers noble estates, and faire ladies of his countrey and blond, which were receiued at the sea side, by the lord Legate Cardinall and other lords and gentlemen. The Emperor so accompanied at ten of the clocke at night by torch light, was brought to the castle of Douer, where he rested, and there sir Edward Poynings warden of the fiue ports, brought to the Emperor the keies of the Castle, who refused them, saying, he knew well that he was out of all danger, and as safe, as if he were at home in his owne realme. The same night about two of the clocke after midnight, the king came to Douer by torch light, and as soone as the emperor heard of his comming, he arose, and mette with the king at the staire head, where either embraced other in armes, and there they talked together a long time, and alway the king had the Emperor on his right hand, on the morrow which was Whitsondaie, the king and the Emperor with all the other estates rode vnto Canterbury, the swoorde borne by the earle of Darby, ryding betweene them both, by the kings commandement, and so these princes rode to Canterbury, and to Christs Church, where they were receiued with generall procession, by the Lords Cardinall and other. The K. and the Emperor went both vnder one canapie vnto Thom. Beckets shrine, where they made their praiers and oblations, and then went to the archbishoppes palace, where the Queene of England the emperors Aunt, met him going into the great chamber, of whom he was ioyfully receiued and welcomed. On the tenth of July, the K. with a goodly companie rode to the towne of Gaueling in Flaunders, and there met with Charles the Emperor, and on the next morow, the Emperor, and the lady Margaret, the emperors Aunt Dutchesse of Sauoy, with many other great estates, came with the K. of England to the towne of Caleis, whereby all the lords and states of England were displaced of their lodgings: and for solace against their comming, was builded a Banqueting house 800. foote compasse, like a Theatre, after a goodly deuise, builded in such maner, as I thinke was neuer seene, with sixteene principals made of great masts, betwixt euery mast foure and twenty foote, and all the out sides closed with bord and canuas, within the which, and round about were raised scaffolds of three stages high, for men and women to stand vpon: and in the midst of the same banqueting house was set vp a great pillar of timber made of 8. great masts, bound together with yron bandes for to holde them togither, for it was 134. foote of length, and cost 6. l. 13. s. and 4. d. to set it vpright. The banquetting house was couered ouer with canuas, fastened with ropes & yron as fast as might be deuised. And within the said house was painted the Heauens, with stars, sunne, mone, and cloudes, with diuers other things made aboue ouer mens heads: and there were great Images of wickars couered with canuas painted, representing men of diuers strange nations, and diuers reasons were written by them of the countries that they were likened to be of, and the armes of those countries hanging by them. Also there was made as it were mante ships vnder saile, and windmils on the hils winding: especially there was on the one side set out all the armes of the kings of England, with the kings petigree: and on the other side, the Emperors armes and descent, and about the high pillar of timber in the midst was framed diuers stages, for organs and other instruments of musicke to be placed, with men, and children, as well to play on them, as for to set forth their musicall voices, & to haue made as it were, an heauenly noise. But when the Emperor, the K. of England, & the other states should haue sit downe to their banquet, this house, and all things els in great abundance being prepared for furnishing thereof, it fortuned, that in the morning of the same day, the winde began to rise, and increasing till the euening, it then on a sodaine blew off all the canuas heauen with planets, &c. and blew out more than 1000. torches and other lights of waxe prepared to haue giuen light to the banquet. The seates which were with great riches prepared for the emperor and the king were dashed and lost. The same night the K. of England with 15. persons more richly apparelled in a maske, went to the Emperors lodging, and in the chamber of presence danced and reueled, and then he departed.

Grauelin

The twelfth of July, the Emperor, and the lady Margaret supped with the king and quéene of England, at the Exchequer, where the same night were 8. companies of maskers, and in euery company were 12. persons, all in gold, siluer and veluet richly apparelled. The emperor & king in this meane time, besides their passtimes, caused the charters before time concluded to be read, all the articles of the league tripartite, agréed betwixt the Emperor and the king of England, and the French K. were at full declared, to the which the French king had condescended: and for the more exemplifying of the same, hee sent monſieur de Roch with letters of credence, to ſignify to the emperor, that in the word of a prince he would obſerue and kéepe all the ſame articles, for him, his realme, and ſubiects.

The 8. of July the emperor Charles and the ladie Margaret, departed out of Calcis. The king gaue to the Emperor a Baie Courſer, trapped with goldſmithes worke, ſet with ſtones and pearle, in which place the Emperor alighted from his horſe, and mounted vpon the ſaid courſer, wherein he toke great delight, and toke him vp with the ſpurres luſtilie, and ſo departed louingly from Calcis, and rode to Graueling. The king remayned at Calcis ſome few dayes, and then tooke Shipping with the Quéene and Nobilitie, and had faire winde to Douer, where hee arriued the ſame night with all his companie in ſafetie.

1521 This yere K. H. kept his Chriſtmas at his manor of Grénwich, with great roialty and open court, & on the 10. of Februarie in his own perſon iuſted with all commers.

Order taken againſt inclolers. About this time the king being moued by ſuch of his counſell as had regard to the common wealth of this Realme, conſidering howe for the ſpace of fiftie yéeres paſt and more, the nobles and gentlemen of England, beeing giuen to graſing of cattell, and kéeping of ſheepe, to the great decaie of husbandrie and tillage, furniſhing the ground with beaſts, ſheep and déer, ſo incloſing the fields with hedges, pales, and ditches, as might ſtand moſt to their own priuat commoditie: Wherefore the king cauſing ſuch good ſtatutes as had béene deuiſed and eſtabliſhed for reformation in this behalfe, to be reuiued and called vpon, and alſo directing forth his commiſſion vnto Iuſtices of peace, and other ſuch magiſtrates, that preſentment ſhould be made of all ſuch incloſures, and decay of husbandry as had chanced within the ſpace of 50. yéeres before that preſent time. The Iuſtices and other magiſtrates, according to their commiſſion executed their authoritie: and ſo commandement was giuen, that the decaied houſes ſhould be built againe, that the husbandmen ſhould be placed eſtſoones in the ſame, and that incloſed grounds ſhould be laide open, & ſore punihment appointed againſt them that diſobeied.

The 4. meeting at Worms

D. of Buckingham accuſed and arreſted. In this meane time Edwarde Duke of Buckingham was accuſed of high treaſon, wherefore the king directed his letters to the ſaid duke, beeing at his manor of Thornebury in Glocéſterſhire, that incontinently he ſhoulde come to his preſence, which commandement the duke obeied, and came to London, where he was ſtraight waies arreſted by ſir Henry Marney captain of the gard, and conueied to the tower of London on the 16. of Aprill: before which time ſir Gilbert Parke the dukes Chancellor was taken, which had confeſſed matter of high treaſon concerning the kings perſon. There was alſo attached one Nic. Hopkins a monk of the order of Carthuſians, being of Henton priorie in Sommerſetſhire, & I. de la Court the dukes confeſſor, and other, theſe were priſoners in the Tower.

Ann. reg. 13. After the apprehenſion of the D. inquiſitions were taken in diuers ſhires of him, ſo that by the knights and gentlemen he was indicted of high treaſon for certaine words ſpoken by the ſaide duke at Wechingly in Surrey, to George Neuill

Neuill L. Burgauenny, and therewith was the same lord attached for concealement, and so likewise was the L. Montague, and both conueied to the Tower: and sir Edward Neuill brother to the saide L. of Burgauenny was forbidden the kings presence, Moreouer, in the Guild hall of London, before syr Iohn Bruge knight then Maior of the same Citie, by an inquest, the saide duke was indicted of diuers points of high treason, as by the same inditement (which I haue seen and read) it appeareth, inferring, that the saide duke intending to exalt himselfe, and to vsurpe the Crowne, the roiall power, and dignitie of the realme of England, and to depriue the king therof, that hee the saide duke might take vpon him the same against his allegeance, had the tenth day of March, in the second yeer of the kings raigne, and at diuers times before, and after, imagined and compassed the kings death and destruction at London, and at Thornebury in the countie of Gloucester: and for the accomplishment of the wicked intent and purpose, the 24. of Aprill, in the 4. yeere of the kings raigne, he sent one of his chaplaines called Iohn de la Court vnto the priory of Henton in Sommersetshire, which was an house of Carthusian monkes, there to vnderstande of one Nich. Hopkins, a monke of the same house (who was vainelie reputed by way of reuelation to haue foreknowledge of things to come) what should happen concerning this matter, which he had imagined: which monke, causing the sayd de la Court first to sweare vnto him, not to disclose his words to any maner of person, but only to the duke his master, therwith declared that his M. the saide duke shoulde haue all, willing him for the accomplishment of his purpose to seeke to win the fauor of the people. De la Court came backe with this answere, and told it to the duke at Thornebury the morrowe after, being 25. of Aprill. And on the 22. of July the same fourth yeere, the duke sent the same de la Court with letters vnto the sayde Monke, to vnderstand of him further of such matters, and the Monke tolde to him againe for answeare, that the duke shoulde haue all: and being asked as wel now as before at the first time, how he knewe this to be true, he said, by the grace of God, and with this answeare de la Court now also returning declared the same vnto the M on the 24. of July at Thornbury aforesaid. Moreouer, the said duke sent the same de la Court againe vnto the saide monke with his letters the 26. of Aprill, in the 5. yeere of the kinges raigne, when the king was to take his iourney into France, requiring to vnderstand what should become of these warres, and whether the Scottish king should in the kings absence inuade this realme or not. The monke among other things, for answere of these letters, sent the duke word that the king should haue no issue male. Again the said duke the 20. day of Feb. in the 6. yeer of the kings raigne, being at Thornebury, spake these wordes vnto Ralph Earle of Westmerland: Well, there are two dukes created in Englande, but if ought but good come to the king, the duke of Buckingham shoulde be next in blood to succeede to the Crowne. After this the said duke on the 16. daie of Aprill, in the said first yeere of the kings raigne, went in person vnto the Priory of Henton, and there hadde conference with the foresayde Monke Nicholas Hopkins, who told him, that he should be king: whereunto the duke said, that if it chanced, hee would shew himselfe a iust and right wise prince. The monke also tolde the Duke, that he knew this by relation, and willed him in anie wise to procure the loue of the Commons, the better to attayne his purposed intention. The Duke the same time gaue, and promised to giue yéerelie vnto the sayde Priorie fiue pounde, therewith to buy a tunne of wyne: and further promised to giue vnto the saide priorie in readie money twentie pounds, whereof tenne pounds he gaue in hand, towards the conueying of water vnto the house by a conduit. And to the saide monke Nicholas Hopkins, he gaue at that present in rewarde three pounde, and at one other time fortie shillinges, and at another time a marke, and at another time six shillings and eight pence. After this, on the twentieth daie of March, in the tenth yeere of the kings raign, he came to the same priorie, and eftsones had conference with the said monke, to be more fullie informed by him in the matters aboue specified, at what time the monk also told him, that he should be king, and the Duke in talke tolde the monke, that he had done verie well to binde his chaplaine Iohn de la Court, vnder the seale of confession, to keepe secret such matters, for if the king should come to the knowledge thereof, it would be his destruction. Likewise, the twentieth daie of October, in the seauenth yeere of the kinges raygne, and at diuers other times, as well before as after, the saide Duke hadde sent his Chancellor Robert Gilbert, chaplaine vnto London, there to buie certayn clothes of gold, siluer, and velucts, euery time so much as amounted to the value of three hundred pound, to the intent, that the saide duke might bestow the same, as well vpon knightes, esquires, and gentlemen of the kinges house, and yeomen of his gard, as vpon other the kings subiectes, to win their fauors and friendships to assist him in his euill purpose: which clothes the saide Gilbert did buie, and brought the same to the said duke, who the 20. day of Ianuary, in the saide seauenth yéere, and diuers other daies and yéres before and after, did distribute, and giue the same to certain of the kings subiects, for the purpose before recited. Furthermore, the saide Duke the tenth of Iulie, in the tenth yéere of the kinges raygne, and diuers other daies and times, as well before as after, did constitute more seuerall and particular offices in his castles, honors, lordships and landes than he was accustomed to haue, to the end they might be assistant to him vnder colour of offices, to bring his euill purpose to passe. Moreouer, the same duke sent to the king the tenth daie of May, in the ninth yéere of his raigne, for licence to retaine any of the kinges subiectes, whom it should please him, dwelling within the shires of Hereford, Glouceſter, and Somersetshire: and also, that hee might at his pleasure conueie diuers armours, and habilliments for warre into Wales, to the intent to vse the same against the king, for the accomplishment of his naughtie purpose, which was to destroie the king, and to vsurpe the Royall gouernement and power to himselfe: which suite for licence to haue Retayners, and to conueie such armours and habilliments of Warre, the sayde Gilbert the twentieth daie of Maie, in the sayde ninth yeare, and diuers other dayes before and after at London, and East Greenewich did follow, laboring earnestlie, both to the king and councell, for obtaining of the same. And the twentieth day of July, in the said ninth yéere,

the saide Duke sent the sayde Gilbert vnto Henton aforesayde, to vnderstand of the aforesayde Monke Nicholas Hopkins what hee hearde of him: and the Monke sent him worde, that before Christmas next there shoulde be a change, and that the Duke shoulde haue the rule and gouernement of all Englande. And moreouer, the twentieth daie of Februarie, in the eleuenth yeere of the kinges raygne, at Blechinglie in Surrey, the sayde duke sayd vnto the sayd Robert Gilbert his Chancellor, that hee did expect and tarrie for a time more conuenient to atchieue his purpose, and that it might easlie bee doone, if the nobles of the realme would declare their mindes together: but some of them mistrusted and feared to shewe their mindes together, and that marred all. He said further the same time vnto the saide Robert Gilbert, that what soeuer was doone by the kings father, was doone by wrong: and still the duke murmured against all that the king then presentlie raygning did. And further he sayde, that hee knewe himselfe to bee so wicked a sinner, that hee wanted Gods fauour, and therefore hee knewe, that what soeuer hee tooke in hand against the king, had the worse successe. And furthermore, the sayde duke (to alienate the kinges subiectes mindes from duetifull obedience, towardes him and his heires, the twentieth daie of September, in the first yeere of his raigne) being then at London, reported to Robert Gilbert, that he hadde a certayne writing, sealed with the kings great seale, comprehending a certain act of parliament, in the which it was enacted, that the duke of Somerset, one of the kings progenitors was made legitimate. And further, that the saide duke meant to haue deliuered the same writing vnto king Henry the 7. but (said he) I would not that I had so doone for tenne thousande pounds. And furthermore, the same duke the fourth daie of Nouember, in the eleuenth yeere of the kinges raigne, at East Greenewich in the Countie of Kent, sayde vnto one Charles Kneuet esquire, after that the king had reproued the duke for retaining William Bulmer knight into his seruice, that if he had perceiued that he should haue béene committed to the tower, as he doubted he should haue béene, hee would haue so wrought, that the principall doers therein shoulde not haue had cause of great reioycing, for he would haue played the part, which his father intended to haue put in practise against K. Richard the 3. at Salisburie, who made earnest suite to haue come to the presence of the same king Richard, which suite if he might haue obtained, he hauing a knife secretlie about him, would haue thrust it into the body of king Ric. as he had made semblance to kneele downe before him: and in speaking these words, he maliciously laid his hand vpon his dagger, and said, that if hee were so euill vsed, he would do his best to accomplish his pretended purpose, swearing to confirm his word, by the blood of our Lord.

And beside all this the same D. the 10. of May, in the 12. yéer of the K. raign at London, in a place called the Rose, within the parish of S. Laurence Poulney in Candlewikestréet ward, demanded of the said Charles Kneuet esquire what was the talke amongst the Londoners, concerning the kinges iourneie beyond the seas: and the saide Charles tolde him, that many stode in doubt of the iourney, least the Frenchmen meant some deceit towards the king: whereunto

the D. answered, it was to be feared least it would come to passe, according to the words of an holie monke, for there is (saieth hee) a certaine Charterhouse monke, that diuers times hath sent to mee, willing me to sende vnto him my chancellor, and I did send vnto him Iohn de la Court my chaplain, vnto whom he would not declare any thing, till de la Court had sworne vnto him to kepe all things secret, and to tell to no creature liuing what he should heare of him, except it were to mee, and the said monke tolde to de la Court, that neither the king nor his heires should prosper, and that I should indeuor my selfe to purchase the good wils of the communalty of England, for I (the same duke) and my blod should prosper and haue the rule of the realme of England. Then said Charles Kneuet, the monke may be deceiued through illusion of the deuill, and that it was euill to meddle with such matters. Well said the D. it cannot hurt me, and so the D. seemed to reioice in the monks words. And further, the same time the D. told the said Charles, that if the king had miscaried now in his last sickenes, he would haue chopped off the heads of the cardinall, of sir Tho. Louell knight, and of others: and also said, that he had rather die for it, than to be so vsed as he had beene. Moreouer, the 10. day of September in the saide 11. yeere of this K. raign, at Blechingly in the county of Surrey, walking in the gallery there with George Neuill knight, lord of Burgaueny, the D. murmuring against the kings counsellors, and their gouernment, said vnto the saide George, that if the K. died, he would haue the rule of the realme in spite of whosoeuer said the contrary, & withall said, that if the said L. of Burgaueny would say, that the D. had spoken such words he would fight with him, & lay his sword vpon his pate, and this he bound with many great oths. These were the points and articles comprised in the indictment, and laid to his charge, whereof he was by the inquest found guilty.

D. of Buckingham arraigned.

On the 13. of May, the said D. was brought from the tower by water vnto Westminster hall, before the D. of Northfolke high steward of England, to accomplish the high of appeale of the peere or peers of the realm, and to discern and iudge the cause of the peeres. There were also appointed to sit as peers and iudges vpon the D. of Buckingham, the duke of Suffolke, the marques Dorset, the earles of Worcester, Deuonshire, Eller, Shrewsbury, Kent, Orford, & Darby, the lords of S. Iohns, de la Ware, Fitz. Waren, Willoughby, Brooke, Cobham, Herbert and Morley. There was made within the Hall at Westminster a scaffold for these lords, and a presence for the Iudge, railed, and counterrailed about, and barred with degrees. When the lords had taken their place, the D. was brought to the bar, and vpon his arraignment pleaded not guilty, and put himselfe vpon his peeres. Then was the indictment read, which the D. denied to be true, and (as he was an eloquent man) alledged reasons to falsifie the indictment, verie pithilie. The kings attorney against the dukes reasons, alledged the examinations, confessions, and proofes of witnesses. The duke desired the witnesses might be brought forth: and then came before him Charles Kneuet, sir Gilbert Perk his chancellor, Iohn de la Court his confessor, and Nicholas Hopkins the monke of Henton that had fed his humour with vaine speeches: diuers presumptions & accusations were laid to him by Charles Kneuet, which he

he would haue couered. But the depositions being read, and the deponents deliuered prisoners to the officers of the tower, finally, he was found guiltie by his peeres, and hauing iudgment to suffer as in case of treason is vsed, was led again to his barge, and so conueied by water to the Temple staires, where he was set a land, and from thence by land through London to the tower with the axe afore him, sir W. Sands hauing him by the right arme, and sir Nich. Vaux by the left arme. And on the 17. of May, being the friday before Whitsunday, he was deliuered to the shirifs of London, who led him to the scaffold on the tower hill, about 11. of the clocke, and there he was beheaded, in the presence of sir Th. Louel and all the people, his body with the head was borne by the friers Augustines to their church, and there buried in the Chappell Church for the close. D. of Buckingham beheaded.

And now followeth the publication at the disgrading of the said Edw. late D. of Buckingham knight and companion of the most noble order of S. George, named the Gartar, which was read and published by Gartar king at Armes, at the feast of S. George in the quire of Windsore Colledge, standing on the high pase at the dere, all the other officers of armes about him, there being also present the L. marques Dorset knight of the same order, then being the kings deputy for the feast, the earle of Eller, the earle of Wilshire, the earle of Kent, sir Th. Louel, and the L. le Ware, knights of the said order, with other great audience assembled there on the 8. of June, the 13. yere of Henry the 8. the yere of Christ 1521. D. of Buckingham disgraded.

Be it knowne vnto all men, that whereas Edward late Duke of Buckingham knight, and companion of the Noble order of Saint George, named the Gartar, hath latelie done and committed high treason against the King our soueraigne lord, and soueraigne of the said order of the gartar, in compassing and imagining the destruction of the most noble person of our said soueraigne Lorde the King, contrarie to his othe and due allegeance, and for the which high treason the saide Edwarde hath béene indicted, arraigned, conuicted, and attainted, and for the which detestable offence and high treason, the sayde Edward hath deserued to be disgraded of the saide noble order, and expelled out of the said company, and not worthy that his armes, enlignes, and hachmentes should remaine among other the noble enlignes of other noble, vertuous, and approued knights of the said noble order, nor haue the benefits of the said noble order: wherefore our said soueraigne lord the king, soueraigne of the saide Noble order of Saint George named the Gartar, by the aduise of the other knightes of the saide Noble order, for his saide offences, and committing of the saide high treason, willeth and commandeth that the saide Edward duke of Buckingham to bee disgraded of the saide noble order, and his armes, Enlignes, and hachments clérelie expelled, and put from among the armes, enlignes, and hachmentes of the other noble knights of the said order, to the intent, that all other Noble men thereby maie take ensample hereafter, not to commit any such heinous and detestable treason and offences, as God forbid they should: God saue the King. Disgrading of a knight of the Gartar.

It is to bee remembred, that Sommerset Herault was in the rode loft behind the hachments of the saide duke Edward: and when Gartar spake these words, words, expelled and put from the armes, then the said Somerset violently cast downe into the quire, his creast, his banner, and sword. And when the publication was all done, the officers of armes, spurned the said hachment with their feete, out of the quire into the body of the church, first the sword, & then the banner, and then was the creast spurned out of the said quire through the Church out at the west doore, and so to the bridge, where it was spurned ouer into the ditch. And thus was the said Edward late duke of Buckingham fully degraded of the order of Saint George named the Gartar.

The duke of Buckingham had begun a great and sumptuous building at his manor of Thornebury, but left the same vnfinished. The foundation of a very spacious base court was there begun, and certaine gates and towers in it castle like. It was of a foure or fiue yardes high, and so remained, a token of a noble piece of worke purposed. He made a faire parke hard by the castle, and toke much faire ground into it very fruitful of corne, now faire lands for coursing. The inhabitants cursed the D. for those lands so inclosed. There was afore D. Edwards time a parke at east Wood, a mile or more off: but D. Edw. at two times enlarged it to the compasse of fiue miles, not without many curses of the poore tenants.

Warre betwixt the Emperour and the French king.

In this meane while were the Emperor and the French king fallen at variance, so that the warre was renued betwixt them. For the pacifying wherof Cardinall Wolsey, with the bishops of Ely and Durham were sent ouer, there went with them the earle of Worcester the lord chamberlaine, the lords S. Iohn Ferrers and Herbert, the primate of Armacane, sir Th. Bolleign, sir Iohn Pechy, sir Iohn Hussey, sir Richard Wingfield, sir Henry Gildford, and many other knights, esquires, and gentlemen, these arriued at Caleis on the second of August.

Cardinal Wolsey rode into Flanders, to the Emperor.

The same day came to Caleis ambassadors from the emperor: and on the 4. of August came the chancelor of France, and the county de Pallace with 400. horse, by which meanes there met at Caleis the lords of England (before named) of Burgoigne, Spaine, Flanders, and France, with the popes Nuntio, to make peace betwixt the Emperor and the Fr. king. Cardinall Wolsey would haue furthered a league betwixt the empreor, the K. of England, the K. of France, and the Pope, but the Popes ambassador wanted commission thereto, and therefore were letters sent to Rome, and the French men remained still at Caleis till answere came from thence.

The Cardinall Wolsey on the twelft daie of August rode into Flanders, to speake with the Emperour, which as then laie in Bruges: a mile without Bruges the Emperour receiued him, and did to him as much honor as could be deuised: the cheare was great which was made to the English men, and of euerie thing there was such plentie, that there was no want of things necessarie. The Cardinall, after he had sojourned in Burges by the space of 13. daies, and concluded diuers matters with the Emperour, and accomplished his commission, he toke leaue of the Emperour, and the nine and twentieth day of August returned to Caleis, where the ambassadors of France tarried his comming.

The

The first of September the Cardinall Chancellor of England, the Chancellor of France, and the Chancellor of Burgoigne rode from Staple inne toour lady church in Calais. The fourth of September the regent of Naples came to Calais, to the great councell there: and the 27. of September the Chancellor of Hungarie came to the same councell, but in fine nothing was concluded, but only that the fishermen of both princes might freely fish in the seas without disturbance, till the second day of Februarie nert. Thus, when no conclusion of agréement could be accorded, the cardinall sent to the Emperor the lorde of S. Iohns, and sir T. Bolleine knight, to advertise him what was done.

During the continuance of the Cardinall at Calais, all writs and patents were there by him sealed, and no sheriffes of shire chosen for lacke of his presence, having there with him the great seale, and full power in things, as if the king had béene there in person. After the returne of the English ambassadors from the Emperor and French king, the cardinall returned into England about the latter end of November, he landed at Calais, and from thence toke his iourney to Blechingley, where the king welcomed him, and gaue him thankes for his great paines.

King Henry wrote a booke against Luther in Germany, and therefore the Pope Leo the tenth, named him Defender of the faith. To the which booke Luther answered verie sharpely, nothing sparing his authoritie or maiestie. King Henry writ against Luther.

Pope Leo died this yéere, whereupon doctor Pace Deane of Paules was sent to Rome to make friends in the behalfe of Cardinall Wolsey, who was brought into a vaine hope, through the kings fauour and furtherance, to be elected Pope: but Adrian the first was chosen before doctor Pace could come to Rome, and so that suite was dashed. This Pace was a right worthie man, and one that gaue in counsell faithfull aduise, learned he was also and indued with manie excellent good gifts of nature, courteous, pleasant, and delighting in musicke, highlie in the kings fauour, and well heard in matters of weight. Doctor Pace dean of Pauls.

This yéere was a great death in London and other places of the Realme: manie men of honor and great worship died, and amongst other doctor Fitz lames bishop of London, in whose place was elected doctor Tunstal. Also a great dearth in London and other places, for wheate was solde for twenty shillings the quarter. A great death, and dearth in England.

The earle of Surrey returned out of Ireland, and came to the court on the 25. of January. Many complaints to the king were made by the marchants of the Frenchmen which spoiled them by sea of their goods, for by reason the wars were open betwixt the emperor and the French K. many ships of war were abroad on both parts, and now and then the English men fell into their hands, and were vsed as enemies, namely by the French men, whereof the French ambassadors promised restitution, but little was recouered. In the moneth of Januarie therefore, the king commanded all his ships to be rigged and made ready, which was done with all diligence. Ships rigged to the sea.

In this meane time grudges and displeasures still grew and increased be-twéne the king of England and the French king, till at length, the duke of Albany returned into Scotland, contrarie to that which was couenanted by the league. The French king alledged, that he was not priuie to his going thither, and wrote to the king, that the said duke was entred Scotland without his assent. Hereupon the king sent sir ships to the sea well appointed, the admirall whereof was Christopher Coo, an expert sea man, his commission was to safegard the merchants, and other the kings subiects that were in danger to be grieuously spoiled and robbed on the sea by the Frenchmen, Scots, and other rouers.

The 8. of Febr. the lord Dacres warden of the marches, fore-aneust Scotland entred into Scotland, with 500. men, by the kings commandement, and there proclaimed that the Scots should come into the kings peace by the first of March following, or else to stand at their perils: the D. of Albany being then within fiue miles with a mighty power of Scots.

The eleuenth of Februarie, the lorde Burgaueny was brought from the tower to Westminster, and there in the kings bench confessed his indictment of misprision.

The L. Montague was about the same time restored to the kings fauor.

This yére died the lord Brooke, sir Edward Poynings knight of the garter, sir Iohn Pechy, and sir Edward Belknape, valiant captaines.

The 6. of March, the French K. commanded all Englishmens goods being in Burdeaux to be attached, and put vnder arrest, and retained not onely the money due to be paide, for the restitution of Tourney, but also withholde the French Quænes dower. The French ambassador therefore was called afore the councell, and the cardinall laid fore to his charge, that contrary to his promise at all times made on the French kings behalfe, affirming, that he meant nothing but peace and amitie to be obserued in all points with the K. of England, yet now the English merchants had not onely their goods staied at Burdeaux, but also they and their factors were laide in prison in full breach of all peace and amitie afore time concluded. The ambassador as well as he could excused his master, but in the end he was commanded to keepe his house, and the French hostages that were appointed here to remaine for the money to be paid for the deliuery of Turney, were committed to safe keeping: wherewith also all the French men in London were arrested, committed to prison, and put to their fines: but they were after ten dates set at libertie, vpon finding sureties to appeare before the maior, or else afore the councell at a certain day, and to pay the fine vpon them assessed, which fine the king pardoned to diuers of the poorer sort.

A generall proscription of the realme of England.

This yére betwéne Easter & Michaelmas was made a generall proscription of all the realme of England by taking of musters, and otherwise in euerie countrey, as may appeare by the charge sent to a chiefe Constable.

William Fitz Williams knight, Richard Fitz Lewes knight, Robert Norwich sergeant

sergeant at the law, and Iohn Tirell esquire, commissioners assigned for our soueraigne lorde the king, to the baily and chiefe constable of the halfe hundred of W. greeting, where afore this we the said William, Richard, Robert and I. Tirell, by our late precept to you directed, charged you the high constables of the same hundred, to giue monition and charge to all constables of euery hamlet, parish, and village within the said hundred, personally to appeare afore vs the said commissioners on mundy next comming, the last day of the moneth of March at Waltham holy crosse, and there to bring with them a certificate in writting of the names of all maner of men aboue the age of 16. yeres, dwelling within euery towne, hamlet and village within the said hundred, and to do further as by the same precept more plainly doth appeare. We now effsones in the behalfe of the king our soueraign lord, wil and command you, that you duely execute the said precept: and also that ye giue knowledge, warning, and commandement to all maner of temporall men dwelling, inhabiting, or abiding within any towne, hamlet, parish, or village, within the same halfe hundred, personally to appeare before vs the kings said commissioners at Waltham holie crosse aforesaid, the said mundy next comming, furnished and apparelled in their best array for the warre, that is to say, with bowes, arrowes, bils, harnesse, or any other weapons, artillery, or harnesse for the war, which they or any of them haue within the townes and hamlets of the said hundred and euery of them. And that they also the said last day of this present moneth of March do certifie vs in writting at Waltham holy crosse aforesaid, of all their names, and to whom they belong vnto. Also who is lord of euery towne or hamlet within the said hundred, and who be stewards. Item, who be parsons of the same townes, and what the benefices be worth by yere. Also who be owners of euerie parcell of land within any towne, hamlet, parish, or village, within the said hundred, with the yerely value of euerie mans land within the same townes, hamlets, parishes, and villages. And of euery flocke and flockes of cattell, or other things that be occupied vpon any farme within the said townes, hamlets, and parishes, and who be owners of them. Also what aliants or strangers dwell in any towne, hamlet, or parish within the saide hundred, and where they were borne, and vnder whose dominion. Item, what occupation, mysterie, or substance they be of. Item, the value and substance of euery person being of 16. yeres and aboue, dwelling within your saide hundred, hamlets, and parishes, as well spirituall as temporall. Also what pensions goeth out of any lands there to any religious or spirituall men, and that ye faile not this to doe, as ye tender the kings pleasure, and will auoide the contrarie. At Brentwood, the 27. day of March in the 13. yere of the raign of king Henry the eight.

There were sent to the sea vnder the conduct of sir William Fitz Williams viceadmirall 28. great ships well manned and furnished for the wars, and 7. other ships were sent toward Scotland, which entred the Forth, and profered to enter the Scottish ships that lay in the hauens, but the Scots ranne their ships aland, and the English men followed with boates, landed, and set the ships on fire, and at Lythe toke certaine prisoners, which they brought into An. reg. 14.

England: and still the kings great nauie kept the narrow seas: for then was neither peace betwixt England and France, nor open warre.

The king vnderstanding that the Emperor would come to Calais, so to passe into England, as he went toward Spaine, appointed the lord marques Dorset to go ouer to Calais, there to receiue him, and likewise the lord cardinall was appointed to receiue him at Douer.

Cardinall Wolley rode toward Douer to receiue the Emperor.

The 20. day of May, cardinall Wolsey rode through the city of London toward Douer, there to méete & receiue the emperor, being accompanied with two earles, 36. knights, 100. gentlemen, eight bishops, ten abbots, thirtie chaplaines, all in veluet and satten, and seuen hundred yeomen.

The Marques Dorset, with the Bishop of Chester, the lorde de la Ware, and diuers other, at Grauelin receiued the emperor in the name of the king of England on the fiue and twentie daie of May, and with all honor brought him to Calais, where he was receiued with procession, and by the lord Barnes lieutenant of the towne, by the Maior and merchants of the Staple, in the best manner that might be deuised. On the fire and twentieth he toke ship at Calais, and landed at Douer, where the Cardinall with a great number of lordes, knights, and gentlemen of England, was readie to receiue him, and with all the honor that might be, brought him to the castle, where he was lodged.

On the 28. of May, the king came to Douer, and there with great ioie the emperor and he met, and saluted each other. On the thirtith of May he rode from Douer to Canterburie, and so from thence by easie iournies they came to Grénwich, where the Quéene receiued her nephew with all the ioie that might be. On the first of June, the king and emperor with all their companie marched towards London, where the citie was prepared for their entrie, after the manner as is vsed at a coronation, so that nothing was neglected that might set forth the honor of the city, whereinto they were receiued by the maior, aldermen, and commons: the crosse in Cheape was new gilt, and eleuen pageants were deuised on stages very faire and excellent to behold. The emperor was lodged at the Blacke friers, and all his nobles in the new builded house of Bridewell.

The emperor Charles came to London.

On Whitsunday the eight of June the emperor and the king rode to the cathedrall church of S. Paul, and there heard masse, which was song by the cardinall. The emperor rode to diuers places, being feasted by the king, at Windsor they tarried a whole weeke, where on Corpus Christi day the emperor ware his mantle of the garter, and sate in his stall. The same day both the princes receiued the sacrament, and toke their corporall othes to keepe and obserue the league concluded betwixt them. On the morrowe after they departed from Windsor, and came to Winchester on the 22. of June.

The first of July, the emperors nauie came before Hampton, containing 180. goodly ships. Then the Emperor toke leaue of the king, of whom he had many gifts and summes of money by waie of loane, and so the first of July he toke ship, and made saile towards Spaine, where he arriued in safetie the tenth daie after.

During this time, the earle of Surrey lord admirall, brent Morles in Britaine, and then returned: not long after, he passed ouer to Caleis, entred Picardie, and brent diuers townes and castels. He besieged Heldoing, but because winter was neer, he raised his siege, and returned. Earle of Surrey brent Morles in Britaine I. Skelton.

The D. of Albany in Scotland began to enter this land with a great army, but hearing that the earle of Shrewsbury was comming he toke a truce for sixmonethes.

In the beginning of this yere, Sultan Soliman Pac, called the great Turke, which was the 8. of the line of Ottoman the first that took vpon him to be great captaine or ruler, and to whome Sultan Solime his father had left the empires of Constantinople, Trapesond, Alexandry, and Babylon, with manie diuers kingdoms & realmes, which Sultan Soliman ỹ yer before had gotten ỹ town of Belgrado, being the keie of Hungary, because he saw all the princes in Christendome now at discord, thought it most for his honor and profit to make war on the Ile of the Rhodes, and to take the same: which Ile had bin kept by the space of 224. yeeres, by the brethren or knights of the order of S. Iohn of Ierusalem. Diuers thinges moued him to take this enterprise, one was because this Ile stood so, that the religious of the same oftentimes tooke and destroied his Shippes as they came with golde, and other riches from Egypt, Sire, and other east parts to Constantinople, so that by them of that Ile he suffayned more hurt than by all Christendome, because the sayde Ile stode in the very entrie toward Constantinople. Another motion was, because his father when he dyed, charged him to assay to take the Rhodes, for to be reuenged of the shame that they had done to his grandfather Mahomet the greate Turke, which was with dishonour beaten from the siege of the Rhodes. But the greatest occasion of all was the exhortation of a great Counsellor of the Religion called Andrewe Amirall borne in Portingale, which knewe the whole estate, and in what case the Towne stoode in. The cause why this Andrewe Amirall bare malice to his religion was, because after the death of Brother Fabrica de Iaretto Lorde master of their religion, hee was not elected to that honor, but one Philip de Villiers de Lisle Adame of France was named to bee Lord master, wherefore the sayde Andrew prouoked the Turke to come to the Rhodes. The Rhodes besieged. Soliman the Magnificent Why the Turk coueted the Rhodes.

The great Turk seeing so great an occasion offered, and desiring honor, and also knowing the fortresse of the Rhodes to lacke munitions, for the brethren of the order were both of such wealth and pride, and also of such wicked life that they toke no heed of their vow and solemne profession, nor foresaw the thing to come, and so their town vnfurnished was sone surprised. The said Turke prouided for 300. saile, in the which he conueied all his artillery, and other things necessarie. In the which army were 60000. miners and pioners prepared to dig and vndermine, the rest of the army came by land to a place called Fisco, which standeth so directly against the Rhodes, that a fire maie bee seene from the one side to the other: from the which place the Turke sent letters to the aboue named Philip de Villiers lord master of the religion, signifying to him, that he would haue the saide Ile, for the great dammage that they had done Three score thousand pioners sent to the Rhodes.

to him and his people: and if they would yéld to him the said Ile, he promised on his faith, and by Mahomet his first prophet, they should haue no dammage nor hurt by him, and that they that would depart should go in safetie, and they that would tarry and serue him, should haue good wages: and if they refused this to doe, he sware that he would subuert the wals of their fortresse, and destroy them all, and make them slaues, which letter was dated at Constantinople, the first day of June.

The said lord master and his companie were greatly abashed of this letter, but yet like hardie gentlemen they intended to defend them, and made all the preparations that they could doe in so short space, and wrote to all Princes Christian of their distresse. But the Turke knowing the great diuision amongst the christian princes, so that they could send no succour to the Rhodes, sent 200000. Turkes, which arriued in the Ile of the Rhodes on Midsommer day, which was the festiual day of the Rhodes in honor of S. Iohn Baptist, which sudden comming sore abashed the Rhodians, being but 600. knights, & 5000. other méete to beare armes: yet of noble courage and trusting in God, they determined to defend themselues against the enemies of God. And on the 28 of July the Turke arriued there in his owne person, which much incouraged his people: he bent his ordinance toward the towne, but did no great harme, wherefore he caused all his pioners to cast earth one banke ouer another still till they came within a bow shot of the wals: and although that many of the pioners were slaine with ordinance of the towne, they neuer ceased till they had made a banke of earth higher by ten foote than the wall of the towne, and laid there their ordinance, so that no person durst stir on the wals or bulwarks. Thus with mounts of earth was the town enuironed, and behind the mountaines lay the Basheaw and chiefiaines of the Turke, which were euer readie to take their aduantage, and daily they shot into the towne, and beat downe houses and slew the people in the stréetes, for they vpon the mount might easily sée into the towne: besides this, the Turke caused so many mines to bee made in diuers places, that they within were not able to make countermines for lacke of people, insomuch as women were set a worke, to dig and carry, by reason whereof a great part of the wals were ouerthrowen, and if they within had not made countermines, the towne had béen gotten within a short space. Also the Turke in the moneth of September gaue to the Rhodians 4. great assaults, but the Christians so valiantly defended them, that at euery assault they lost ten thousand Turkes and more.

The Rhodes besieged by two hundred thousand Turkes.

The great Turk séeing the losse of his men at the assaults, sent for Mostaffa Bashaw, and much blamed him, that he had perswaded him that he might haue taken the towne in 12. daies, or in a moneth at the most; wherefore in his furie he would haue put him to death: but in conclusion the Turke determined clérely to raise his siege, and to depart, and so had done, if that same night sir Andrew Amirall, and a Iewe within the Rhodes had not written letters, and shot them out on quarels into the Turkes army: by which letters the Turke knew the necessitie of the towne, and féeblenes of the people, which caused him to change his purpose: but this treason was espied, the traitors taken, and put to terrible execution. The Turke caused so many mines to be made, that both bulwarkes, wals, and towers were ouerthrown. And so on S. Andrewes euen he caused a great assault to be giuen: but yet the Christians so valiantlie defended themselues, that they slew 3000. Turks, and kept them from entering that day: but the citizens of the Rhodes after this assault came to the lord master, and praied him to haue compassion on them, the lord master comforted them with faire wordes: but by chance about the same time the great Turke sent a letter into the Rhodes, willing them to deliuer the towne, and they all should haue their lines and goods, and they that would tarry should remaine quiet. This letter being knowne, the people cried out on the lord master to take the offer, wherefore calling all his counsell, for diuers wants amongst them, they sent to the Turke two of the religion, for the assurance of his promise, who were well entertained, and had writings sealed of all things that they desired. To the which two knightes, Aymech Basshaw sware, that there were slain at that siege 64000. Turks, and 40000. dead of mortalitie & more. And on Christmas day, the great Turke himselfe entered into the Rhodes, and toke possession therof, and the lord master & all his religion, the first day of January toke ship, and sailed to Candy, and so to Rome, and there declared his chance and aduenture. Thus was the towne and the Isle of the Rhodes taken by the great Turke, which was a great succour to all Christian men resorting to the east parts of the world, which chance was much lamented (but to late) throughout all Christendome, and much blame put in princes, because they sent no succour to them of the Isle.

The 15. of Aprill began a parliament at the Blacke friers in London, and that day the king came into the Parliament chamber, and there sate in the seate roiall, and at his feete on the right side sate the cardinal of Yorke, and the archbishop of Canterbury: and at the raile behind stood doctor Tunstall bishop of London, which made to the whole parliament an eloquent oration, declaring the office of a king. First he must be a man of iudgement, according to the saying of the Prophet Dauid, Deus iudicium tuum regi da, &c. Also he must be a man of great learning, according to the saying of the prophet, Erudimini qui iudicatis terram. According to which saying, he said that God had sent vs a prince of great iudgement, of great learning, and great experience, which according to his princely duty forgat not to study to set forwards all thinges, which might be profitable to his people and realme, lest might be laide to his charge the saying of Seneca, Es rex, & non habes tempus esse rex? Art thou a king, and hast no time to be a king? Which is as much to say, as Art thou a king, and dost nothing profitable to thy people? Art thou a king, and seest the people haue an insufficient lawe? Art thou a king, and wilt not prouide remedie for the mischiefe of thy people? These things haue indeed caused the kings highnes to call this high court of parliament, both for remedie of mischiefes which be in the common law, as recoueries, forren vouchers, and corrupt trials; and for making and ordering of new statutes, which may be to the high aduancing of the common wealth: wherefore he willeth the commons to repaire to the common house, and there to elect them a speaker, or their common mouth, and to certifie the lord Chancelor of the same, which should thereof make report to the kings most noble grace, which should declare his pleasure when he would haue him presented before his person.

Frederick. I. K. of Denmark Elected in ye place of his Nephew Christian II. ye Cruel K. of Den. Frederick introduc ye Reformation there & was call'd ye Pacifick. he was Elected D. of Holstein

This was the cause of the parliament, he saide, but of these things no one word was spoken in the whole parliament, nor any good act made, except the grant of a great subsidie. The commons chose for their speaker Sir Thomas Moore knight, and presented him the saturday after in the parliament chamber. Where he according to the vsage, disabled himselfe, both in wit, learning, and discretion, to speake before the king, and brought in for his purpose, how one Phormio desired Haniball to come to his reading, which thereto assented, and when Haniball was come, hee began to reade De re militari, that is, of chiualrie: when Haniball perceiued him, he called him arrogant fole, because he would presume to teach him, which was master of chiualrie in the feates of warre: so the speaker saide, If he should speake before the king of learning, and ordering of the common-wealth, and such other like, the king being so well learned, and of such prudence and experience, might say to him as Haniball to Phormio: wherfore he desired his grace that the commons might chose another speaker. The Cardinall answered, that the king knewe his wit, learning, and discretion by long experience in his seruice: wherefore he thought that the commons had chosen him as the most meetest man of all, and so he did admit him. Then sir Thomas Moore gaue to the king his most humble thankes, and desired of him two petitions: the one, if he should be sent from the commons to the king on message, and misse the their intent, that he might with the kings pleasure resort againe to the commons, for the knowledge of their true meaning. The other was, if in communication and reasoning, ante man in the common house should speake more largely than of dutie they ought to doe, that all such offences should be pardoned, and that to be entred of record: which two petitions were granted, and thus began the parliament. And euen as there was much ado amongst them of the common house, about their agreement to the subsidie then required, so was there as hard hold for a while amongst them of the cleargie in the conuocation house, namely, namely, Richard Foxe bishop of Winchester, and Iohn Fisher bishop of Rochester held sore against it, but most of all sir Rowland Philips vicar of Crodown, one of the canons of Paules a famous and notable preacher in those daies, spake most against that paiment. But the cardinall taking him aside, so perswaded the matter with him, that he came no more into the house, willinglie absenting himselfe, thus he giuing ouer his hold, the other yelded, and so was granted the halfe of all their reuenues spirituall for one yeere, to be paid in 5. yeres following. Now on the 29. of Aprill, the cardinall accompanied with diuers lords, as well spirituall as temporall, came into the common house, where he eloquently declared to the commons, how Francis the French king the first called the most Christian king, had oftimes broken promise with the king of England, and his nephew Charles the Emperor, that the king of his honor could no longer suffer. For first he declared that the meeting of the said two princes at Guisnes, the said French king was sworne to keepe all the articles contained in the league, sith the which time he hath made war on the emperors dominions, &c. he also hath withholden his tribute, and other paiments which he should pay to the K. of England, for redemption of Torney and Turwine, &c. Wherefore the king of necessitie was driuen to warre, which in no case could be maintained without great summes of mony, and he thought no lesse than 800000. pound, to be raised of the fift part of euerie mans goods and lands, that is to say, foure shillings of euery pound: for he said that the yeere following, the king and the emperor should make such war in France as had not beene seene.

An. reg. 15.

Great subsidie granted.

Gabriel Fallopius a famous Anatomist, physician & Astronomer born at Modena, he dyed 1584 ætat. 39.

After that he had declared his matter at length, exhorting the commons to aide their prince in time of necessitie, hee departed out of the common house.

The morrow after, sir Thomas Moore declared all the cardinals oration againe to the commons, and enforced his demand, saying, that of dutie men ought not to denie to pay foure shillings of the pound. But for all that it was denied, and proued manifestly, that if the fift part of substance of the realme were but 800000. and if men should pay to the king the fift part of their goods in money or plate, it was proued that there was not so much money out of the kings hands in all the realme, for the fift part of euery mans goods is not in money nor plate: for although fiue men were well monied, fiue thousand were not so, the gentlemen of lands hath not the fift part of the value in coine: the merchant that is rich in silke, woll, tinne, cloth, and such like, hath not the fift part in money, &c. And then consequentlie, if all the money were brought to the kinges handes, then men must barter cloth for victuall, and bread for cheese, and so one thing for an other. Then consider that after this valuation, the king hath had by the waie of loane two shillings of the pound, which is 400000. pound, and nowe to haue foure shillings of the pound, which amounteth in the whole to 12. hundred thousand pound, which first and last is fiue shillings of the pound, which is almost the third part of euery mans goods, which in coine cannot be had within the realme: for the proofe wherof was alledged, that if there were in England but 15000. parishes, and euery parish

shoulde giue 100. marks, that were but fiftéen hundred thousand marks, which is but ten hundred thousand pound: and how many parishes be in Englande one with another, able to spare a hundred marks, out of cities and townes: and where it is written, that in England there be fortie thousand parish Churches, it was proued that there were not 13000. parishes. Then account, the whole summe cannot mount aboue ten hundred thousand pound, and the king demandeth 800000. and he after this valuation hath had 400000. pound, therfore it was thought the sum impossible to bee leuied: and if all the coine were in the kings hand, howe shoulde men liue? Also the king had of the spirituall men the last yeere, foure shillings of the pound, &c. To conclude, after long debating, the Commons granted two shillings of the pound of euerie mans goods and lands that were worth twentie pound, or might dispend 20. pounde by yéere, and so vpward, and from fortie shillinges to twentie pounde, twelue pence of the pound, and vnder forty shillings of euerie head sixteen yeeres and vpward, foure pence to be paide in two yeeres. This Parliament the 21. of May was adiorned to Westminster among the blacke Monks, and ended in the kinges Palace at Westminster the 14. of August, at 9 of the clocke in the night.

There were not 10000. parishes then in Englād as I haue proued.

The 27. of Aprill, was sir Arthur Plantagenet, a bastard son to king Edward the 4. at Bridewell created Viscount Lisle, in the right of his wife, which was sometime wife to Edm. Dudley beheaded, sir Mauris Barkley lieutenant of Caleis was made L. Barkley, sir William Sands, L. Sands, and sir Nich. Vaux, Lord Vaux.

The k. and Q. of Denmark arriued in England.

Christerne K. of Denmarke and his Quéene, arriuing at the Downes besides Douer the 15. of June, came to London on the 22. of June, and were lodged in the Bishop of Bathes place. The 5. of July, they returned againe to Caleis.

D. of Suffolke entered France with a power.

In this season the king hauing put an army of men in a readines, caused the same to be transported ouer to Caleis, & appointed the duke of Suffolk to haue the leading thereof, and to make a iorney into France. The duke according to his commission came to Caleis on the 24. of August, and there abiding the army, caused all things to be prepared for the same, as victuales, munition, and such like. There were appointed to attend him in this iourney, the lord Mountacute, and his brother sir Arthur Poole, the lord Sands, the lord Barkley, the lord Powes, and the Baron of Curson, and of knights, sir Richarde Wingfield Chancellor of the dutchie of Lancaster, sir Iohn Vere, sir Edward Neuill, sir William Kingstone, sir Richarde Westone, sir Andrewe Windsor, sir Robert Wingfield, sir Anthony Wingfield, sir Edward Gilforde, syr Edward Greuile, syr Edwarde Chamberlaine, sir Thomas Lucy, sir Edwarde Digby, syr Adrian Fortescue, syr Richarde Cornwall, Sir William Courtney, Sir William Sidney, Sir Henry Owen, and manie other. The whole armie consisted in 600. Dimilances, two hundred archers on horseback, 3000. archers on foote, and 5000. Billmen. To these also were adioined 1700. taken out of the garisons of Hames, Gwines and Caleis, so that in al they were 10500. well armed and appointed for the warre, besides 2600. labourers and pioners. These set out of Caleis on the 19. of September. The first enterprise that they attempted was the winning of Bell castle, which they beat downe, and sent the Frenchmen prisoners to Calais.

In this season was the duke of Burbon high constable of France, revolted from the French king to the seruice of the emperor, and the king of England: so after it was knowne that this Duke hadde his minde alienated from the French king, sir Iohn Russell (that was after earle of Bedford) was sent into France vnto the saide Duke, which in disguised apparell ordered himselfe so wiselie, that in couert manner hee came to the Duke, and so perswaded him, that hee continued in his former determination, and anoyded the Realme of Fraunce. The Duke of Suffolke remooued to Arde, and so into Picardie. At Cordres a Village betweene Turwing and Saint Omers, there came to him the Lorde of Iselston, and with him of Spaniards, Almaines, Cleueners, and other, 3000. footemen, and 500. horsemen. The Duke being thus furnished with newe aide, marched forwarde, sending out diuers companies of his men to take townes, and fetch bootes. The Frenchmen were so afrayd of the Englishmen, that they fled out of their houses, and left the Townes and Villages voyde. The Duke passed forth till he came to the Towne of Bray, in the which were 1600. men of warre, vnder the gouernaunce of Captayne Adrian.

Charles D. of Burbon reuolted from the French king.

The 20. of October the duke caused his ordinance to be brought afore it, the which is so well applied in making batterie to the walles of the Towne, that the Towne was made assaultable, and then the Englishmen and other made forward, got the ditches, and after entered vpon the Walles, and so into the towne, and sodainelie the French men fled, and thus was gotten ꝑ Towne of Braie. The 21. of October, the army with their ordinance passed the Riuer, and came to a Towne called Knap, all the inhabitants were fled, but they had left good plentie of wine behind them. The duke sent to them of Roy, requiring to haue the towne deliuered to him, which they graunted to doe, because they had no garison of souldiers to defend them: thither was sent sir Richarde Cornwall, with 400. men, which receiued the town, and kept it in good quiet, till the duke came thither.

The 25. of October, the duke remoued to a Village called Lyhome, where the souldiers had greate pillage. The nert daie they went to Dauenker, and the 27. they came before the towne of Montdedier, in the which were 1000. footemen, and 500. horsemen: but after sir William Sceuington had made batterie foure houres, they within yeelded the Towne vnto the Duke. The duke remained in Montdedier till the last of October, and then remooued to Roy, there on Alhalowne daie the duke made knights, the Lorde Herbert, the lord Powes, Oliuer Manners, Arthur Poole, Richard Sands, Robert Iernyngham, Robert Salisbury, Edmond Beningfield, Richard Corbet, Thomas Wentworth, William Storton, Walter Mantill, George Warham, Edwarde Seymer. The nert morrowe the Armie remooued to a place called Neale. The Souldiers beeing thus ledde from place to place, beganne to grudge, because of the winter season.

The 8. of November the duke remoued to Mount S. Martine, and the army remoued to Vermont, and there rested for a time. The Welshmen murmured that they might not return home: but there were to the number of 1000. persons vnder the leading of sir Iohn Wallope, which had little wages or none, and liued as aduenturers, & therefore were so called, and of some called Brokers, these by spoiling of townes, taking of prisoners, and other such practises, daily brought to the campe daily horses, victuals, cloth, and other necessaries, which stood them in great stead.

Aduenturers & brokers.

The 13. of Nouember the duke remoued to a place within 2. miles of Bogham castle, there the Welshmen set out great shouts and cried: home, home, & as fast the brokars cried: hang, hang, whereof great busines was like to haue ensued: the Frenchmen pelled the castle of Bogham, and all the Artillerie, which was 76. peces great and small. The duke brake vp his army and returned, and left at Valencenus all the great ordinance, and returned into England the 30 day of December.

It chanced in the yeere passed, as partly hath been touched, a grudge to break out betweene the French king, and the duke of Burbon, insomuch that the duke for the safegard of his life fled out of the French kinges dominions, whereof the Cardinall Wolsey having intelligence, comprised in his heade, that if the king our soueraigne Lorde coulde obteine him to bee his generall in the warre against the French king, and considering further that the Duke of Burbon was fled vnto the Emperour to inuite him to a like purpose, wherefore he hauing this imagination in his head, thought it good to moue the king in the matter, and after the king was once aduertised hereof, and conceiuing the cardinals inuention, at last it came to a consultation among the counsell, so that it was concluded that an Ambassage shoulde be sent to the Emperour about the matter, with whome hee was, that the King and the Emperour shoulde ioine in those Warres against the French king, and that the Duke of Burbon shoulde be our kings Champion and Generall in the Fielde, who had a great number of good Souldiers, ouer and besides the Emperours Armie, which was not small: and that the king shoulde paie vnto the Duke monthlie wages, both for himselfe and his retinue, insomuch, as Sir Iohn Russell late continuallie beyonde the seas in a secrete place, both to receiue monete of the king, and to paie the same monthlie to the duke, so that the duke beganne the warres with the French king in his owne territorie and Dukedome, which the king had confiscked in his owne hands, being not perfectlie knowne vnto the dukes enimies that he had anie aide out of England, and thus he wrought the French king much displeasure, insomuch, as the French king was constreyned to prepare a puissant armie, and in his owne person to resist the Dukes power, and with force the king droue him to take Pauie, a strong Towne in Italie, with his Halle, for their securitie, whereas the king Encamped him wonderouslie strong, intending to enclose the duke that hee shoulde not issue forth, yet notwithstanding, the duke did many times issue forth and skirmished with the king.

Sir Iohn Russel.

Nowe let vs returne againe to the Cardinall Wolsey, who seemed to bee sodainelie altered, and to bee more French than Emperiall, howsoeuer it came to passe: but the French king lying in his Campe, sent secretelie into Englande a priuie person, a verie wittie man, to treate a peace betwixt the French king, and our king: this person was named Iohn Iokin, who was kept as secretlie as might bee, for hee was no French man borne, but an Italian, a man of no greate estimation in France, and for his subtill witte, elected to entreate of such Ambassage, as the French king had giuen him in commission. This Iokin was secretlie conueyed vnto Richmond, and there remained, vntill the Cardinall resorted thither vnto him, where after Easter terme ended, he kept the feast of Whitsontide verie solemnlie, in which season the Cardinal caused diuers times this Iokin to dine with him. Thus continued this Iokin in Englande long after, vntill at the last, as it shoulde seeme, hee brought to passe the matter that he had in commission. After this, there was sent out immediatlie a restraint to Sir Iohn Russell, into those parts where he made his abiding beyond the seas, that he shoulde reteine that moneths wages still in his handes, vntill the kings pleasure were to him knowne, which should haue beene payde to the duke of Burbon, being then with his retinue encamped within the Towne of Paup, for want whereof at his date, the D. and his men were sore dismaid, when they sawe there was not mony brought as it was wont to be: and being in so dangerous a case, and where victuals began to bee scant and verie deere, they imagined many waies what shoulde bee the lette, some sayde this, and some sayde that, so that they mistrusted nothing lesse, then the verie cause thereof, insomuch as at the last, what for want of victualles, and other necessaries, the Souldiers and Captaynes beganne to grudge and mutter, and at last, for lacke of victuals were like all to perish. The Souldiers beeing in this extremitie, came before their Captayne the Duke of Burbon, and sayde: Syr, wee must bee of verie force and necessitie constrayned to yeelde vs vppe to our enemies, and better it were for vs so to doo, then to sterue lyke dogges. When the Duke sawe their extremity he saide vnto them with weeping eyes: Syrs (quoth hee) yee are both valiaunt men, and of noble heartes, who haue serued mee heere right worthilie, and for your necessitie (whereof I am participant) I doo not a little lament: but I shall desire you, as you are noble in hearte and courage, so to take patience for a day or twayne, and if succour come not then from the King of England, as I doubt nothing that hee will deceyue vs, I will well agree that wee shall all put our selues and our liues vnto the mercie of our Lorde, wherewith they were all agreeable. And tarrying the comming of the K. money, vntill the terme of two dayes were passe: the Duke seeing no remedie, called his noble Captaynes and Souldiers before him, and weeping sayde: Yee noble men and Captaynes, I see no remedie in this necessitie, but eyther wee must yeelde vs vnto our enemies, or else famithe: and to yeelde the Towne and our selues, I know not the mercie of our enemies, as for my part I passe not for their cruelties, for I knowe verie well that I shall suffer death most cruellie if I come into their hands: it is not for my selfe therefore that I doo lament, but it is for your sakes, it is for your liues, and safegarde of your persons, for so that yee might escape the daunger of our enemies hands, I would most gladlie suffer death, therefore good companions, and most noble Souldiers, I shall require you all to consider the daungerous miserie and calamitie that wee stande in, to sell our liues most deerelie, rather than to bee murthered like beastes: if yee will bee agreeable, wee will take vpon vs this night to giue our enemies an assault, and by that meanes wee maie eyther escape, or else giue them an ouerthrowe, and thus it were better to die in the Field lyke men, than liue prisoners in captiuitie and miserie, to the which they all agreede: then (quoth the Duke) yee perceyue that our enemies Campe is stronge, and that there is noe waie to enter vpon them but one, and that is so planted with Ordinaunce and strength of men, that it is not possible to attayne to our enimies that waies to fight with them in Campe: And also now now of late you perceiue they haue hadde but small doubt of vs, insomuch, that they haue kept but verie slender watch, therefore my deuice shall bee thus: There shall issue out of the Towne about the deade of the night from vs a number of you that bee of the moste deliueresst to assaulte their Campe, and they shall giue the assaulte right secretlie, euen directlie against the place of the entrie which is verie stronge and inuincible, your fierce and valiaunte assaulte shall bee to them of the Campe so doubtfull, that they will turne their strength of the entrie that lyeth ouer against your assaulte, to beate you from your purpose; then will I issue out of the Posterne, and come to the place of their strengthe newelie turned, and there or they beaware will I enter, and fight with them in their Campe, and winne their Ordinaunce, which they haue newelie turned, and beate them with their owne peeces, and then maie you come and ioine with me in the Field. This deuice pleased them woonderfull well. Then prepared they all that daie for the purposed deuice, and kept them secrete and close without anie noyse, or shotte off Peeces within the Towne, which gaue their Enemies the lesse feare of the assaulte: but at night went to their Tentes, and cowched quietlie, nothing mistrusting that after happened vnto them. When the time came that all men were at rest, the assailauntes issued out of the Towne, and there according to their appointmente, they gaue so eruell and fierce assault, that they in the Campe hadde as much to doe as was possible to resist them: and euen as the Duke declared before to his Souldiers, they within were compelled to turne their shotte that laie at the entrie, against they assaylauntes. With that issued out the Duke, and with him about fifteene or sirteene thousande men, or more, secretelie in the night, his Enemies beeing not prynie of his comming vntill hee was entered the Fielde, and at his entrie hee tooke all the Ordinaunce that laie there, and slewe the Gunners, then hee charged the peeces against his Enimies, and slewe them woonderfullie, hee cutte downe the Tentes and Pauilions, and murthered manie within them, ere they were ware of his comming, suspecting nothing lesse than his entrie, so that hee wanne the Fielde or euer the King coulde arise to the rescue; insomuch, as the King was taken in his lodging by the Vice-roy of Naples or euer hee were harnessed, his tentes were robbed and spoyled which were woonderous rich, and in the spoyle and search of the Kinges Coffers, the Duke of Burbon found the league vnder the great Seale of Englande, newlie made betweene the King of Englande, and the French King, which once perceyued by him, beganne to smell the impediment of his moneie which houlde haue come vnto him from the King, hauing vpon due search intelligence that all the matter was deuised by the Cardinall of Englande. The Duke conceyued such an indignation hereupon against the Cardinall, that incontinentlie hee went to Rome, and there intended to sacke the towne, and to haue taken the Pope, where at the first assault of the walles, the Duke was the first man that was slayne: yet notwithstanding, his Captaynes continued their assaulte, and at the last wanne the the town, and the pope fled vnto Castle Saint Angell, where he continued long in calamitie. Cardinal Wolsey purchaseth priories to builde his colledges in Oxforde and in Ipswich.

About such time as Cardinall Wolsey was determined to erect his newe colledges in Oxford and Ipswich, he obtained licence and authoritie of Pope Clement the 7. to suppresse about the number of fortie Monasteries of good fame, and bountifull hospitality, wherein the king bearing with al his doings, neither bishop, nor temporal lord in this realme durst say any word to the contrarie.

In the executing of this businesse, fiue persons were his chiefe instruments, who on a time made a demaund to the Prior and couent of the monasterie of Daintrie, for occupying of certayne of their groundes, but the Monkes refusing to satisfie their requestes, straightwaie they picked a quarrell against the house, and gaue information to the Cardinall against them, who taking a small occasion, commanded the house to be dissolued, and to be conuerted to his newe colledge, but of this irreligious robberie done of no conscience, but to patch vp pride, which priuate Wealth could not furnish, what punishment hath since ensued at Gods hande (saieth mine Author) partlie our selues haue seene, for of those fiue persons, two fell at discord betweene themselues, and the one slewe the other, for the which, the Suruiuor was hanged: the thirde drowned himselfe in a Well: the fourth beeing well knowne, and valued worth two hundreth pounde, became in three yeeres so poore, that hee begged till his dying daie: and the fift called doctor Allane, beeing chiefe executor of these doings, was cruelly maimed in Ireland, euen at such time as hee was a bishop: the cardinal falling after into the K. greeuous displeasure, was deposed, and died miserably: the colledges which he meant to haue made so glorious a building, came neuer to good effect: the one at Ipswich cleane pulled down, and the other in Oxford vnfinished: and pope Clement himselfe by whole authority these houses were throwen down to the ground, was after inclosed in a dangerous siege within the castle of S. Angel in Rome by the emperials, the citie of Rome was pittifully sacked, and himselfe narrowly escaped with his life, as shal be shewed in anno 1527.

Ambassadors to the emperor Charles.

In the month of March, K. H. sent Cuthbert Tunstal bishop of London, and sir Ric. Wingfield chancellor of the dutchy, and knight of the gartar, into Spain, to common with th emperor for causes, concerning the taking of the French K. and for wars to be made into France on euery side.

The first part of all mens goods demanded to aide the king in his wars.

The king being thus determined to make warres in France, and to passe the sea himselfe in person, his counsell considering that aboue al things, great treasure and plenty of mony must néeds be prouided, deuised strange commissions, and sent commissioners in euery shire, with priuy instructions how they should proceed in the sittings, & order the people to bring them to their purpose, which was, that the first part of euery mans substance, should be paid in money or plate to the king without delaie, for the furniture of his warre: whereof followed followed such cursing, weeping, and exclamation against both king and counsel, that pitie it was to heare. And notwithstanding all that could bee saide by the Commissioners, to perswade the people to this contribution, the same woulde not bee graunted: but in excuse of their deniall, it was alledged that wrong was offered, and the ancient customes and lawes broken, which would not any man to be charged with such paiments, except it were granted by the estates of the realme in parliament.

The like answere was made by them of the spiritualtie, of whome was demanded the fourth part of their goods.

Mounsier de Prate the emperours ambassador, whether offended for admitting of Iokin in the realme, as before yee haue heard, or for some other cause, on the ninth of Aprill departed out of England, not taking leaue of the king, cardinall, or rest of the counsel, and did so much, that he passed through France in Poste, and came to the emperor before the Ambassadors of England came thither, and whether it was by his report, or otherwise, the accustomed favor that the Emperour and his Counsell shewed to the English men beganne to decaie. The commissioners in al shires sitting for the leuy of the 6. part of all mens goods, as ye haue heard, the burthen was so grieuous, that it was denied, and the commons in euery place were so moued, that it was like to haue growne to a rebellion: when this mischiefe was shewed to the K. he said, that he neuer knew of that demand, and therfore with great diligence hee sent his letters to the citie of London, and to other places, in the which hee gently wrote, that hee would demand no sum certain, but such as his louing subiects would grant to him of their good wils, toward the maintenance of his warres. Wherfore the cardinall on the 26. of Aprill sent for the maior of London, the aldermen, with most substantiall persons of the common counsell, and when they were come to Westminster, he said: the king our soueraigne lord, most graciously considereth the great loue, zeale, and obedience, which your bare vnto him, and where like louing subiects, without anie grudge, or saine-saying of your louing minds, you haue granted the first part of all your goods and substance, freely to be paid, according to the first valoation, the which louing grant and good mind, he so kingly accepted, that it was marueile to see: but I my selfe do consider the great losses, and other charges that dailie hath and doth to you growe, and that notwithstanding, anie losse or charge that happeneth to you, yet you neuer withstoode nor gainesaide anie of the kinges demaundes or commissions, as it appeereth nowe of late, of which doings I haue highly the king informed, for the which hee gaue you heartie thanks. Then I kneeled downe to his grace, shewing him both your good minds toward him, and also the charges that you continually sustaine, the which at my desire and petition, he was contente to call in, and abrogate the same Commission. And where hee by An. reg. 17. The demand of the first part of all mens goods turned to a benuolence.

reason of your own grants might haue demanded the said summe as a verie debt, yet he is content to release and pardon the same, and will nothing take of you but your beneuolence: wherefore take heere with you the kings letter, and let it be read to the commons, and I doubt not but you will gladly do as louing subiects should do. The 28. of Aprill, in the common councell of the citie was read the kings letter, according to the effect aboue rehearsed. Wherefore the citizens sent 4. aldermen, and 12. commoners to Hampton court, to giue thanks to the L. cardinal, which for busines as was said, could not speake with him, wherefore they returned not content. Then euery alderman assembled his warde, in their places accustomed, and gently moued them of a beneuolence to be granted to the king, the which they openlie denied, saying: That they had paid ynough before, with many euill words. The 8. of May the cardinall againe sent for the maior and his brethren, which shewed him what they had done. Then said the cardinall, You haue no such commission to examine any man, I am your commissioner, I will examine you one by one my selfe: and then I shal know the good will that you beare to your prince, for I will aske a beneuolence of you in his name. Then was it answered to the cardinall by a counsellor of the citie, that by the law there might no such beneuolence be asked, nor men so examined, for it was contrary to the statute made the 1. yere of K. Richard the third. Also some persons comming before your grace, may for feare grant that, that all dates of their life they shall repent, and some to win your fauor will grant more than they be able to pay of their owne, and so run in other mens debts, so that by dreadfull gladnes, and fearefull boldnes, men shall not be masters of themselues, but as men dismaied, shal grant that, that their wiues and children shall sore rew. The cardinall heard this saying verie patiently, and answered quietly: Sir, I maruell that you speake of Richard the third, which was an vsurper, and a murtherer of his owne nephews: then of so euill a man, how can the acts be good, make no such allegations, his acts be not honorable: And it please your grace said the counsellor, although he did euill, yet in his time were many good acts made not by him only, but by the consent of the bodie of the whole realme, which is the parliament. Then sir William Baily lord maior kneeled downe, and besought his grace, that sith it was enacted by the common councel of London, that euerie alderman should sit in his owne ward for a beneuolence to be granted, which he perceiued to be against the law, that the same act by the same common councell might be reuoked, and no otherwise. Well said the cardinall, I am content. But now will I enter into the kings commission: You maior, & you master aldermen, what will ye giue? My lorde, saide the maior, I pray you pardon me, for if I should enter into ante grant, it might fortune to cost me my life: your life, said the cardinall, that is a maruellous word, for your good will towarde the king, will the citizens put you in ieopardy of your life, that were strange: for if they would that way, then must the king come with a strong power them to oppresse, wherefore speake no more such words, and with that he studied a little, and said: My lord maior, let you and your citizens, if you be grieued with any thing, in this demand, humbly and after a good fashion come to me, and I shall shall so intreat you, that you shall be content, and no displeasure arise, and so I pray you shew your neighbors: and so the maior for that date departed. The maior (saith Hall) did wisely not to assent to grant to any thing, for although he & the aldermen had assented, the common councel would neuer haue assented. So on the next morrow it was declared to the common councel, that their act that was made, that euerie alderman should sit for a beneuolence to bee granted, was against a statute law: whereupon the said act was anulled: and then was it declared, that euerie man should come to the cardinall, & to grant priuilie what he would, with the which saying the citizens were sore grieued: then the maior gently shewed them, how he durst warrant, that they shoulde be intreated gently, and exhorted them to go thither when they were sent for: which saying so offended them, that in their furie they would haue had Richard Gresham and Iohn Hewster mercers, and Richard Gibson sergeant at armes and merchant tailer, banished out of the common councell, and so without answere made what they would do, they departed home.

This demand through the realme was vtterly denied, so that the commissioners could bring nothing to passe, and yet they assaied both by faire and foule meanes. For in Kent the lord Cobham was commissioner, and handled them roughly, and by reason one Ioh. Skudder answered him clubbishly, he sent him to the tower of London: for which doing the people muttered against the lord Cobham, and said expressely that they would pate no money, and then they began to account the loanes and subsidies granted, so that they reckoned the kings treasure innumerable: for they accounted that the king had taken of this realme twenty fifteens sith the 14. yeere of his raigne, and in this grudge they euill intreated sir Thomas Boleine at Maidstone.

Thomas Boleine at Maidstone in Kent.

In Essex the people would not assemble before the commissioners in no houses, but in open places. And in Huntingdon shire diuers resisted the commissioners, and woulde not suffer them to sit, which were apprehended and sent to the fleete. The duke of Suffolke sitting in commission about this subsidie for taske in Suffolke, perswaded by curteous meanes the rich clothiers to assent thereto: but when they came home, and went about to discharge and put from them their spinners, carders, fullers, weauers, and other artificers, which they kept in worke afore time, the people began to assemble in companies, whereof when the Duke was aduertised, he commanded the constables that euerie mans harnesse should bee taken from them: but when that was knowen, the rage of the people increased, railing openlie on the duke, and sir Robert Drurie, and threatned them to death, and the cardinall also: & herewith there assembled togither, after the maner of rebels, foure thousand men of Lanam, Sudberie, Hadley, and other townes there about, which put themselues in harnesse, and rang larams to increase their number. The Duke of Suffolke perceiuing this, began to gather such power as hee could, but that was very slender: yet the bridges being broken, those rebels were letted of comming against the duke.

The duke of Norffolke treasurer of England raised a power in Norffolke, & came to the duke of Suffolk, he first sent to the people, to know their griefe.

They answered, that as they had some matters that grieued them, so had they will to spend their liues in the kings seruice as obedient subiects. Then the duke rode to them, and demanded what was the cause of their disquiet, and who was their captaine? Vnto whom one Iohn Greene a man of fiftie yeres olde answered, that pouertie was both cause and captaine. For the rich clothiers spring of Lanam, and other had giuen ouer occupying, whereby they were put from their ordinarie worke, and liuing. The Duke with courteous words willed them to depart home, promising them, that he and the Duke of Suffolke would intreate the king for them, whereupon they became quiet, and returned, and in token of repentance, they came to Saint Edmondsbury in their shirts, and halters about their neckes desiring pardon: the two dukes toke a few of them to London, which after some imprisonment were pardoned and deliuered.

Great counsell called to Yorke place by Westminster.

Then the king at Yorke place, where the cardinall lay, called a great counsell, in the which he openlie protested, that his minde was neuer to aske any thing of the commons, which might sounde to the breach of his lawes, wherefore he willed to knowe by whose meanes the commissions were so straightly giuen forth, as to demand the first part of euerie mans goods. The cardinall answered and said, that when it was moued in the counsell, how to leuie money to the kings vse, the kings counsell, and namely the Iudges said, that he might lawfully demand any summe by commission, and that by the consent of the whole counsell it was done, and toke God to witnes, that he neuer desired the hinderance of the commons, but like a true counseller deuised how to enrich the king: and the spirituall men saie, that it standeth with Gods lawe, for Ioseph caused the K. of Egypt to take the fift part of euerie mans goods: but because euerie man laieth the burthen from him, I am content to take it on me, and to endure the fame and noise of the people, for my good will toward the king, and comfort of you my lords, and other the kings counsellors, but the eternall God knoweth all. Well said the king, some haue informed me, that my realme was neuer so rich, and that there should neuer trouble haue risen of that demand, and that men would paie at the first request, but now I finde all contrarie: then euerie man held his peace. Then the king said, I will no more of this trouble, let letters be sent to all shires, that this matter make no more be spoken of. I will pardon all that haue made denial openlie or secretly: then all the lords kneeled downe, and hartilie thanked him. Then letters were sent, in the which were shewed, that the lords and the iudges, and other of the kings counsell, deuised that demand, and that the cardinall followed the minde of the whole councell. And thus was the kings great iourney into France staied for this time.

Treations at Bridewell.

This yere the tower at Greenwich was newlie repaired and builded.

The 18. of June, at Bridewell Henry Fitz Roy, which King Henry the 8. had by Elizabeth daughter to sir Iohn Blunt knight, was created Earle of Nottingham, duke of Richmond and of Somerset, lieutenant generall from Trent northward, warden of the east, middle, and west marches, for aneuil Scotland, he was borne in the manno[r] place of Blackamore in Essex, it was then then the Priors house of Blackamore. Henry Courtney earle of Deuonshire, cosen german to the king, was created marques of Excester: Henry Brandon sonne to the duke of Suffolke, was created earle of Lincolne: sir Thomas Manners lord Rosse earle of Rutland, sir Henry Clifford earle of Cumberland, and the lorde Fitz Water, sir Robert Ratcliffe was created Vicount Fitz Water, and sir Thomas Boleine treasurer of the kings houshold, was created vicount Rochford.

In this winter was a great death in the citie of London, so that the terme was adiourned, and the king kept his Christmas at Eltham with a small compante, wherefore it was called the still Christmas. 1526

The cardinall about this time comming to the court at Eltham, toke order for altring the state of the kings house, many officers and other seruants were discharged, & put to pensions. In which number were 64. yeomen of the gard, which before hauing 12. d. the day with cheke, were now allowed 6. d. the day, without cheke, and commanded to go home into the countries. He also made new officers in the house of the duke of Richmond, which was then newly begun. Also at that time he ordained a councell, and established another houshold for the lady Mary, then being princesse of the realme, so that all thing that was done, was done by him, for to him was the charge of all things committed. The cardinall setteth an order in the kings house.

At this time the saide Cardinall gaue to the king the lease of the manor of Hampton court, which he had of the lease of the lord of S. Iohns, and on which he had done great cost in building: In recompence whereof, the king licenced him to lie in his manor of Richmond at his pleasure, and so he lay there at certaine times. Hampton court builded by the cardinall, and giuen to the king.

On Shrouetuesday, there was holden solemne iusts at Grænwich, the king and 11. other on the one part: and the marques of Excester with 11. other on the contrarie part. At these iusts by chance of shiuering of a speare, sir Francis Brian lost one of his eies. Iusts at Grenwich.

The 11. of Februarie, foure merchants of the Stilyard did pennance at Paules crosse, and an Augustine frier called doctor Barnes bare a fagot: there was present the lord cardinall, with 11. bishops, Iohn Fisher bishop of Rochester made the sermon, which was against Martine Luther of Germanie, and his doctrine. Stilyard merchants did pennance.

A truce was taken betweene England and France for a certaine space, and ambassadors were sent into Denmarke, for restoring of their king: but the Danes would grant nothing thereunto, they did so deadly hate him for his crueltie.

The 28. of Aprill came to the court to Grenewich Mounsier Briond, president of Roane, and Iohn Iokin, which president before the king and his nobles made in the Latin tong a solemne oration, the effect whereof was, how dreadfull the wars had bene betweene the realmes of England and France. He declared further of what power the king of England was, and what conquest he might haue made in France, the French king being prisoner, thereof he humbly thanked him of his pitie and compassion that he had on them in their necessitie, that he would consent to peace. To the which oration, sir Thomas Ann. reg. 18. Peace with France.

Moore Chancelor of the dutchie of Lancaster, made answere, saying: that it much reioiced the king, that they first considered, how by his power he might haue oppressed, and how by his pity he had relieued them; wherefore he would hereafter, that for kindnes they should shew him none vnkindnes, but inuiolablie keepe that league which was concluded.

Proclamation against vnlawfull games.

In the moneth of Maie, was proclamation made against all vnlawfull games, and commissions awarded into euerie shire, for the execution of the same, so that in all places, tables, dice, cardes, and boules were taken vp: but when yong men were restrained of these games and pastimes, some fell to drinking, some to ferretting of other-mens conies, and stealing of deere in parkes, and other vnthriftinesse.

Gold enhaunsed.

In this season the angell noble was the first part of an ounce Troye, so that fiue angels were full an ounce, which was 40. s. sterling, and the angell was worth two ounces of siluer, so that fiue angels were worth 12. ounces, which was but 40. s. in siluer. By reason of the good weight, and low valuation of the English coine, merchants daily caried ouer great store, because the same was much inhaunsed there: so that to mete with this inconuenience (as it was said) proclamation was made in the moneth of September the first day, throughout England, that the angell should go for 7. shillings 4. pence, the royall for 11. s. and the crowne for 4. s. 4. pence. And on the 5. of November following againe by proclamation, the angell was enhaunsed to 7. s. 6. d. and so euerie ounce of of golde should be 45. s. and an ounce of siluer at 3. s. 9. d. in valew.

Great rain and land waters.

In the moneths of November, December, and Januarie fell such raine, that thereof ensued great floods, which destroied corne-fields, pastures, and beasts, then was it drie till the twelfth of Aprill, and from that time it rained euerie daie and night till the third of June, whereby Corne failed sore in the yeare following.

Ambassadors into France.

King Henry sent Thomas Boleine vicount Rochford, & sir Anthony Browne knight, ambassadors into France, which came to Paris to the bish. of Bathe that lay there for the king as legar, and then these three went to the court, and saw the French king take the oth to keepe the league and amitie, concluded betweene him and the king of England.

Ambassador to the emperor.

Also king Henry sent sir Francis Points knight ambassador to Charles the emperor, and with him Clarentiux king at armes, to demand the one halfe of the treasure and ordinance which was taken at Pauie, forsomuch as the war was made as well at the kings charge as at the Emperors. Also they were commanded to demand one of the French kings sons, which late in hostage with the emperor, that is to wit, the Duke of Orleance to be deliuered to the king of England: and further that he should call backe his army out of Italie, and if so were that he refused these requests, then should they in the kings name denounce open war against him.

In this meane time Rome was taken by the emperials, & the pope brought into into captiuitie, as ye shall heare: Charles duke of Burbon, and the emperors army, which all the last winter liued in great pouertie, without clothes, victuals, or wages, so that they were in maner desperate, went towarde Parma and Bonony, belonging to the sea of Rome. The pope hearing this, sent messengers to the duke to redéeme his townes, so that they should not be spoyled. The duke asked 350000. duckats, for sauing of the popes lande, and if they might haue so much money, they would depart to Naples: but when they saw they could not haue their demand, they turned toward Florence, whereof hearing the Romans they were glad, for they thought that the Florentines would hold good war with them, and then the Romans would giue the loking on: but the chance turned, as ye shall heare.

E. Hall. The citie of Rome taken and sacked.

The duke of Burbon had thought to haue gone to Florence for this cause: there was a gentleman in Florence, called Peter de Saluiato, which had a brother that serued the Emperor in his warres, which promised to deliuer the citie, for hee determined to cause the commons to rebell in the citie against the heads, and in the meane season the dukes companie should scale the walles: when this Peter knewe that the Emperors army was come to a place called le Chase, within twelue miles of the citie, to bring his purpose to conclusion, he with such as he had trained to him, cried in the city, Libertate de populo, that is to say, libertie of the people: with which voice the people stirred, and came to the palace in great number, and there they toke the fiue lords of the councell, which had the rule of the wealth of the citie, & slue one of them. The familie of Medices, which were the popes kindred, were at this time sore afraide. Thus this Peter de Saluiato with the commons, gate that palace, and rang the common bell. In this season was in Florence a captaine of the French kings called Frederico de Bedso, he had with him 300. men, and when he sawe this rebellion, he came to the commons and said: Sirs, if you continue in this case, your faire citie is like to be subuerted, for your enemies bee at hand: which notwithstanding that you beare some fauour to the emperor, as appeareth, yet their nedinesse and pouertie is such, that without mercie they will rob, murther and slaie you, your wiues and children, and set fire on your beautifull city. This Captaine much fraied the citizens, notwithstanding that 20. or more persons were slaine in the ruffle: yet they were well auoided, and suddenlie entred into the city the duke of Vrbine, which lay but 6. mile from Florence, and 18. mile from the emperors army, whom he had coasted: but he thought no aduantage to meddle. This Duke brought with him 5000. footemen, and 600. horsemen, and when he was entred the citie, a crie was made that all things were pardoned, so that euerie man departed home, and deliuered his weapon, and thus the city was appeased the 28. of Aprill. All this doing within was vnknowen to the emperors army, and so for lacke of knowledge this enterprise was lost: which was happie for the Florentines. Sore displeased were the emperors captains when they knew of this chance, and how the duke of Vrbine was entred into the city of Florence. And so shortly they departed, and came to the citie of Seines thirtie mile off, and there they lost their great ordinance, and toke counsell to go to Rome, notwithstanding the truce concluded betweene the pope, and the vice Roy of Naples and Hugo de Moncada, and so much they trauelled by night & day, that the 6. of May, with banners displaide they came before the Citie of Rome. The Romanes make Bulwarks, rampiers, and other defences, and laid ordinance on the wals, and shot at them fiercelie. The duke of Burbon waying that it were not best to lie still and be slaine, considering that they were all naked people, and without great Ordinance: determined to take the chaunce, and to giue the assaulte, and so manfullie they approched the wals, betweene the Burgo nouo and old Rome, but the Romans valiantlie defended them, with hand guns, pikes, stones, and other weapons, so that the enimies were faine to retire. The Romanes were glad, set many fair banners on their towers and bulwarks, which seeing the duke of Burbon cried to a newe assault: then euerie man with a Ladder mounted, and at the first encounter the Romans again put them a little back: which perceyuing the Duke, he cried, God and the emperor: then euery man set on manfullie, there was a sore fight, manie a man felled, but at the last the emperials gotte the wall: and betweene euerie assault fell a mist, so that they within could not see what part they without would assaile, which was profitable to the emperials. At the third assault were slaine three hundred Swichers of the Popes guarde. In this last assault was the Duke of Burbon stricken in the thigh with a Hand-gunne, of the which he shortlie died, in a chappell of S. Syth, whither his Souldiors hadde brought him. And this chaunce notwithstanding, the army entred into Rome, and toke the popes palace. The same daie that these three assaults were made, pope Clement palled little on the Emperors army, for he had accursed them on the Saturday before, and in his curse he called the Almains Lutherans, and the Spaniards Pureins or Pozes. And when he was hearing of masse, sodainlie the Almains entered the church, and slue his gard, and diuers other. He seeing that fled by a priuie way to the castle Angel: and al they that followed him that way and could not enter, were slain. The cardinals and other prelates fled to the castle S. Angell ouer the bridge, where manie of the common people were ouerprelled, and drowned as they gaue waie to the cardinals, and other states that palled towarde the castle for succour. The cardinall of Senes, of Sesarine, of Tudertine, of Jacobace, and of the Vale, tarried so long, that they could not gette to the Castell for multitude of people: wherefore they were compelled to take another house, called the Palace of Saint George, where they kept themselues for a while, as secretlie as they might. You must vnderstand, that through the citie of Rome runneth a famous Riuer called Tiber, and on the other side of the riuer standeth the castle of S. Angell, or the Borough of S. Angell: and the other side is called Burgo nouo. This bridge is called the bridge of Sixt, which lieth directlie before the castle. At the end of this Bridge was a woonderous strong Bulwarke, well ordinanced, and well manned. The emperials saw they coulde do nothing to the Pope, nor to the port of the citie but by the bridge, determined to assayle the Bulwarke: and so as men without feare came to the Bridge: and the Romanes so well defended them, that they slue almost foure thousand men. That seeing the Prince of Orenge, and the Marques of Guasto, with all sydes gaue assaulte, and notwithstanding that the Romanes shotte great Ordinance, Hand-guns, Quarels, and all that might be shot, yet the emperials neuer shranke, but manly entred the bulwarke, and slue, and shrew down out at the loupes al the Romans that they found, and after raced the bulwark to the ground. The Pope in the castle Angell beheld this fight, and with him were three and twentie Cardinals, of which one called the Cardinall Sanctorum quatuor was slaine, and with him were a thousand prelates and prestes, fiue hundred gentlemen, fiue hundred souldiers: wherefore immediatlie the Captaines determined to late siege to the castle S. Angell, least they within might issue out and turne them to damage: wherefore so dainelie a siege was planted rounde about the castle: In the meane season, the Souldiers fell to spoyle, neuer was Rome so pilled, neither of the Gothes nor Vandals, for the souldiers were not content with the spoile of the Citizens, but they robbed the Churches, brake vp the houses of close religious persons, and ouerthrewe the Cloisters, they spoiled virgins and rauished wiues: men were tormented if they had not to giue euery new asker or demander: some were strangled, som were tormented by the priuy members, to cause them to confesse their treasure. This woonnes continued a great while, and some man might thinke, that when they had gotten so much, then they woulde cease and bee quiet, but that was not so, for they plaied continuallie at dice, some 500. some 10000. duckats at a cast: and hee that came to plaie laden with plate, went awaie againe almost naked, and then fell to rifling againe: Manie of the Citizens which could not patientlie suffer that veration, drowned themselues in Tiber. The souldiers that late at the siege daylie made testes of the pope, sometime they had one riding like the pope, with a whore behind him, sometime he blessed, and sometime he cursed, and sometime they woulde with one voyce call him Antichrist. They went about to vndermine the castle, and to haue throwne it downe on his head, but the water that enuironeth the castle disappointed their purpose. In this season the Duke of Vrbine with fifteene thousand men came to aide the Pope: but hearing that Rome was taken, he taried 60. mile from Rome til he heard other word. The Marques of Saluce, and Sir Fredericke de Bedso with 15000. footmen, 1000. horsemen, were at Viterbe the 10. of May, where they hearing ỹ the city of Rome was taken, also tarried: ỹ cardinal of Colume came with an army of Neopolitanes to helpe the Emperors men: but when he sawe the crueltie of the Souldiers, he did little to helpe them, but hated them much. The Bishoppe of Rome was thus besieged till the eight of Julie, at which daie hee yelded himselfe, for necessitie and penurie of all thinges in the castle. And then he was restored to his graces and grantholds, as he did before: but he taried still in the castle Saint Angell, and had a great number of Almaines and Spaniards to kepe him: but the Spaniards bare most rule in the castle, for no man entred nor came out of the Castle, but by them. When the moneth of Julie was come, corne began to falle in Rome, and the pestilence began to ware strong, wherefore the greate armie remoued to a place called Narupa 40. mile from Rome, leauing behinde them such as kept the Pope. When they were departed, the Spaniards neuer were contented, till they they had gotten the Almaines out of the castle of S. Angell, and so they had the whole custodie of the Pope. Thus Rome continued in peace till the moneth of September, that the armie came againe from Naruia: for then the Almains sware, that they woulde set the Citie and all on fire, except the Pope woulde paie them their wages. The Pope sent to commune with them, two archbyshops, two bishops, and two gentlemen, these six persons the Almaines toke as pledges, contrarie to the Popes meaning, and said they would keepe them there, till they were paid, and so put them in a strong Chamber, in the Palace of S. George: and euerie daie almost they would bring them forth openly, and scould with them, and threat to hang them if they were not paide, and so they kept them imprisoned in a Chamber, and watched them daie and night without the Chamber: and yet for all that, they gatte out at a chimney on S. Andrewes euen, and were no more seene of them. The Almaines were so woode with this chaunce, that they came to the Prince of Orenge their generall captaine, and demanded monie of him, in such rigorous maner, that he was fain secretlie to flie to Senes: and then for him they chose Captaine, the Marques of Gnasto, which gouerned them till Februarie, that hee brought them to Naples.

In the meane space, by meanes of great armies prepared by the kinges of England, of France, and other, for the popes deliuerance, the Emperour sent letters to the pope, and excused himself, that he neither willed nor commanded such mischiefe to be don, and streightly commanded his Captaines to deliuer him. The prince of Orenge and other captaines of the emperour, hearing his commandement, toke agreement with the pope and his cardinals, and so hee and twelue cardinals were bound to performe certain articles to the number of eleuen, and then he was deliuered out of the castle S. Angell, the 10. of December, and was conueied to Crupot, where after he had paid certain monie for the souldiers wages, he was put at full libertie, and the Emperors people departed from him, and from thence he remoued to Ancona: the Emperors Captaines (fearing the French armie prepared) caused all the Souldiers to departe out of Rome in the beginning of Februarie, and so came into the realme of Naples, and fortified certaine townes as they passed, and so came to a Towne called Troy, and there staied. This remouing was to them profitable, for if they had taried at Rome, they had beene set on by the Italians on the one side, and the Frenchmen on the other side, that by euerie mans iudgment they shoulde all haue beene slayne or taken. Thus much for the sacking of Rome.

Pope Clement deliuered.

Also about this time, diuers complaintes beeing made of Geralde Fitz Gerald earle of Kyldare, late deputie of Irelande, that hee wilfullie winked at the Earle of Desmonde, whome he should haue attached by the kings letters, that hee curryed acquayntaunce, and affinitie with mere Irishe Enemies, that he hanged, & hewed rashlie good subiectes, whome he mistrusted to leane to the Butlers friendshippe, wherefore Kyldare was commanded to appeere, which hee did, leauing in his roome Fitz Geralde of Lexlip, whome they shortlie deprsyued, and choose the Baron of Delun, whome Oconner toke prisoner, and there the erle of Desmy, to shew his habilitie of seruice brought to Dluelin an armie of Irishmen, hauing Captaines ouer them, Oconner, Omer, and Ocarrall, and at S. Marie abbey was chosen deputie by the kinges counsell. In which office being himselfe (saue onelie in feates of armes) a simple Gentleman, he bare out his honor, and the charge of gouernment verie worthily, thorowe the singular wisedome of his Countesse, a Ladie of such port, that all Estates of the Realme crouched vnto her, so politike that nothing was thought substantiallie debated without her aduise, manlike and tall of stature, verie rich and bountifull, a bitter enimie, the onelie meane at those daies, whereby her husbands countrie was reclaimed from the sluttish and vncleane Irish custome, to Englishe habite, bedding, house-keeping, and ciuilitie: but to these vertues was yoked such a selfe-liking, and Paiestie aboue the tenure of a subiect, that for assurance therof she sticked not to abuse her husbands honor against her brothers follie: notwithstanding I learne not that she practised his vndoing, which insued, and was to her vndoubtedlie great beawtie, as vpon whom both the blemish thereof, and the sustenance of that whole family depended after, but that she by indirect meanes coggeled hir brother out of credite to aduance her husband, the common voice and the thing it selfe speaketh. Al this while abode the earle of Kyldare at the court, and with much adoo found shift to be called before the lords to answere solemnly, they sate vpon him diuerslie affected, and in especiall the cardinall L. chancellor, disliked his cause, comforted his accusers, and inforced the articles obiected, and what else soeuer could bee gathered thereof in these words.

I wotte well (my Lorde) that I am not the meetest man at this boorde to charge you with these treasons, because it hath pleased some of your pewe fellowes to report that I am a professed enimie to all nobility, and namely to the Geraldines: but seeing euerie coarce boie can saie as much when hee is controlled, and seeing these points are so weightie, that they should not be dissembled of vs, & so apparant that they cannot be denied of you, I must haue leaue (notwithstanding your stale slander) to be the mouth of these honorable at this present, & to trump your treasons in your way, howsoeuer you take me. First yé remember how the lewde earle your kinsman, who passeth not whome hee serue, might he change his master, sent his confederates with letters of credence to Fraucis the French K. and hauing but colde comfort there, to Charles the Emperour, profering the helpe of Monster and Connagh towarde the conquest of Irelande, if eyther of them would helpe to winne it from our king: howe manie letters, what Precepts, what messages, what threates haue beene sent you to apprehende him, and yet not doone? Why so? forsooth I coulde not catch him: Naie, naie earle, forsooth, you would not watch him. If he be iustlie suspect, why are ye partiall in so great a charge? if not, why are you fearefull to haue him tried? ye sir it will be swoorne and deposed to your face, that for feare of meeting him, you haue winked, wilfully shunned his sight, altered your course, warned his friends, stopped both eares and eies against his detectors, and whensoeuer you took vpon you to hunt him out, then was he sure aforehand to be out of your walk: surely this iugling and false play little became either an honest man called to such honour, or a noble man put in such trust: had you lost but a cow or a carran of your owne, 200. kerneghes would haue come at your whistle to rescue the praie from the furthermost edge of Wlstar; all the Irish in Ireland must haue giuen you the waie: but in pursuing so needfull a matter as this was, mercifull God how nice, howe dangerous, how waywarde haue you béene? One while he is from home, another time he keepeth home, sometimes fled, sometimes in the borders, where you dare not venture. I wis my lord, there be shrewd bugs in the borders, for the earle of Kyldare, to feare the earle, naie the king of Kyldare, for when you are disposed you raigne more like then rule in the land: where you are malicious the truest subiects stand for Irish enemies, where you are pleased the Irish enemies stand for dutifull subiects: harts, and hands, liues and lands, are all at your curtesie, who fauoreth not thereon, he cannot rest within your smell, and your smell is so ranke, that you tract them at your pleasure: whilest the cardinall was speaking, the earle chaged and changed colour, and sundry prosers made to answere euery sentence as it came, at last he brake out, and interrupted him thus.

The earle interrupted the cardinall.

My lord Chancelor, I beseech you pardon me, I am short witted, and yet I perceiue intend a long tale; if you procéede in this order, halfe my purgation will be lost for lacke of carriage, I haue no Schole trickes, nor Art of memorie, except you heare me while I remember your words, your second processe will hammer out the former.

The lordes associate, who for the most part tenderly loued him, and knew the Cardinals manner of taunts so lothsome, as therewith they were tried manie yeeres ago, humbly besought his grace to charge him direcly with particulars, and to dwell in some one matter, till it were examined thoroughlie: that granted.

Kyldares reply to the cardinall.

It is good reason, quoth the earle, that your grace beare the mouth of this chamber, but my lord those mouths that put this tale into your mouth are verie wide mouths, such as indéed haue gaped long for my wracke, and now at length for want of better stuffe, are faine to fill their mouthes with smoake: what my cosen Desmond hath compassed as I know not, so I beshrew his naked hart, for holding out so long, if he can be taken by my engins that presentlie waite for him, then haue mine aduersaries betraied their malice, and this heape of heinous words shal resemble a man of straw, that séemeth at a blush to carrie some proportion, but when it is felt and poysed, discouereth a vanity, seruing onely to fraie crowes. And I verily trust your honours will sée the proofe, by the thing it selfe, within these foure daies: but go to, suppose he neuer be had, what is Kildare to blame for it more than my good brother of Oserie, who notwithstanding his high promises, hauing also the kings power, is yet content to take egges for his money, and to bring him in at leisure? Can not the earle of Desmonde shift, but I must be of counsell? can not he be hid except I winke? if he be close, am I his mate? if he be friended, am I a traitor? This is a doughtie kinde of accusation, which they vrge against me, wherein they are stabled and mired, at my first dentall: you would not sée him, say they:

who made them so familiar with mine eie sight? or when was the earle in mine equines, or who stood by when I let him slippe, or where are the tokens of my wilfull hoodwinke? O but you sent him word to beware of you: who was the messenger, where are the letters? Convince my negatiue: see howe losely this idle reason hangeth, Desmond is not taken: well you are in fault, why? because you are: who proues it: no body? what coniectures? so it seemeth: to whom? to your enemies: who told it them? they will sweare it: what other grounds? none: will they sweare it my lords? why, then of like, if they know it, either they haue my hand to shew, or can bring forth the messenger, or were present at a conference, or priuie to Desmonde, or some bodie bewraied it to them, or themselues were my carriers, or vicegerents therein, which of these parts will they chuse, for I know them too well, to reckon my selfe conuict by their bare words, or headlesse hearsaies, or frantike othes: my letter were soon read, were anie such writing extant, my seruants and friends are readie to be sifted, of my cosen of Desmond they maie lie lewdlie, since no man here can well contrarie them touching my selfe, I neuer noted in them either so much wit, or so fast faith, that I would haue gaged vpon their silence, ỹ life of a good hound, much lesse mine owne selfe. I doubt not, may it like your honors to appose them how they came to knowledge of these matters, which they are so readie to depose, but you shall find their tongs cheined to another mans trencher, and as it were knights of the poll suborned to sale, sweare, and stare the vttermost they can, as those that passe not what they sale, nor with what face they say it, so they say no truth: but of another thing it grieueth me, that your good grace, whome I take to be wise and sharpe, and who of your own blessed disposition wisheth me well, should be so farre gone in crediting those corrupt informers, that abuse the ignorance of your state and countrey to my perill: little know you my Lord how necessarie it is, not onely for the gouernor, but also for euerie noble man in Ireland to hamper his vnciuill neighbors at discretion, wherein if they waited for processe of law, and had not those lines and lands you speake of within their reach, they might hap to lose their own lines and lands without lawe, you heare of a case, as it were in a dreame, and feele not the smart that vereth vs. In England there is not a meane subiect that dare extend his hand to philip a peere of the realme: In Ireland, except the L. haue cunning to his strength, and strength to saue his own, and sufficient authoritie to rake theeues and varlets when they stur, he shall find them swarme so fast, that it will be too late to call for iustice: if you will haue our seruice take effect, you must not tie vs alwaies to these iudiciall proceedings, wherewith your realme thanked be God, is enured. As touching my kingdome my lord, I would you & I had exchanged kingdoms but for one moneth, I would trust to gather vp more crums in that space, then twice the reuennes of my poore earledome: but you are well and warme, and so hold you, and vpbraide not me with such an odious farme: I feare on a cabben, when you lie softe in your bedof downe: I serue vnder the coape of heauen, when you are serued vnder a canopie: I drinke water out of my scull, when ye drinke wine out of golden cuppes; my courser is trained to the field, when your genet is taught to amble: when you are be-graced and be-lorded, and crowched and kneeled vn-to, then find I small grace with our Irish borderers, except I cut them off by the knees.

to

The cardinall perceiued that Kyldare was no babe, and rose in a fume from the councell table, committed the earle, deferred the matter, till more direct probations came out of Ireland.

After many meetings, and obiections witti.e refelled, they preſſed him ſore with a traiterous errand ſent by his daughter lady of Clane to al his brethren, to Oneale, Oconner, and their adherents, wherein he exhorted them to warre vpon the earle of Oſery then deputy, which they accompliſhed, making a wicked conſpiracie againſt the Engliſh of Irelande, and manie a bloodie skirmiſh. Of this treaſon he was found guiltie, and repried in the Tower a long time, the gentleman betooke himſelfe to God, and the king, was heartilie loued of the Lieutenant, pitied in all the Court, and ſtanding in ſo hard a caſe, altered little of his accuſtomed hewe, comforted other noble men priſoners with him, diſſembling his owne ſorrow. One night when the lieutenant, and he for his diſport were playing at ſhouell groat, ſodainelie commeth from the cardinall, a Mandatum to execute Kyldare on the morrowe. The earle marking the Lieutenantes deepe ſigh in reading the bill, by S. Bride lieutenant quoth he, there is ſome mad game in that ſcrole: but fall out how it will, this throw is for a huddle: when the worſt was told him, now I pray thee (quoth he) doe no more but learne aſſuredlie, from the kinges owne mouth, whether his grace be witting thereto or not: ſore doubted the Lieutenant, to diſpleaſe the cardinall, yet of very pure deuotion to his friend, he poſteth to the king at midnight, and ſaid his errand, for at all houres of day or night the lieutenant hath acceſſe to the prince vpon occaſions. King Henry controlling the ſawcines of the prieſt (for thoſe were his termes) toke him his ſignet in token of countermaund, which when the cardinall had ſeene, he beganne to breath out vnſeaſoned words, which the lieutenant was loth to heare, and ſo hee left him fretting. And within few yéares after, Sir William Sceuington was ſent ouer deputie, who brought with him the earle pardoned and rid from all his troubles. There aroſe about this time a brute in London, that diuers great clearks had tolde the king that the marriage betweene him and the Ladie Katherine, ſometime wife to his brother prince Arthur, was not lawful: whereupon the king ſhould ſue a deuorce, and marrie the dutcheſſe of Alanſon, ſiſter to the French king, the towne of Caleis this Sommer, and thereupon Viſcount Rocheforde had brought with him the picture of the ſame Ladie: but the king being offended with the tales, ſent for Syr Thomas Seymere Maior of London ſecretlie, and charged him to ſee that the people ceaſed from ſuch talke. But whatſoeuer the commons talked, true it was, that the king hadde minde to depart from Quéene Katherine his wife, aunt to the Emperour, and daughter to the king of Spaine, for that ſhée was before eſpouſed to his brother, prince Arthur late deceaſed, and that the Pope coulde not diſpence with one woman to marrie with two brothers: but the king was letted by the Emperour and his Miniſters, ſo that hee coulde not well bring the matter about without aſſiſtaunce of the French king. Upon which respect, he granted more than the French K. desired: that is, the 400000. crownes, which was one of the principall sums of the millions, which should be paid presently, he lent the same to the French K. to repay in 5. yeares: and the 600000. crownes forfeit by the emperor, he gaue to the French king: and the flower deluce, valued at 50000. crownes he gaue to his god son Henry D. of Orleance. And further with the said Mounsier de Langie, there was sent Sir Frauncis Brian then one of the Gentlemen of the kinges priuie Chamber, as well with the obligations and acquittaunces, as also the said flower deluce, to be deliuered by the French K. when time should serue. And for the sayde Mounsire de Langie, was a Gentleman greatlie fauored, as well in the Vniuersities of Italie and Germanie, as in the vniuersities of Fraunce, and Brother to the Cardinall Bellay then Bysshop of Paris, hee was at that time trauelled withall to procure the opinions and iudgementes of the Doctors and chiefe learned men, subscribed with their handes, and confirmed with their Seales of the chiefe vniuersities; as of Paris, Orliance, and other of France, and of Padua, Vienna, and Boloma in Italy, declaring by the same, that the pope could not dispence with the said marriage, as being by gods law prohibited, which afterwarde was procured by the sayde Mounsire de Langy, trauelling in person to euerie the saide vniuersities with the king of Englands commission, who had the French kinges letters of singular commendations to the vttermost and therein: whatsoeuer the commons talked, it was concluded by the K. and his counsell, that the cardinall shoulde passe into France as his high ambassador, but for what cause, no person knew but the K. till his return. mounting to 300000. crowns, both to furnish his expences, & to impart with the French K. by way of lone if nede were. The cause of this voiage was saith G.C. this, certain great estates, and lords of the counsel bearing litle good will G. Cauen.

to the cardinal, lying in waite to espy a conuenient time, and occasion to take the cardinal in a brake, thought it now were a necessary time to cause him to take vpon him the kings commission to trauel beyond the sea in this matter, and by his wit to compasse a perfect peace among these great princes and potentates: and incouraging him thereto, alledged that it was more méte for his high wit, discretion, and authoritie, to bring so weightie a matter to passe, then any other within this realm. Their intent was none other, but if they might get him from the King out of the realme, then mought they sufficiently aduenture to deprane him vnto the K. highnes, and so in his absence to bring him in displeasure with the king, or at the least to be of lesse estimation: Well what wil you more? this matter was so handled, ỳ the cardinal was commanded to prepare himselfe to this iourney, which hee toke vpon him, but whether it were with his good will or no, I am not able wel to tel you: but that I know he made a short abode after the perfect resolution therof, but caused all thinges to bee prepared onwarde towarde his iourneie: and euerie one of his seruantes were appoynted that shoulde attende vpon him in the same. When all thinges were concluded, and for this noble ambassage prouided and furnished, then was there no more to do, but auance forwards in the name of God. Cardinal ambassador into France.

My L. had with him such of the lords and bishops, and other worthy persons, as were not of the counsel or conspiracy: to wit, the earle of Darby, the bishop of London L. privy seale: sir Henry Gilford knight of the gartar, controller of the kings house, the L. Sands knight of the gartar: L. chamberlain of the K. house: doctor Tailor, M. of the rols: sir T. Moore knight, chancellor of the dutchy of Lancaster: the bishop of Diuelin, the L. Mounteagle, the L. Harrenden, sir Ioh. Dudley knight, M. Ratclife, M. Willoughby, M. Parker, M. Sturton: vicounts and barons, sons and heires, sir Fra. Brian, sir Ed. Seimer, sir Rob. Gernigam, Doctor Stephen Gardener secretary, doctor Peter Vannes secretary: of the priuy chamber, master Hennege, master Arundell, master Kneuet, master Alford: Philitions, doctor Francis, doctor Smith: gentlemen vshers of the priuie chamber, M. Walgraue, M. Elles, sir Tho. Denis high chamberlaine, M. Sentclere Vicechamberlaine: gentlemen vshers, master Wentwoorth, master Hansard, master Pemercy, mast. Constable, M. Warren: of houshold, M. Cade steward, sir William Gascoigne treasurer, M. Goslike controller, master Broughton, master of the horse: doctor Allen, doctor Benet, doctor Duke deane of the Chappell, doctor Capon Almoner, the archdeacon of Canterbury, the archdeacon of Carleile: syr Iohn Sent-Iohn, Syr Richard Sandes knights, &c. in all to the number of 900. horses. Then marched he forward from his own house at Westminster, through London ouer London Bridge, hauing before him of Gentlemens great number, three in a ranke in veluet coates, and the most of them greate chaines of Golde about their neckes, and all his Yeomen followed him with Noblemens, and Gentlemens seruants, all in Orenge tawney coates, with the Cardinals hatte, and a T. C. for Thomas Cardinall, embrodered vpon all the coates, as well of his owne seruants, as of all the rest of the gentlemens seruants: and his sumpter mules which were 20. or more, with all his cariage of carts, and other of his traine, were passed before. He rode like a cardinall very sumptuously on his mule, with his spare mule and spare horse trapped in crimosin veluet vpon veluet, and stirrops gilt following him: and before him hee had his two great Crosses of siluer, his two great Pillars of siluer, the kings broad seale of England, and his cardinals hat, and a gentleman carrying his valence, otherwise called his cloakebag, which was made of fyne scarlet, altogither embrodred very richly with gold, hauing in it a cloak. Thus passed hee forth through London, and all the waie euerie daie in his iourney hee was thus furnished, hauing his Harbengers in euerie place before, which prepared lodging for his traine.

The first iourney that he made, was 2. miles beyond Dertford in Kent, vnto sir T. Wiltshires house, and the rest of his traine were lodged in Dertforde, and in the country thereabouts. The next daie he marched to Rochester, where he was lodged in the Bishops palace, and the rest of his Traine in the Citie and in Strowde. The third daie he rode to Feuersham, and there was lodged in the Abbey, and his traine in the towne there, and some in the country thereabouts. The fourth daie hee rode to Canterburie, where hee encountred with the worshipfull of the towne and countrie, and lodged in the Priorie of Christ Church, and all his Traine in the Citie, where hee continued three dayes, in which season there was a great faire in the towne, by reason it was the feast of Thomas of Canterburie. At which date there was a solemne procession, wherein the cardinall then went apparelled in his legantine ornaments, with his hat on his head, who commanded the monks and the quére to sing the Letanie after this sort, Sancta Maria, ora pro Papa nostro Clemente, the Cardinall kneeling at a stoole before the quére doore all the while the monkes and their quére stood in the body of the church singing the Letany: at which time the cardinall was seene to weepe bitterly, for heauines to sée the pope in such calamitie and danger of the Lance-knights.

The 11. of Julis the Cardinall arriued at Caleis, who was received with all the officers and counsell of the Towne, the Maior of the Towne, and the Maior of the Staple in procession, and in the Lanterne Gate, he kneeled and made his praiers: that done, they passed on before vntill he came to S. Maries Church, from whence he repayred with a great number of Noblemen and gentlemen, being pæres of the towne, vnto a place called the Checker, where he was lodged, and kept his house as long as he abode in the towne. When all his traine and carriage was landed, and euerie thing prepared for his tourney, he called all his noblemen and gentlemen, being seruants vnto him, into his priuie chamber, where they being all assembled before him he saide: I haue called you hither to the intent to declare vnto you, that I consider the duety you beare me, and the good will that I semblably beare to you, séeing your intendment to further the authoritie that I haue by commission, which your diligent seruice I will remember hereafter, and therefore I meane to declare the same directly to the king. Secondly, to shew you the nature of the Frenchmen. And thirdly, to instruct you howe and with what reuerence yée shall vse me for the honor of the kings maiestie, and then to enforme you how yée shall entertaine and accompanie the French men when yee shall méete at any time.

The first point yée shall vnderstand, that the K. maiesty for certaine weightie affaires, of his graces hath for more aduancement of his royall dignitie assigned me to be in this iourney his lieutenant, & what reuerence belongeth to the same I will tell you, for my part I must by vertue of my commission and lieutenantship assume and take vpon me to be estéemed in all honour and degrées of seruice, as to his highnesse presence is méete and due, and that in me nothing to be neglected, that to his royall estate is due and appertinent. And for my part yee shall sée me, that I will not omit one iote thereof. Therefore because that yée shall not be ignorant of your duetie in this case, as one of the chiefe causes of this your assembly, willing you as you will haue my fauour, I also charge you in the kings name, that ye do not forget the same in time and place, but that euery one of you doe obserue your duety vnto me accordingly, as ye will at your returne auoid the K. indignation, or obtaine & deserue his highnesse thankes, the which I will set forth, as each of you shall deserue. Now to the second point, the nature of the French men is such, that at the first méeting they will be as familiar with you as they had béene acquainted with you long before, & commune with you in their French tong, as though ye vnderstood euery word, therefore vse them in like maner, and be as familiar with them as they be with you. If they speake in their naturall tong, speake you again vnto them in the English tong: For, if you vnderstand not them, no more shall they vnderstand you: and speaking merilie to one of the gentlemen there, being a Welshman, said Rice (quoth he) speake you Welsh to them: I doubt not but that thy speech shall bee more diffuse to him, than his French shall be to thée.

Sebastian Munster a German Monke turns Protestant an excellt Mathematician & Master of ye Hebrew Tongue He writ also a Cosmography He way call'd ye Strabo of Germany & dyd of ye plague at Basil 1552.

And thus quoth he againe to them all, let all your entertainement and behauior be according to the order of all gentlenes and humilitie, that it may be reported after your departure from thence, that ye be gentlemen of right good behauior, and of much gentlenesse, and that yée are men, who knowe your duties to your Soueraigne Lorde, and to your Master, estéeming much your great reuerence. Thus shall yée not onlie obtaine to your selues great commendation and praise for the same, but also aduance the honor of your prince and Countrie: Polye go your waies, beeing admonished of all these pointes, and prepare your selues against to morrow, for then we intend (God willing) to set forward. The next morrow, being Mary Magdalens date, all things beeing furnished, the Cardinall aduanced out of Calis, with such a number of blacke veluet coates, as hath béene seldome séene with an ambassador, all the Speres of Calais and Guisnes, with all other Gentlemen besides his train, beeing garnished in blacke Veluet Coates and Chaines of gold. Thus passed hee forwarde with his Traine of Gentlemen before him three in a Ranke, which by supposall endured three quarters of a mile or more in length, hauing his Crosses and all other his accustomed and glorious furniture carried before him, as I haue before rehearsed, except the Broade Seale, the which hee left in Calais with Doctor Taylour, then master of the Rolles, vntill his returne. Passing thus on his way, and being scantlie ridden a mile, it began to raine so vehemently, as lightly had not béene séene the like, which endured vntill they came to Bologne, ere they came to Sandingfield, the cardinall of Lorraine a goodlie yoong gentleman, encountred the cardinall of Englande, and receiued him with great ioie and reuerence, and so passed forth with the Cardinall in communication vntill they came nigh vnto the saide Sandingfield, which was a place of Religion, standing betweene the English, French, and the emperors dominions, beeing a Newter, holding of neither of them. There awaited for him Le Countie Brian Captaine of Picardie, with a great number of Stradiates or Albenois, standing in arraie in a great péece of greene oates, all in harnes vpon high horses, passing on with the cardinall in a wing vnto Bolongne, and so after through Picardie: for the Cardinall doubted somewhat the Emperor, that he should laie some ambush to betrais him, for which cause the French king commanded them to attende vpon him for the assurance of his person. Thus rode he vntill he came within one English mile of Bolongne, where encountred him the worshipfull citizens of the Towne of Bolongne, hauing a learned man that made vnto him an oration in Latine, vnto the which the Cardinall semblablie made answeare: And that done, Mounsieur de Bees Captaine of Bolongne with the retinue there of gentlemen, met with him on horsebacke, and then with all this assemblie he rode into the towne lighting at the abbey gate, and from thence conueied with procession into the abbey church there offered, then went hee into the Abbey to his lodging, and all his traine were lodged in the high and base townes. The nert morning after, he rode to Mutterell Ser Lemere, where he was in like case encountred with the worshipfull of the towne all in one liuerie, hauing a learned man to make an Oration vnto him in latine, whom he answered also againe in latine. And as hee entred in at the gates, there was a canapie made readie of silke, embrodered with letters, and an hat euen as his men had on their Coates, and when that hee was lighted, his footemen hadde the same as a fee due to the office. Nowe was there made diuers Pageants for the ioie of his comming, who was called in the French tong there, and in all other places through the realme where hee rode or came, Le cardinall pacifique. The nert daie hee tooke his iourneie towardes Abuile, where hee was encountred with diuers gentlemen of the towne and countrie, and so receiued into the towne with pageantes, as hee rode thorowe the towne, hauing a like canopie borne ouer him, but more richer, and so brought to his lodging: in this towne he remained more than eight daies, where resorted to him dailie diuers of the French K. counsell, sitting with him in councell euerie daie, and continuallie feasting him & other. When the time came of his departing out of the town, he rode to the castle beyond the water of Some, called le Chanel de picquiny, adioining to the saide water vpon a Rocke, within which there was a Colledge of Priests, the scituation whereof was much like to the castle of Windsore, and there hee was receiued with solemne procession, conueying him first into the Church, and after into the castle to his lodging. At this castle sometime vpon the bridge that goeth ouer this water of Some, K. Edw. the 4. met with the F. king, as yée maie reade in our Chronicles: when my Lorde was setled in his lodging (saith mine author) I heard that the French K. shoulde come that daie into the towne of Amiens, which was not past six English miles from thence. And being desirous to sée his cõming thither, toke with me one or two of my L. gentlemen, and rode incontinentlie thither, aswel to furnish me of a conuenient lodging, as to sée the K. And when we came thither, being but strangers, toke vp our inne at the signe of the angell, directis against the West dore of the cathedral church de nostra Dame. After we had dined there, and taried vntill 3. or 4. of the clock, expecting the K. comming, in came madam Regent the K. mother, riding in a very rich chariot, & with her therein was the D. of Nauarre her daughter, furnished with 100. or more of ladies and gentlewomen following, euerie one riding vpon white palfreis: besides diuers and manie ladies, some in rich horslitters, and some in chariots, who lighted at the nert dore with al this train of ladies and gentlewomen, besides her gard, which was not smal in number.

Then within 2. houres after the king came in with a great shotte of guns, and diuers pageants made onelie for ioie of his comming, hauing about his person and before him, beside the wonderful number of noblemen and gentlemen, three great guards apparelled diuerslie: the first was of Switzers, and

The French kinge guard.

Burgonians with gunnes and pikes: the second was of French men, some with bowes and arrowes, and some with billes: the third guard pour le corps was of tall Scottes, which were more comelier persons than all the rest. The French guard and the guard of the Scots had one liuerie, being apparelled with rich coates of white cloth guarded with a rich guarde of siluer bullions of an handefull broad. The king came riding vpon a goodlie gennet, and alighted at the saide great Church, and so conueyed with Procession into the Bishops palace, where he was lodged, and also his mother. The next morning I rode againe to Picardie, to attend vpon my Lorde, at which time of my resorte, my Lorde was readie to go to horsebacke toward Amiens, and passing on his waie, he was incountred with diuers noble personages, making vnto him diuers orations in latine, to whom he made answere extempore. Then was worde brought him, that the king was comming to encounter him, wherefore he had none other shift, but to light at an old chappell that stood hard by the hie waie, and there he new apparelled himselfe into rich apparell, and so mounted againe vpon a moile verie richlie trapped, with a sute cloth altogither of crimosin veluet vpon veluet, purled with gold, and fringed about with gold fringe verie costly: his stirrops of siluer and gilt, the bosses of the same, and the cheekes of his mules bit were all gilt. And by that time that he was mounted againe, after this gorgeous sort, the king was come verie neere, within lesse than a quarter of an English mile, mustering vpon a hill, his guard standing in array vpon the top of the same hill, expecting my lords comming, to whom my Lord made as much haste as he conueniently might, till he came within a paire of buts lengths, and there he staied. The king perceiuing that, hauing two worthy yong gentlemen with him, the one called mounsier Vadamont, and the other mounsier de Guise, both brethren to the Cardinall of Lozaine, and to the D. of Lozaine: also being like apparelled, as the king was in purple veluet, lined with cloth of siluer, their coates cut: The king caused mounsier Vadamont to issue from him, and ride to my lord cardinall to know the cause of his tarrying: and this mounsier being mounted vpon a faire great gennet, toke his race with his horse vntill he came euen to my Lord, and there caused his horse to come aloofe twice or thrice, so nigh my Lordes moile, that he was in doubt of his horse, and with that he alighted, and doing humble reuerence, did his message to my Lorde, and that done he mounted againe, and made his horse to doe the like at his departing, as before he had done, and so repaired againe vnto the king: and his answere ended to the king, the king auanced forwards. That seeing, my Lord did the like: and in the midway they met, embracing each other with amiable countenance and entertainement. Then drewe into the place all noble men and gentlemen on both partes, with wonderfull cheere made one to another, as though they had been of old acquaintance. The preasse was such and so thicke, that diuers had their legges hurt with horses. Then the kings officers cried, march, march, deuaunt ale deuaunt. Then the king and the Cardinall on his right hand rode forth towards Amiens, euerie English gentleman accompanied with another of France. The traine of these two princes endured two long

long English miles, they were nobly receiued into the Towne of Amiens with shot of guns and costlie pageants, till the K. had brought the cardinall to his lodging, and then departed for that night, the king being lodged in the bishops palace. The next day after dinner the cardinall rode to the court to the king, at which time the king kept his bed: yet neuertheles, the Cardinall came into his bed chamber, where, on the one side of the bed sate the kings mother, and on the other side the Cardinall of Lorraine, accompanied with diuers other noble men of France, and after a short communication and drinking of a cuppe of wine with the kings mother, he departed to his owne lodging, accompanied with diuers gentlemen and noblemen, where they supped with him. Thus continued the Cardinall and the king in Amiens, the space of a fortnight and more, consulting and feasting eche other diuers times. In Amiens the king and my Lord heard masse, and both of them receiued the sacrament. And vpon our ladie daie the assumption my Lord said masse before the Regent, and the Quéene of Nauarre, and gaue them the sacrament. And there the king dressed a number of sicke folkes. Then the K. and the Cardinal remoued to a city called Champain, which was more then 20. English miles from Amiens, they were both lodged in the great castle of the towne, whereof the Cardinall had the one halfe assigned him for his lodging, and the king the other halfe. And likewise they deuided a long Galerie betwéene them, there was made in the midst a strong wall, with a windowe and a doore. The king and the Cardinall would manie times méete at the same windowe and talke: and diuers times they would goe into the other at the said doore. Then came there to my lorde Cardinall the lord Chancelor of France, with all the kings counsellers, where they toke great paines dailie in consultation, insomuch that the Cardinall of England fell out with the Chancelor of France, laying to his charge, that he went about to hinder the league which before his comming was concluded, insomuch, that Madam Regent her selfe and manie nobles of France, with much labor and trauell could scarcelie bring the cardinal to his former state of cõmunication, he was in such a wroth against the Chancelor: by these meanes, he brought other things to passe, that before he coulde not attaine, which was more for feare than for anie affection to the matter, he had the heads of the counsel so vnder his girdle. The next morning after this conflict he rose earlie about foure of the clocke, and sate him downe to write letters, into England vnto the King, commanding one of his chaplaines to prepare him readie to sate masse, insomuch that the chaplaine stode in his vestures vntill foure of the clocke in the afternoone: all which season the Cardinall neuer rose to eate or drinke, nor to make water, but continuallie wrote letters with his owne hand, hauing all that time his nightcap and his kerchéefe on his head, and about the houre of foure in the afternoone hee made an end, commanding Christopher Gunner the kings seruant, without delaie to ride post into England with those letters, whom he dispatched awaie or euer he dranke, and then went to masse, and said his seruice with his chaplaine, and then went and walked in a garden the space of an houre and more, and said his euensong, and after went both to dinner and supper all at once, and after supper, making but tarrying, scant an houre, but that he went to bed and toke his rest.

The next night after the cardinal made a great supper for madam Regent, for the Quéene of Nauarre and other great estates of Ladies and Noblewomen, and at the middest of the said banquet, the kings of France and of Nauarre, came sodainelie in vpon them vnlooked for, and toke their place in the lowest part of the banquet. The supper and banquet being finished, the ladies and Gentlemen fell to daunsing, and so passed awaie the most of the night ere they departed. There was not only plenty of fine meats, but also much mirth & solace, aswel in merie communication, as with the noise of my L. minstrels, who plaied there all that night so cunningly, that the king toke therein great pleasure, insomuch that he desired my lord to lende them vnto him for the next night, and after supper their banquet finished, the ladies and gentlemen fell to dansing, among whom one madam Fountaine a maide had the price. And thus passed they the most part of the night ere they departed. The nert day the king toke my lordes minstrels, and rode to a noblemans house where was some Image to whom he vowed a pilgrimage, to performe his deuotion. When hee came there which was in the night, he danced, and caused other to do the same, after the sound of my lords minstrels, who plaied there all night, and neuer rested, so that whether it were with extreme labour of blowing, or with poison (as some iudged) because they were commended by the king more than his owne, I cannot tell, but the Player on the Shalme (who was verie excellent in that instrument) died within a date or two after. Then the king returned into Champaigne, and caused a wild Boze to bee lodged for him in the forrest of Champaigne, and thither the Cardinall rode with him to see him hunt, where the Ladie Regent with a number of Ladies and Damosels were standing in Chariots, looking on the toile on the out side, which was pitched there for that purpose: among whome stood the Cardinall to regarde the hunting in Madame Regentes Chariot, and within the toyle was the king with diuers minion Gentlemen of France, readie furnished to this high and dangerous enterprise of the hunting of the perilous wilde swine, the king beeing in his dublet and hozen all of sheepes colour cloth, hauing in his slip a brace of great white Greyhounds, who were armed as the maner there is: and the rest of the kings Gentlemen being appointed to hunt this Boze, were likewise in their dublets and hose, holding each of them in their hands verie sharp boze speares. Then the king commanded the keepers to vncouch the Boze, and that euerie person being within the toile should go to a standing, among whome were diuers gentlemen and yeomen of England, and incontinent the boze issued out of his den, and followed with an hound, came into a plaine, where being scaled a while, and gazing vpon the people, and incontinent pursued by the hound, hee spied a little bush standing behinde a banke, ouer a ditch (vnder the which lais two French gentlemen) and thither fled, trusting there to haue defended himself, who thrust his head smuthing into the same bush, which caused the two gentlemen to fly from thence, as from the danger of death. Then was the boze by pursuit of hunters and the hound, driuen from thence, who ran straight to one of the Cardinalles footemen, a verie tall yeoman, who hadde in his handes a Jaueline, with the which hee was fayne to defende himselfe from the Boze a great while, the Boze continuallie foyning at him with his Tuskes, so that he was fayne at last to pitch his Jaueline in the grounde betweene him and the Boze: the which the Boze brake with the force of his foyning, and with that the yeoman drewe his swoode, and stoode at defence, and therewith the hunters came to the rescue, and put him once agayne to flight: with that hee fledde to another young Gentleman of Englande, called Master Henry Ratclife, who was sonne and heire to the Lorde Fitz Walter, since Earle of Sussex, who had borrowed by chaunce of a French Gentleman, a verie fyne and sharpe Boze Speare, wherewith hee thrust the Boze in the mouthe, and so into the throate, whereupon the passtime was ended. In the time of the Cardinalles abode in France, manie displeasures were doone against him, for all the payne and trauell he had taken for the qualifying of the French K. ransom: and amongst other this was one: there was no place where hee lodged after hee entred the territorie of France, but that hee was robbed in his priuie chamber either little or much, insomuch that at Champaine hee lost his Standish, which was all of Siluer and gilte, and there it was espied, and the partie taken, which was a boie of twelue or fourteene yeres old, a ruffians page of Paris, which haunted my Lordes lodging without suspition, vntill hee was taken lying vnder my Lordes priuie Staires, vpon which occasion he was apprehended, examined, and confessed all things that hee had stolen, the ruffian his master had receyued, maintained, and procured him so to doe. The Cardinall reuealed this to the councell, by meanes whereof the ruffian was apprehended, and set on the Pillorie in the midst of the Market place, which was but a small punishment for such an offence. Another displeasure was this: some lewde person hadde ingraued in my Lordes Windowe vpon the leaning stone there, a cardinalles hat, with a paire of gallowes ouer it, in derision of my Lorde, with diuers other vnkinde dealinges, the which I omit to write, they be so slanderous matters. The Cardinall passing diuers dayes in consultation, and in other matters, expecting the returne of Christopher Gunner, at the last he returned with letters againe, vpon receyt whereof the Cardinall intended to remoone: being then at masse in his Closet, hee consecrated the Chauncellor of Fraunce Cardinall, and put vpon him his habite, his hat and cap of Scarlet, and then toke his iourney, returning againe into England, making such necessary expedition, that hee came to Guisnes, where hee was noblie receiued by the lord Sandes then Captayne there, with all the retinue of the same. And from thence hee rode to Caleis, where hee taried the shipping of his stuffe, horses and traine. And in the meane time, he stablished there a mart for all nations. These things and other, for the Weale of the Towne and garison by him perfect, hee tooke shipping and arriued at Doner the twenty foure of September, from whence hee rode to the Court, the king beeing in his Progresse at Syr Henrie Wyats house in Kent, hee went immediatlie to him, with whome hee had long talke, & continued two or three dales there in the court, and then returned to his house at Westminster, where hee remained vntill Michaelmas Terme, which was in lesse than a fortnight after, and exercised his roome of chancellorship as hee was accustomed.

Scarcity of bread.

Such scarcitie of bread was in London, & all England, that manie died for default thereof: the king of his godnes sent to the citie of his owne prouision 600. quarters, or else for one week there had been little bread. The bread carts comming from Stratford towarde London were met at the Mile end by the citizens, so that the maior and Shirifs were forced to goe and rescue the same carts, and to see them brought to the markets appointed. Wheat was then at fiftéen shillings the quarter: but shortlie after the merchants of the Stilyard brought from Danske such store of Wheate and Rye, that the same was better cheape to bee solde in London, than in anie other parte of the Realme besides.

Cardinal Wolsey in the Star chamber declareth what an honorable peace he had concluded.

After the beginning of the terme the cardinall caused to be assembled in the Star chamber, all the noblemen, Iudges, and Iustices of peace that were in Westminster hall at that time present: and there made to them a long oration, declaring the cause of his ambassage into France, and of his procéedinges there: among the which he said he had concluded such an amitie, as neuer was heard in the realme before, aswel betwéen the emperor and vs, as betwéen the K. our soueraigne and the French K. with a perpetuall peace, the which should be confirmed in writing, sealed in fine gold: affirming further, that the K. of England should receiue yérely his tribute by that name out of the dutchie of Normandy, with all the costs which he had sustained in the warres. And also, where there was a restraint made in France of the French Quenes dowrie (whome the duke of Suffolke had married) for diuers yéres during the wars, it was concluded, that she should not only receiue it againe, but also the arrerages that were vnpaid. This peace thus concluded, there should bee such an amitie betwéene the gentlemen of each realme, and entercourse of merchants, that it should séeme to all men both territories to be but one monarch: gentlemen maie trauell from one Countrie to another, for their recreation and pastime: the merchants being in either country arriued, shal be assured to trauel about their affaires in peace and tranquility, so that this realme shall ioie and prosper for euer, &c.

Ambassadors out of France.

The 20. of October were receiued into London certaine ambassadors out of France, about 80. in number, of the most noble and worthy gentlemen in all France: they were lodged in the bishops palace in Pauls churchyard, to whom diuers noblemen resorted, and gaue them diuers presents, especially the maior of the city of London, as wine, sugar, war, Capons, Wildfoule, beéfes, muttons, and other necessarie things in great abundance, for the expenses of their house. When they resorted vnto the court, being at Grenwich, where they were receiued by the king. They had commission to establish the king in the order of France, for whom they brought, for that intent, a collar of fine golde, with the Michaell hanging thereat, and robes to the same order appertinant, the which was of blew veluet richly embrodered. And the king to gratifie the French K. with the semblable he sent a noble man of the order here in England, with Gartar the herault into France, to establish the French king, in the order of the Gartar, with a semblable Collar, with a Gartar and Robes according to the same.

The ambassadors remaining here vntill their returne, all things being concluded concerning the perpetuall peace vpon solemne ceremonies and othes contained in certain instruments touching the same, which was confirmed by receiuing of the Sacrament in Paules Church of London by the king, and the grand master of France, who representing the king his master, and there the instrument were sealed with gold, and the king put his hand thereunto, and the grand master did the like: betweene whome the cardinall diuided the Sacrament. And that don, they departed, the K. rode with the Cardinall to Westminster, and there dined with al the Frenchmen, passing al the day after with consultation of weighty matters, touching the conclusion of the saide article of the perpetuall peace.

The king then departed again by water to Grenewich, at whose departing it was concluded by the kings deuise, that all the French men shoulde resort to Richmond, and hunt in euerie one of the parkes there: and from thence to Hampton court, and there to hunt, and the cardinall to make there a Supper or banquet, or both to them. And from thence they should ride to Windsor, and there to hunt: and after to returne to London, and so to Grenewich, and there to banquet with the K. Then was there made great preparation of al things for this great assembly at Hampton court: the cardinal called before him his principal officers, as Steward, treasurer, controller, and clearke of his kitchin, to whom he declared his mind, touching the entertainment of the Frenchmen at Hampton court; his pleasure to them known, they sent outcaters, purueiors, and other, the cookes wrought both night and day in suttleties, the yeomen and gromes of the wardrobes were busied in hanging of the chambers, and furnishing the same with beds of silk and other furniture: there were prouided 280. beds furnished with al maner of furniture to them belonging, too long particularly to be rehearsed.

The date was come to the French men assigned, and they readie assembled before the howre of their appoyntment, wherefore the Officers caused them to ride to Hamwoorth, a place and a Parke of the kinges within three miles, there to hunt and spende the date vntill night, at which time they returned againe to Hampton court, and euerie of them conueied to their seuerall chambers, hauing in them great fiers and Wine for their comforte, remaynyng there vntill the supper was readie. The chambers where they supped and banquetted, were ordered in this sort: first, the great wayting Chamber was hanged with rich Arras, as none were better than other, and furnished with tall yeomen to serue. There were set tables rounde about the Chamber banquetwise couered, a cupboord was there garnished with white siluer plate, hauing also in the same Chamber to giue the more light, foure plates of siluer set with great lights, and a great fire of wood and coles. The next Chamber being the chamber of presence, was hanged with verie rich arras, & a sumptuous cloth of estate furnished with many goodly gentlemen to serue the tables ordered in maner as the other Chamber was, sauing that the high Table was remoued beneath the cloth of estate toward the middest of the chamber couered. Then was there a cupbord, being in length as broad as the chamber, with fire deskes of height, garnished with guilt plate, hauing with lights one paire of candlesticks of siluer and guilt, being curiously wrought, which cost three hundred markes, and standing vpon the same two lights of ware burning as big as torches to set it forth. This cupbord was barred round about, that no man could come nigh it, for there was none of all this plate touched in this banquet, for there was sufficient besides. The plates that hung on the wals to giue light were of siluer and guilt, hauing in them great pearchers of ware burning, a great fire in the chimney, and all other things necessarie for the furniture of so noble a feast. Now was all things in a readinesse. The trumpets were blowen to warne to supper: the officers discretely conducted these noble men from their chambers into the chamber where they should sup, and caused them there to sit downe, and that done, their seruice came vppe in such abundance both costly and full of subtleties, and with such a pleasant noise of instruments of musicke, that the French men (as it seemed) were rapte into a heauenly paradise. The Cardinall was not yet come, but they were merrie and pleasant. Before the second course, the Cardinall came in booted and spurred, all sodainely amongst them, and bade them Proface: at whose comming there was great sote, with rising euerie man from his place. The cardinall caused them to sit still and keepe their roumes, and being in his apparell as he rode, called for a chaire & sate in the midst of the high table. Anone came vp the second course, with so many dishes, subtleties, and deuises, aboue a hundred in number, which were of so goodly proportion & costly, that I thinke the Frenchmen neuer saw the like, the wonder was no lesse than it was worthie indeede. There were castles with images, in the same Pauls church, for the quantity, aswell counterfeited, as the Painter should haue painted it on a cloth or wall. There were beasts, birds, and personages, most liuely made and counterfeited, some fighting with swords, some with guns, & crosbowes, some vaughting and leaping, some dancing with ladies, some on horses in complete harnesse, sulking with long and sharpe speares, with many moe deuises. Among all other was a chesse-borde made of spiced plate, with men there of the same, and for the good proportion, and because the French men be verie expert in that play, my lord Cardinall gaue the same to a gentleman of France, commanding there should be made a goodly case for the preseruation thereof in all haste, that he might conuey the same into his countrey. Then toke my lord a bole of gold filled with ipocrase, and putting off his cap, said: I drinke to the king my soueraigne lord, and next, vnto the king your master, and therewith dranke a good draught: and when he had done, hee desired the grand master to pledge him cup and al, the which was well worth 500. marks, and so caused all the bords to pledge these two royall princes: then went the cups so merrily about, that manie of the French men were faine to be led to their beds.

Then rose vp the Cardinall, and went into his priuie chamber to pull off his bootes, and to shift him, and then went he to supper in his priuie chamber, and making a verie short supper, returned into the chamber of presence among the Frenchmen, using them so lovingly and familiarly, that they could not commend him too much: and whilest they were in communication and other pastimes, all their liueries were serued to their chambers, euery chamber had a bason and an ewer of siluer, a great liuerie pot of siluer, and some guilt, yea and some chamber had two liuery pots, with wine and beere: a siluer candlesticke, both white and plaine, hauing in it two sizes, and a staffe torch of ware, a fine manchet, and a cheat loafe. Thus was euery chamber furnished through all the house: and yet the cupbords in the two banquetting chambers not once touched.

Thus, when it was more than time conuenient, they were conueied to their lodgings, where they rested that night.

In the morning they dined with the Cardinall, and so departed to Windsore. After the returne of the strangers from Windsore, which place, with the order thereof they much commended: The day approched that they were by the king inuited to the court, where first they dined, and after dancing & other pastimes by them done, the time of supper came on. Then was the banquetting chamber in the tilt yard at Greenewich, to the which place these strangers were conducted by the noblest personages in the court, where they did both sup and banquet. But to describe to you the order, the dishes, the subtilties, and strange deuises of the same, I lacke both a head of fine wit, and also cunning in my bowels to declare these wonderfull deuises. But this ye shall vnderstand, although it were maruellous sumptuous at Hampton court, yet that notwithstanding this banquet excelled the same, as far as golde doth excede siluer in value of weight for weight, and the beholders professed neuer to haue seene the like. King Henry banqueteth the French ambassadors at Greenewich.

In the middest of this banquet, there was tourneying at the barriers, with lusty gentlemen in complete harnesse very gorgeous on foote. Then was there the like on horsebacke. And after all this was the most goodliest disguising or enterlude made in latine, the players being so rich, and of so strange deuises, that it passeth my capacity to expound.

This done, there came such a number of the fairest ladies and gentlewomen that bare any bruite of beauty in all the realme, in most richest apparell that might be deuised, with whom the gentlemen of France danced, vntill a gorgeous maske came in of gentlemen, who danced and masked with these ladies. This done, came in a maske of ladies: these ladies toke each of them one of the Frenchmen to dance and to maske: these women maskers spake good French to the Frenchmen, which delighted them very much to heare these ladies speake to them in their mother tongue.

Thus was this night consumed, from fiue of the clocke vntill three of the clocke after midnight, and then euerie man departed to their lodgings. After all this solemne chere at a date appointed, they resorted to the court to take their leaue of the king and other noblemen: then came they to Westminster vnto the cardinall, of whome they receiued the kings rewards, the which were these: euery man of honour and estimation had plate, some to the value of three or foure hundred pound, and some more, and some lesse, besides other great giftes receiued before of the king, as gownes of veluet with rich furres, great chaines of golde, and goodlie horses, with diuers other giftes, and the least of them had a sum of crownes of gold: the worst page amongst them had twentie crownes for his part: and being thus noblie rewarded, they departed.

A French craer chased to the Tower wharffe of London.

A French craer, of 30. tunne, being manned with eight and thirtie French men, and a Flemmish craer of seauen and twentie tun, and foure and twentie Flemmings, meeting at Margate, the one chased the other along the riuer of Thamis to the Tower wharffe of London, where sir Edmond Walsingham lieutenant of the Tower, staied them both, and tooke both their captaines and men.

The 17. day of June, the terme was adiourned to Michaelmas, because of the sweating sicknesse that then raigned in the citie of London, and there was no such watch at Midsummer, as before time had beene accustomed: of this sicknes died manie sodainlie in the kings court, namelie sir William Compton, sir Francis Points, and other, who died with little warning. The king for a space remoued almost euery daie till he came to Titenhanger, a place of the abbot of Saint Albons, and there he with the queene, and a small company about them, remained till the sicknes was past.

King Henries marriage called in question.

Before the cardinals going into France in the preceding yeere, it was talked among the people, that king Henry (as ye haue heard) was by some perswaded, that his marriage with queene Katherine could not be good nor lawful, wherfore he determined to haue the case examined, cleered and adiudged by learning, law, & sufficient authoritie. The cardinall was by some put in blame for that scruple now cast into the kings conscience, for the hate he bare to the Emperor, and therefore he did not only procure the king of England to ioine in friendship with the French king, but also (as they said) sought a diuorce betwixt the king and the queene. But howsoeuer it came about that the K. was thus troubled in conscience concerning his marriage, it followed, that to haue the doubt cleerly remoued, he called together the best learned of the realme, which were of seuerall opinions, wherefore he thought to knowe the truth by indifferent iudges, lest peraduenture the Spaniards and other would say that his owne subiects were not indifferent iudges in this behalfe, and therefore wrote his cause to Rome, as also (as ye haue heard) sent to the Vniuersities of Italie & France for their opinions: and desired the court of Rome to send into the realm a legate which should be indifferent, and of great and profound iudgement to heare the cause debated. At whose request the whole consistorie of the College of Rome, sent thither Laurence Campeius a Priest Cardinall, a man of great wit and experience, which had beene sent hither before in the 10. yeere of this king, as yee haue heard, and with him was ioined in commission the Cardinall of Yorke, and Legate of England. This cardinall Campeius by long iournies came into England, and much preparation was made to receiue him triumphantlie into London: but he was so sore vexed with the gout, that he refused all such solemnities, and desired that he might without without pompe be conueied to his lodging for his more quiet and rest: and so on the 9. of October he came from S. Mary Ouerys by water to the Bish. of Bathes place without Temple barre, where hee was visited of the cardinal of Yorke, & diuers other estates and prelats: and after he had rested him a season, he was brought to the K. presence, then being at Bridewell, by the cardinall of Yorke, and was caried in a chaire betweene 4. persons, for he was not able to stand, & the cardinal of Yorke & he sate both on the right hand of the K. throne, and there one Francisco secretary to cardinal Campeius made an eloquent oration in Latin: in which he rehearsed first, with what cruelty the emperors soldiors had handled the pope, what tyrannie they had shewed to the cardinals and priests, what sacrilege and spoile they had committed in S. Peters church, how they had violated virgins, ravished mens wiues, and in conclusion, spoyled, robbed, and tormented all the Romans and inhabitants in the citie of Rome. And further he shewed what friendship the colledge of Rome founde at the K. hands, & the French kings in the time of that tribulation, that if they had not ioined together, the city of Rome with all their gouernors had bin brought to vtter ruine: for the which he saide, pope Clement and all his Colledge of Cardinals, and the Senators of the Citie with all the Citizens rendred to the king their heartie thanks, and promised him their loue and fauor, and amitie perpetuall. Oration

To the which Oration Doctor Foxe Provoste of Cambridge, made a discreete aunswere: and as to the first point, hee declared that the king much lamented to heare his friendes, yea, or anie other Christian men to bee handled with such tyrannie: and as touching the seconde poynt, hee sayde that the king did but the duetie of a Christian Prince to relieue his friendes being in captiuitie, for the which hee would that the whole citie of Rome should giue thanks to God, and not to him. After which answere made, the two Legates communed secretelie with the king a long space, and after departed to their lodging. Of the comming of this Legate the people, especiallie Women, talked largely, and said, that the king would for his owne pleasure haue another wife, & had sent for this Legate to be diuorced from his Quéene, with manie foolish wordes, insomuch, that whosoeuer spake against the marriage, was of the common people abhorred and reproued, which common rumour was related to the king. Wherefore he like a prudent prince, willing al men to know his intent and purpose, caused all his nobilitie, iudges, and counsellors, with diuers other persons, to come to his place of Bridewel on Sondaie the 8. of Nouember at afternoone, in his great chamber, and there to them sayde, as neere as I coulde carie awaie (saith Hall) in these words following: Our trustie and welbeloued subiectes, both you of the nobilitie, and you of a meaner sort, it is not vnknowne to you that we, both by gods prouision, and true and lawful inheritance, haue raigned ouer this realme almost 20 yeares: during which time, wee haue so ordered vs, thanked bee God, that no outward enemie hath oppressed you, nor taken anie thing from vs, nor we haue inuaded no realme but we haue had victorie and honor, so that we thinke you nor none of your predecessors neuer liued more quietlie, more wealthie, nor Oration answered. The K. oration.

in more estimation vnder anie of our noble progenitors. But when we remember our mortalitie, and that we must die, then we thinke that all our doings in our little time are cléerely defaced, and worthie of no memorie, if we leaue you in trouble at the time of our death. For if our true heire bee not known at the time of our death, sée what trouble shall succéed to you and your children. The experience thereof some of you haue séene, after the death of our noble grandfather Edward the 4. and some haue heard what manslaughters continued in this realme betweéne the houses of Yorke and Lancaster, by the which dissension this realme was like to haue bene cléerelie destroied. And although it hath pleased God to send vs a faire daughter of a noble woman and me, begotten to our great comfort, yet it hath bene tolde vs by diuers great clarkes, that neither she is our lawfull daughter, nor her mother our lawfull wife, but that we liue together abhominably and detestably in open adultery, insomuch, that when our ambassade was last in France, and motion was made, that the D. of Orliance should marrie our said daughter, one of the chiefe counsellors to the French king saide: It were well done to know whether she be the king of Englands lawfull daughter, or not: for well knowne it is, that he begate her on his brothers wife, which is direcly against Gods law, and his precept. Thinke you (my lords) that these wordes touch not my bodie and soule: thinke you that these doings doe not daily and hourely trouble my conscience and ver my spirits: Yes: we doubt not but if it were your owne cause, euerie man would séeke remedie, when the perill of your soule, and the losse of your inheritance is openly laid to you. For this onely cause I protest before God, and in the word of a prince, I haue asked counsell of the greatest clearkes in christendome, and for this cause I haue sent for this legat, as a man indifferent, only to know the truth, and to settle my conscience, and for none other cause, as God can iudge. And as touching the D. if it be iudged by the law of God, that she is my lawfull wife, there was neuer thing more acceptable to me in my life, both for the discharge of my conscience, & also for the good qualities and conditions which I know to be in her: for I assure you all, that beside her noble parentage of the which she is descended (as all you know) she is a woman of most gentlenes, of most humilitie, and buxumnes, yea, and of all good qualities appertaining to nobilitie, she is without comparison, as I these 20. yéeres almost haue had the true experiment, so that if I were to marrie againe, if the marriage might be good, I would surely chose her aboue all other women: but if it be determined by iudgement, that our marriage was against Gods law and cléerely void, then I shall not only sorrow the departing from so good a lady and louing companion, but much more lament and bewaile my infortunat chance, that I haue so long liued in adulterie to Gods great displeasure, and haue no true heire of my bodie to inherite this realme. These be the sores that vexe my minde, these be the paines that trouble my conscience, and for these griefes I séeke a remedy: therefore I require of you all as our trust and confidence is in you, to declare to our subiects our intent, according to our true meaning, and desire them to praie with vs that the truth may be known, for the discharge of our conscience, & sauing

of our soule: and for declaration hereof I haue assembled you together, and now you maie depart.

To see what countenance was made amongst the hearers of this oration, it was a strange sight, for some sighed: said nothing, other were sory to heare the K. so troubled in his conscience: others fauouring the Q. much sorrowed, that this matter was now opened, and so euery man spake as his hart serued him: thus much Hall. And thus G. C. The cardinall of Yorke saith he, being prouoked to declare his opinion, and wisedome in the aduancement of the kings purpose, who thought it not méete to wade too far alone, or to giue his sallie iudgment in so weighty a matter, desired of the K. licence to alle counsell of men of famous learning, both in the diuine and ciuill lawes. That obtained, by his legantine authoritie, he sent his commission out for all the bishops of the realme that were learned in either of the said lawes, or had in any high estimation for their prudent counsell and iudgement, in princelie affaires of long experience. Then assembled those noble prelates and notable clarks of both vniuersities of Oxford and Cambridge, as also of diuers cathedrall churches of this realme accounted learned, and of witty discretion in determination of doubtfull questions. Then was this matter of the kings case consulted of from day to day, that it was to the learned a godly hearing: but in fine the ancient fathers of both lawes, departed with one iudgement, contrarie to the principall expectation. Then was it thought expedient, that the K. should send out his commissioners into all the vniuersities of christendom, to bring with them the definition of their opinions in the same vnder the seale of euerie vniuersitie, which they obtained. Hauing now a sure staffe to stand by, these proceedings declared to the cardinall, he sent againe for the bishops, to whom he declared the trauell of these commissioners. And for affirmance thereof, shewed them the instruments of euery vniuersity vnder their seuerall seales. They went once againe to consultation. It was then concluded, that the king should send to the pope, declaring the opinions of these vniuersities, authorised by their common seales: to the which it was thought that the consent of these prelates of this realme should be necessary to be sent thither, altogither comprised in an instrument, sealed with all their seales annexed to the said instrument. Not long after the ambassadors were assigned to trauell in the matter, hauing certaine instructions, among which one was this, that if the Pope would not giue iudgement definitiue in the kings case, to require another commission to be granted vnder lead, to stablish a court to be kept in England, for that purpose directed to the lord cardinall and legat of England, and to the cardinal Campeius, who was then (though he were a stranger) bishop of Bathe (the which the king had giuen him) to determine, and iustly to iudge according to conscience and discretion: To the which, after long suite made, and the good will of the same Cardinall obtained to trauell into England, the pope granted to their suite, and the cardinall arriued in England, as ye before haue heard.

Now after some deliberation and consultation in the ordering and 1529.
doing of the kings matters, and his commission, and the articles of his ambassade

sæne and read, and disgested, it was determined, that the king and Quæne his wife should be lodged at Bridewell. And then in the blacke Friars a certayne place was there appointed most conuenient for the K. and quænes repaire to the Court, there to bee kept for the disputation and determination of the case, whereas these two legates sate as iudges, before whome the king and Q. were ascited and sommoned to appeere: which was a strange sight, and the newell deuise that euer was read or heard of before in anie region, storie, or chronicle, a king and a Quæne to be constained by processe compellatorie to appeere in anie court as common persons within their owne Realme and dominion, to abide the iudgements and decrees of their owne subiects, being the royall diademe and prerogatiue thereof. Wee shall vnderstande (as I haue sayde before) that there was a court erected in the blacke Friars in London, whereas sate these two cardinals for Iudges in the same, in the moneths of Aprill, Maie, June, and Julie. Nowe will I set you out the manner and order of the same court: first, there was a court platted in Tables and Benches in manner of a Consistorie, one seate raysed higher for the Iudges to sit on than the other were. Then as it were in the middest of the sayde Iudges aloft aboue them 3. degrees high, was a cloth of estate hanged, with a Chaire royall vnder the same, wherein sate the king, and beside him, some distance from him sate the Q. and vnder the iudges sæt sate the scribes and other necessary officers for the execution of the processe, and other thinges appertaining to such a court: the chiefe scribe was D. Steuens, after B. of Winchester, and the apparator, who was Caller of the Court, was one Cooke (most commonlie called Cooke of Winchester.) Then before the king and the iudges within the court sate the Archbish. of Canterb. D. Warham, and all the other bishops. Then stood at both endes within, the counsellors learned in the lawes, as well the kinges as the Quænes. The doctors of law for the king, were doctor Simpson that was after bishop of Chichester, and doctor Bell, that was after bishop of Worcester, with diuers other, and proctors in the same law on the same side were, doctor Peter, doctor Tregonel, with others. On the other side for the Q. were doctor Fisher B. of Rochester, doctor Standish, and doctor Ridley, a verie small man of stature, but surelie a great and excellent clearke in diuinitie. Thus was the court furnished. The Iudges commaunded the crier to proclaime silence whilest their commission was reade, both to the court, and to the people assembled. That done, the Scribes comaunded the cryer to call the king by the name of king Henry of Englande, come into the Court, &c. With that the king aunswered and sayde: Here. Then called hee the Queene, by the name of Katherine Queene of Englande, come into the Court, &c. Who made no aunswere, but rose incontinent out of her Chayre, and because shee couldo not come to the King directlie, for the distance seuered betweene them, shee went about by the Court, and came to the King, kneeling downe at his feete in the sight of all the Court and people, to whome shee sayde in effect these wordes, as followeth: Syr (quoth shee) I desire you to doe mee iustice and right, and take some pitie vpon mee, for I am a poore woman, and a straunger, borne out of your dominion, hauing heere no indifferent Counsell, and lesse assurance of

Words of Q. Katherine.

friendship: Alas sir, what haue I offended you, or what occasion of displeasure haue I shewed you, intending thus to put me from you after this sort? I take god to my iudge, I haue been to you a true and an humble wife, euer conformable to your will & pleasure, that neuer contraried or gainsaid anie thing thereof, and being alwaies contented with all things wherin you had anie delight or dalliance, whether little or much, without grudge or countenance of discontentation or displeasure: I loued for your sake all them whom you loued, whether I had cause or no cause, whether they were my friends or enemies. I haue bene your wife these twentie yeres or mo, and you haue had by me diuers children, and when ye had me at the first, I take God to be my iudge, that I was a verie maid, and whether it be true or no, I put it to your conscience. If there be anie iust cause that you can alledge against me, either of dishonestie, or matter lawfull to put me from you, I am content to depart to my shame and rebuke: and if there be none, then I praie you to let me haue iustice at your hand. The king your father was in his time of such an excellent wit, that he was accounted among all men for wisedome to be a second Salomon, and the king of Spaine my father Ferdinando was reckoned one of the wisest princes that raigned in Spaine manie yeres before: it is not therefore to be doubted, but that they had gathered as wise counsellers vnto them of euerie realme, as to their wisedomes they thought meete, and as to me seemeth there were in those daies as wise and well learned in both the realmes, as be nowe at this daie, who thought the marriage betweene you and me good and lawfull: therefore it is a wonder to me to heare, what new inuentions are now inuented against me that neuer intended but honestie: and nowe to cause me to stand to the order and iudgement of this court, ye should (as seemeth me) doe me much wrong, for ye mate condemne me for lacke of answere, hauing no counsell but such as ye haue assigned me: ye must consider that they cannot be indifferent on my part when they be your own subiects, and such as ye haue taken and chosen out of your owne councell, whereunto they be priuie, and dare not disclose your will and intent. Therefore I humblie desire you in the way of charitie to spare me, vntill I may know what counsell and aduise my friends in Spaine wil aduertise me to take, and if you wil not, then your pleasure be fulfilled: and with that she arose vp, making a low curtesie to the king, and departed from thence, supposing that she would haue resorted againe to her former place. But she toke her way straight out of the court, leaning vpon the arme of one of her seruants, who was her general receiuer, called M. Griffith. The king being aduertised that she was readie to go out of the house, where the court was kept, commanded the crier to call her againe, who called her by these words, Katherine Q. of England, come into the court: with that quoth M. Griffith, Madam, ye be called againe. On, on (quoth she) it maketh no matter, it is no indifferent court for me, therefore I will not tarrie, go on your waies: and thus she departed without any further answere at that time or anie other, and neuer would appeare after in any court. The king perceiuing she was departed thus, and considering her words which she pronounced before him, said to the audience these words in effect: For as much (quoth he) as the Quéene is gone, I will in her absence declare vnto you all: She hath béen to me as true, as obedient, and as comfortable a wife, as I would wish or desire: she hath all the vertuous qualities that ought to be in a woman of her dignity, or in ante other of a baser estate: she is also surely a noble woman borne, her conditions will well declare the same. With that (quoth cardinall Wolsey) Sir, I most humbly require your highnes, to declare before al this audience, whether I haue béene the chiefe and first mouer of this matter vnto your maiestie or no, for I am greatlie suspected herein. My Lord Cardinall (quoth the K.) I can well excuse you in this matter: marie (quoth he) ye haue béene rather against me in the tempting hereof, than a setter forward or mouer of the same: the speciall cause that moued me vnto this matter, was a certaine scrupulositie that pricked my conscience, vpon certain words spoken at a time when it was, by the B. of Bayon the French ambassador, who had béen hither sent vpon the debating of a marriage to be concluded betwéene the princesse our daughter the ladie Mary, and the Duke of Orleance, second son to the K. of France, and vpon the resolution and determination of the same, he desired respite to aduertise the king his master thereof, whether our daughter Mary should be legitimate, in respect of this my marriage with this woman, being sometime my brothers wife: which words once conceiued within the secret bottome of my conscience, engendred such a scrupulous doubt, that my conscience was incontinently accombred, vexed and disquieted, whereby I thought my selfe to be greatly in danger of Gods indignation, which appeared to be (as me séemed) the rather, for that he sent vs no issue male: & all such issues male as my said wife had by me, died incontinent after they came into the world, so that I doubted the great displeasure of God in that behalfe. Thus my conscience being tossed in the waues of a scrupulous conscience, & partly in despaire to haue anie other issue than I had already by this ladie nowe my wife, it behoued me further to consider the state of this realme, and the danger that it stood in for lacke of a prince to succéede me, I thought it good in releasl of the weightie burden of my weake conscience, & also the quiet estate of this worthie realme, to attempt the lawe therein, whether I mate lawfullie take another wife more lawfully, by whom God mate send me more issue, in cas this my first copulation was not good, without any carnal concupiscence, and not for any displeasure or misliking of the quéenes person and age, with whom I would be as well contented to continue, if our marriage may stand with the lawes of God, as with ante woman alme: in which point consisteth all this doubt that we go about now to trie, by the learning, wisedome, & iudgement of you our prelats and pastors of all this our realme and dominion now here assembled for that purpose, to whose conscience and learning I haue committed the charge and iudgement, according to the which, I will (God willing) be right well content to submit my selfe, and for my part obey the same: wherein, after that I perceiued my conscience so doubtfull, I moued it in confession to you my lord of Lincoln then ghostly father: and for as much as then you your selfe were in some doubt, you moued me to aske the counsel of al you my lords: whereupon I moued you my lord of Canterburie, first to haue your licence, cence, in as much as you were metropolitane, to put this matter in question, and so I did of all you my lords, to which you granted vnder your seales, and that I haue here to be shewed. That is truth, if it please your grace, quoth the archbishop of Canterburie, I doubt not but my brethren here present will acknowledge the same: No sir not so, vnder your correction, quoth the bishop of Rochester, for you haue not mine: No, ah, quoth the king, loke here, is not this your hand and seale, and shewed him the instrument with seales: No forsoth, quoth the bishop. How saie you to that, quoth the K. to the archbishop of Canterburie? Sir, it is his hand and his seale, said my L. of Canterburie. No my lord (quoth the bishop of Rochester) indeed you were in hand with me to haue both my hand and seale, as other of my lords haue done, but then I said again to you, that I would neuer consent to ante such act, for it was much against my conscience, and therfore my hand and seale should neuer be set to any such instrument, God willing, with much more matter touching the same communication betweene vs. You saie truth, quoth the archbishop of Canterburie, such words you had vnto me, but you were fully resolued at last, that I should subscribe your name, and put to your seale my selfe, and you would allow the same. All which, quoth the bishop of Rochester, vnder your correction my lord, is not true. Well, well (quoth the king) it maketh no great matter, we will not stand with you in argument, you are but one man. And then the king rose vp, and the court was adiorned vntill another date.

The next court date the cardinals sate againe, at which time the counsell on both sides were there ready to answere: the kings counsel alledged the matrimonie not to be lawfull at the beginning, because of the carnall copulation had betweene prince Arthur and the Quéene. This matter being verie vehementlie touched on that side, and to proue it, they alledged manie reasons and similitudes of truth, and being answered negatiuelie againe on the other side, it seemed that all their former allegations were verie doubtfull to be tried, and that no man knew the truth. Yes (quoth the bishop of Rochester) I know the truth: how know you (quoth my L. cardinall) the truth more than anie other person? Yes forsoth my lord (quoth he) Quia ego sum professor veritatis, therefore I know the truth: I know that God is truth it selfe, and he neuer saith but truth, and God said: Quos Deus coniunxit, homo non separet. And for as much as this marriage was ioined and made by God to a good intent, I saie that I know the truth, and that man cannot breake vpon anie wilfull occasion that which God hath made and constituted. So much doth all faithfull men (quoth my lord cardinall) know as well as you, yet this reason is not sufficient in this case, for the kings counsell doe alledge diuers presumptions to proue that it was not lawfull at the beginning. Ergo it was not ordained by God, for God doth nothing without a dus order, therefore it is not to bee doubted, but if the presumptions be true, which they do alledge to be most true, then the coniunction was, ne could not be of God. Therefore I saie to you my lord of Rochester, ye know not the truth, vnlesse ye can auoid their presumptions by iust reasons. Then quoth doctor Ridley, it is a shame and a great dishonor to this honorable presence, that anie such presumption should be alledged in this open court, which be to detestable to be rehearsed: what (quoth my lord cardinall) Domine doctor magis reuerenter? No, no, my L. (quoth he) there belongeth no reuerence to be giuen to this matter, for an vnreuerent matter would be vnreuerently answered: and there they left, and proceded forth with other matter.

Thus the court passed from session to session, and daie to daie, that at a certaine daie of their session, the king sent for my L. cardinall to come to him to Bridewell, who to accomplish his commandement went to him, and being there with him in communication in his priuie chamber from .11. vnto .12. of the clocke at none and past, my L. cardinall departed from the K. and toke his barge at the Blacke friers, and went to his house at Westminster. The Bishop of Carlile being in his barge, said vnto him, winding his face, it is a hot daie quoth he: Yea my L. (quoth the cardinall) if ye had bẽ as well chafed as I haue bin within this howre, ye would saie it were verie hot: and as soone as he came home to his house at Westminster, he went incontinent to his naked bed, where he had not laine full two howres, but that my L. of Wiltshire came to speake with him of a message from the K. My Lord vnderstanding of his comming, commanded he should be brought to his bed side, and he being there, shewed him the K. pleasure was, that he should incontinent go with the other cardinall vnto the Q. (who was then in Bridewel in her chamber there) to perswade with her by their wisedomes, and to aduise her to surrender the whole matter into the kings hands, by her owne consent & will, which should be much better to her honour, than to stand to the triall of law, and thereby to be condemned, which should seeme much to her dishonor. To fulfill the kings pleasure, my L. said he was readie, and would prepare him to go thither out of hand, &c. Then my L. arose, and made him ready, taking his barge, and went straight to Bathe place to cardinall Campeius, and so went together to Bridewell, directly to the quenes lodging, & being in her chamber of presence, they shewed the gentleman vsher that they came to speake with the Q. grace. The gentleman vsher aduertised the quẽn, that the cardinals were come to speak with her: with that she rose vppe, and with a skeine of white thread about her neck, came into her chamber of presence, where the cardinals were attending, at whose comming, quoth she, Alacke my lords, I am verie sorie to make you attend vpon me, what is your pleasure with me? If it please your grace (quoth cardinall Wolsey) to go into your priuie chamber, we will shew you the cause of our comming: My lord (quoth she) if ye haue anie thing to saie, speake it openly before all these folkes: for I feare nothing that yee can say against me, but that I would all the world should heare and see it, and therfore speake your minde openly I praie you. Then began the cardinall to speake to her in Latin: May good my L. (quoth she) speake to me in English, for I can (I thanke God) both speake and vnderstand English, although I vnderstand some latin. Forsooth (quoth the Cardinall) good madam, if it please your grace, we come both to know your minde how you are disposed to do in this matter betweene the king and you, and also to declare secretly our opinions and counsell vnto you, which we do only for very zeale and obedience we beare vnto your grace.

my lord (quoth she) I thanke you for your good will: but to make you answere in your request, I cā not so suddenly, for I was set among my maids at worke, thinking full little of any such matter, wherein there nédeth a longer deliberation, and a better head than mine to make answere; for I néed of counsell in this case, which toucheth me so nære, and for any counsell or friendship that I can find in England, they are not for my profit: what thinke you I praie you my lords, will anie English man counsell me, or be friendly to me against the K. pleasure, that be his subiects? nay for sooth; and as for my counsell in whom I will put my trust, they be not here, they be in Spaine in mine owne countrey: and my lords, I am a poore woman lacking wit to answere to any such noble persons of wisedome as you be in so waighty a matter, therefore I pray you, be good vnto me poore woman, destitute of friends here in a forren region, and your counsell also I will be glad to heare: and therewith she toke the cardinall by the hand, & led him into her priuie chamber with the other cardinall, where they taried a season talking with the quæne: which communication ended, they departed to the king, making to him relation of her talke, and after returned home to supper. Thus this case went forward from court to court, til it came to iudgement, so that euery man expected iudgement would be giuen the next day, at which day the king came thither, and set him down in a chaire within a doore, in the end of the galerie (which opened directly against the iudgment seate) to heare the iudgement giuen, at which time, all their procéedings were openly read in Latin. That done, the kings counsell at the barre called for iudgement, with that (quoth Cardinall Campeius) I will not giue iudgement till I haue made relation to the pope of all our procédings, whose counsell and commandement in this case I will obserue, the matter is too high for vs to giue anie hasty iudgement, considering the highnes of the persons, and the doubtfull occasions alledged: and also whose commissioners we be, vnder whose authority we sit, it were therfore reason that we should make our chiefe head a counsell in the same, before we proceéd to iudgment definitiue. I come not to please for fauor, méede, or dread of any person aliue, be he king or otherwise, I haue no such respect to the person, that I will offend my conscience, I wil not for the fauor or displeasure of any high estate, do that thing that should be against the will of God, I am an old man both weake and sickly, that looke daily for death, &c. And for as much as I do vnderstand, hauing perceiuerance by the allegations in the matter, the case is very doubtfull, and also the party defendant will make none answere, but doth rather appeale from vs, supposing that we be not indifferent, considering the kings high dignitie and authority within his owne realme, which he hath ouer his subiects, and we being his subiects, she thinketh that we cannot do iustice for feare of displeasure. Therfore to auoide all these ambiguities and doubts, I will not wade any further in this matter, vnlesse I haue the full opinion and assent of the pope, and such other of more experience, or as be séene better in such doubtfull lawes, than I am: therfore I will adiourne the court for this time, according to the order of the court of Rome, from whence semblable iurisdiction is deriued: and if we should go further than our commission doth warrant vs, it were great follie and much to our blames, and maie be accounted breakers of the order of the high court, from which (as I said) our authorities be deriued. And with that the court was dissolued, and no more done. Then stept forth the duke of Suffolke from the king, and spake with an hault countenance these words: It was neuer merie in England (quoth he) while we had any cardinals among vs: which wordes were set forth both with countenance and vehemencie, that all men marueled what he intended, to whom no man made answere. Then the Duke spake againe in great despight, to the which our Cardinall (perceiuing his vehemencie) soberlie made answere, &c. This matter continued thus a long season, and my Lord Cardinall was in displeasure with the king, for that the matter in his suite toke no better successe to his purpose, notwithstanding my L. excused him by his commission, which gaue him no authoritie to proceed in iudgement without knowledge of the pope, who reserued the same to himselfe. At the last they were aduertised by their post, that the Pope would take deliberation in the matter, vntill his courts were opened, which should not be before Bartholomewtide next. The king considering the time to long ere it should be determined, thought it good to send an ambassador to the pope to perswade with him, to shew such honorable fauor vnto his maiestie, that the matter might sooner be ended than it was like to be, doctor Stephen Gardener secretary was thither sent, and there tarried till the latter end of sommer. The king commanded the queene to be remoued out of the court, and sent to another place: and his highnes rode in his progresse. And when M. Secretarie was returned from Rome, Cardinall Campeius made suite to be discharged, and was admitted to returne to Rome.

The Duke of Suffolke his speech touching the cardinals.

Stephen Gardener the kings secretary sent ambassador.

Cardinall Campeius toke his iourney towards Rome, with the kings reward, but what it was I am vncertaine: neuerthelesse after their departure it was reported vnto the king by the counsell, that cardinall Campeius was departed, & carried with him great treasures of my L. cardinals of England, to be conuaied in great sums to Rome, whither they surmised he would secretlie repaire out of the realme: insomuch as they caused a post to ride after the cardinall to search him. And when they ouertoke him at Caleis (where he was staid vntill search was made) there was not found so much money as he receiued of the kings reward, and so he was dismissed, and went his waie.

After that Cardinall Campeius was thus departed and gone, Michaelmas terme drew on, against which time my L. cardinall resorted vnto his house at Westminster: and when the terme began, he went vnto the hall in such like sort and gesture, as he was accustomed most commonly to do, and sate in the Chancerie being then Chancellor: after which date he neuer sate more.

The next date he tarried at home expecting the comming of the Dukes of Suffolke & Norffolke, who came not that date: but the next day, to wit, the 18. day of October, they came thither vnto him, to whom they declared the kings pleasure, which was that he should surrender and deliuer vp the great seale into their hands, and to depart simplie vnto Asher, which was an house situate nigh vnto Hampton court, belonging to the bishoprike of Winchester. The cardinall demanded of them their commission that gaue them such authoritie:

who answered againe, that they were sufficient commissioners, and had authoritie to doe no lesse by the kings mouth: notwithstanding he would in no wise agrée in that behalfe, without further knowledge of their authoritie, saying: That the great seale was deliuered him by the kings person, to enioy the ministration thereof, with the roome of the Chancelor, for the terme of his life, wherof for his surety he had the K. letters pattents: which matter was greatly debated betweene him and the dukes, with manie great and heinous words, insomuch that the dukes were faine to depart againe without their purpose, and rode to Windsor to the king, and made report accordingly: but the next day they returned againe, bringing with them the kings letters. Then the cardinal deliuered vnto them the great seale, & was content to depart simply, taking with him nothing but only certaine prouision for his house: and after long talke betweene him and the dukes, they departed with the great seale of England, and brought the same to the king. Then the cardinall called all his officers before him, & tooke account of them for all such stuffe whereof they had charge, and in his galerie were set diuers tables, whereupon late a great number of goodly rich stuffe, as whole pieces of silke of all colours, veluet, satin, damaske, taffata, grograin and other things: also there lay 1000. pieces of fine Holland cloth. There was laid on euery table bookes, reporting the contents of the same, and so was there inuentories of al things in order against the kings comming. He caused to be hanged the wals of the galery on the one side, with cloth of gold, cloth of tissue, cloth of siluer, and rich cloth of bodken of diuers colours: on the other side were hanged the richest sute of copes of his owne prouision made for his colleges of Oxford and Ipswich, that euer was séene in England. Then had he two chambers adioining to the galerie, the one most commonlie called the guilt chamber, and the other the counsell chamber, wherin were set vp two broade and long tables vpon trestles, whereupon was set such a number of plate of all sorts, as was almost incredible. In the guilt chamber were set out vpon the table nothing but guilt plate, and vpon a cupbord and in a window was set no plate but gold, very rich: and in the counsell chamber was all white & parcell guilt plate, and vnder the table in baskets was all old broken siluer plate, and bookes set by them, purporting euery kind of plate, and euery parcell, with the contents of the ounces thereof. Thus was all things prepared, giuing charge of all the said stuffe, with all other remaining in euery office, to be deliuered to the K. to make answere to their charge: for the order was such, that euery officer was charged with the receipt of the stuffe belonging to his office by indenture. Then all things being ordered, as is before rehearsed, my lord prepared him to depart by water, and before his going sir William Gascoine being his treasurer, came vnto him (to whome he gaue among other the charge of the deliuerie of the said goods to be deliuered vnto the king) and said vnto the cardinall then being his lord and maister. Sir (quoth he) I am sorie for your grace: for ye shal go straight way to the tower, as I heare say. Is this the good comfort and counsel (quoth my L. cardinal vnto him) that you can giue your maister in aduersitie? It hath bin alwaies your naturall inclination to be verie light of credit, & much more lighter of reporting lies. I would you should know sir William, and all those reporters, that it is vntrue, for I neuer deserued to come there, although it hath pleased the king to take my house readie furnished for his pleasure at this time. I would all the world knew that I haue nothing but it is his of right; for by him, and of him I haue receiued all that I haue: therefore it is of conuenience and reason, that I render vnto his maiestie the same againe with all my heart: therefore go your waies, and attend well to your charge. And therewithall hee made him readie, and then with his train of gentlemen and yeomen, which was no smal number, hee tooke his barge at his priuie staires, and so went by water vnto Putney: at the taking whereof, there was walking vp and down in Thamis as full of boates, filled with people of London, expecting the cardinals departing by water, supposing that he should haue gone to the tower, whereof they ioied verie much. O wauering and newfangled multitude, is it not a wonder to consider the mutabilitie of this vncertaine worlde, the common people desireth alwaies those thinges for the nouelties sake, which after turneth them to smal profit or commodity? For if the sequele be wel and directly wated and considered, they had small cause to reioice at his fal. What hath succéeded, wise men do know, and the common sort themselues haue felt: wherefore to wonder at it were but a follie, to studie the remedie, it profiteth not: for thus it hath euer béene, and will alwaies be, do what yee will to redresse the same it boteth not. I cannot see, but alwaies men in authoritie bee disdained with the common sort of people, and they most of al that do obserue and minister iustice: for where they please some one that receiueth the benefit of the law at their hands, according to iustice, they in likewise displease the contrary part, supposing to sustain wrong where they haue right. Thus al iustices be in contempt with the people alwaies, for ministration of their duty, yet must some such bee alwaies elected, and deputed so to do, for else if the world should bee without inquisition and order, there should be too much error and abhomination. When he was arriued with all his train at Putney, being vpon the land, he tooke his mule, and euerie man tooke their horses; and riding not past a paire of buts length, hee espyed a Gentleman come ryding in poste downe the Hill in the Towne of Putney: And demaunding of his Gentlemen about him, what hee was that came ryding downe so fast, forsoth Sir (quoth they) it is master Noris, as it seemeth to vs: and by and by, hee came to my Lorde, saluting him and sayde: Sir, the Kinges maiestie commendeth him vnto you, and commaunded me to shewe you, that you bee as much in his fauor as euer you were, and so shall bee: therefore hee would that you shoulde bee of good cheere, and take no thought, for you shall not lacke. And although hee hath done thus vnkindlie towards you, it is more for the satisfying of some, than of any indignation. And yet you knowe well that hee is able to recompence you againe, and restore you to twise so much: and thus he bad me that I shoulde shewe you, and willed me to bid you to take all this matter in patience: and sir for my part, I trust to see you in better estate then euer ye were. But when he had heard master Noris report the good and comfortable wordes of the king, hee quicklie lighted from his mule, all alone, as though he had béene the yongest amongst his his men, and incontinent kneeled downe in the dirt vpon both his knees, holding vp his hands for ioy of the kings most comfortable message: maist. Noris lighted also, espying him so sone vpon his knées, and kneeled by him, and toke him in his armes, and asked him how hee did, calling vpon him to credite his message: M. Noris (quoth he) when I consider the ioifull newes that you haue brought me, I could do no lesse than greatly reioce, euery word pierced so my hart, that the sodain ioy surmounted my memory, hauing no regard or respect to the place, but I thought it my duty, that in the same place where I receyued this comfort to laud and praise god vpon my knées, and most humbly to render to my soueraign lord my harty thanks for the same. And as hee was talking thus vpon his knées to M. Noris, he would haue pulled off a veluet night cappe which he ware vnder his black hat, and scarlet cap, but he coulde not vndoe the knot vnder his chin: wherefore with violence hee rent his laces of his cap, and pulled his said cap from his head, and kneeled bare headed: and this don, he rose vp, and mounted againe vpon his mule, and so rode forth vp the high waie in the Towne, talking with Master Noris. And when hee came vppon Putney heath, where M. Noris should depart from him, master Noris gaue him a ring of golde with a stone, and saide vnto him, that the king sent him the same for a token of his good will, which ring (quoth he) the king saith ye know very wel. It was the priuie token betweene the king and him, when the king would haue anie especiall thing sped at his hands: then said he to master Noris, if I were lord of the realme, the one halfe thereof were to small a reward to giue you for your paines and good newes: but good master Noris, consider with me that I haue nothing left me, but my clothes vpon my backe, therefore I shall desire you to take this small reward at my hand (the which was a litle chaine of gold made like a flagen chaine, with a crosse of gold, wherein was a péece of the holie crosse, which he continuallie ware about his neck nert his bodie:) and said furthermore: master Noris I assure you, when I was in prosperity, although it séem but smal in value, yet I would not gladly haue departed with ỹ same for a thousande pounde, therefore I shall require you to take it in good worth, & to weare it about your neck continually for my sake, and to remember me to the king, when ye shall see opportunitie, vnto whose highnesse I shall most instantlie require you to haue me most humblie commended, for whose charitable disposition towardes me, I can but praie for the preseruation of his royall estate. I am his obedient subiect, his poore chaplain, and bead man, and so will be during my life, accounting my selfe nothing, nor to haue any thing but onelie of him, and by him, whome I haue iustlie and trulie serued to the best of my grosse wit: and with that he toke master Noris by the hand bareheaded, and so departed. And when hee was gone but a small distance, he returned againe, and caused Master Noris to bee called to him: when master Noris was returned, hee sayde vnto him, I am sorie (quoth he) that I haue no token to sende to the king: but if yée will at my request, present the king with this poore foole, I trust he will accept him: for he is for a noblemans pleasure, forsooth worth 1000. pounde: so master Noris toke the foole, with whome my lord was fain to send six of his tallest yeomen to helpe him to conuey the foole to the court, for the poore fole toke on like a tirant rather then he would haue departed from my L. but notwithstanding they conueied him, and so brought him to the court, where the king receiued him verie gladlie.

After departure of Mast. Noris with his token to the king, my Lorde rode straite to Asher, which is an house belonging to the Bishoppricke of Winchester, scituate in the countie of Surreie, not far from Hampton Court, where my L. and his familie continued the space of three or foure weekes, without either beds, sheetes, table clothes, or dishes to eat their meate in, or therewith to bute anie, howbeit there was good prouision of all kinde of victuall, and of beere, and wine, whereof there was sufficient, and plentie enough: but my L. was compelled of necessitie to borrowe of master Arundell, and of the bishop of Carlelle, plate and dishes, both to drinke in, and eate his meate in. Thus my Lorde with his familie continued in this straunge estate vntill after Hallowntide.

Master Tho. Cromwel his counsel to the Cardinall.

On Alhalowne daie when the cardinall had finished his seruice, hee returned into his chamber, and called for his dinner, who was serued in his priuie chamber, and there dined among diuers his Doctors, among whome master Thomas Cromwell dined: and sitting at dinner, it came to passe that in communication of his gentlemen and seruaunts true and faithfull seruice, which my Lorde much commended, Master Cromwell tooke an occasion, to tell my Lorde that hee ought in conscience to consider the trueth, and good seruice that they had doone him in his necessitie, which did not forsake him in weale nor in woe, and saide: Sir, it shall be well doone for your grace to call them before you, both Gentlemen which bee woorthie persons, and also Yeomen, and let them vnderstande, that yee right well consider their paines and trueth, with their faithfull seruice, and to giue them your commendation, with good wordes, the which shall bee to them great courage, to sustaine your miserie with paines and patience, and to spende their life and substance in your seruice. Alas, Thomas (quoth my Lorde) yee knowe I haue nothing to giue them, and wordes without deedes bee not often well taken, for if I hadde but as I late hadde, I woulde departe with them so frankelie, as they shoulde bee well contente: But nothing hath no sauour: and I am both ashamed and also sorie, that I am not able to requite their faithfull seruice. And although I doe reioice, as I make, to consider the fidelitie that I see in the number of my seruauntes, who will not forsake mee in my miserable estate, but bee as diligent, and as seruiceable about me, as they were in my great triumph and glorie: Yet doe I lament againe as vehementlie the want of substaunce to distribute among them. Why Sir, (quoth Master Cromwell) haue yee not heere a number of Chaplaines, to whome yee haue departed liberallie with Spirituall promotions, insomuch, as some maie dispende by your Graces preferment a thousande pounde by yeere, and some fiue hundred Markes, and some more, and some lesse? You haue not a Chaplain within your house, or belonging vnto you, but he maie spend well at the least, by your procurements and promotion, three hundred Markes yeerelie, who haue had all the profite and gaines at your handes: and your other seruauntes seruauntes nothing: and yet haue your seruauntes taken much more paines in one daie, then all your idle Chaplaines haue doone in a yeere. Therefore if they will not freelie and friendelie consider your liberalitie, and depart with you of the same goods gotten in your seruice, nowe in your great indigence and necessitie, it is pittie that they liue, and all the worlde will haue them in indignation and hatred, for their ingratitude to their Master. I thinke no lesse Thomas (quoth my Lorde:) wherefore I praie you cause all my seruants to assemble without in my great Chamber after dinner, and see them stande in order, and I will declare vnto them my mind. After that the words ende was taken vppe, Master Cromwell came to the Gentleman Vsher and saide. Heardest you not (quoth hee) what my Lorde said? Yes Sir, quoth hee, I did; why then, quoth hee, call all the Gentlemen and yeomen vppe into the great Chamber, and so it was doone: the Gentlemen placed on the right side of the Chamber, and the Yeomen on the other side, and at the last my Lord came out in his rochet vpon a violet gowne like a bishop, who went straight to the vpper end of the saide chamber, where was the great Windowe, standing there a while, his Chaplaines about him, beholding the goodlie number of his seruants, who coulde not speake vnto them vntill the teares ranne downe his cheekes, which few teares perceiued by his seruantes, caused the fountaines of water to gush out of their faithfull eies in such sort, as it woulde cause a cruell hart to lament. At the last, after he had turned his face to the window, and dried his moisted cheekes, he spake to them in this sort in effect. Most faithful gentlemen, and true harted Yeomen, I do not lament to see you about mee, but I lament in a maner, a certaine ingratitude on my behalfe towardes you all, in whom hath bin a great default that in my prosperitie haue not doon so much for you as I might haue don either in deed or in word, which laie in my power then to do, but then I knew not the iewel and special treasure I had in my house of you my faithfull seruantes; but now experience hath taught me, and with the eies of my discretion I do perceiue the same. There was neuer thing that repented me more that euer I did, then doth the remembrance of my great and most oblitious negligence, & vnkind ingratitued that I haue not promoted, preferred, and aduanced you all, according to your demerits; howbeit, it is not vnknowne vnto you al, that I was not so fullie furnished of temporal promotions in my gift, as I was of spirituall preferments; and if I should haue preferred you to anie of the K. offices, then shoulde I haue run in the indignation of the Kings seruants, who would not much let to report behind my back, that there could no office in the K. gift, escape the cardinal & his seruantes; and thus should I haue run in open slander before all the world. But now it is come to this passe, that it pleased the king to take all that euer I haue, into his hands, so that I haue nothing to giue you: for I haue nothing left mee but my bare clothes vppon my backe, the which are simple in comparison that I had; howbeit, if it might doe you anie good, I woulde not sticke to diuide the same among you, but my good gentlemen and Yeomen, my trustie and faithful seruants; and of whome no prince had the like, I shall require you to take some patience with me a while; for I doubt not, but that the King considering my suggested offence by mine enemies, which is put against me to be of small griefe or hurt, for so great and sodaine an ouerthrow will shortly restore me to my liuing, so that I shall be more able to deuide my substance among you, whereof ye shall not lacke, for what soeuer shal chance hereafter to be an ouerplus and superfluitie of my reuenues, at the determination of my yerely account, it shal be distributed among you: for I will neuer during my life, esteeme the gods of riches of this world any otherwise, then which shall be sufficient to maintaine the state, that God hath, and shall call me to. And if the king doe not so shortly restore me, then will I write for you, either to the king, or to any noble man within this realme to reteine your seruice: for I doubt not but the king or anie noble man of this realme will credite my letter in your commendation: therefore in the meane time I would aduise you to repaire home to your wiues, such as haue wiues, and some of you that haue no wiues, to take a time to visit your parents in the Countrey. There is none of you all, but once in a yere ye would require licence to see and visite your wife and other your friends: take this time therefore in that respect, and in your return I will not refuse you to beg with you. I consider that your seruice in my house hath bin such, that ye be not apt to serue any man vnder the degree of a king: therefore I would aduise you to serue no man but the king, who I am sure will not refuse you. Therfore I shall desire you to take your pleasure for a month, and then ye may come againe: and by that time I trust the K. will extend his mercy vpon me. Sir (quoth M. Cromwel) there be diuers of these your yeomen that would be glad to see their friends, but they lacke money: therefore here be diuers of your chaplaines who haue receiued at your hands great benefices, & liuings, let them shew themselues vnto you as they be bound to do: I thinke their honestly and charity is such, that they will not see you lacke, that may do you good or pleasure. And for my part, although I haue not receiued of your graces gift one peny toward the increase of my liuing, yet will I giue you this toward the dispatch of your seruants: and therewith deliuered to my lord 5. l. in gold: and now let vs see what your chaplains will do, I thinke they will depart with you much more liberally than I, who be more able to giue you a pound then I a penie, go to maisters (quoth he) to the chapleins: Insomuch as they gaue to my L. liberallie, some 10. l. some 20. nobles, some 5. l. and so some more, & some lesse, as their powers would extend at that time: by means whereof my lord receiued among them, as much money, as paide the yeomen 10. s. a piece towards their quarters wages, and as much money as would paie euerie of them for a months bord wages: and then they departed downe into the hall, where some determined to go to their friends, and some would not depart from my lord, vntill they might see him in better estate. My lord returned in to his chamber lamenting the departure from his seruants, making his moane to Maister Cromwell, who comforted him the best he could, and desired my lord to giue him leaue, to go to London, whereas he would either make or marre (which was alwaies his common word.) Thereafter a little communication with my lord in secret, he departed, and tooke his horse, and rode to London. At whose departing he said to my lords gentlemen, farewell, well, ye shall heare shortlie of me, and if I spéede well, I will not faile to bee here againe within these two daies, and so he rode on his iourneie. Ralph Sadler, since a knight, was then his clearke, and rode with him. After my L. had supped that night, and all men got to bed, being Allhalowne daie at midnight, one of the porters wakened the gentleman vsher, & tolde him that there were a great number of horsemen at the gate, that would com in, saieng that it was Sir Iohn Russell. the gentleman vsher bad the porter goe downe, and make a great fire in the lodge to drie them, for it had rained al that night most vehementlie. The saide gentleman vsher rose, cast on his night Gowne, and went to the gates, and asked who was there: with that Master Russell spake, and the gates were opened, Sir Iohn Russell went to the fire to drie him, and saide he came from the king on message to my Lorde, Sir, quoth the gentleman Vsher, I trust your newes be good. Yea I promise you on my fidelitie, and so tel him, that I haue brought him such newes wat will please him well. The cardinall was wakened, and told of the iournete taken by Sir Iohn Russel that troublesome night: I praie God al be for the best quoth my lorde: Yes quoth the gentleman vsher, he told me it was such newes, as ye would greatlie reioice to heare: wel then, quoth he, God be praised, and welcome be his grace, go ye and fetch him to me, and by that time I wil be ready to talke with him.

T. Cromwell went to London to make or to marre.

Sir Ralph Sadler.

Sir Io. Russell sent to the cardinall.

When M. Russel was come to my lord he had cast on his night gowne, vnto whom M. Russel made most humble reuerence vpon his knée, whom my Lorde stoped vnto, and toke him vp, and bad him welcome: sir (quoth he) the K. commendeth him vnto you, and deliuered him a great ring of gold, with a turkes for a token, and willed me to bid you be of good cheere, for he loueth you as wel as euer he did, and is sorie for your trouble, whose minde runneth much vpon you: insomuch that before his grace sate downe to supper, he called mee vnto him, and desired me to take the pains secretlie to visit you, and to comfort you the best of my power. And sir I haue had the forest iournete for so litle a waie, that euer I had to my remembrance; my lord thanked him for his paines and good newes, and demanded of him if he had supped, and he said naie: wel then quoth my L. cause the cookes to prouide some meat for him, and cause a chamber to be prouided for him, that he maie take his rest a while vpon a bedde; all which commandement was fulfilled, and in the mean time my L. and M. Russel were in secret communication, and in the end M. Russel went to his chamber, and said he would tarie but a while, for he would be at the court, at Grenwich again before daie, and would not for anie thing that it were known that he had bin with my L. that night. And so being in his chamber, hauing a smal repast, rested him a while vpon a bedde, while his seruauntes supped, and dired them. And that doone, incontinent hee rode awaie with spéede againe to the court. After this within a while, my lord was restored to plate, vessel, and houshould stuffe, of euerie thing necessarie some part, so that hee was better furnished than before.

Now to returne to master Cromwell, to sée howe hee hath sped since his departure. The case stood so, that the Parliament should begin in crastino animarum.

Th. Cromwell.

marum, or there abouts: and hee being within London deuised with himselfe to be one of the Burgesses of the Parliament, and chanced to meete with one Sir Thomas Rush knight, a speciall friende of his, whose sonne was appointed to bee a burgesse, of whome he obtained his roome, and so put his foote into the Parliament House: so that within two or three dayes after his departure from my lord he came againe to Athere, with a pleasant countenance: and saide, that he had once aduentured to put in his foote, where he would be better regarded or euer the Parliament was finished. Then talked hee with my Lord, and after his talke, he rode againe to London, because he would not be absent from the Parliament in the Morning. There was nothing doone against him in the Parliament house, but he sent to my Lorde to knowe what answere hee might make in his behalfe: Insomuch, that there was nothing alledged against my lord, but that he was readie to make answere thereto: Insomuch, that at the length his honest estimation, & earnest behauior in his Masters cause, grew so in euerie mans opinion, how that hee was the most faithfull seruaunt to his Master of all other, wherein hee was greatlie of all men commended. Then was there brought in a Bill of Articles into the parliament house, to haue my Lorde condemned of treasons, against which bill Maister Cromwell inueyed so discretelie with such witttie perswasions, and deepe reasons, that the same coulde take no effect. Then were his enemies constreyned to indight him in a premunire, all which was to intitle the king to his goods and possessions, the which hee hadde obtained and purchased for the maintenaunce of his Colledges in Oxforde and Ipswich, whereof hee was then in building, in the most sumptuous wise: wherein when my Lorde was demaunded by the Judges which were sent vnto him to knowe his minde, and to take his aunswere therein, hee aunswered them in this wise: my lordes Judges (quoth hee) the Kings highnesse knoweth, whether I haue offended his Maiestie or no, in vsing of my prerogatiue legantine, for the which I am indighted. I haue the Kings licence in my Coffers, vnder his hande, and broade Seale, for the exercising and vsing thereof in the most largest wise, the which nowe are in the handes of mine enemies. Therefore because I will not stand in question with the king in his owne cause, I will here presentlie confesse before you the indightment, and put mee wholie to the mercie and grace of the King, trusting that he hath a conscience, and a discretion to consider the trueth, and my humble submission and obedience, wherein I might right well stand to the tryall thereof by Iustice: but thus much you maie saie to his highnes, that I am wholie vnder his obeysance and will, & do submitte my selfe to all things that shall bee his Princelie pleasure, whose will and commandement I neuer disobeyed or repugned, but was alwayes contented, and gladde to please him before God, whome I ought most chiefelie to haue obeyed, the which nowe mee repentes: notwithstanding, I most heartilie require you to haue mee vnto his royall Maiestie commended, for whome I doe and will during my life, praie to God to sende him much prosperous honour and victorie ouer his enemies, and therewith they tooke their leaue and departed. Shortlie after the king sent the duke of Norffolke vnto him in message,

Parliament at the Blacke Friers.

but

but that it was, was kept secret. My lorde being aduertised that my lorde of Norffolke was comming euen at hand, he caused all his gentlemen to waite vpon him downe through the hall into the base court to receiue the duke at the gates, and commanded all his yeomen to stand in order still in the hall: and he himselfe with his gentlemen went to the gates, where he receiued my lord of Norffolke bare-headed, who embraced each other: and so led him by the arme through his hall into his chamber. And when the duke had passed through vnto the vpper end of the hall, regarding the number of tall yeomen that stode on each side thereof, he turned againe to the yeomen and saide: Sirs (quoth he) your diligent and faithfull seruice vnto your Master in this his calamitie, hath purchased you of all men, noble, and ignoble, much honestie, insomuch, that the king commaunded me to saie to you in his name, that for your true and louing seruice that yee haue doone to your Master, his highnesse will see you at all times furnished with seruices according to your demerites: with that my Lord put off his cappe, and saide to my Lord of Norffolke, sir (quoth hee) these men bee all approoued men, wherefore it were pitie they shoulde want anie seruice: and beeing sorie that I am not able to doe for them as my heart wisheth, I will therefore require you my good Lorde, to bee good Lorde vnto them, and extende your charitie amongst them, where or when ye shall see occasion at anie time hereafter, and that yée will prefer their diligence and faithfull seruice vnto the king. Doubt you not my lord (quoth he) but I will do for them the best in my power, & wheras I shall see cause I will be an earnest suiter for them to the king: and some of you I will haue my selfe in seruice for, right honest men, and as you haue begun, so continue, vntill ye heare more of the kings pleasure, Gods blessing and mine be with you, and so went vp into the great chamber to dinner, whom my lord cardinall thanked, and said vnto him: yet my Lord of all other noblemen I haue cause to thanke you, for your noble & gentle heart, the which you haue shewed me behinde my backe, as my seruaunt Th. Cromwel hath reported vnto me: but euen as ye be a noble man indeede, so haue you shewed your selfe no lesse to all men in calamitie, and in speciall to me, whome ye haue brought down from my high estate: but now againe beeing in this miserable state, ye haue extended your fauour most honourablie, with great charitie, &c. The dinner ended, the cardinall and duke went into my Lordes priuie Chamber, where they continued in consultation: and being there, it chanced Master Shelley the Judge to come thither, who was sent from the king, whereof relation was made to my Lorde: which caused the duke and him to breake vp their communication. And as the duke desired to goe to a Chamber, hee mette with Master Shelley, to whom Maister Shelly reported. And after hee had made relation of the cause of his comming hee desired my Lorde of Norffolke to tarrie, and to assist him in doing of his message: whome hee denied, and saide, I haue nothing to do with your message, wherein I will not meddle, and so departed into a Chamber, where hee tooke his rest for an houre or two: and in the meane time my Lord issued out of his priuie chamber, and came to master Shelley to know his message, who after due salutations, did declare vnto him that the K. pleasure was to haue

my Lordes house, called Yorke place, neere Westminster, belonging to the Bishoprick of Yorke, and to possesse the same, according to the lawe of his realme: his highnes hath sent for all the Iudges, and for all his learned counsell to know their opinions for the assurance thereof, whose opinions be fullie resolued that your Grace must make a recognisance, and before a Iudge to acknowledge and confesse the right thereof to belong to the king and his successors, and so his highnes shall be assured therof: wherefore it hath pleased the king to appoint and send mee hither to take of you the same recognisance, hauing in your grace such affiance, as that ye will not refuse so to do. Therefore I shall desire your grace to know your pleasure therein. M. Shelley (quoth my Lorde) I knowe that the king of his owne nature is of a rotall stomacke, not willing more than iustice shall leade him vnto by the lawe: And therefore I counsell you, and all other Iudges and learned men of his councell, to put no more into his head than lawe that maie stande with conscience: for when yee tell him this is the law, it were well done ye should tel him also, that although this be the law, yet this is conscience; for law without conscience is not meet to be giuen to a king by his counsel, to bee ministred by him, ne by anie of his ministers; for euerie counseller to a king ought to haue a respect to conscience before the rigor of the law. For Laus est facere quod decet, non quod licet. The king ought for his rotall dignitie and prerogatiue to mittigate the rigor of the law, where conscience hath no more force. And therfore in his princely place he hath constitute a chancelor to order for him the same. And heretofore the court of Chancerie, hath beene commonlie called the court of conscience, because it hath iurisdiction to command the law in euerie case to desist from the execution of the rigor of the same, whereas conscience had most effect. Therfore I saie to you, that in this case, although you and other of your profession perceiue by the orders of the lawe, that the king maie lawfullie do that thing which yee require of me: how say you master Shelley, may I do it with conscience, to giue that awaie which is none of mine from me and my successors? if this bee the lawe and conscience, I praie you shewe me your opinion. Forsooth my Lorde (quoth hee) there is a great conscience: but hauing regarde to the kings high power, and to a better purpose, it maie the better stand with conscience: who is sufficient to recompence the church of Yorke with double the value. That I know wel, but here is no such condition (quoth my L.) but onlie a bare & simple departure with anothers right. For if euerie bish. that maie, should so do, then might euerie prelate giue away the patrimony of their dignities, which should be but smallie to the kings honor. Well I will not stand with you long in this matter. Let me see your commission: to whome master Shelley shewed the same. And that seene, Master Shelley quoth he, yee shall shew the kings highnes that I am his most faithfull subiect, obediencer and bead-man, whose rotall commandement and request I will in no wise disobeie, but fulfill his pleasure in all such things wherein yee fathers of the law sate, that I maie lawfullie do, therefore I charge your conscience to discharge me, howbeit shewe his highnes from mee, that I most humblie desire his maiestie to call to his most gratious remembrance, that there is both a heauen and hell. And therewithall the the clearke toke and wrote the recognisance, and after some secret talke they departed. Then rose the Duke of Norffolke from his repast, and after some communication with my lorde, he likewise departed. Thus continued my lorde at Asher, who receiued daily messages from the court, some good, and some as euill, but mo euill than good: for his enemies procured his disquietnesse what they could, as some daie they would cause the king to sende for foure or fiue of his gentlemen from him to serue the king, and another daie they would take awaie some of his promotions, or some of their promotions whome he had preferred before. Then would they fetch from him some of his yeomen, insomuch as the king toke fiftéene of them at one time into his guard. This was his life for a long time, so that there was not one daie, but euer he went to bedde, he had an occasion greatlie to chafe, and frette the heart out of his bodie, but that he was a wise man, and bare all things in patience. At Christmasse he fell verie sore sicke, most likelie to die, whereof the king being aduertised, was verie sorie, and sent Doctor Buts his Physition vnto him, to sée in what estate he was. Doctor Buts came vnto him, finding him lying verie sicke in his bedde: and perceiuing the danger returned to the king, of whome the king demaunded, saying: Haue yée séene yonder man? Yea sir (quoth he.) How do you like him (quoth the king?) Sir (quoth he) if yée will haue him dead, I warrant him, he will be dead within these foure daies, if he receiue no comfort from you shortlie: Marie (quoth the king) God forbid that he should die: I praie you maister Buts go againe vnto him, and doe your cure vnto him, for I would not lose him for twentie thousand pound. Then must your grace (quoth maister Buts) send him first some comfortable message, as shortlie as yée can: euen so I will (quoth the king) by you, and therefore make spéede to him againe, and yée shall deliuer him this ring from me for a token, in the which ring was ingraued the Kings Image, within a rubie, as like the king as could bee deuised. This ring hee knoweth right well, for hee gaue me the same, and tell him that I am not offended with him in my heart any thing at all, and that shall he knowe shortlie: therefore bid him plucke vppe his heart, and bee of good comfort, and I charge you, come not from him vntill yée haue brought him out of daunger of death. And so Doctour Buts departed with spéede to Asher, after whome the king sent Doctor Cromer the Scot, Doctor Clement, and Doctor Wotton, to consult with maister Buts for my lordes recouerie.

Cardinal sicke, like to haue died.

After maister Buts had bene with my Lorde, and deliuered the kings tokens vnto him, with the most comfortable wordes that he could deuise in the kings behalfe, he reioyced not a little, and aduanced him in his bedde, and receiued the tokens most ioyfullie, thanking maister Buts for his paines and good comfort: Maister Buts tolde him furthermore that the kings pleasure was that he should minister vnto him for his health, and to ioyne with him for the better and most assured waies, he hath sent hither doctor Clement, doctor Cromer and doctor Wotton. Therefore my lorde (quoth he) it were well done they were called in to visit you, and to consult with them: to this motion my lorde was contented to heare their iudgements, and it was not long ere they had brought him out of danger, and within foure daies set him on his fete, and got him a stomacke to meate, all which done, they toke their leaue to depart, refusing vtterlie all rewards proffered them, saying the king had giuen them especiall commandement that they should take of him nothing, for at their returne he himselfe would reward them. Thus my Lorde continued at Asher vntill Candlemas, against which feast the king caused to be sent to my lorde three or foure cart lodes of stuffe, as bedding, plats, hangings, kitchen stuffe, &c. Then commanded he maister Cromwell to make earnest suite to the king, that he might remoue from thence to some other house: which suite at the kings hands maister Cromwell obtained, for the king was contented he should remoue to Richmond, which place my lorde had a little before repaired to his great costes: for the king had made an exchange thereof with him for Hampton court. All this was done without knowledge of the kings counsell: for if they might haue had vnderstanding hereof before, then woulde they haue perswaded the king to the contrarie: but when they knew of the kings grant and licence, although they dissimuled their minde in the kings presence (yet were they afraid of him, least his nigh resort to the king might moue the king at some braide to haue resorted vnto him, and to haue called him home againe, considering the great louing affection that the king dailie shewed vnto him: wherefore they doubted his rising vp againe, if they found not a meane shortly to remoue him further from the king. Insomuch that they thought it conuenient for their purpose to moue the king vpon considerations which they inuented, that it were verie necessarie that my Lorde should go downe into the north vnto his benefice, where he should be a good staie for the countrie, to the which the king condescended. Whereupon my Lord of Norffolke bade maister Cromwell to saie to him, that he must go home to his benefice: who at his next repaire to my lord (then lying at Richmond) declared to him how it was determined that he should go home to his benefice. Well then Thomas (quoth my lorde) we will go to Winchester. I will (quoth maister Cromwell) shewe my lorde of Norffolke what yee saie: and so he did. What should he do there (quoth the Duke:) naie let him go to his Archbishopricke of Yorke, where his honor and more charge lieth; and so shew him. The lordes who were not his friends, moued the K. to giue my lorde a pension of 4000. markes out of Winchester, and the rest to distribute among his nobilitie and seruants, and so in likewise to diuide the reuenues of Saint Albons, whereof some had three hundred marks, and some an hundred pounds, and so some more, and some lesse. And all the reuenues of the lands belonging to his Colledges of Oxford and Ipswich, which the king toke into his owne hands: whereof maister Cromwell had the receipt and gouernance afore by my lordes assignment. Wherefore it was thought verie necessarie, that hee should so haue still, who executed all things thereof so exactlie and wittily, that he was had in great estimation for his behauiour herein, and also for the true and faithfull demeanor towards his lord and maister. Then it came to passe, that those to whome the king had giuen anie annuities or fees for terme of life by pattent, would not be good, but onely during my lordes life, forasmuch as the king had no longer state therein, the which he had by reason of my lordes attaindor, in the premunire, and to make their estates good and sufficient for the terme of their lines, there was none other shifte, but to obtaine my lords confirmation of their pattents. And this to bee brought about, there was no meane but to sue to maister Cromwell to attaine the same at my Lordes handes, who they thought the best instrument for the purpose. Then began euerie man, both noble men and gentlemen, who had ante pattents of the king out of Winchester or Saint Albons, to make suite to maister Cromwell, to solicite the cause to my lorde, to get therein his confirmation, and for his paines therein, both worthily rewarded him, and euerie man to shew him such pleasure as should be at all times in their seuerall powers, whereof they assured him: wherein maister Cromwell perceiued an occasion giuen him to helpe himselfe, and to bring to passe that hee long sought for, intending to worke in this matter according to their desires, the soner to bring his owne enterprise and purpose to passe. Then at his next returne to my lord he moued this matter to him, and so perswaded with him, that they both wrought together to bring maister Cromwell in place where hee might doe good to my lorde, and also to himselfe. And nowe hauing the ordering and disposition of the landes of these Colledges, he had great occasions of suites, besides his continuall accesse to the king, by meanes whereof he grewe into the kings fauour, who reputed him to be a verie wise man, and a meete instrument to serue his grace.

Now the lords thought long to haue the cardinall remoued further out of the kings way, wherfore among other of my lords, the duke of Norffolke said to M. Cromwell: Cromwel (quoth he) me thinke the cardinall thy maister maketh no haste to go northward, tell him, if he go not away, but shall tarrie, I will teare him with my teeth: therfore I would aduise him to prepare himselfe awaie as shortly as he can, or else he shall be sent forward. These wordes M. Cromwell reported to my lord at his next repaire to him, who then had an occasion to resort to him for the dispatch of the noble and gentlemens pattents. And heere I will leaue off this matter, and speake of other things that in this meane time happened.

The lady Margaret dutchesse of Sauoy Ant to the emperor, & the lady Lewes dutchesse of Angolesme, mother to the French king, met at Cambray in the beginning of the moneth of June last past, to treate of a peace, where were present doctor Tonstall bishop of London, and sir Tho. Moore chancelor of the duchie of Lancaster, commissioners for the K. of England. At length through diligence of the said ladies, a peace was concluded betweene the emperor, the pope, the kings of England, and of France. This peace was called the womans peace, and was proclaimed by heraults, with the sound of trumpets in the citie of London, to the great reioicing of the merchants, who in time of the wars had sustained much hinderance.

The new Testament printed in English.

William Tindall hauing translated the new Testament into English, and caused the same to be printed beyonde the seas, manie of them were conueied into England, and there made sale of, as good merchandise, for manie men desired to haue them, but this translation was forbidden by the K. to bee vsed of his subiects: for his counsell, namely the bishops affirmed that the same was not truely translated, and that therein were prologues and prefaces sounding to heresie, with vncharitable railing against bishops and the clergy. The king therefore commanded the Bishops, that they calling to them the best learned men of the Vniuersities should cause a new translation to be made, that the people without danger might read the same for their better instruction in the lawes of God.

Ambassadors to the emperor and pope.

The K. vnderstanding that the Emperor and the Pope were appointed to méete at Bononie or Bologne, where the emperor should bee crowned, sent thither an ambassade from him the earle of Wilshire, Doctor Stokesley elected bishop of London, and his almoner doctor Edward Lee, to declare both vnto the pope and emperor the law of God, the determinations of the vniuersities in the case of his marriage, & to require the pope to do iustice according to trueth, and also to shew to the emperor, that the king did moue this matter, only for discharge of his conscience, and not for anie other respect of pleasure or displeasure earthly: these ambassadors comming to Bonony, were honorablie receiued, and first doing their message to the pope, had answere of him, that he woulde heare the matter disputed when hee came to Rome, and according to right he would do iustice. The emperor answered, that he in no wise woulde do against the lawes of God, and if the court of Rome woulde iudge that the matrimonie was not good, hee woulde bee contented to stand by the dispensation, which he thought to bee of force enough to proone the marriage lawfull. With these answeres the ambassadors departed, and returned homewards, till they came on this side the mountaines, and then receiued letters from the K. which appointed the earle of Wilshire to go ambassador to the French K. which then lay at Burdeaux, making shift for mony for the redeeming of his sonnes. And the bishop of London was appointed to go to Padua, and other Vniuersities in Italy, to know their full resolutions and determinate opinions in the kings case of matrimonie: and the kings almoner was commanded to returne into England.

Suit to Rome forbidden.

Afterwards king Henry vpon occasion of delaie made by the Pope in his controuersie of diuorcement, and through displeasure of such reportes as hee heard had bin made of him to the court of Rome, & thirdly pricked forward by some counsellers, to follow the example of the Germans, caused proclamation to be made on the 19. of September, forbidding all his subiects to purchase anie manner of thing from the court of Rome, containing matter preiudicial to the high authoritie, iurisdiction, and prerogatiue roiall of this Realme,

Cardinall Wolsey having licence of the king (as ye haue heard) to repaire vnto Richmond, was there lodged within the lodge of the great parke, which was a verie prettie house, there my lord lay vntill Lent with a prettie number of his seruants, for the rest went to bord wages. You haue heard before what words the Duke of Norffolke had to maister Cromwel, touching my lords going vnto his benefice of Yorke. At such time as maister Cromwell tolde these words to my lord: Marie Thomas (quoth my lord) then is it time to be going, if he take it so, therefore I pray you to go to the king, and saie I would go to my benefice of Yorke but for lacke of money, desiring his grace to helpe me with some: for ye maie say that the last money that I receiued from his grace hath beene too little to paie mine olde debts, and to compell me to the paiment thereof hath beene too much extremitie, taking my goods from me, wherein I trust his grace will haue a charitable respect: ye maie also shewe my lorde of Norffolke and other of the councell, that I would depart if I had money. Cromwell went to London, and my lorde remoued out of the lodge into the charterhouse at Richmond, where he lay in a lodging with doctor Coller, made for himselfe, vntill he remoued northward, which was in the Passion weeke: and euerie daie resorted to the charterhouse there, and in the after nones hee would sit in contemplation with one of the most ancient fathers of that house in their cels, who conuerted him, and caused him to despise the vaine glorie of the world, and gaue him shirtes of haire to weare, the which he ware diuers times after. When maister Cromwell came to the court, he shewed my Lorde of Norffolke, that my lord would gladly go northwarde, but for lacke of money, wherein he desired his helpe to the king. Then was the king moued therein as well by maister Cromwel, as by the counsell: which matter the king referred to determine and assigne to the counsell, who were in diuers opinions, so that after long debating it was concluded that he should haue by way of prest a thousand markes of his pension out of Winchester: when this determination was concluded, they declared the same to the king, who straightwaie commanded the same thousande markes to bee deliuered out of hande to maister Cromwell, and so it was. The king commanded maister Cromwell to resort to him againe, when he had receiued the same summe of money: at whose returne to the king, the king said: Shew my lord, although our counsell haue assigned no summe of money for to beare his charges, yet ye shall shewe him in my behalfe, that I haue sent a thousand pound of my beneuolence, and tell him that he shall not lacke, and bid him be of good cheere. Maister Cromwell humbly in my lords behalfe, thanked the king, and therewith departed, and came to Richmond to my lord, to whom he deliuered the money, and whereof it was leuied, that the councell sent him, and of the money which the king sent him, adding thereto the kings comfortable sayings, wherein my lord did not a little reioice. Then my lord prepared all things for his iourney, and sent to London for liuerie clothes for his seruants that should ride with him: so that all things being furnished towards his iourney, in the beginning of passion weeke before Easter he set forward, and rode from Richmond to a place of the abbot of Westminster called Hendon: the next daie he remoued to a place where ỹ lady Parry lay called the Rie: the next day to Roiston, where he lodged in the priorie: the next daie to Huntington, and there lodged in the Abbey. And the next daie he remoued to Peterborow, and there lodged in the abbey, making there his abode all the next weeke, where he kept his solemne feast of Easter, with all his traine, in number 160. persons, hauing with him twelue cartes to carrie his stuffe of his owne, which he sent for from his Colledge of Oxford, that were there prouided, beside threescore other carts of his dailie carriage of necessaries for his buildings. Upon palme sundaie he went in procession with the monkes. And vpon maundie thursdaie he made his maundie there in our Ladie chappell, hauing 59. poore men, whose feete he washed, and kissed after he had wiped them, he gaue euerie of the said poore men twelue pence in money, three elles of good cannas to make them shirtes, a paire of new shoes, a cast of red herrings and three white herrings, and one of them had two shillings. Upon easter daie he rose to the resurrection, &c. On thursdaie next he remoued to master Fitz Williams knight (sometime a merchant tailer of London, and then of the kings councell, who dwelt within three or foure miles of Peterborow) where he was ioyfullie receiued, and had honorable entertainment. On mundaie next he remoued vnto Stamford, and the next date to Grantham, and was lodged in the house of master Hall. The next night he lodged in the Castle of Newarke, where he remained the next daie, and from thence rode to Southwell, and there continued the most part of that sommer, not without great resort of the most worshipfull of the countrey. And diuers noble men hauing occasion to repaire into the same countrey there, thought it good to visit my lorde as they trauelled, of whome they were most gladly entertained, and had right good chéere: whose noble and gentle behauior caused him to haue much loue in the countrey of all kinde of people: he kept there a noble house, where was both plentie of meate and drinke for all commers, and also much almes giuen at his gate vnto the poore of the towne and country. He vsed much charity and clemencie among his tenants and other: he made many agréements betwéene gentlemen and gentlemen, and betwéene some gentlemen and their wiues, and other meane persons, the which had béene long before a sunder and in great trouble, making for euery of them (as occasion serued) great assemblies & feasts, not sparing his purse where he might make amitie. It chanced vpon Corpus Christi éuen, in the night, when my lord and all his houshold were at rest in their beds, there knocked at the gate two gentlemen, the one named master Brierton one of the gentlemen of the kings priuie chamber, and master Writherley, who were come from the king in post to speake with my lord. These were let in, my lord was raised, and came to them into the dining chamber: they séeing him in his night apparell, did to him due reuerence, whom he tooke by the hands, demanding how the king his soueraigne lorde did. Sir (said they) right well and merry, we must desire to talke with you apart: With a good will (quoth he.) After long talke, they tooke forth of a little maile a little coffer couered with with gréene velvet, and bound with bars of siluer and gilt, with a locke and a gilt key, with the which they opened the chest, out of the which they toke an instrument or writing containing more than a skinne of great parchment, hauing manie seales hanging to the same, whereunto they put more ware for my lordes seale: the which my lorde sealed, and subscribed his name with his owne hand, and deliuered the same againe vnto them, desiring them to take a bed: for it was somewhat past midnight. But they saide they would straight way ride to the earle of Shrewsburie, to be with him ere he were stirring: so my lorde caused them to eate such colde meate as was readie, and to drinke a bole or two of wine: that done, he gaue each of them foure olde soueraignes of fine golde, and so they departed. In this sort and manner my lord late at Southwell vntill about the latter end of Lent time, then he remoued to Newike, an abbey, to Rufford and Blith abbey, and so to Scroby, where he continued till after Michaelmas, exercising many déedes of charity, & commonly euery sunday he would trauell vnto some poore parish church, and there would say his diuine seruice, and cause one of his chaplaines to preach vnto the people: that done, he would dine in some honest house of the towne, where should be distributed to the poore a great almes in meat and drinke, as of monie. About the feast of S. Michael, he remoued to Cawood castle within 7. miles of Yorke, where he lay long after with much honor and loue of the countrey, doing déedes of charitie, and held there an honorable houshold for all commers, and also built and repaired the castle, hauing artificers and labourers aboue the number of 300. persons dailie in wages, &c. At length being thereunto perswaded by the doctors of the church of Yorke, he determined to be stalled there at Yorke minster the next mundaie after Alhallowne day, against which time due preparation was made for the same, but not in so sumptuous wise as were his predecessors. My lord sent his gentleman vsher to Yorke, to foresée things there that should bee ordered and prouided for the solemnitie, which should haue béene as meane as could be. Vpon Alhallowne daie one of the head officers of the Church of Yorke, which should haue the most doings in all this stallation, was with my lorde at dinner at his house of Cawood, and sitting at dinner they fell in communication of this matter, and of the order thereof, saying, that my lorde should go on foote from a chappell of Saint Iames, without the gates of the citie vnto the minster vpon cloth, the which should be distributed among the poore after his passage. My Lord hearing this, made answere in this wise: Although our predecessors did go vpon cloth, so we intend to go on foote from thence without any such glorie, for I take God to witnes, I do not intend to go thither for any triumph or glorie, but only to performe the rules of the church, to the which I am bound. And therefore I desire you all, and will command other my seruants to go as humblie thither without anie sumptuous or gorgeous apparell, otherwise than in decent maner: for I doe purpose to come to Yorke vpon Sundaie at night next, and to lodge in the deans house, and vpon munday to be stalled, and there to make but a dinner for you of the close, and for other worshipfull gentlemen that shall chaunce to come thither to the same, and to suppe with some of the residences, and the next daie to dine with the Maior, and then to prepare home hither againe. The daie being once knowne vnto all the countrie, which coulde not bee hid, the worshipfull Gentlemen and other, as Abbots and Priors sent in such prouision of victualles, that it is almost incredible, as of fat beasts and muttons, wilde fowle, and venison both red and fallowe, and other daintie things such as would haue plentifully furnished the feast. All which things were vnknown to my lord, for as much as hee beeing preuented and disappointed of his purpose, by reason that he was arrested of high treason, as yée shall heare hereafter, so that most part of this Sommer prouision, was sent vnto Yorke that same daie of his arrest, and the next daie following: for his arrest was kept as close and secret from the countrie, because they doubted the common people, which had him in great estimation and loue, for his great charitie and liberality which he vsed daily amongst them. It is appointed by the king & councell, that Sir Walter Walsh knight, one of the kings priuie chamber, shoulde be sent downe with a commission into the North vnto the earle of Northumberland, who was sometime brought vp in house with the cardinall, and they twaine beeing iointlie in commission to arrest the Cardinall of high treason: Master Walsh toke his horse at the court gate about noone vpon Alhalowne daie, toward the earle of Northumberland. And nowe haue I occasion to declare what happened about the same time, which peraduenture signified the troubles following to the cardinall. The cardinal sitting at dinner vpon Alhalown day, hauing at his bords end diuers chaplaines sitting at dinner, ye shal vnderstand that the cardinals great crosse stood in a corner at the tables ende, leaning against the hanging, and when the bordes ende was taken vp, and a conuenient time for the chaplaines to arise, one doctor Augustine a Uenetian, & physition to the cardinall, rising from the table with the other, hauing vpon him a great gowne of bosserons veluet, ouerthrew the Crosse, which trailing downe along the tappet, with the point of one of the crosses, brake doctor Boners head, that the blood ranne downe, the companie there standing, greatlie astonied with the chaunce. The Cardinall perceiuing the same, demaunded what the matter meant of their sodayne amaze? and they shewed him of the fall of his Crosse vpon doctor Boners head: and hath it, quoth he, drawne anie blood? Yea forsooth my Lord quoth they: with that he caste his head aside, and saide shaking his heade, Malum Omen, and therewith saide Grace, and rose from the Table, and went to his Chamber. Nowe marke the signification how the Cardinall expounded this matter at Pomfret after his fall. First ye shall vnderstande that the Crosse which hee bare as Archbyshoppe of Yorke, signifyed himselfe, and Augustine the Physition who ouerthrewe the Crosse, was onelie hee that accused the Cardinall, whereby his enemies caught an occasion to ouerthrowe him: it fell vpon doctor Boners head, who was Master of the Cardinalles faculties and Spirituall iurisdictions, and was then damnifyed by the ouerthrowe of the Crosse: yea, and moreouer drawing blode of him, betokened death, which shortlie after did ensue. About which time of this mischaunce, the same verie daie and season Master Walsh tooke his horse at the Court, as nigh as coulde bee iudged, and so must needes bee taken for a signe or token of that which followed. Nowe the appointed time drewe neere of his exaltation, and sitting at dinner vpon the Friday next before the Monday, on the which daie hee intended to be exalted at Yorke, the Earle of Northumberland and Maister Walsh, with a great companie of Gentlemen of the earles house, and of the country, whom he had gathered together in the kings name, came into the hall at Cawood, the officers being at dinner, and the cardinall not fullie dined, being then in his exaltes. The first thing that the earle did after hee had set order in the hall, hee commanded the porter at the gates to deliuer him the keies thereof, who would in no wise obey his commandement although he were roughly threatened, and straitly commanded in the kinges name to make deliuery of them to one of the earles seruants: sir (quoth hee) seeing that ye do but intend to set one of your seruantes in my place to keepe the gates, I know no seruant that ye haue, but I am as able as he to do it, and keepe the gates to your purpose, whatsoeuer it be; and also the keies were deliuered me by my L. and maist. therefore I pray you to pardon me, for whatsoeuer ye shall command me to do in the ministration of mine office, I shal do it with good will: with that (quoth the earle) hold him a booke, and commanded him to laie his hand thereon: thou shalt sweare (quoth he) that thou shalt well and truelie keepe the gates to the kings vse, and to do all such thinges as wee shall command, and that ye shall let passe neither in nor out at these gates, but such as ye be commanded by vs, and with this oth, hee receiued the keies at the earles hands. Of all these doings knew the cardinal nothing, for they stopped the staires, so that none went vp to the cardinals chamber, and they that came down, could no more go vp againe: at the last one escaped, who shewed the cardinal that the earle was in the hal: whereat the cardinal marueiled, and would not beleeue him, but commanded a gentleman to bring him the truth, who going downe the staires, saw the earle of Northumberlande, and returned, and said it was very he: then (quoth the cardinall) I am sorie that we haue dined, for I feare our officers bee not prouided of anie store of good fish. to make him some honorable cheere, let the table stand (quoth hee) with that hee rose vp, and going downe the staires, hee encountred the Earle comming vp with all his traine, and assone as the Cardinall espied the Earle, he put off his cap, and said, my Lord, ye be most heartilie welcome, and so embraced each other: then the cardinall tooke the earle by the hand, and had him vp into his chamber, whom followed all the number of the Earles seruauntes. From thence, he led him into his bed chamber, and they being there all alone, the Earle saide vnto the cardinal, with a soft voice, laying his hand vpon his arme, my L. I arrest you of high treason: with which wordes the Cardinall beeing marueilouslie astonied, standing both still a good space, at the last, quoth the Cardinall, what authoritie haue you to arrest mee? Forsooth my lord, quoth the earle, I haue a commission so to do: where is your commission, quoth he, that I may see it? Nale Sir that you nale not, saide the earle: well then, quoth the cardinall, I will not obey your arrest. But as they were debating this matter betweene them in the chamber, so busie was M. Walsh in arresting doctor Augustine at the Doore in the Pallace, saying vnto him, go in traitor or I shall make thee.

Augustine doctor of phisick arrested of treason

At

At the last master Walsh being entered the cardinalles chamber, beganne to plucke off his hoode, and after kneeled downe to the cardinall, vnto whome the cardinall said, come hither gentleman, and let me speake with you: sir here my L. of Northumberland hath arrested mee, but by whose authoritie hee sheweth not: if ye be joined with him, I pray you shew me. Indeede my lord, quoth M. Walsh, hee sheweth you the trueth: well then, quoth the cardinall, I pray you let me see it. Sir, I beseech you, quoth master Walsh, hold vs excused: there is annexed to our commission certaine instructions which you maie not see: well quoth the Cardinall, I trowe yee are one of the kinges priuie Chamber, your name is Walsh, I am content to yeeld to you, but not to my lord of Northumberlande without I see his commission: the worst in the kings priuie Chamber is sufficient to arrest the greatest peere of the Realme by the kings commaundement, without anie Commission, therefore put your Commission and authoritie in execution, spare not, I will obeie the kinges will: I take God to iudge, I neuer offended the King in worde nor deed. Then the earle called into the Chamber diuers Gentlemen of his owne seruauntes, and after they had taken the Cardinalles keies from him, they put him in custodie of the earles Gentlemen, and then they went about the house to set all things in an order: then sent they Doctor Augustine awaie to London with as much speede as they coulde, who was bounde vnto the horse like a Traytor, but it was Sundaie towarde night ere the Cardinall was conueied from Calwod, and lodged that night in the Abbey of Pomfret. The next daie hee remoued toward Dancaster, and was there lodged at the Blacke Friers, the next daie he was remoued to Sheffield parke, where the earle of Shrewsbury with his ladie, and a traine of Gentlemen and Gentlewomen receiued him with much honor. And the cardinall being thus with the earle of Shrewsbury, continued there 18. daies after, vpon whome the earle appointed diuers gentlemen to attend continuallie, to see that hee shoulde lacke nothing, beeing serued in his owne Chamber, as honourablie as he had beene in his owne house, and once euerie daie the Earle woulde repaire vnto him, and commune with him. After the Cardinall had thus remayned with the Earle of Shrewsburie about a fortnight, it came to pas at a certain time as he sate at his dinner in his own Chamber, hauing at his bordes ende a messe of Gentlemen and chaplaines to keepe him companie, towarde the ende of his dinner, when hee was come to eating his fruites, his colour was perceyued often to chaunge, whereby hee was iudged not to bee in good health: whereupon, one of his Gentlemen sayde: Sir, me seemes you are not well at ease: to whome he answered with a loud voice, forsoth no more I am, for I am, quoth he, taken sodainelie with a thing about my stomack, that lieth there along, as colde as a whetstone, which is no more but wind, I pray you go to the Poticarie, and inquire of him if hee haue anie thing that will breake wind vpward. Then went he to the earle, and shewed him what estate the cardinall was in, and what hee desired: with that the Earle caused the poticarie to be called before him, and demanded of him if he had any thing that would breake wind vpwarde in a mans bodie, and hee answered hee had such geare. Then, quoth the Earle, fetch mee some: then the Cardinal lodged at Sheffield with the earle of Shrewsbery.

The cardinall sicknesth.

Poticarie

Poticarie fetched a white confection in a faire Paper, and shewed it to the Earle, who commaunded one to giue the assaie thereof before him, and then the same to bee brought to the Cardinall, who receyued it vppe all at once into his mouth: But immediatlie after, sutelie hee auoyded much wind vpwarde. Loe, (quoth hee) yee maie see that it was but winde, and nowe I am well eased, I thanke God, and so hy rose from the Table, and went to his prayers: And that doone, there came on him such a loosenesse, that it caused him to goe to his Stoole. And not longe after the Earle of Shrewsburie came into the gallerie to him, with whome the Cardinall met, and then sitting downe vpon a Bench, the Earle asked him howe hee did, and hee most lamentablie aunswered him, and thanked him for his gentle entertaynement: Sir, (quoth the Earle) if yee remember, yee haue often wished to come before the King, to make your answere, and I haue written to the King in that behalfe, making him priuie of your lamentation that yee inwardlie haue receiued for his displeasure, who accepteth all your doings therin, as friends bee accustomed to do in such cases: wherefore I would aduise you to pluck vp your heart, and be not agast of your enemies, I doubt not but this your iourney to his highnes shall be much to your aduancement. The king hath sent for you that worshipfull knight Master Kingstone, and with him 24. of your olde seruants, now of the guard, to the intent yee maie safelie come to his maiestie: sir (quoth the Cardinall) I trow master Kingstone is Constable of the tower: yea, what of that, quoth the Earle? I assure you hee is elected by the king for one of your friends: Well, quoth the cardinall, as God will, so be it, I am subiect to fortune, being a true man, readie to accept such chances as shall follow, and there an end. I pray you where is M. Kingstone? quoth the earle, I wil send for him: I praie you so do, quoth the cardinall: at whose message he came, and as soone as the Cardinall espied him, he made haste to encounter him, and at his comming hee kneeled to him, and saluted him in the kings behalfe, whom the Cardinall bare-headed offered to take vp, and said: I praie you stande vp, kneele not to me, I am but a wretch repleate with miserie, not esteeming my selfe but as a vile abiect, vtterlie cast awaie without desert as God knoweth. Then saide M. Kingstone with humble reuerence, Sir, the king hath him commended vnto you: I thanke his highnes, quoth the cardinall, I trust hee be in health: yea, quoth M. Kingstone, and he commanded me to say to you, that you should assure your selfe that he beareth you as much good will, as euer hee did, and willeth you to be of good cheere, and where report hath beene made, that ye should commit against him certaine heinous crimes, which he thinketh to bee vntrue, yet he can do no lesse than to send for you to your trial, and to take your iourney to him at your own pleasure, cõmanding me to be attendant vpon you. Therefore sir I pray you when it shall be your own pleasure to take your iourney, I shall be ready to giue attendance: Master Kingstone, quoth he, I thanke you for your newes, and sir, if I were as lustie as I haue bẽ of late, I would ryde with you in Poste, but I am diseased with a fire that maketh mee verie weake: but I shall with all speede make me readie to ryde with you to Morrowe. When night came, the Cardinall waxed verie sicke with the Laske, the which caused him continually to go to the stoole al that night, insomuch, that he had that night 50. stooles: therefore in consideration of his infirmitie, they caused him to tarrie all that day: and the next daie he toke his iourney with maister Kingston and them of the guard, till he came to an house of the earle of Shrewsburies, called Hardwike hall, where he lay all night verie euill at ease. The next daie he rode to Nottingham, and there lodged that night more sicke: and the next day he rode to Leicester Abbey, and by the waie waxed so sicke, that he was almost fallen from his mule, so that it was night before he came to the Abbey of Leicester: where at his comming in at the gates, the Abbot with all his couent met him with diuers torches light, whom they honorably receiued and welcommed: to whom the Cardinall said: father abbot, I am come hither to lay my bones among you, riding so still vntill he came to the staires of the chamber, where he alighted from his mule, and maister Kingston led him vp the staires, and as soone as he was in his chamber he went to bed. This was on the saturday at night, and then encreased sicker and sicker, vntill Mondaie, that all men thought he would haue died. So on Tuesdaie S. Andrewes euen, maister Kingston came to him and bad him good morrow, for it was about fiue of the clocke, and asked him how he did: sir, quoth he, I tarrie but the pleasure of God, to render vp my poore soule into his hands: not so sir, quoth maister Kingston; with the grace of God, ye shall liue and do verie well, if ye will be of good chéere: nay in good soth maister Kingston, my disease is such, that I cannot liue: for I haue had some experience in Physicke. Thus it is, I haue a flure with a continuall feauer, the nature whereof is, that if there be no alteration of the same within eight daies, either must ensue excoriation of the entrailes, or frensie, or else present death, and the best of them is death, and as I suppose this is the eight daie, and if ye see no alteration in me, there is no remedie, saue, though I maie liue a daie or twaine after, but death must ensue. Sir, quoth maister Kingston, you be in such pensiuenes, doubting that thing, that in good faith ye néede not. Well, well, maister Kingston, quoth the Cardinall, I see the matter how it is framed: but if I had serued God as diligentlie as I haue done the king, he would not haue giuen me ouer in my gray haires: but this is the iust reward that I must receiue for the diligent paines and studie that I haue had to doe him seruice, not regarding my seruice to God, but only to satisfie his pleasure: I praie you haue me most humblie commended vnto his Royall maiestie, and beséech him in my behalfe to call to his princelie remembrance, all matters proceeding betwéene him and me from the beginning of the world, and the progresse of the same, and most especiallie in his weightie matter, and then shall his graces conscience know whether I haue offended him or no, &c. Maister Kingstone farewell: I can no more saie, but I wish all things to haue good successe, my time draweth on fast, and euen with that he began to draw his spéech at length, and his tong to faile, his eies being set, whose sight fayled him, then did they put him in remembrance of Christ his Passion, and caused the yeomen of the guard to stand by to sée him die, and to witnes of his words at his departure: and incontinently the clocke stroke eight, and then he gaue vp the ghost, and departed departed this present life, which caused som to cal to remembrance howe he said the day before, that at eight of the clock they should lose their master: One of them looked on the other, supposing that either he knewe or prophesied of his departure.

Example of pride and arrogancie.

Here is the end and fall of pride and arroganey of men exalted by fortune to dignities: for I assure you in his time hee was the haughtiest man in all his proceedings alive, having more respect to the honor of his person, than he had to his spirituall profession, wherin should be shewed all meekenes, humility and charity, the discussing whereof any further I leave to diuines.

After that he was thus departed master Kingstone sent a poste to the king, advertised him of the departure of the cardinall by one of the gard, that sawe and heard him die. And when maist. Kingstone and the abbot had consulted for the order of his buriall, it was thought good that he should be buried the next daie following: for master Kingston would not tarrie the returne of the poste: and it was thought good, that the Maior of Leicester and his brethren shoulde be sent for, to see him personallie dead, to avoyde false rumors that mought happen. In the meane time the body was taken out of the bedde, who had vpon him next his bodie a shirte of haire, besides his other shirte of holland: now having put vpon his deade corpes, all such ornamentes, as hee was professed in, when he was made Bysshoppe and Archbyshoppe, as Miter, Crosse, Ring, and Pall, with all other things due to his order and dignitie: and lying thus all daie in his Coffin open faced, euerie man that woulde might see him there dead, as the Maior, his brethren, and other did. About foure or five of the clocke at night, he was carried downe into the Church, by the Abbot and chanons, and service was sung for the funerals. And about foure of the clocke in the morning master Kingstone and his seruauntes came into the Church, and there tarried the executing of diuers ceremonies, and then was hee buried in the midst of our ladies chappel, and by that time it was five of the clocke in the morning. Then prepared euery man to horseback being S. Andrewes day the apostle, & so toke their iourney to the court. And thus ended the life of this rich cardinal of England, whose history, who list to read with a cleare eie, maie behold the mutabilitie of vaine honors, and brittle assurance in aboundance, the uncertaintie of dignities, the flattering of fained friends, and the fickle favor of worldly princes: wherof this L. cardinal had felt and tasted both of the sweet & sowre in each degrées, as fleeting from honors, losing of riches, deposed from dignities, forsaken of friends, and the mutabilitie of princes favor: of all which things hee had in this world, the full felicitie, as long as fortune smiled vpon him, but when she beganne to frowne, how soone was he depriued of all these mundaine toies, and vaine pleasures, which in twentie yeeres with great trauaile and studie he obtained, was in one yéere and lesse, with great care and sorrowe lost and consumed. O madnesse! O fonde desire! O foolish hope! O greedie desire of vaine honor, dignities, and riches! of what vnconstant hope and trust is it, in the false fained countenance and promise of fortune, wherefore the Prophette sayde full well: Thesaurisat & ignorat cui congregabit ea. Who is certayne that hee shall leave his ryches that hee hath gathered in the world, vnto them whome he hath purposed: The Wiseman saith: That an other whome peraduenture he hated in his life, shall spende it out, and consume it.

The clergy condemned in the premunire.

The Clergie of England, being iudged by the K. learned counsell to bee in the premuntre, for maintaining the power legantine of the cardinal, were called by processe into the kings bench to answere, wherfore in their conuocation they concluded a submission, wherin they called the king supreame head of the church of England, according to the law of God, and not otherwise, and were contented to giue the king 100000. poundes, to pardon their offences touching the premunire.

When the parliament was begun the 6. of Ianuarie, the pardon of the spirituall persons was signed with the kings hand, and sent to the Lordes, which they consented to, and signed the bill. But when the same came downe to the commons it could not so easilie passe, because diuers frouard persons woulde also that the K. should pardon the laity aswell as the spiritualty, saying that all men which had dealt with the Cardinall were in like danger: This their slaie and bold demand was thought more then reason, for that they would seeme to enuie other mens wealth, and also to restraine the king of his libertie: but at length they seemed to be forrowfull for that they had dealt so vnaduisedlie, and then the king sent them their Pardon, for the which they humblie thanked him.

Conclusions against the kings mariage.

The 30. daie of March the Lorde Chancelor, and diuers other Lordes, both Spirituall and Temporall, came into the Common house, and there the Lord Chancelor declared what the king had done, touching the doubt of his marriage, to knowe the opinions of learned men of diuers Vniuersities in Christendome, and there were reade the determinations of the same Vniuersities, which they had written and sealed, concluding, that the kings marriage could not be lawfull: there were shewed also diuers bookes diuine, by doctors of forraine nations, which were to the same effect, but were not reade, for that the daie was spent.

After Christmas the Parliament beganne againe, in the which the Commons declared themselues to be sore agreeued, with the cruelties of the ordinaries, that called men afore them ex officio. At length a booke was drawn of all their griefes, and the same deliuered to the king by the speaker, who humblie beseéched him in the name of the Commons to take such direction therin, as to his highnes might séeme expedient: whereunto the king answered hee would take aduice, and heare the partie accused speake. In this Parliament was made an act, that bishops should pay no more annuities, or otherwise monie for their buls to the pope, for it was affirmed that there had béene paid for buls, of bishops and other, sith the fourth of Henry the seuenth, 60000. pounde sterling.

The parliament began againe after Easter, there was a motion made to helpe the king with mony towardes his charges about the reparing of pyles and other fortifications, vpon the borders foreaneuſt Scotland, both for better habitation to bee hadde there, and also for restraint of the Scottes that vsed to make inuasions: there was therefore a fiftéene granted, but not inacted at this season, because that sodainly began a pestilence in Westminster: wherefore the parliament was prorogued.

The 21. of October, king Henry rode toward Boloigne, and was by the way at Sandingfield met by the French king, and many nobles of France, who rode all to Boloigne, and were there lodged.

King H. rode to Boloigne.

The twentie fiue of October, whilest the king lay thus in Boloigne, the French king called a chapter of the companions of his order called Saint Michell, of whome the king of England was one, and so he there elected the

Dukes

Dukes of Norffolke and Suffolke, to be companions of the same order, who being brought to the Chapiter had their collars deliuered to them, and were sworne to the statutes of the order. The same daie, they departed out of Bolognie toward Calets: without the towne of Caleis, about the distance of two miles, the Duke of Richmond the kinges base sonne, with a great compaine of noble men, which hadde not béene at Boloigne, met them, and saluting the French K. embraced him in most honorable and curteous maner. Then they passed forward to Newenhambridge, and so to Caleis, where was such prouision made for the receiuing of them, as well for lodging, plate, and all such other furniture of houshold, as also of all sortes of viandes, wines, and other necessaries, ỳ it seemed woonderful. The French kings traine was 1200. horse or more, among the which was the king of Nauarre, the Cardinall of Lorraine, and manie Dukes, Bishoppes, and great Estates of France, Gascoigne, Brytaine, and Normandy: but there was lodging enough in Caleis, not onlie for them, but also for manie other, so that there were aboue 8000. persons lodged within the Towne at that time. Whilest these two kings lay at Caleis, king Henrie made the king of Nauarre knight of the Garter. The next daie, the French king, with the king of Nauarre, and all the great Lordes of France, rode againe to Boloigne: and king Henry of Englande rode with them to Sandingfield, where hee made the French king a costlie banquet. At this enterview, there was a communication of a ioint armie to bee made by them both, agaynst the Turke, who hadde at that time a great armie in Hungarie. The two kings should bring into the fielde against him fourescore thousand men, whereof 10000. to bee horsemen with artillerie and furniture, but the enemie of peace (the diuell) stirred all christian princes against the Emperor, for that they feared he sought to be monarch of all Italie. Whereupon king Henry of England sent presentlie to the French king, by the Lord of Pomerie the French ambassador 50000. crownes. The king of England feared ỳ the Emperor, for queene Katherine his Aunts sake (whome the saide king had refused to be his lawfull wife) would ioine with the Pope against him, wherefore hee made great complaynts to the French king against the saide Pope, for the wrong hee did him in the matter of deworse, and namelie in that hee woulde constrayne him to goe in proper person to Rome, or else to sende thither a Deputie with sufficient power to answere the lawe, which the sayde king helde for rigorous: furthermore hee requested the French king that they two might sende Ambassadours togither against the Pope to sommon him to a councell, to see that abuse and great wrongs hee had done against Christian Princes, and their subiects, and eracting of the clergie of England, and that the same, by the saide councell, might bee reformed. To this the French king agreed, and foorthwith willed the king of Englande to make all sure at home, and let him alone to deale abroad, but not to call the Pope to any councell, for that by their two powers, hee was otherwise to be dealt withall. Thus was the king of Englande nowe bent against the Pope, where of late hee hadde giuen monethlie threescore thousande angelles, towardes the pate of an army vnder Mounsier de Foys, for the popes deliuery, when he was holden prisoner in Castle Angell, by the late Duke of Burbons souldiers, and the prince of Orange.

The banquet being ended at Sandingfield, as is aforesaide, the three kings departed like louing brethren in great amitie. Whilest the king of England was in the French kings dominions, he had the vpper hand, and likewise had the French king in the dominions of the king of England. And as the French king paid all the English mens charges at Bologne, so did the king of England pay the French mens charges at Calais.

The fourteenth of Nouember the king returning into England landed at Douer.

1533 King Henry kept his Christmasse at Grenewich, and after Christmasse sir Thomas Audley keeper of the great seale, was made Lorde Chancelor of England.

King Henry priuily married the Lady Anne Boleine in his closet at Whitehall, on the fiue and twentith day of Ianuary being S. King Henry married the Lady Anne Boleine.

And then began the parliament, in the which was chosen Speaker Humfrey Wingfield Gentleman of Greyes Inne. In this parliament was enacted, that no person should appeale for any cause out of this realme to the court of Rome, but from the Commissary to the Bishop, and from the Bishop to the Archbishop, and from the archbishop to the king, and all causes of the kings to be tried in the vpper house of the Conuocation. It was also enacted the same time, that Quéene Katherine should no more be called Quéene, but Princesse Dowager, and the widowe of Prince Arthur.

After that the king perceiued his new wife to be with childe, he caused all officers necessary to be appointed to her, and so on Easter éeue being the 12. day of Aprill, she went to her closet openly as Quéene, and was proclaimed Quéene of England: and then the king appointed the day of her coronation to be kept on Whitsonday next following, and writings were sent to all Sheriffes, to certifie the names of men of forty pound lands, to receiue the order of knighthode, or else to make fine for the same. The assessement of which fine was appointed to Thomas Cromwell master of the kings iewell house, who so vsed the matter, that a great summe of mony was leuied to the kings vse by those fines.

The matter of appeale made by Quéene Katherine, whereunto she still sticked, and by no meanes could be remoued from it, was communed of both in the Parliament house, and also in the conuocation, where it was so handled, that manie were of opinion, that not onelie her appeale, but also all other appeales made to Rome, were voide, and of none effect, for that in ancient councelles it had béene determined, that a cause rising in one prouince should not be determined in an other. This matter was opened with all the circumstances to the Ladie Katherine Dowager, the which persisted still in her former former opinion, and would by no meanes reuoke her appeale to the court of Rome. Whereupon the Archbishop of Canterbury doctor Thomas Cranmer accompanied with doctor Iohn Stokesley bishoppe of London, Stephen Gardner bishoppe of Winchester, the bishops of Bathe and Lincolne, and diuers other learned men in great number rode to Dunstable, which is fiue miles from Ampthill, where the princesse Dowager laie, and there by one doctor Lee she was ascited to appeare before the said Archbishop in case of matrimony in the saide towne of Dunstable: but shee made default and appeared not, wherfore she was called peremptorily euery daie 15. daies togither, and at the last for lacke of appearance, by the assent of the learned men there present, she was diuorced from the king, and the marriage declared to be voide and of none effect.

In the moneth of Maie Pope Clement sent an orator to the king, requiring him to appeare personally at the generall Councell, which was appointed to be kept in the yeare following: but when his commission was shewed, at the earnest request of the king, there was neither place nor time certaine specified for the keeping of that councell, and so with an vncertaine answere to an vncertaine demaunde, he departed, but not vnrewarded. Notwithstanding the king vnderstanding that the Pope, the Emperour, and the French king should mete at Nice in June following, he appointed the duke of Norffolke, the Lorde Rocheford brother to Quéene Anne, Sir William Pawlet controller of the kings house, sir Anthony Browne, and sir Francis Brian knights, to go in ambassage to the French king, and both to accompanie him to Nice, and also to commune with the pope there, concerning his state in the kings diuorce. These made their prouision readie, and so with the number of eight score horses they went to Douer, and passing ouer to Calets, toke their waie through France, to accomplish their ambassade as they had charge.

Wm. 1. Pr. of Orange born this year

The kings highnesse addressed his letters to the Maior and communaltie of London, signifying vnto them, that his pleasure was to solemnize the coronation of his most deare and welbeloued wife Quéene Anne at Westminster on Whitsondaie next ensuing, willing them to make preparation, as well to fetch her grace from Grænewich to the Tower by water, as to sée the Citie garnished with pageants in places accustomed, for the honour of her grace, when she should be conueyed from the tower to Westminster. Whereupon a common councell was called, and commandement giuen to the Haberdashers, of which craft the Maior was, that they shoulde prepare a Barge for the Bachelors, with a waffer, and a foyste, garnished with banners, like as they vse when the Maior is presented at Westminster, on the morrowe after the feast of Saint Simon and Iude. Also all other Crafftes were commanded to prepare Barges, and to garnish them, not onely with their banners accustomed, but also to decke them with targets by the sides of the Barges, and to set vp all such séemely banners and Bannerets, as they had in their Halles, or could get to furnish their said barges, and euery barge to haue minstrels, according to which commandement great preparation was made for all things necessarie for such a noble triumph.

The nine and twentith daie of May being thursdaie, the Maior and his brethren all in Scarlet, and such as were knights had collars of Esses, and the residue hauing great chaines, and the Councell of the Citie assembled with them at Saint Mary Hill. And at one of the clocke descended to the new faire to their barge, which was garnished with manie goodly banners and streamers and richly couered, in which barge was Shalmes, Shagbushes, and diuers other Instrumentes of Musicke, which played continuallie.

After that the Maior and his brethren were in their barge, seeing that the companies to the number of fiftie barges were readie to waite vpon them, they gaue commandement to the companies, that no barge should row nearer to another, than twice the length of the barge, and to see the order kept, there were three whirries prepared, and in euery part one of them two officers to call on them to keepe their order.

After which commandement giuen, they set forth in order, as hereafter is described. First, before the Maiors barge was a foiste, for a waster full of ordinance, in which foiste was a great red Dragon continually mouing and casting wilde fire, and round about the saide foiste stood terrible monstrous and wilde men casting fire, and making hideous noise: next after the foiste a good distaunce came the Maiors barge: on whose right hand was the Bacheliers barge, in the which were trumpets, and diuers other melodious instruments: the deckes of the saide barge and saile yardes and the top castles were hanged with rich cloth of golde and silke: at the forepart and the sterne were two great banners rich beaten with the armes of the King and the Quéne: and on the top castle also was a long streamer newly beaten with the said armes: the sides of the barge was set full of flags and banners of the deuices of the companies of Haberdashers and merchant Aduenturers, and the lasserers of cordes were hanged with innumerable Pensels, hauing little belles at the endes, which made a goodlie noise, and was a goodly sight, wauering with the winde: on the out side of the barge were three dozen Scutcheons in metall, of the armes of the King and Quéne, which were beaten vpon square Buckeram deuided, so that the right side had the Kings colours, and the left side the Quénes, which Scutcheons were fastened on the clothes of Golde and siluer, hanging on the deckes: on the left hande of the Maior was an other foiste, in the which was a mount, and on the mount stode a white Faulcon crowned vpon a rote of Golde, enuironed with white roses and red, which was the Quénes deuice: about which mount sate Virgins singing and playing melodiously: Next after the Maior followed his fellowship the Haberdashers: next after them the Mercers: then the Grocers, and so euerie companie in his order, and last of all the Maiors and Sheriffes officers, euerie companie hauing melodie in their barge by themselues, and goodly garnished with banners, and some couered with silke, and some with arras or such like, which was a goodly sight to behold: and in this order they rowed by Grénwich to the point beyond Grénwich, and there they turned backward in an other order, that is to wéete, the Maiors and Sheriffes officers first, and the meanest craft next, and so ascending to the uppermost craft in order, and the Maior last, as they go to Paules at Christmasse, and in that order they rowed downe-ward to Grénwich towne, and there cast anchor, making great melodie. At three of the clocke, the Quéene apparelled in rich cloth of Golde, entred into her barge, accompanied with diuers Ladies and Gentlewomen, and incontinent the Citizens set forward in their order, their minstrels continually playing: and the Bachelers barge going on the Quænes right hande, which she toke great pleasure to beholde. About the Quænes barge were many noble men, as the Duke of Suffolke, the Marquesse Dorcet, the Earle of Wilshire her father, the Earles of Arundale, Darby, Rutland, Worcester, Huntington, Susser, Oxford, and manie bishops and noble men, euerie one in his barge, which was a goodly sight to behold: she thus being accompanied rowed towards the Tower: and in the meane waie the ships which were commanded to lie on the shoare for letting of the barges, shot diuers peales of guns, and ere she landed, there was a maruellous shot out of the Tower, I neuer heard the like: and at her landing, there met with her the Lord Chamberlaine with the officers of Armes, and brought her to the King, which receiued her with louing countenance at the posterne by the water side, and kissed her, and then she turned backe againe and thanked the Maior and the Citizens with manie goodlie wordes, and so entred into the Tower. Posterne of the tower by the waters side.

After which entrie the Citizens all this while houered before the Tower, making great melodie, and went not aland, for none were assigned to lande but the Maior, the Recorder, and two Aldermen: but to speake of the people that stood on euerie shoare to behold this sight, he that saw it not will not beléeue it.

On Fridaie at dinner serued the King all such as were appointed by his highnes to be knights of the Bathe, which after dinner were brought to their chambers, and that night were bathed, and shriuen according to the old vsage of England, and the next daie in the morning the king dubbed them according to the ceremonies thereto belonging, whose names hereafter ensue nineteene in number. The conueying of queene Anne thorough the citie to Weſtminſter.

On Saturdaie the one and thirtieth daie of Maie, the Quéene was conueied thorough London in order as followeth: To the intent that the horſes ſhould not ſlide on the pauement, nor that the people ſhould be hurt by horſes, the high ſtrétes, where-thorough the Quéene ſhould paſſe, were all grauelled from the Tower vnto Temple barre, and rayled on each ſide, within which rayle ſtode the craftes along in their order from Grace church, where the merchants of the Stilyard ſtode vntill the little conduit in Cheape, where the Aldermen ſtode, and on the other ſide of the ſtréte ſtode the conſtables of the Citie, apparelled in veluet and ſilke with great ſtaues in their hands, to cauſe the people to giue rowme, and kéepe good order: and when the ſtrétes were ſomewhat ordered, the Maior in a gowne of crimoſin veluet, and a rich collar of eſſes, with two ſotemen clothed in white and red damaſke, rode to the Tower, to giue his attendance on the Quéene, on whome the Sheriffes with their officers did awaite vntill they came to the Tower hill, where they taking their leaue rode downe the high ſtrétes, commanding the conſtables to ſée rowme and good order kept, and ſo went and ſtode by the Aldermen in Cheape, and before the Quéene with her traine ſhould come, Grace-ſtréte and Cornehill were hanged with fine ſcarlet, crimoſin, and other grained clothes, and in ſome places with rich arras, and the moſt part of Cheape was hanged with cloth of tiſſue, golde, veluet, and many rich hangings which did make a goodly ſhewe, and all the windowes were repleniſhed with Ladies and Gentlewomen to behold the Quéene and her traine, as they ſhould paſſe by.

Chriſtian III. K. of Denmark he baniſh'd ye Popiſh Bps from thence

The firſt of the Quéenes companie that ſet forwarde, were 12. French men belonging vnto the French Ambaſſador, clothed in coates of blew veluet, with ſléeues of yellow and blewe veluet, their horſes trapped with cloſe trappers of blew ſarſenet poudred with white Croſſes: after them marched gentlemen, eſquires, knights, two and two: after them the iudges: after them the knights of the Bathe in violet gownes with hoodes purfled with miniuer like doctors: after them abbots: then barons: after them biſhops: the earles and the marqueſſes: then the lord Chancelor of England: after him the archbiſhop of Yorke, and the ambaſſador of Venice: after them the archbiſhop of Canterburie, and the ambaſſador of France: after rode two eſquires of honor with robes of eſtate rolled and worne bauldrike-wiſe about their neckes, with caps of eſtate, repreſenting the Dukes of Normandy and Aquitaine: after them rode the Maior of London with his mace, and Garter in his coate of armes, which bare alſo his mace of Weſtminſter hall: after them rode the lorde William Howard with the marſhals rod deputy to his brother the Duke of Norfolke marſhall of England, which was ambaſſador then in France, and on his right hand rode Charles Duke of Suffolke for that daie high constable of England, bearing the warder of siluer appertaining to the office of constableship, and all the Lordes for the most part were clothed in crimosin veluet, and all the Quéenes seruants or officers of armes in scarlet: next before the Quéene rode her Chancelor bare-headed: the sergeants and officers at armes rode on both sides of the lords: then came the Quéene in a white litter of white cloth of golde, not couered or bailled, which was led by two palfreis clad in white damaske downe to the ground, head and all, led by her footmen: shée had on a kirtle of white cloth of tissue, and a mantle of the same furred with ermine, her haire hanging downe: but on her head shée had a coife with a circlet about it ful of rich stones: ouer her was borne a canapie of cloth of gold with foure gilt staues, and foure siluer belles: for bearing of the which canapie were appointed fiftéene knightes, foure to beare it one space on foote, and foure an other space, according to their owne appointment: next after the Quéene rode the Lorde Browgh her chamberlaine: next after him William Coffin maister of her horses, leading a spare horse with a side saddle, trapped downe with cloth of tissue: after him rode seuen ladies in crimosin veluet, turned vp with cloth of gold and of tissue, and their horses trapped with golde: after them two chariots couered with red cloth of golde, in the first chariot were two ladies, which were the olde Dutchesse of Northfolke, and the olde marchionesse of Dorset: in the second chariot were foure ladies all in crimosin veluet: after them rode seuen ladies in the same sute, their horses trapped and all: after them came the third chariot all in white, with fiue ladies in crimosin veluet: next to them came the fourth chariot all red, with eight ladies also in crimosin: after whom followed thirtie gentlewomen all in veluet and silke, in the liuerie of their ladies, on whom they gaue their attendance: after them followed the guarde in coates of Goldsmiths worke, in which order they rode forth till they came to Fan-church, where was made a pageant all of children apparelled like merchants, which welcommed her to the Citie, with two proper propositions both in French and in English: and from thence she rode vnto Grace church corner, where was a costlie and maruellous cunning pageant made by the merchants of the Stilyard, therein was the mount Pernassus with the fountaine of Helicon, which was of white marble, and foure streams without pipe did rise an ell high and met togither in a little cup aboue the fountaine, which fountaine ranne abundantly with rackt Reynish wine till night, on the mountaine sate Apollo, and at his féete sate Caliope: and on euerie side of the mountaine sate foure muses playing on seuerall sweete instruments, and at their féete Epigrams and poesies were written in golden letters, in the which euerie muse according to her propertie praised the Quéene.

From thence the quéene with her traine passed to Leaden hall, where was a goodly pageant with a tipe and heauenly Rose, and vnder the tippe was a goodly rote of golde, set on a little mountaine enuironed with red Roses and white, out of the tippe came downe a falcon all white, and set vpon the rote, and incontinent came downe an Angell with great melodie, and set a close crowne of gold on the faulkens head: and in the same pageant sate S. Anne, with all hir issue beneath her: and vnder Mary Cleophe sate hir foure children, of the which children, one made a goodly Oration to the Quéene of the fruitefulnes of S. Anne, and of her generation, trusting, that like fruit should come of her. Then she passed to the conduit in Cornhil, where were the thrée Graces set in a throne, afore whome was the Spring of Grace, continuallie running wine: afore the fountaine sate a poet, declaring the property of euery Grace: that doone, euery Lady by hir selfe according to hir property, gaue to the Q. a seuerall gift of Grace.

That doone, shée passed by the great Conduite in Cheape, which was newelie paynted with Armes and deuises, out of the which Conduite, (by a goodlie Fountayne set at the ende,) ranne continuallie wine, both white and Claret all that afternoone: and soe she rode to the Standart, which was richlie paynted with Images of Kinges and Quéenes, and hanged with banners of armes, and in the toppe was marueylous sweete Harmonie, both of songs and Instrumentes.

Crosse in cheap newly gilt. Then shee went forwarde by the Crosse, which was newelie gilte, till shee came where the Aldermen stoode, and then Maister Baker the Recorder came to her with lowe reuerence, making a proper and briefe proposition, and gaue to her, in the name of the citie, a thousand marks in golde, in a purse of golde, which she thankefully accepted with manie good words, and so rode to the little Conduite, where was a rich pageant full of melodie and songs, in which pageant were Pallas, Iuno, & Venus, and afore them stoode Mercurie, which in the name of ỳ thrée goddesses, gaue vnto her a ball of Gold, diuided in thrée, signifying thrée gifts which these thrée goddesses gaue to hir, that is to say, wisedom, riches, and felicity.

As she entered into Pauls gate, there was a prettie pageant, in which sate thrée Ladies richlie clothed, and in a circle on their heade was written Regina Anna, prosper, proceede, and raigne. The lady in the middest had a tablet, in the which was written Veni amica, coronaberis, and vnder the tablet sate an angell with a close crowne. And the ladie sitting on the right hand had a tablet of siluer, in which was written, Domine dirige gressus meos. And the third lady had a tablet of gold, with letters of azure written, Confido in Domino, and vnder their feet was written:

Regina Anna paris regis de sanguine natam,
Et paries populis aurea sæcla tuis.

And these Ladies cast downe Wafers, on the which she sayde two verses were written.

From thence she passed to the East end of Pauls church against the schole, where stood a scaffolde, and children well apparrelled, which saide to her diuers goodly verses of Poets translated into English, to the honor of the K. and her, which she highly commended. And then she came to Ludgate, which gate was new garnished with gold and bise, & on the leades of S. Martins church stood a

gwdly quére of singing men and childzen, which sang newe Ballets made in praise of her grace.

After that she was past Ludgate, she proceeded toward Flæteſtræt, where the conduit was newlie painted, and all the armes and angels refreshed, and the shalmes melodiouslie sounding. Upon the conduite was made a Tower with foure turrets, and in euery turret stood one of the cardinall vertues with their tokens and properties, which had seuerall spéeches, promising the Quéen neuer to leaue her, but to be aiding and comforting her: and in the middest of the tower closely was such seuerall solemne instruments, that it séemed to be an heauenly noise, and was much regarded and praised: and besides this, the conduit ran Wine, claret and red all the afternoone, so she with all her company, and the Maior, rode forth to Temple bar, which was newly painted and repaired, where stode also diuers singing men and childzen, till shee came to Weminster Hall, which was richlie hanged with cloth of arras, and newelie glased, and in the middest of the hall she was taken out of her litter, and so led vp to the high deske vnder the cloth of estate, on whose left hand was a cupbord of tenstages high, marueylous rich and beautifull to beholde, and within a little season was brought to the Quéene with a solemne seruice in great standing Spice plates, a voyde of Spice, and subtleties, with Ipocrasse, and other Wines, which shee sent downe to her ladies, and when the ladies had dzunke, she gaue harty thanks to the lords and ladies, and to the Maior, and other that had giuen their attendance on hir; and so withdrewe hirselfe with a few ladies to the White hall, and so to her chamber, and there shifted hir, and after went in hir barge secretly to the king to his manno: of Westminster where she rested that night.

Coronation of Queene Anne.

On Whitsondaie the 1. of June the Maior clad in crimosin veluet, with his coller, and all the Aldermen and Sherifs in scarlet, and the counsel of the city, tok their barge at the crane by seuen of the clock, and came to Westminster, where they were welcommed, and brought into the hall by M. Treasurer, and other of the kings house, and so gaue their attendance till the Quéene shoulde come forth: betwéene eight and nine of the clocke shee came into the hall, and stod vnder the cloth of estate, and then came in the kinges Chappell, and the monks of Westminster, all in rich coapes, and many Bishops and abbots, in Coapes and Miters, which went into the middest of the hall, and there stode a season, then was there a raycloth spread from the quéenes standing in the hal, through the pallace and sanctuary, which was railed on both sides, to the high altar of Westminster, after that the raycloth was cast, the officers of armes appointed the order accustomed. First went gentlemen, then Esquires, then knights, then aldermen of London in their cloakes of scarlet, cast ouer their gownes of scarlet.

After them, the Judges in their mantles of scarlet and coifes: then followed the knights of the Bath, being no lords, euery man hauing a white lace on his left sleeue: then followed barons and vicounts in their parliament robes of scarlet: after them came Earles, Marquesses, and Dukes in their Robes of Estate, of Crimosin veluet, farred with Ermin, poudred according to their degrées.

degrées. After them came the Lord Chancellor in a robe of Scarlet, open before, bordered with lettice. After him came the kings chappell, and the monks solemnelie singing, with procession. Then came abbots and bishops mitered, then Sergeants and officers at armes: Then the Maior of London with his mace, and Gartar in his coate of armes: then the marques Dorset in his robe of estate, which bare the Scepter of gold, and the earle of Arundell, which bare the rod of ivorie with the doue both together: then alone the earle of Oxforde high Chamberlaine of England, which bare the crowne. After him the duke of Suffolke in his robe of estate, for that day being high Stewarde of England, having a long white rod in his hand, and the Lord William Howard with the rod of the marshals ship, and euerie knight of the gartar had on his collar of the order. Then proceeded forth the Quéene in a circote and robe of purple veluet, furred with Ermine in her haire, coife, and circlet, as she had the Saturdaie, and ouer her was borne the Canapie, by foure of the Cinque portes, all in Crimosin, with points of blew and redde hanging on their sleeues, and the Bishoppes of London and Winchester bare vp the laps of the Quénes robe, and her traine which was verie long, was borne by the old Dutchesse of Norffolke. After her followed Ladies, being Lordes Wiues, which had circotes of scarlet, with narrow slæues, the breast all lettice, with barres of pouders according to their degrées, and ouer that, they had mantles of scarlet furred, and euery mantle had lettice about the neck like a neckerchiefe, likewise poudered, so that by the pouderings their degrées might be knowne. Then followed Ladies being Knights wiues, in Gownes of Scarlet, with narrow sleeues without traines, onely edged with lettice, likewise had all the quénes Gentlewomen.

When shée was thus brought to the high place made in the middell of the Church betweene the queere and the high altar, shée was set in a rich Chaire, and after that shee had rested a while, shée descended downe vnto the high Altar, and there prostrated her selfe while the bishop of Canterburie said certain collects ouer her. Then she rose, and the bishop annointed her on the head and on the breast, and then she was led vp againe to her chaire, where after diuers orisons saide, the archbishop set the crowne of S. Edward on her head, and then deliuered her the Scepter of gold in her right hand, and the rod of Ivorie with the doue in the left hande, and then all the quéere sung Te Deum, &c. Which done, the bishop toke off the crowne of S. Edwarde being heauie, and set on her heade the Crowne made for her, and so went to masse, and when the offering was begunne, she descended downe and offered being crowned, and so ascended vppe agayne and sate in her Chaire till Agnus, and then shee went downe and knéeled before the high altar, where she receyued of the archbishop the holy sacrament, & then went vp to the place agayne. After that Masse was done, she went to S. Edwards shrine, and there offered. After which offering done, shee withdrewe her into a little place made for that purpose on the one side of the queere. Now in the meane season euery dutchesse put on her bonet a coronell of gold wrought with flowers, and euerie marchionesse put on a demy coronel of gold, and euery countesse a plain circle of gold without floures, and euery king at armes put on a crowne of copper and gilte, all which were worne till night.

When the Queene had a little reposed her, the companie returned in the same order that they set foorth, and the Quéene went crowned, and so did the ladies aforesaid: her right hand was sustained by ỹ earle of Wiltshire her father, and her left hand by the L. Talbot, deputy for the earle of Shrewsbury, & Lord Furniuall his father. And when shee was out of the sanctuarie within the pallace, the trumpets played marueylous freshlie, and so shee was brought to Westminster hall, and so to her withdrawing chamber: during which time, the lords, Iudges, maior and aldermen, put off their robes, mantles, and cloakes, and tooke their hodes from their neckes, and cast them about their shoulders, and the Lordes sate onelie in their circotes, and the Iudges and Aldermen in their gownes, and all the Lords that serued that daie serued in their circotes, and their hodes about their shoulders. Also dyuers officers of the kings house being no Lords, had circotes and hodes of Scarlet, edged with minuer, as treasurer, controller, and master of the iewell house, but their Circotes were not gilt.

The sitting at dinner of Queene Anne.

While the Quéene was in her Chamber, euery Lord and other that ought to do seruice at the coronation, did prepare them according to their duetie, as the Duke of Suffolke high steward of Englande, which was richlie apparelled, his doublet and iacket set with orient pearle, his gowne crimosin veluet embrothered, his courser trapped with a close trapper, head & all to the ground of crimosin veluet, set full of letters of gold of Goldsmithes worke, hauing a long white rod in his hand. On his left hand rode the Lord William, deputy for his brother, as earle marshall with the marshals rod, whose gown was crimosin veluet, and his horse trapper purple veluet cutte on white sattin, embrothered with white Lions. The earle of Oxford was high chamberlaine, the earle of Essex caruer, the earle of Sussex sewer, the earle of Arundell chiefe butler, on whom twelue citizens of London did giue their attendance at the cupbord: the earle of Darby cupbearer, the vicount Lisle panter, the L. Burgeyny chiefe larder, the L. Bray almoner for him and his copartners, & the maior of Oxford kept the buttery bar, and Th. Wyat was chosen ewerer for sir Henry Wyat his father.

When all things were readie and ordered, the Quéene vnder her canapie came into the hall and washed, and sate downe in the middest of the table vnder her cloth of estate. On the right side of her chaire stood the countesse of Oxford widow, and on her left hand stood the countesse of Worcester all the dinner season, which dyuers times in the dinner time did holde a fyne cloth before the Quænes face when she list to spitte, or doe otherwise at her pleasure: and at the Tables ende sate the Archbyshoppe of Canterburie on the right hande of the Queene, and in the middest betweene the Archbyshoppe and the countesse of Oxford stode the Earle of Oxford with a white staffe all dinner time, and at the Queenes feete vnder the table sate two gentlewomen all dinner time. When all these things were thus ordered, came in the duke of Suffolke, and the Lorde William Howard on horsebacke, and the sergeantes of armes before them, and after them the sewer, and then the knightes of the Bathe, bringing in the first course, which was eight and twenty dishes, besides subtleties, and ships made of ware, marueilous gorgeous to beholde, all which time of seruice the trumpets standing in the windowe at the neather ende of the hall, played.

When she was serued of two dishes, then the Archbishops seruice was set downe, whose sewer came equall with the third dish of the Quænes seruice on his left hand. After that the Quéene and the Archbishoppe were serued, the barons of the Ports began the table on the right hand nert the wall, then at the table sate the maisters and clearkes of the Chancerie, and beneath them other Doctors and Gentlemen. The table nert the wall on the left hand by the cupborde was begunne by the Maior and Aldermen, the Chamberlaine, and councell of the Citie of London, and beneath them sate substantiall merchants, and so downeward other worshipfull persons. At the table on the right hand in the middest of the hall sate the lorde Chancelor, and other temporall lordes: on the right side of the table in their circotes, and on the left side of the same table sate bishops and abbots in their parliament robes: beneath them, sate the Iudges, Sergeants, and the kings Counsell: beneath them, the knights of the Bathe. At the table on the left hande in the middle part sate Dutchesses, Marquesses, Countesses, Baronesses in their robes, and other Ladies in circotes, and Gentlewomen in gownes, all which Gentlewomen and Ladies sate on the left side of the table along, and none on the right side, and when all were thus set, they were incontinent serued so quicklie, that it was marueilous, for the seruitors gaue so good attendance, that meat, nor drinke, nor anie thing else néeded to be called for, which in so great a multitude was maruell. As touching the fare, there could be deuised no more costlie dishes, nor subtleties. The Maior of London was serued with foure and thirtie dishes at two courses, and so were all his brethren, and such as sate at his table. The Quéene had at her second course foure and twentie dishes, and thirtie at the third course, and betweene the last courses, the kings of armes crowned, and other officers of armes cried larges in three partes of the hall, and after stood in their place, which was in the bekens of the kings bench: and on the right hand out of the cloyster of Saint Stephens Chappell was made a little closet, in which the king with diuers ambassadours stoode to beholde the seruice, the Duke of Suffolke, and the Lorde William rode oftentimes about the hall, cheering the lordes, ladies, and maior, and his brethren.

After they in the hall had dined, they had wafers and ypocrase, and then they washed, and were commanded to rise and stand still in their places before the tables or on the fourmes till the Quéene had washed. When she had taken wafers & ypocrase, the table was taken vp, and the Earle of Rutland brought vp the surnape, and laide it at the bordes end, which immediatly was drawne and cast by maister Reade marshall of the hall, and the Quéene washed, and after the archbishop, and after the surnape was withdrawne: then she rose, and stoode in the middest of the hall place, to whom the earle of Suffer, in a goodly

It was this yeare enacted, that butchers should sell their beefe and mutton by weight, beefe for a halfe penny the pound, and mutton for three farthings: which being deuised for the great commodity of the realme (as it was thought) hath proued farre otherwise, for at that time fat oxen were sold for fiue and twenty shillings and eight pence the peece, fat weathers for three shillings and foure pence the peece, fat calues of the like price, a fat lamb for twelue pence. The butchers of London sold penny pieces of beefe for the releefe of the poore, euery piece two pounde and a halfe, sometime three pounde for a penny: and thirteene, sometime fourteene of these pieces for twelue pence: mutton eight pence the quarter, and an hundred weight of beefe for foure shillings and eight pence: what price it hath growen to since it néedeth not to be set downe. At this time also, and not before, were forraine butchers permitted to sell their flesh in Leaden hall market of London. Beefe and mutton sold by weight.

The 7. of September being sunday, betweene three and foure of the clocke at after none, the Quéene was deliuered of a faire Ladie, for whose good deliuerance Te Deum was sung incontinently, and great preparation was made for the christning. The Maior, and his brethren, and foure of the chiefe Citizens were commanded to be at the christning the Wenesdaie following. Vpon which daie the Maior Sir Stephen Peacocke in a gowne of crimosin veluet, with his collar of esses, and all the aldermen in scarlet with collars and chaines, and all the councell of the citie with them toke their barge at one of Birth of Ladie Elizabeth, and her christning.

The Friers Church was also hanged with rich arras: the font was of siluer, and stood in the midst of the church three steps high, which was couered with a fyne cloth: and diuers Gentlemen with Aprones and Towels about their Neckes, gaue attendance about it, that no filth shoulde come to the Fonte: Ouer it hung a square Canappe of Crymosin Sattin, fringed with Golde, about it was a rayle, couered with redde Saie, betweene the queere & bodie of the church was a close place with a pan of fire to make the Childe readie in. When all these thinges were ordered, the Childe was brought to the Hall, and then euerie man set forwarde: First the cittizens two and two, then gentlemen, Esquires, and Chaplaines, next after them the aldermen, and the Maior alone, and next the kings counsell, then the kings chappell in coapes, then barons, bishops, earles, the earle of Essex bearing the couered basons gilt, after him the Marques of Exceter with a taper of virgin wax, next him the Marques Dorset bearing the salt, behind him the ladie Mary of Norffolke bearing the crisome, which was verie rich of Pearle and stone. The old dutchesse of Norffolke bare the child in a Mantle of Purple veluet, with a long traine furred with Ermine. The Duke of Norffolke with his marshals rodde went on the right hand of the saide dutchesse, and the duke of Suffolke on the left hand, and before them went officers of armes, the countesse of Kent bare the long traine of the childes mantle, and imeane betweene the child and the countesse of Kent went the earle of Willshire and the earle of Darby on either side, supporting the said traine in the middest: ouer the child was borne a rich canapie by the Lord Rochford, the lord Hussey, the Lord William Howard, and the Lord Thomas Howard the elder. After the child followed manie ladies and gentlewomen. When the childe was come to the church doore, the Byshoppe of London mette it with diuers Byshoppes and abbots mitered, and beganne the obseruances of the Sacrament. The Godfather was Lorde Thomas Archbyshoppe of Canterburie: the Godmothers were the old dutchesse of Norffolk, and the old marchionesse of Dorset widowes, and the childe was named Elizabeth, and after that all thinges were done at the church doore, the child was brought to the Font and christned: and that done, Gartar chiefe king of armes cried aloud: God of his infinit goodnes send prosperous life and long to the high and mighty princesse of Englande Elizabeth, and then the trumpets blew, then the child was brought vp to the altar, and the gospell said ouer it. After that immediatly the archbishop of Canterbury confirmed it, the marchionesse of Exceter being Godmother: then the bishoppe of Canterburie gaue vnto the princesse a standing cup of golde, the Dutchesse of Norffolke gaue to her a standing cup of golde fretted with pearle, the marchionesse of Dorset gaue three gilt boles pounsed, with a couer, and the marchionesse of Exceter gaue three standing boles grauen, al gilt with a couer. Then was brought in wafers, confects, and ipocrasse, in such plenty, that euery man had as much as he woulde desire: then they set forwarde, the trumpets alwe

The Maior went to the kings chamber, & tarried there a while with his brethren the Aldermen, and at the last, the dukes of Norfolke and Suffolke came out from the king, and reported to the Maior and his brethren, that the king thanked them heartilie, and commaunded them to giue them thankes in his name, and from thence they were had to the seller and dranke, and so went to their barge.

About this time the crafty practises of one Elizabeth Barton, named the holy maide of Kent, came to light, and were discouered, so that shee and her adherents in November following, were brought to the Star chamber, and there before the kings counsell confessed their fained hypocrisie and dissimuled holines, traiterous purposes and intentes. The names of those her adherentes, which were presented with her before the lords in the Starre chamber, were as followeth: Richard Master parson of Aldington in Kent, Edward Bocking doctor of diuinitie a monke of Canterburie, Richard Dering monke also of Canterburie, Edwarde Twaites Gentleman, Thomas Laurence Register to the Archdeacon of Canterburie, Henry Golde parson of Alder Marie in London, Hugh Rich Frier obseruant, Richard Risby, and Thomas Golde gentleman. These were adiudged vpon their confession, to stande at Pauls Crosse in the Sermon time, where they with their owne handes shoulde seuerallie deliuer each of them to the preacher a bill declaring their subtill and superstitious doings, which thing they did the Sunday next following, standing vpon a stage or scaffolde before the Crosse, the bishop of Bangor late abbot of Hide there preaching, shewed their offences, from whence they were committed to the tower of London.

In this meane time the Scottes were not quiet, but robbed the kinges subiectes both by sea and lande, whereupon the king caused them to bee requited, not onelie by the Borderers and other to them associate, which entering the marches, burnt manie of their Piles and strong holdes; but also he set forth certaine Shippes, which entered into their streames, and fetched out many of those pyles, which they had taken out of their hauens, yet was there no warre proclaimed.

At the suite of Ladie Katherine Dowager, a curse was sent from Rome, which accursed both the king and the Realme. This curse was set vp in the towne of Dunkerke in Flaunders (for the bringer thereof durst approch no nearer)

After Christmasse the Parliament beganne, wherein the forenamed Elizabeth Barton, and other her complices were attaynted of treason, for sundrie practises by them put in vre, sounding to the vtter reproch, perill, and destruction of the kinges person, his honour, fame, and dignitie, for they hadde put into the heades of manie of the kinges subiects, that to the said Elizabeth Barton was given knowledge by reuelation from god and his Saints, that if the king proceeded to the diuorce, and married another, he shoulde not bee king of this Realme one moneth after, and in the reputation of God, not one day nor houre.

Flor. Fr. Guicciardin the Author of y^e excell History of his own time. dyed 1540. at Florence.

This Elizabeth first through sickneſſe, being oftentimes brought as it were into a traunce, whereby her visage and countenance became marueilously altered at those times when she was so vexed: at length by the incouraging, procurement and information of the forenamed Richard Master parson of Aldington, she learned to counterfeit such manner of traunces, as in her sickness by force of her disease shee had beene acquaynted with, so that shee shewed vnto the people diuers marueils, and sundry alterations of the semblable parts of her bodie, craftilie vttering in her saide fained traunces diuers counterfeite vertues and holie wordes, tending to the rebuke of sin, and reprouing of such new opinions as then began to be spred. And to bring the people the more in beleefe with hir hypocriticall doings, she was counselled to say, that she should neuer be perfectlie whole, till she had visited an image of our Lady at a place called Court at Streete, within the parish of Aldington aforesaide. Thither was she brought, and by the meanes of the said Richard Master and Edward Bocking there was assembled a two thousand persons at the date appointed of hir thither comming, to see the miracle. At which time she being thither brought afore all that assemblie & multitude of people, she falsly fained & shewed in the chappell of our Ladie of Court at Streete manie alterations of her face, and other outwarde sensible partes of her bodie: and in those trances she vttered wonderous wordes, as she was before subtillie induced by the sayde Edward Bocking and Richarde Master. And amongst other things she vttered, that it was the pleasure of God, that the saide Bocking should be her ghostlie father, and that shee shoulde bee a religious woman. And within a while after such fayned traunces, she appeered to the people to bee sodaynelie releeued from hir sickneſſe by the intercession of the image of our Ladie being in the said chappell, by reason of which hypocriticall dissimulation, the sayde Elizabeth was brought into a marueilous fancy, credite, & good opinion of a great multitude of people of this realme, and to increase the same by the counsell of the saide Edward Bocking she became a nunne in the priorie of Saint Sepulchres at Canterburie, to whome the said Edward Bocking had commonly his resort: and by conspiracie betweene her and him, she still continued her dissembled trances, alledging that in the same she had reuelations from almighty God and his Saints: and among other, that which as before we haue mentioned, touching the kings marriage, as ye haue heard. This matter proceeded so farre, that there was a booke written by her complices, namely, by Thomas Laurence Register to the archdeacon of Canterburie, of her fained miracles, reuelations, and hypocriticall holinesse. All things were handeled so craftilie, that not onely the simple people, but also the wise and learned were deceiued by the same: in so much, that William Warham late Archbishoppe of Canterbury, and Iohn Fisher bishop of Rochester, and diuers other being informed thereof, gaue credit thereunto. All which matters and many other had beene traiterously practised amongst the parties many yeeres, chiefly to interrupt the diuorce, and to destroy the king, and depriue him of the crowne and dignitie roiall of the realme, as in the act of their attaindor made more at large doth appeare.

In this Parliament also was made the act of succession, for the establishing of the crowne, to the which euerie man was sworne being of lawfull age.

During this parliament, euery sunday at Paules crosse preached a bishop, declaring the pope not to be supreme head to the Church. Also in other places of this realme great troubles were raised about preaching, namely, at Bristow where M. Latimer preached, and there preached against him one master Hobberton, and doctor Powell, so that there was great part-takings on both sides: insomuch that diuers priests and other set vp billes against the Maior, and against master Latimer, but the maior (permitting lay men to preach) caused diuers priests to be apprehended and cast into Newgate with bolts vpon them, and diuers other ran away and lost their liuings, rather than come in the maiors handling.

In a Parliament begunne in the moneth of Februarie, was granted to the king and his heires all religious houses in the realme of Englande, of the value of two hundred pounde and vnder, with all landes and goods to them belonging: The number of these houses then suppressed, were 376. the value of their landes then 32000. pound, and more by yeare, the moueable goods as they were solde, Robine Hoods pennie worthes, amounted to more than one hundred thousande poundes, and the religious persons that were in the sayde houses, were cleerelie put out, some went to other greater houses, some went abroade to the worlde. It was (saith mine author) a pitifull thing to heare the lamentation that the people in the Countreie made for them: for there was great hospitalitie kept among them, and as it was thought more then tenne thousand persons, maisters and seruauntes had lost their liuinges by the putting downe of those houses at that time.

Iusts at Greenwich.

On Maie date was a great Iusting at Greenwich, where were Challengers the Lorde Rochforde and other: and Defenders Henrie Norrice and other. From this Iustes King Henrie sodaynelie departed to Westminster, having onelie with him 6. persons: of which sodain departure many men marueyled.

On the next morrowe, George Boleine Lorde Rochforde, Brother to the Queene, and Henrie Norrice, were brought to the Tower of London prisoners. Also the same date, about fiue of the clocke in the afternoone, Quéene Anne Boleine was brought to the Tower of London by Sir Thomas Audley Lorde Chancellor, the Duke of Norffolke, Thomas Cromwell secretarie, and Sir William Kingstone Constable of the Tower. And when thee came to the Tower Gate entering in, thee fell on her knees before the saide Lordes, beseeching God to helpe her, as thee was not guiltie of that whereof shee was accused, and then desired the sayde Lordes to beseech the Kinges grace to bee good vnto her, and so they left her there Prisoner.

On the 15. of Maie Quéene Anne was arraigned in the Tower of London on a scaffold for the purpose made in the kings hall, before the Duke of Norffolke, who sate vnder the cloth of estate as high steward of England, with the Lord Chancellor on his right hand, the Duke of Suffolk on his left hand, with marquesses and lords, &c. and the earle of Surrey sate before the duke of Norffolke his father, as earle marshall of England: The kings commission being read, the Constable of the Tower, and the Lieutenant brought the Quéene to the barre, where was made a Chaire for hir to sit downe in, and there her inditement was read, whereunto she made so wise and discréet answeres, that she séemed fully to cléere hirselfe of al matters laid to hir charge; but being tryed by hir péeres, twenty 6. in number, whereof the duke of Suffolk was chiefe, she was by them found guiltie, and had iudgement pronounced by the Duke of Norffolke, to bee brent on the greene in the Tower, or else to haue hir head smitten smitten off, as the kings pleasure should be further knowen, and so she was conueied to warde againe: the lady Kingston, and the lady Bolein her Ant attending on her. And then immediatly, the lord Rochford the Quænes brother was likewise arraigned and condemned: the Maior of London, his brethren the aldermen, the wardens, and foure persons mo of euery the twelue principall companies being present.

The seuentéene daie of May, the lorde Rochford brother to the Quéne, Henrie Norrice, Marke Smeton, William Brierton, and Francis Weston, all of the kings priuie Chamber, about matters touching the Quæne, were beheaded on the tower hill, the lorde Rochfords bodie with the heade was buried in the chappell of the tower, the other foure in the churchyarde there.

On the nineténth daie of May about eight of the clocke in the morning, Quéne Anne Bolein was brought to the græne within the tower of London, by the white tower, the lord chancelor, the duke of Richmond, the duke of Suffolke, with the most of the kings councell, as earles, lords, and nobles of the realme being present, also the Maior of London, with his brethren the aldermen, and sheriffes, and certaine of the principall companies of the citie, &c. All these being on a scaffold made there for the execution, the said Quéne Anne saide as followeth: Maisters, I hære humbly submit me to the lawe, as the lawe hath iudged me, and as for mine offences, (I héere accuse no man) God knoweth them, I remit them to God, beséeching him to haue mercie on my soule, and I beséech Jesu saue my Soueraigne and maister the King, the most godliest, noblest, and gentlest Prince that is, and long to raigne ouer you, which wordes she spake with a smiling countenance: which done, shée knéeled downe on both her knæs, and said, To Jesu Christ I commend my soule, and with that word suddenly the hangman of Caleis smote off her head at one stroke with a sword: her body with the head was buried in the quire of the chappell in the tower.

In the beginning of October, at a tise for the kinges subsidie kept in Lincolneshire, the people made an insurrection, and gathered nigh twentie thousand persons, who toke certaine lords and gentlemen of the country, causing them to be sworne to them vpon certaine articles which they had deuised, and such as refused to sweare, they kept prisoners, and beheaded a priest, who was the bishop of Lincolnes chancelor: Against those the king did send the Duke of Suffolk, the earle of Shrewsburie, and the Earle of Rutlande with a strong power, whereof when the rebelles heard, they desired pardon, brake vp their armie, and departed home, but their Captaynes were apprehended and executed.

Commotion in Lincolneshire.

Commotion appeased.

The ninth of October, a priest and a butcher were hanged at Windsor, by martiall lawe, for wordes spoken in the behalfe of the Lincolneshire men, the butcher wished the good fellowes (as he termed them) in Lincolnshire, to haue the flesh on his stall, rather than to sell it at such price as hee was offered: the priest standing by, likewise wished them to haue it, for he said they had need of it. Also Iames Maller doctor of law, late chaplaine to M. Katherin, for like words was executed at Chelmesford in Essex.

A priest and a butcher executed.

Commotion in Yorkeshire.

The men of Lincolneshire beeing pacified, within sir daies after began an insurrection in Yorkeshire for the same causes: there people gathered to the number number of 40000. who toke the archbishop of Yorke, and the L. Darcie, and caused them to be sworne to their partie.

Yée shall not enter into this your pilgrimage of grace for the common wealth onely, but for the loue that you do beare to Gods faith and the church militant, and the maintenance thereof, and the preseruation of the kings person and his issue, and the purifying of nobilitie, and to the intent to expresse all villaines blood, and euill counsailers against the common wealth, from his Grace, and the priuie counsell of the same. And that yée shall not enter into our said pilgrimage for no particular profit to your selues, nor doe any displeasure to any priuate person, but by the counsell of the common wealth, ne to murder or slay for any enuy, but in your hart to put away all feare fro the common wealth, and to take before you the crosse of Christ, and in your harts his faith, to the restitution of Gods church, and to the suppression of erroneous opinions. Iusting of challengers.

On May daie, was a great tryumph of Iusting at Westminster, which Iusts had bin proclaimed in France, Flanders, Scotland, and Spaine, for al commers that woulde, against the challengers of Englande, which were Sir Iohn Dudley, sir Thomas Seymer, sir Thomas Poininges, sir George Carewe knights: Anthony Kingston, and Richard Cromwel esquires, which said challengers came into the lists that daie richlie apparelled, and their horses trapped all in white veluet, with certaine knights & gentlemen ryding afore them, apparelled all in white Veluet, & white sarsenet, and all their seruants in thyte doublets, and hosen cut after the Burgonian fashion: and there came to iust against against them the said day of defendants, 46. the earle of Sutrey being the formost, L. Wil. Heiward, L. Clinton, and L. Cromwell son and heire to Th. Cromwell earle of Esser, and chamberlaine of Englande, with other, which were all richlie apparelled. And that daie sir Iohn Dudley was ouerthrowen in the field by mischance of his horse, by one Maister Breme defendant, neuerthelesse hee brake diuers speares valiantly after that: and after the said iusts were doen, the saide challengers rode to Durham place, where they kept open houshold, and feasted the king and quéene, with hir ladies, and all the court.

The 2. of May Anthony Kingstone and Ric. Cromwell were made knightes at the said place.

The 3. of May, the said challengers did Tourney on horseback with swords, against them came 29 defendants: sir Iohn Dudley and the earle of Surrey running first, which the first course lost both their gauntlets, and that day sir Ric. Cromwell ouerthrew M. Palmer in the field off his horse, to the great honor of the challengers. Tourneying.

The fift of Maie, the sayde Challengers fought on foote at the Barriers, and agaynst them came thirtie Defendantes, which fought valiantlie, but sir Richarde Cromwell ouerthrewe that daie at the Barriers, Maister Culpepper in the Fielde: and the first of Maie the sayde Challengers brake vp their housholde. Barriers.

In the which time of their house-keeping, they had not only feasted the king, quéene, ladies, and the whole court as is aforesaid, but also on the Tuesdaie in the Rogation weeke, they feasted al the knights and burgesses of the common house in the parliament: and on the morrowe after they had the Maior of London, the aldermen, and all their wiues to dinner, and on the Friday they brake vp, as is aforesaid. Ioseph Scaliger born at Agen in France.

The 7. of May sir W. Weston knight, L. prior of S. Iohn of Ierusalem without Smithfield died, and neuer receiued any part of his pension, and the king tooke all the lands that belonged to that house, and to that order, into his hands, to the augmentation of his crowne: and gaue to euery of the challengers aboue written, for a reward of their valiantnes 100. marks, and a house to dwel in of yeerely reuenues out of the said lands for euer. Iulius Cæsar Scal.

The 26. of May, was sent to the tower doctor Wilson, and doctor Sampson bishop of Chichester, for releeuing certayne prisoners which had denied to subscribe to the kings supremacie: for the same offence Richard Farmer Grocer of London, a rich and wealthie citizen, was committed to the marshalsea, and after arraigned and attainted in the premunire, and lost all his goods, his wife and children thrust out of doores. Also the keeper of Newgate was sent to the marshalsea, for giuing liberty to Doctor Powell and doctor Abell his prisoners to go vnder baile. Richard Farmer in the premunire.

The 9. of July, T. L. Cromwell earle of Esser being in the counsel chamber, was sodainly apprehended, and committed to the tower of London. The 19. he was attainted by parliament, of heresie and high treason, as appeareth by the same attaindor which I haue seene and read, but forbeare to set downe the same being long.

On the 28. of July, the said Thomas Cromwell was brought to the scaffold on the tower hill, where he spake these words (as was then noted) I am come hither to die, and not to purge my selfe, as may happen some thinke I will, for if I should so doe, I were a very wretch and miser. I am by the law condemned to die, and I thanke my Lord God that hath appointed me this death for mine offences: for sithence the time that I came to yéeres of discretion, I haue liued a sinner, and offended my Lord God, for the which I aske him heartilie forgiuenes. And it is not vnknowne to many of you, that I haue béen a great traueller in the world, and being but of a base degrée was called to high estate, and sithen the time I came thereunto, I haue offended my prince, for the which I aske him hartily forgiuenes, and beséech you al to pray to God with me, that he will forgiue me. O father forgiue me, O sonne forgiue me, O holy ghost forgiue me, O three persons in one God forgiue me. And now I pray you that be here to beare me record, I die in the catholike faith, not doubting in any article of my faith, no nor doubting in any sacrament of the church. Many haue slandered me, and reported that I haue béene a bearer of such as haue maintained euill opinions, which is vntrue: but I confesse, that like as God by his holy spirit doth instruct vs in the truth, so the diuell is readie to seduce vs, and I haue béene seduced: but beare me witnes that I die in the catholike faith of the holy church, and I hartily desire you to pray for the kings grace, that hee may long liue with you in health and prosperitie, and after him that his sonne prince Edward that godly impe may long raigne ouer you. And once againe I desire you to pray for me, that so long as life remaineth in this flesh, I wauer nothing in my faith. And then made he his praier which was long, and after committed his soule to the hands of God, and so laid him downe, and patiently suffered the strokes of the axe, by the hands of him who vnfauoredly performed his office. At the same time also with the said earle was beheaded the lord Hungerforde of Heitesbery, who at the houre of his death séemed so vnquiet, that many iudged him rather frenzie than otherwise: he suffered (as it was said) for buggerie.

Thomas lord Cromwell beheaded.

Thomas Cromwell (as before is shewed) was attainted by parliament, but neuer came to answere. He was borne in Putney a village in Surrey by the Thamis side, about 4. miles west from London, and was son to a blacksmith (in his latter daies a brewer) after whose decease, his mother was married to a sherman in London. This Thomas notwithstanding the basenesse of his birth, through a singular excellency of wit, ioyned with industrious diligence of mind, grew to such a sufficient ripenes of vnderstanding and skill in ordering of waightie affaires, that he was thought apt and fit to any roomth or office vnto he should be admitted, which being apperceiued of the cardinall Wolsey, he toke him into seruice, & making him his solicitor, imploied him about businesse oftentimes of great importance, wherein hee acquit himselfe with such dexteritie, as answered alwaies the credite to him committed. At the fall of the cardinall he got him to the court, saying he would make or marre, as before ye haue heard: where, being once aduaunced into the kings seruice, he behaued himselfe so aduisedly in matters which he toke in hand, that in short time time he rose to the greatest authoritie that might be in this realme, vnder the maiestie of the king, wherein peraduenture forgetting the fall of his late master cardinall Wolsey (a notable spectacle) he fell himselfe, as ye haue heard.

In this meane time, to wit, on the 25. day of June, the K. caused the quéene to remoue to Richmond, perswading it should be more for her health & pleasure, by reason of the cléere and open aire there. But on the 6. of July, certaine lords came downe into the neither house of the parliament, and expressely declared causes, for the which the marriage was not to be taken lawfull: and in conclusion, the matter was by the conuocation cléerely determined, that the king might lawfully marry where he would, and so might she: and thus were they cléerely diuorced. And by the parliament it was enacted, that she should be taken no more for Quéene, but called the lady Anne of Cleue. King Henry diuorced from lady Anne of Cleue.

This yéere the lord Leonard Gray brother to Thomas marques Dorset, being the kings lieutenant in Ireland, was reuoked home, and vpon his coming to London, was sent to the tower. Lord Leonard Gray sent to the tower.

The 30. of July were drawne from the tower of London to Smithfield Robert Barnes doctor of diuinitie, T. Gerard parson of Hunylane, and William Ierom vicar of Stepenbeth, bachelors in diuinitie: also Edward Powell, Thomas Able, and Richard Fetherstone all three doctors. The first three were drawen to a stake & there burned. The other three were drawn to a gallowes, and there hanged, headed and quartered. The three first as appeareth in their attaindors, were executed for diuers heresies. The last three for treason, as in their attaindor was mentioned, to wit, for denying the kings supremacie, and affirming his marriage with quéene Katherine to be good: of the which argument doctor Powell wrote a booke which was printed in quarto, and I haue séene it. Sixe Priests, three burnt, and three hanged.

The 4. of August, Thomas Empson sometime a monke of Westminster, which had béene prisoner in Newgate more than three yéeres, was brought before the Iustices of goale deliuerie at Newgate, and for that he would not aske the king pardon for denying his supremacie, nor be sworne thereto, his monkes cole was plucked from his backe, and his body reried till the king were informed of his obstinacie. The same 4. of August were drawen to Tiborne 6. persons, and one led betwixt twaine, to wit, Laurence Cooke prior of Dancaster, William Horne a lay brother of the Charterhouse of London, Giles Horne gentleman, Clement Phillip gentleman of Caleis, and seruant to the lord Lisle, Edmond Bromholme priest, chaplaine to the said lord Lisley, Darby Gening, Robert Bird, all hanged and quartered, and had béene attainted by parliament, for denfall of the kings supremacie. Seauen persons executed.

The eight of August, Ladie Katherine Howard daughter to Edmond lord Howard, neece to the duke of Norfolke, was shewed openly as Quéene at Hampton court. K. Henry married.

The latter end of this sommer, was vniuersally through this realme great death by a strange kinde of ague and flare, with some pestilence: in which season was such a drought, that wels and small riuers were dried vp, so that much cattell died for lacke of water. Drie sommer.

The twentie two of December, Ralph Egerton seruant to the lorde Audley lord chancellor, and Thomas Harman seruant to maister Flightwood, were executed: the one for counterfeiting the kings seale in leade, wherewith they had sealed diuers Pattens counterfeited and antidated, making strangers denisons, vnder the names of diuers clearks of the chancery: the other for writing them. One Tuckfield being of their faction, robbed the lorde Audleys chappell, of the chalice, pixe, basons and candlesticks of siluer, and fled, who beeing afterward apprehended at Caleis, which towne he would haue betraied, hee slewe himselfe with a dag.

Ann. reg. 33. A new commotion in Yorkeshire.

In Aprill, certaine persons beganne a new rebellion in Yorkeshire, which were shortly after taken, and put to execution in diuers places: of which, Leigh a gentleman, Tatarsall a clothier, and Thornton a yeoman, were put to death at London: Sir Iohn Neuill knight, a ten persons or mo were put to death at Yorke.

Countesse of Salisbury beheaded.

The 27. of Maie, Margaret countesse of Salisburie, sometime daughter and heire to George Duke of Clarence, wife to sir Richard Poole knight, and mother to cardinal Poole, was beheaded in the tower of London, being neuer arraigned nor tried before, but condemned by act of parliament.

Damport and Chapman hanged.

The 9. of June, Damport and Chapman, two of the kings gard, were hanged at Greenwich for robbery.

Sir Edmond Kneuet arraigned for striking in the court.

The tenth of June, Sir Edmond Kneuet knight of Norfolke, was arraigned before the kings Iustices (sitting in the great Hall at Greenewich) maister Gage comptroller of the kings houshold, maister Suthwell, sir Anthonie Browne, sir Anthony Winkfield, Maister Wrisley, and Edmonde Pecham cofferer of the kings houshold, for striking of one Maister Clere of Norfolk, seruant with the Earle of Surrey, within the kings house in the Tenice Court. There was first chosen to go vpon the said Edmond a quest of gentlemen, and a quest of yeomen, to inquire of the saide stripe, by the which inquests, he was founde guiltie, and had iudgement to lose his right hande: whereupon was called to do the execution, first the sergeant chirurgion, with his instruments appertaining to his office: the sergeant of the Woodyarde with the mallet and a Blocke, whereupon the hande shoulde lie: the maister cooke for the king with the knife: the Sergeant of the larder to set the knife right on the ioint: the Sergeant farrier with his fearing yrons to seare the Veines: the Sergeant of the poultrie with a Cocke, which cocke should haue his head smitten off vpon the same blocke, and with the same knife: the yeoman of the chandry with seare clothes: the yeomen of the scullery with a pan of fire to heat the yrons: a chafer of water to cole the ends of the irons: and two fourmes for all officers to set their stuffe on: the sergeant of the seller with wine, ale, and beere: the yeomen of the ewrie in the sergeantes steede who was absent, with bason, ewre, & towelles. Thus euery man in his office ready to do the execution, there was called forth Sir William Pickering knight marshall, to bring in the saide Edmond Kneuet, and when he was brought to the bar, the chiefe iustice declared to him his trespasse, and the said Kneuet confessing himselfe to bee guiltie, humbly submitted him to the kings mercy: for this offence he was not onelie iudged to lose his hand, but also his bodie to remaine in prison, and his landes and goods at the kings pleasure. Then the saide Sir Edmond Kneuet desired that the king of his benigne grace, would pardon him of his right hande, and take the left: for (quoth he) if my right hande bee spared, I mate hereafter do such good seruice to his grace, as shall please him to appoint. Of this submission and requeſt, the Iustices forthwith informed the king, who of his goodnes, considering the gentle heart of the said Edmond, and the good report of lordes and ladies, granted him pardon, that he should lose neither hande, lande, nor goods, but should go free at liberty. The Lorde Leonard Gray beeing indited of certaine pointes of treason by him committed, as was alledged against him, during the season that hee was the Kings Lieutenant in Ireland, to witte, for deliuering his nephew Giralde Fitz Gerarde, Brother to Thomas Fitz Gerarde before executed, and also for that hee caused certaine Irishmen to inuade the landes of the Kings friends, whom he fauoured not: The 25. of June he was arraigned at Westminster in the Kings Bench, and appointed to bee tried by knightes, because hee was a Lorde by name, and no lord of the parliament, but he discharged the Iurie, and confeſſed the inditement, whereupon he had iudgement, and on the 28. of June being S. Peters euen, he was beheaded at tower hill, where he ended his life very quietly and godly. The Lorde Leonard Gray beheaded.

This noble man, as he was come of high linage, so was he a right valiant and hardy personage, hauing in his time don his prince and country good seruice, both in Ireland, France, and other places, greatly to his commendation, although now his hap was thus to lose his head.

The same day that he suffered, there were executed at Saint Thomas Waterings three gentlemen, Iohn Mantel, Iohn Frouds, and George Roidon. They died for a murther committed in Suſſex (as their inditement imported) in companie of Thomas Fines Lorde Dacres of the South. The trueth whereof was thus. The said lord Dacres through the lewd perswasion of some of them, as hath beene reported, meaning to hunt in the parke of Nicholas Pelham esquire at Laughton in the same Countie of Suſſex, beeing accompanied with the saide Mantell, Frouds, and Roidon, Iohn Cheiney, and Thomas Isley gentlemen, and Richard Middleton and Iohn Goldwel yeomen, passed from his house of Hurstmonseux the last of Aprll in the night season, toward the same parke, where they intended so to hunt, and comming into a place called Pikehay in the parish of Hillingley, they founde one Iohn Busbrig, Iames Busbrig, and Richarde Somener, standing there together; and as it fell out through quarrelling, there ensued a fraie betwixt the saide Lorde Dacres and his company on the one part, and the saide Iohn and Iames Busbrig and Richard Somener on the other, insomuch that the said Iohn Busbrig receiued such hurt, that he died thereof the seconde of Maie next ensuing; whereupon as well the saide Lorde Dacres, as those that were there with him, and diuers other likewise that were appointed to go another waie to méete them at the saide parke, were endited of murther, and the seauen and twentieth of June the Lorde Dacres himselfe was arraigned before the lorde Audley of Walden, then lord chancelor, sitting L. Dacres of the South arraigned.

that daie as high Steward of England, with other péres of the realme about him, who then and there condemned the said L. Dacres to die for that transgression: and afterwards the nine and twentieth of June being Saint Peters daie, at eleuen of the clocke in the forenoone, the Sheriffs of London accordinglie as they were appointed, were readie at the tower to haue receiued the saide prisoner, and him to haue led to execution on the Tower hill. But as the prisoner should come forth of the Tower, one Heire a gentleman of the lord chancelors house came, and in the kings name commanded to stay the execution til two of the clock in the afternoone, which caused manie to thinke that the king would haue granted his pardon. But neuerthelesse at three of the clock in the same afternoone hee was brought forth of the Tower, and deliuered to the Sheriffs, who led him on foote betwixt them vnto Tyborne, where he died. His bodie was buried in the church of Saint Sepulchers: he was not past foure and twentie péres of age when he came thus through great mishap to his end: for whom manie sore lamented, and likewise for the other three gentlemen, Mantell, Frouds, and Roidon, but chiefelie for the said young lord being a right towardly gentleman.

Comming thus before the kings councell in the starre chamber, the lord chancelor declared to them their vntruth and vnkindnesse, for the which the king had cause of warre against them, as well as for the deniall of their homages, and also for their traiterous inuasions made into his realm without defiance, and also for keeping his subiects prisoners without redemption, contrarie to the lawes of the marches, for the which doings, God as they might well perceiue had scourged them. Howbeit the king more regarding his honor than his princely power, was content to shew them kindnes for vnkindnes, right for wrong. And although he might keepe them in streight prison, yet he was content that they should haue libertie to be with the nobles of the realme in their houses, and so according to their estates they were appointed to dukes, earles, bishops, knights and gentlemen.

13. Dec. Iames V. K. of Scotland dyed & Mary his only Child of 8. days old Succeeds him

The 22. of December came tidings of the king of Scots death. And vpon Saint Iohns daie in Christmas weeke, the foresaid lords of Scotland were brought to the court then at Greenewich, where they had great cheere, and were lodged within the court. And heere it is to be considered, that where the king of Scots had left no issue but only one daughter: the king and his counsell perceiuing a meane now offered, whereby without warre the two realms might be vnited: the Scottish lords hauing first made the motion themselues for a marriage to be had betwixt Prince Edward and their yong Queene, the king required them to helpe to the furtheraunce of that matter, which might be such benefite to themselues and their countrey. This they promised faithfullie to doe, and as well by themselues, as their friendes, to bring the same to effect, so much as the king could require, whereupon the king was not onely contented to release them home, but also highly rewarded them with rich gifts.

Motion of a match between prince Edward and the queene of Scots.

1543 The 30. of December, they departed from the court, and the morrow after eight of them dined with sir Iohn Coats then lord maior of London, and the rest with the sheriffes, and had very great cheere. On New-yeares day they departed from London homewards toward Scotland, and by the way dined at Enfield there to beholde the prince, whom they highly commended, for the great liking they had of his person, from thence they kept on their iourney till they came to the north partes, where they found the Duke of Suffolke the kings lieutenant there, and with him they remained till such pledges were come forth forth of Scotlande, as it was couenanted they shoulde leaue behinde them. The Duke after he had receiued the hostages, permitted them to depart, and so they returned into Scotland, where they were ioyfully welcomed home, to their friends. With them went the earle of Angus, who had béene banished Scotland, and hauing remained here in England a long time, receiued of the kings fee a thousand markes by yéere: and likewise his brother sir George Dowglas, who had 500. markes by yéere, likewise of the kings gift. They were now both restored home into their countrey, and that was (as was saide) by the last kings will. The said earle of Angus, and diuers of the lords that had bin prisoners here in England, were made of the priuy counsell of the realme, by the earle of Arraine, that was chosen gouernor to the yong quéene, and of the realme, as next heire apparent. Notwithstanding that, the archbishop of S. Andrewes Cardinall, enemy to the K. of England, had a will (forged as some haue said) expressing how the king had made him gouernor, as well of the quéene as realme, whereupon the said earle, according to his right, as he pretended, with the helpe of his friends toke vpon him the authoritie of gouernor, and put the said cardinall in prison, and deliuered sir Robert Bowes, and the other English prisoners, by their bondes, according to the custome of the marches. *Bellay y^e. And the 12. of June, Edward Lech his brother, and with him a priest for the same fact, were likewise executed at Tyborne. An. reg. 35. Somerset an herault killed.

King Henry minding wars with France, made great preparation and prouision aswell of munitions and artillery as also of brasse ordinance, amongst the which, at that time, by one Peter Bawd a French man borne, a gunfounder, or maker of great ordinance, and one other Alien, called Peter van Collen, a gunsmith, both the kings fée men, who conferring togither, deuised and caused to be made, certaine morter pieces, being at the mouth, from 11. inches vnto 19. inches wide, for the vse whereof, the said Peter, and Peter caused to be made certaine hollow shot of cast yron, to be stuffed with fierworke, or wilde fire, whereof the bigger sort for the same, had scrues of yron to receiue a match to carry fire kindled, that the fierworke might be set on fire, for to breake in small peices the same hollowe shot, whereof the smallest piece hitting any man would kill or spoile him. And after the kings return from Bullen, the said Peter Bawd by himselfe, in the first of Edw. the first, did also make certaine ordinance of cast yron, of diuers sorts, and formes, as Fawconets, Fawkons, Minions, Sakers, and other pieces: vnto this Bawd, John Iohnson his couenant seruant, surviuing his master, did likewise make and cast yron *Morter pieces cast for shooting of wilde fire. ordinance, cleaner and to better perfection, to the great vse of this land: his sonne Th. Iohnson is yet liuing, a speciall workeman, in the yeere 1595. hee made 42. cast pieces of great ordinance of yron for the earle of Cumberland, Demy Canons weying 6000. or 3. tunne the piece.

The 3. of June, the Obrine a lord in Ireland, and diuers of the wilde Irish, submitted them to king Henry.

In July the said Obrine was created earle of Clawricarde.

K. Henry married lady Katherine Par.

The 12. of July, king Henry married lady Katherine Par, late wife to the L. Latimer and sister to the Marques of Northampton at Hampton court, and then was she proclaimed queene.

Great subsidie.

This yeere in a parliament holden at Westminster a subsidie was granted to the king to be paid in three yeeres, euery Englishman being worth in goods 20. s. and vpward to 5. l. paid 4. d. of euery pound, from 5. l. to 10. l. 8. d. from 10. l. to 20. l. 16. d. from 20. l. and vpward of euery pound 2. s. strangers, as well denisons as other, being inhabitants, doubled this sum: and euery stranger not being an inhabitant that was 16. yeeres of age and vpwards paid 4. d. of euery pole. And for lands, fees, and annuities, euery one borne within the kings dominions paid 8. d. of the l. from 20. s. to 5. l. and from 5. l. to 10. l. 16. s. from 10. l. to 20. l. 2. s. and from 20. l. vpwards 3. s. strangers still doubled the sum. The cleargie granted a subsidie of 6. s. the pound, to be paid of their benefices, and perpetuities in three yeeres, and euery priest hauing but an annual stipend, 6. s. 8. d. &c. as in the statute.

Going to Landarly.

About the same time the king of England, and the emperor, sent Garter, and Toysonodor kings at armes, to demand the performance of certain articles of the French k. which if he denied, they were commanded then to defie him, but he would not suffer them to come within his lawe, and so they returned. Wherefore the k. of Engl. caused the demands to be declared vnto the French ambassador at Westminster. And in the moneth of July the k. sent ouer 6000. men, vnder the leading of sir Iohn Wallope, accompanied with sir T. Seimer marshall, sir Robert Bowes treasurer, sir Richard Cromwell captaine of the horsemen, and sir George Carew his lieutenant. There were likewise sir T. Palmer, sir Iohn Rainsforth, sir Iohn Seint-Iohn, & sir Iohn Gascoigne knights, that were captaines of the footemen: they were appointed to ioine with the emperors power, and so to make warre into France: they departed from Caleis the 22. of July. The 7. of August open warre was proclaimed betwixt the emperor and the k. of England on the one party, and the French king on the other party, as enemy mortall to them both, and to all other christian kings as he that had confedered himselfe with the Turke.

Open warre proclaimed.

The armie that was sent ouer vnder the leading of Sir Iohn Wallope, passed forth from the marches of Caleis, and keeping alongst betwixt the borders of the French and Burgonians pales, and confines, and ioyning with the emperors forces, Spaniards, Wallons, and Dutch, came at length before Landarsey, a towne lately fortified by the French, within the borders of the emperors dominions, to the which they laid strong siege. At length the emperor hauing dispatched his wars against the D. of Cleue, who had submitted

himselfe vnto him, came now to the siege of Landarsey, with a mighty power of sundry nations, so that the town was sore constrained, & in danger to haue bene lost, if at that present the French king had not likewise with him an huge armie of French men, Switchars, Lantsquits, Italians, and other, came to the rescue, pitching downe his campe, making countenance as if hee ment presently to haue giuen battaile: and verilie it was thought that two such powers as were there at that time so neere together should neuer haue departed without battaile. The Emperor thinking surely to fight, raised his siege, and drew his people into the fielde. The Frenchmen thereby espying their aduantage, put as well fresh men as victuals, and all kinde of munition necessarie into the Towne, and in the meane while kept the Emperors men occupied with hotte skyrmishes: but now after the Towne was thus relieued, which thing the French king onely wished to accomplish, the nert daie when the emperor was readie with his army inranged in battailes to haue fought with his aduersaries, the French king put his armie also in order, but hauing no minde to come forward, he trifled forth the daie, and in the night following secretly departed with as much haste as possible. When the nert morning had discouered the French mens flight, it was no neede to bid diuers troupes of the Emperours armie to hie after them: but some made too much haste, for the French king suspecting what would insue, appointed his eldest sonne Henry the Dolphin, to remaine behinde with the rereward, accompanied with diuers noble captaines, which ordered their people in their retire with such warinesse, that such of the Emperors campe as aduentured ouerrashly, fell within danger of such ambushes as were by the waie laide in places of aduantage: and so diuers were taken, as sir George Carew, sir Thomas Palmer knight, porter of Caleis, Edward Bellengham and others. Nertheleslesse a great number of the French men were snapped by, slaine, and taken in no small numbers by their enemies that followed them. This was after Hallowntide, so that nowe by reason the winter was farre entered, the Emperour brake vp his campe, and licensed the most part of the people to depart home.

In the meane space, to wit on the 28. of July, Anthony Parson, Robert Testwood, and Henry Filmer, were brent at Windsore. And a great death of pestilence was at London, and therefore Michaelmas terme was adiourned to Saint Albons. Terme kept at S. Albons.

About Allhalowntide, a road was made into Scotland, by the garison there, sir Ralph Euars with the men of Tindall and Ridsdale brent in the middle marches of Scotland, therof with 15. other townes, killed 18. Scots, and toke 300. prisoners, 1500. cattell, and 4000. sheepe: Brian Leychener brent 18. townes, killed 12. Scots, toke 200. prisoners, 600. cattell, 2000. sheepe, and 300. geldings. The west borderers with the helpe of the Scots of Lidsdale, brent 21. townes, killed 8. Scots, toke 160. prisoners. 500. cattaile, 1000. sheepe, and 100. geldings, sum of the townes brent, 55. Scots killed 38 prisoners taken 560. cattaile taken 3500. geldings 800. sheepe 7000. and much houshold stuffe. A road made into Scotland.

The third of May, sir Iohn Dudley Vicount Lisle high Admirall of England, arriued with his fleete of 200. saile in the Frith of Scotlande, where hee landed diuers of his men, and toke there diuers vessels. The 4. of May he landed the residue of his men at Lieth, and from thence marched forward in three great battayles, whereof the sayde Lorde Admirall ledde the Vaward, the Earle of Shrewsburie the Rerewarde, and Edwarde Seymer Earle of Hertforde Lieutenant Generall of the Battayles. Here they founde the Scottes to the number of six thousand horsemen, besides manie footemen ready to stop their passage, who at the first, made as they woulde haue set on the Vaward, but after certaine shotte on both sides, they sodaynelie, leauing their artillery behinde them, fled towarde Edenborough, the formost in fleeing was the cardinall of Saint Andrewes, the Earle of Huntley gouernor, Murrey and Bothwell, and then the Englishmen entered the towne of Lieth, where they found such riches, as they thought hadde not beene in anie Towne of Scotland. The nexte daie our armie went towardes Edenborough; and when they approched neere, the Prouoste of the Towne with other profered to haue delyuered the same, vpon condition, that the people might departe with Bagge and Baggage, and the Towne to bee safe from fire. Whereunto our Lieutenant answered, that hee was sent thither to take vengeance vpon them for their detestable falsehoode, and that vnlesse they woulde yeelde vppe the towne simplie without condition, and cause man, woman, and child to depart into the fields, submitting them to his pleasure, hee woulde put them to the sworde, and their Lieth taken and spoiled.

Towne to the fire. The Prouoſt aunſwered, that it were better for them to ſtand to their defence, and ſo departed, and forthwith the Lord Lieutenant cauſed the Vaward to march towards the towne, which they did ſo couragiouſlie with helpe of the Engliſh gunners, that then kept the Scots from their ordinance, and ſo entred Canſegate, and there ſlew a great number of the Scots, and ſet fire on the Towne, which continued three dayes after burning. Shortlie after came to the Lorde Lieutenant by land, William Lorde Eurie warden of the Eaſt March of England, and gouernor of Barwike, with his ſonne ſir Ralph Eurie, and ioined themſelues with the armie thus lying in Lieth, where after their comming they did ſuch exploites, in riding and waſting the Countrey, that within ſeuen miles euerie wate of Edenborough, they left few places, either pile, village, or houſe vnbrent. And beſides this, they brought great numbers of cattaile daylie into the armie, and not without much good ſtuffe which the inhabitants of Edenborough had for ſafety of the ſame conueied out of the Towne. Edenborough brent. Lord Euars.

The 13. of May the Engliſhmen brake down the pire of the hauen at Lieth, and brent euery ſticke of it. This done, and hauing ſhipped their great artillery, and picked forth all ſuch Scottiſh ſhips as were meet to ſerue, they tooke vpon them to returne home by land. Amongſt other ſhips, they toke out of Lieth hauen, there were two of notable faſrenes, the one called the Salamaunder, the other the Vnicorn; the reſt of the Scottiſh ſhippes beeing taken awaie together with their owne ſhips, were for the moſt part peſtered with the ſpoile and bootie of the ſouldiers and mariners.

The fiftéenth of May the armie and fléete departed from Lieth, both in one houre, the towne being ſet on fire, and burned to the ground. The engliſh armie encamped that night at a place called Soton, ſeauen miles from Lieth, where they brent the caſtle, and ſpoiled the grounds about it. The ſame date was Haddington brent, with an houſe of Nunnes, and an houſe of Friers. The next night they encamped beſide Dunbar, and in the morning brent the Towne, Lieth burned. Haddington brent. Dunbar brent.

Towne, and marched forward, and on the eightéenth daie of May they entered into Berwike, so ending their voiage.

About the same time the Earle of Lenox fledde out of Scotlande into the realme of England, where he was right gladlie receiued by king Henry, and shortlie after he obtained in marriage the ladie Mary Dowglas, néece to king Henry, and returned with a competent crewe of English men, but finding no such friendship amongst his countrymen as he looked for, he returned without atchieuing the enterprise which he had taken in hand.

Base mony coined.

In this meane space, to wit, on the 16. of May, proclaimation was made for the enhaunsing of gold to 48. s. and siluer to foure shillings the ounce. Also the king caused to bee coined base moneyes in great abundance, which was since that time, to wit, in the first yeere of king Edward the first, called downe, from twelue pence to nine pence, from nine pence to fiue pence: and in the seconde yeere of Quéene Elizabeth called in to hir maiesties mints, and there refined.

Procession in English.

In the moneth of June, the Letanie or Procession was set foorth in English, with commandement by the king to be generallie vsed in euerie parish Church.

An armie into France.

The king tooke order for the leuying of a mightie Armie to passe ouer into France, according to the appointmente made with his confederate friende the Emperour, against the French king. There were therefore appointed three Battailes: The Vaward vnder the leading of the Duke of Norffolke: the Battaile vnder the Duke of Suffolke, which also was counted the Kings Battaile, because hee minded to bee present with the same in person, and the Rerewarde was ledde by the Lorde Russell, Lorde Priuie Seale. Those of the Forewarde vnder the Duke of Norffolke, were apparelled in blewe Coates garded with redde, and had cappes and hosen after the same sute, partie blewe, and partie redde. The Battaile vnder the Duke of Suffolke in Coates, Cappes, and hosen in like maner, but the colours blew and yealow. The Duke of Norffolke, and the lord priuy Seale, accompanied with diuers other noble men, as the Earle of Surrey Marshall of the Field, the Earle of Orforde, the Lorde Grey of Wilton Lieuetenaunt of Hams, the Lorde Ferrers of Chartley, and Sir Richard Deuereux his sonne and heire, they brought with them a great number of Wellhmen, sir Thomas Cheyney Lorde Warden of the Portes, the lord Mountioy, Sir Francis Bryan knight, Sir Thomas Poynings Captaine of Gwisnes, and diuers other, passed ouer to Caleis about Whitsontide, and from thence forwarde to France, left Boloigne on their right hande, and keeping forwardes towardes Muterell, ioined with an Armie which the Emperour hadde raised for that purpose, vnder the leading of the Countie of Buren, Admirall of the lowe Countreyes, and so these Armies beeing vnited in one, came before Muterell, and there laide Siege to the Towne, beeing well manned, and furnished with all thinges necessarie for defence, as well in munition as in victuall, the chiefe Captaine of which Towne, was Mounsire de Bitz, one of the Marshalles of France.

The

The Duke of Suffolke with the kings armie passed ouer, accompanied with the Earle of Arundell marshall of the fielde, the Lorde Sent iohn, and the Bysshoppe of Winchester, Sir Iohn Gage, comptroller of the kinges house, Sir Anthonie Browne, Master of the kings horse, with diuers other Captaines, the which on the nineteenth of July came before Bologne, and encamped on the east side of the same Towne, aloft vpon the hill, and after remoued into a valley, where after many sharpe skyrmishes, they first entered the base Towne, being lefte and forsaken by the inhabitants, which hauing set fire on their fishing nets, and other such baggage, vnder couert of the smoake, got them vp into the high Towne, before the English men could espie them. Duke of Suffolke with a power lay before Bologne.

After this the old man, a tower standing without the towne for a direction to them that were to enter the hauen, and now being kept by 16. souldiers, was yelded vp by them.

The Frenchmen within the towne, being dispoyled of these two places, yet spared not to shote off from their wals and bulwarks, doing what they could, and namely from the Castle, and greene bulwarke, they did much hurt to the Englishmen with their shotte.

The 14. of July K. Henry in person, accompanied with diuers noble men, passed the Seas from Douer to Caleis, and on the 26. of July encamped before Bologne on the north-side, within lesse then three quarters of a mile of the Towne, where he remained till the Towne was surrendred into his hands: the kings liuerie was red garded with yealowe. Besides the trenches which were cast and brought in manner rounde about the Towne, there was a mount raised vpon the east side, and diuers pieces of artillerie planted aloste the same, the which togither with the morter pieces, sore annoyed them within, battered downe the Steeple of our Ladie church. To conclude, the batterie was made in most forceable wise in three seuerall places, and the wals, towers, and castle were vndermined, and the towne within so beaten with shotte out of the campe, and from the mount and trench, by the morter pieces, that there were verie few houses left whole therein. The towne thus standing in great distresse, there were 200. Frenchmen and Italians, which enterprised vnder the conduct of Ioncurtio to enter the Towne in couert of the night, which erploite they so warily atchieued, that by meanes of a prieste that could speake the English tong, they passed by the scowrers, and through the watch, so as the most part of them were got ouer the trenches, ere it was knowne what they were: to the number of an hundred and twentie of them got into the towne, but the residue being intercepted, were either taken or slaine. At length when a piece of the castle was blowne vppe, and the breaches made as was thought reasonable, the assault was giuen by the admirall lorde Dudley that was come thither by the sea, which he had scoured, after his returne out of Scotland. This assault was couragiously giuen, and also manfully defended, so that when the assailants had perceiued in what estate the breach stood, and what prouision they within had made for defence of their towne, which was great, they were called backe, and retired, but not without King Henry went to Bologne.

losse on both sides, especially of them within: for during the assault, the great artillerie did beate still vpon them that presented themselues at the breaches to repulse the assailants, and so diuers of their valiant captaines and braue souldiers were slaine at this assault: shortly after, the captaines within the towne, doubting to be eftsoones assaulted, and perceiuing themselues in extreme danger to lose the towne by force, if they prouided not the sooner, by rendring it, to saue themselues: they sent forth two of their chiefe captaines, Mounsier Semblemount, and Mounsier de Veruine, gouernor of the towne, his retinue was contented to deliuer the towne to his grace, with condition that they might passe with bag and baggage, which request the king granted, and so the next day the duke of Suffolke rode into Boloigne, vnto whom, as vnto the king the keies of the towne were deliuered, and in the afternoone departed all the Frenchmen. The number of all the men of war that were strong, and able to serue were of horse-men 67. of foote-men 1563. of hurt men 87. of women and children 1927. beside a great number of aged and sicke persons, not able to depart with the rest.

Boloigne yeelded to K. Henry.

The 25. of September, the king hauing the sword borne before him by the lord Marquesse Dorset, like a conqueror rode into Boloigne, and the trumpeters on the wals sounding. In the entring, there met him the duke of Suffolke, and deliuered vnto him the keies of the towne, and so he rode forth to his lodging that was prepared on the south side of the towne, two daies after the king rode about the towne, within the wals, and appointed that our Ladie church of Boloigne should be taken downe, and in place there of a mount to bee made, for strengthening of the towne: finally, after that hee had set things in order for the safe keeping of the town, he appointed sir Iohn Dudley, Lord Lisle, high admirall of the seas, to be his deputy of the same towne, and then taking the seas, he returned into England, landing at Douer on the first of October.

K Henry entred Boloigne.

The 9. of October in the night, the Frenchmen came vnawares vpon the Englishmen in base Boloigne, and slewe of them a great number: howbeit, they were shortly after chased from thence, and the base towne holden after in good quiet.

Pyles taken.

This yeare was taken by the kings shippes of the West countrey, and of the English coast the number of 300. French ships and more, so that the Grey Friers Church in London was laide full of wine, the Austen Friers and Blacke Friers, were laid full of hearing, and other fish that was taken going into France.

A benenolence demanded.

The king demanded a benenolence of all his subiects, Spirituall and Temporall, towards his wars in France and Scotland.

1545

And the twelfth of Ianuary the lord Chancelor, the duke of Suffolke, and other of the Kings Councell began to sit at Baynards Castle, where they first called before them the Maior and Aldermen, &c. And because Richard Read Alderman would not agree to pay as they set him, he was commanded vpon a great paine to serue the king in his wars of Scotland, who departed from London the three and twentith of Ianuary, where he was taken prisoner, ner, &c. Also sir William Roche Alderman, for words of displeasure taken by the kings councell, was by them sent to the Fleete, where he remained till Passion Sunday. Sir William Roche sent to the Fleete.

The 21 and twentith of Januarie, there camped on the West side of Bolaigne beyonde the hauen, an army of French to the number of fourteene thousand, where they lay ten daies, and the 1 of Februarie, were put to flight, by the earle of Hertford, and sir Iohn Dudley lord Admirall then being deputie of Bolaigne.

The 13. of Februarie, a priest was set on the pillorie in Cheape, and burnt in both cheekes with the letters F. and A. and a paper on his head, wherein was written For false accusing, which iudgement was giuen by the Lorde Chancelor in the Star Chamber, a notable example of Iustice: great cause haue I to wish the like Iustice had been ministred vnto him, that after he had defrauded me of my worldly goods, sought to haue depriued me of my life, by likewise accusing me of many articles (seauenscore and odde) suborned witnesses (detected of periury, burnt in the hand for felony, and such like) which all could proue neuer one article against me, before the Archbishop of Canterbury, and other her maiesties high commissioners, (as appeareth in their register) by whom I was answered, there was no remedie against the accuser, by meane of a statute late made, &c. Whereupon the false accuser of his master and eldest brother, sweareth to some, he neuer did any such acte: to other, that all those articles were true, and also largely (to the like effect) libelleth against me. False accuser set on the pillorie, and marked in the face, as he and other the like haue well deserued.

In the beginning of March, a road was made into Scotland toward Gedworth, by the Englishmen, who at the first got great praise, but they were so greedy, and went so farre, that a great army of Scots beset them with three battels, where the Englishmen for the most part were slaine and taken at Panyer Howghe, among whom sir Ralph Eure lord Eure, and warden of the East Marches was slaine, and R Read Alderman of London, with other taken prisoners by the Scots. T. Wriothesley L. chancelor made knight of the garter. Alder man of London taken prisoner.

Trinitie terme was adiorned because of the wars.

About the 25. of June was a great tempest of winde in Darbishire, where through trees were ouer-turned, and diuers Churches, chappels, and houses, were vncouered. Also in Lancashire, there fell hailestones as big as mens fists, which had diuers prints in them, some like mens faces, some like Gun holes, &c. An. reg. 37. Hailestones figured like mens heads.

The nineteenth of July, the French kings nauie comming out of Newhauen, and Dieppe, arriued on the coast of England in Sussex, afore bright Hamstead, where they set certaine of their souldiers aland to burne: but the Beacons were fired, and the men came downe so thicke, that the Frenchmen fled and did little hurt. Frenchmen arriued in Sussex.

The 19. of July, by misfortune of shoting a Gun in one of the Hedgehogs a ship, afore Westminster, a firken of gun-poulder fired and slew seuen men, and the eighth leaped into the Thamis, and was drowned. Men burnt in the hedgehog.

The

Mary Rose was drowned.

The 20. of July the king being at Portsmouth, a goodly shippe of England, called the Mary Rose, with sir George Carrow the captaine, and manie other gentlemen were drowned in the midst of the hauen, by great negligence.

Frenchmen landed in the Ile of Wight.

The 21. of July, the French galleies and navy came afore Portsmouth hauen, and landed certaine of their army in the Ile of Wight, at Saint Helens Point, and there burned and encamped about 2000. men: but they were sone driuen awaie with losse of their captaine and manie souldiers. Within fewe daies after, the whole fleet remoued from the Wight to a place in Suſſex, called Newhauen, foure miles from Lewes, and there landed manie captaines and souldiers, who by the valiantnes of the gentlemen and yeomen of Suſſex, were slaine and drowned in the Hauen a great number of them, and the rest hardly recouered their ships and galleies.

Frenchmen landed at Newhauen in Suſſex.

In the moneth of August, deceased at Guilford Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolke, and lord great maſter of the kings houshold, who was honorable buried at Windsor.

In August the earle of Hereford was sent into Scotland, with an army of 12000. men, where hee destroied diuers townes, and greatly endomaged the Scots.

Earle of Hertford sent into Scotland.

The 9. of September sir Iohn Dudley, L. Liſle, L. admirall of England, landed with 6000. men at Treyport in Normandy, and there brent the towne and abbey with other houses about it, and 30. ships with a barke that lay in the hauen, with losse of 14. Englishmen, and so returned.

Lord Admirall brent Treyport

The 24. of Nouember began a parliament, wherein was granted to the K. a subsidy of 2. s. 8. d. of the pound in goods, and 4. s. of the pound in lands. Also all colledges, chauntries, and hospitals, were committed to the K. order, to alter and transpose, which he promiſed to do to the glory of god and the common profit of the realme.

Chauntries, colledges, & hospitals, giuen vnto the king.

The 24. of December the Parliament was proroged, on the which daie the K. comming into the house to giue his roial assent vnto such acts as were paſſed, the speaker made vnto him an eloquent oration: to the which, although the custome hath alwaies bin that the Lord chancelor should make the answere, it pleased the K. at this present to make the answere himselfe, which hee vttered as here followeth, set downe by Edward Hall.

The first Session of the Council of Trent Dec. 13. 1545.

E. Hall.

K. Henry his Oration.

Although my chancelor for the time being, hath before this time vsed verie eloquentlie and substantiallie to make answere to such Orations, as hath bin set foorth in this high Court of Parliament, yet is hee not so able to open and set forth my minde and meaning, and the secrets of my heart in so plaine and ample maner, as I my selfe am, and can do: wherefore I taking vpon me to answere your eloquent oration. M. speaker, say, that where you in the name of our welbeloued commons, haue both praiſed and extolled mee, for the notable qualities that you haue conceiued to bee in mee, I most heartily thanke you all, that you haue put me in remembrance of my duetie, which is to indeuor my selfe to obtain and get such excellent qualities and necessary vertues as a prince or governor ought to haue, of which gifts I recognise my selfe both barren and bare: but of such small qualities as God hath indued me withall, I render render to his goodnes my most humble thankes, intending with all my wit & diligence to get and acquire to me such notable vertues and princely qualities as you haue alleadged to be corporated in my person: these thankes for your louing admonition and good counsell first remembred, I eftsoons thanke you: againe, because that you, considering our great charge, not for our pleasure, but for your defence, not for our gaine, but to our great coste, which wee haue latelie sustained, as well in defence of our and your enemies, as for the conquest of that fortresse. which was to this Realme most displeasant, and shall hereafter by Gods Grace bee to our Nation moste profitable and pleasante, haue freelie of your owne minds granted to vs a certaine subsidie, here in an act specified, which verily we take in good part, regarding more your kindnes, than the profite thereof, as hee that sets more by your louing heartes, than by your substance. Besides this heartie kindnes, I cannot alittle reioice when I consider the perfit trust and confidence, which you haue put in mee, as men hauing vndoubted hope, and vnfained beléefe in my good doinges and iust procéedinges for you, without my desire or request haue committed to mine order & disposition, all chantries, colledges, hospitals, & other places specified in a certaine act, firmely trusting that I will order them to the glory of god, and the profit of the common wealth: surely if I contrary to your expectation should suffer the Ministers of the Church to decaie, or learning, which is so great a iewell to be minished, or poore and miserable to bee vnrelieued, you might saie, that I, beeing put in so speciall a trust, as I am in this case, were no trustie friend to you, nor charitable to mine owne christen, neither a louer of the publike wealth, nor yet one that feared God, to whom account must be rendred of al our doings. Doubt not I pray you, but your expectation shal be serued more godly and godly than ye will wish or desire, as hereafter ye shal plainely perceiue. Now sithence I finde such kindnes on your part towards me, I cannot chuse but loue and fauour you, affirming, that no Prince in the worlde more fauoreth his subiects, than I doe you, nor no subiects or commons more loued and obeied their soueraign Lord than I perceiue you do me, for whose defence my treasure shall not be hidden, nor if necessitie require, my person shall not be vnaduentured: yet although I wish you, and you with me to be in this perfit loue and concord, this friendly amitie cannot continue except both you my lords temporal, and my lords spirituall, and you my loning subiects studie and take paine to amend one thing which surely is amisse, and farre out of order, to the which I most heartilie require you, which is. That Charitie and concorde is not among you, but discord and dissention beareth rule in euery place: Saint Paul saieth to the Corinthians the 13. Chapter, Charity is gentle, charitie is not enuious, charity is not proud, and so forth in the same chapter. Behold then what loue and charity is amongst you, when the one calleth an other heretike, and anabaptist, and hee calleth him againe Papist, hypocrite, and Pharisey: bee these tokens of charitie amongst your selues? No, no, I assure you that this lacke of Charitie amongst your selues will bee the hinderaunce and assuaging of the feruent loue betweene vs, as I said before, except this wounde be salued and cleerelie made whole, I must needes iudge the fault and occasion of this discord to be partlie by negligence of you the fathers and preachers of the spiritualty: for if I know a man which liueth in adultery, I must iudge him lecherous, and a carnall person: if I see a man boast and bragge himselfe, I can not but deeme him a proud man. I heare daily that you of the cleargie preach one against another, teach one contrary to another, enuying one against another, without charity or discretiō: some be too stiffe in their old Mumpsimus, other be too busy and curious in their new Sumpsimus: thus all men almost be in variety and discord, and few or none preach truly and sincerely the word of God, according as they ought to doe. Shall I iudge you charitable persons doing thus? No, no, I cannot so do: alas how can the poore soules liue in concord, when you preachers sow amongst them in your sermons debate and discord? of you they looke for light, and you bring them into darknes. Amend these crimes I exhort you, and set forth Gods word, both by true preaching and good example giuing, or els I, whome God hath appointed his vicar and high minister here, will see these diuisions extinct, and these enormities corrected, according to my very duty, or els I am an vnprofitable seruant, and vntrue officer. Although I saie the spirituall men be in some fault that charity is not kept amongst you, yet you of the temporaltie bee not cleere and vnspotted of malice and enuie, for you raile on bishops, speake slanderously of priests, and rebuke and taunt preachers, both contrarie to good order, and christian fraternity: if you knowe surelie that a Bi. or preacher, preacheth or teacheth peruers doctrine, come and declare to some of our councel or to vs, to whom is committed by god the high authority to reforme and order such causes and behauiors, & be not iudges your selues of your own fantastical opinions and vaine expositions, for in such high causes you may lightly erre: and although you be permitted to read holy scriptures, and to haue the word of god in your mother tong, you must vnderstand it is licenced you so to do, only to inform your consciences, and to instruct your children and familie, and not to dispute and make Scripture a railing and a taunting stocke, against priests and preachers, as manie light persons do. I am verie sorie to knowe and heare howe vnreuentlie that most precious iewell the worde of God is disputed, rimed, sung, and iangeled in euerie Alehouse and Tauerne, contrary to the true meaning and doctrine of the same: and yet I am euen as much sorie that the readers of the same, followe it in doing so faintly and coldelie: for of this I am sure, that charitie was neuer so faint amongst you, and vertuous and godlie liuing was neuer lesse vsed, nor God himselfe amongst christians was neuer lesse reuerenced, honored, or serued: therefore, as I saide before, bee in charity one with another, like brother and brother: loue, dread and serue god, to the which I as your supreme head and soueraigne Lord exhort and require you: and then I doubt not, but that loue and league, that I spake of in the beginning, shall neuer bee dissolued or broke betweene vs. And to the making of lawes which we haue now made and concluded, I exhort you the makers to be as diligent in putting them in execution, as you were in making and furthering of the same, or else your labor shalbe vain, & your common wealth nothing releeued. Now to your petition, concerning our royall assent, to be giuen to such actes as haue passed both the houses, they shall be read openly, that ye may heare them. And so beeing read his grace assented, and so rose and departed.

Many proper feates of armes were exploited and done in this meane while betwixt the English and the French about Bologne.

On the morrowe after the feast of the Epiphanie, there came a conuoie of victualles towardes the French Fort builded besides Bologne, garded with three or foure thousande Launcequentz, vnder their Colonell, the Reingraue and certaine Frenchmen. The earle of Surrey then lieutenant of Bologne aduertised thereof, made out with such power as hee might conuenientlie spare out of Bologne, and the olde man, to cut off those victualles: but comming to encounter with the enimies at S. Etiennes he was put to flight, sir Edward Poynings captain of a band called the K. gard of Bologne was slain in that conflict, with fiftéene or sixtéene other Captaines, besides officers and common souldiers. 1546 Englishmen put to flight by the Reingraue.

In the latter end of March, the stewes on the banks side of the Thamis, in Southwark was put downe, by the K. commandement, which was proclaimed by sound of trumpet no more to bee priuileged or vsed as a common bordell, but the inhabitantes of those houses, to kéepe good and honest rule, as in all other places of the realme. The stewes put downe.

The 27. of Aprill, being Tuesday in Easter wéeke, W. Foxley potmaker for the mint in the tower of London, fell aslép, and so continued sléeping and could not be wakened with pricking, cramping, or other wise burning whatsoeuer, till the first day of the nert terme, which was full 14. daies, and 15. nights, for that Easter terme beginneth not afore 17. daies after Easter. The cause of his thus sléeping could not be knowne, though the same were diligently searched for by the kings phisitions and other learned men, yea the king himselfe examined the said W. Foxley, who was in all points found at his wakening to be as if he had slept but one night, and liued 41. yéere after, to wit, till the yéere of Christ 1587. Ann. reg. 38. W. Foxley slept more then 14 daies, and as many nights without waking.

The 18. of May, there were 4. of the K. ships, and 4. pinnaces abroad on the seas afore the hauen of Hamble tew, and there came an 8. of the French galleies to set vpon them, there was great shoting betwéen them, but at the last one of the galleies was taken, in the which were 280. souldiers, and 140. rowers. The rest of their galleies packed away. Moreouer while the campe lay thus at Hamble tew, it chanced ỳ one day a mutenie rose among the Lanſquenetz against their captaine, so that they got themselues into order of battell, seised vpon the great artillery, and shewed countenance, as if they would haue set vpon the residue of the whole campe. Hereupon euery man was commanded to repaire to his enſign, and the Spaniards came and ioined themselues with the Englishmen ready to take such part as they did. At length by the diligence of the chéftains, and good countenance of the English soldiers & Spaniards, the tumult was staied, and 6. of the principall beginners therof were hanged. A French galley taken.

The 21. of May, the French army came and encamped beyond Bologn at the church on the hill, & the morrowe after the earle of Hertford marched with his power to a place within 2. miles of them, and certain horsemen & footemen went forth and skirmished with them, and in the meane time the artillery ceased not to shot off, as well from the French Campe, as from Bologne, and the Old-man. This day were slain 14. Frenchmen, and 2. taken prisoners: and 3. of the English part were taken, and so the earle of Hertforde returned to his camp, and left the Lansqurnts upon the hill, encamped before the enimies, not 2. miles distant from them, in which place a fort was begun to be raised, which was called the fort of Bologne beage.

The 23. of May, the soldiers of Bologn and the Lansquents skirmished with the Frenchmen, and slue and took of them about the number of 7. score, of the which there were 40. of them in velvet coats, and some with chains.

In this meane while, by the motion of divers Princes, a meeting was had of divers Commissioners appointed to treat of some peace, to bee concluded betwixt the two kings of England and France, herupon there came to Gwisnes for the K. of Englande, the earle of Hertforde, the bishop of Winchester, Sir Iohn Dudley viscount Lisle, baron of Saupas, and high admiral of Englande, Sir William Paget the kings Secretarie, and Doctor Nicholas Wotton Deane of Canterburie: For the French king there came to Arde, Mounsier Claude Danebaulte Admirall of France, the Bishoppe of Eureor, Mounsier Reymond chiefe president of Roane, the Secretarie Boucherell. These metle divers times betwixt Arde and Gwisnes. After long debating, on the seuenth of June a peace was concluded, which peace was with heraultes and sound of trumpets, proclaimed at London on Whitsonday, being the 13. of June, and the same dais was a generall Procession, before the which was borne all the richest Siluer crosses in London, to wit, of euery church one, then proceeded all the parish clearkes, condocts, quirisers, and priestes in London, with the Quire of Pauls, all of them in their richest coapes, singing: Then the companies of the Citie in their best liueries. The Lorde Maior, the Aldermen and Sherifs in scarlet, &c. All these went from Pauls church through Cheape, and Cornhill vp to Leaden hall, and so back again to Pauls. And this was the last shew of the rich crosses and coapes in London: for shortly after they, with other their church plate were called into the kings treasury and wardrobe. And the same date was the same Peace likewise proclaimed in the Citie of Paris, in Roan, & other places: the first article of which peace was, that the French king paying to the K. of England 800000. crownes, within the terme of 8. yéres, he should haue Bologn again to him restored, which in the mean time should remain in the hands and possession of the king of England.

Peace proclaimed, and generall procession.

Moreouer for the full establishing of the peace, and for to receiue the French K. oth, the vicount Lisle L. admirall, with the B. of Durham, and diuers other lords and gentlemen to the number of more than 100. al in velvet coates and chaines of gold, with 45. yeomen semely appointed, went into France from Bologn, the 10. of July, & came to Melunne, a town beyond Paris, where the French K. lay: by whome, and the Dolphin his son, they were roially receiued, feasted & banqueted: and hauing don that for the which they came, the said lord admirall Dudley the 1. of August toke his leaue of the French K. who rewarded him with a cupbord of plate of gold, valued at 1500. pound. The Lords also and gentlemen had chaines of gold giuen to them, and yeomen had 1200. crownes bestowed amongst them, and so they returned into England.

The 16. of July were burned in Smithfield for the sacrament Anne Askew alias Keime, Io. Lassels, Nicholas Otorden, priest, Io. Adlam tailor, and Doctor Shaxton somtime bishop of Salisburie preached at the same fire, and there recanted, perswading them to do the like, but they would not. Anne Askew & other burnt.

The 21. of August came into England Claude de Honnebald high admiral of France, who brought with him the sacre of Diep, and 12. galleies, hee landed at the tower Wharffe, where he was honorably receiued, and brought to the Bishop of Londons palace, where he lodged two nightes, and then rode to Hampton court where the king lay. By the way prince Edward receiued him with a company of 500. coates of veluet, with one sleeue of cloth of golde, and halfe the coat embrothered with gold: there was in all to the number of 800. horses. And so the French admirall came to the court, giuing the prince the vpper hand as they rode; and at the entry gate of the court, the L. chancelor and al the K. counsell receiued him, and brought him to his lodging. Admirall of France came to London.

On Bartholomew day the king admitted him to his presence, welcommed him, and in great triumph went to the chappell, where the K. receiued his oth, to perfourme the articles of the league. I omit to speake of huntinges and banquettings, which was wonderfull. But on the 27. of August, he being rewarded with a cupboord of plate to the value of 1200. l. hee returned to London, and so to his galleies, and departed homeward: besides the K. gift, he had giuen to him by the city of London two flagons gilt, and two other parcell gilt, valued at 136. l. besides wine, wax, &c. D. of Norffolke & earle of Surrey sent to the Tower.

The 12. of December Th. D of Norffolke, and Henry Earle of Surrey his son and heire vpon certain surmises of treason, were committed to the tower of London, the one by water, the other by land, that the one knew not of the others apprehension.

The 3. day of January, the late dissolued church of the grey Friers in London was opened, and masse sung there; and that day preached at Pauls crosse the bishop of Rochester, who declared the kings gift to the city of London, for the releiuing of the poore people, which gift was by Pattent vnder his great seale, S. Bartholomewes Spittle in Smithfield, latelie valued at 305 pounde 6. shillings and 7. pence, and surrendred to the king, the church of the said grey Friers, valued at 32. pounde, 19. s. and seauen pence, and surrendred, and two parish Churches, the one of S. Nicholas in the Shambles, the other Saint Ewine in Newgate Market at Warwike lane end, all to bee made one parish, in the said church of the Grey Friers: and in landes hee gaue for the maintenance of the same church, with diuine seruice, reparation, &c. 500. markes by yere for euer, and this church to be named Christs church, founded by king Henry the eight. K. H. his gift to the city of London.

The thirteenth daie of Januarie, the king then lying dangerously sick, the Earle of Surrey was arraigned in the Guild hall of London, before the lord Maior, the lord chancelor, and other lords and iudges being there in commission; some thinges hee flatly denied, weakening the credite of his accusers, by 1547 Earle of Surrey arraigned & beheaded.

certaine circumſtances, other hee excuſed with interpretations of his meanings to proue the ſame to be far otherwiſe than was alleadged againſt him: the eſpecialleſt matter, wherewith he was charged, was, for bearing certaine armes that were ſaid belonged to the king and prince: the bearing whereof he iuſtified, that as he toke it, he might beare them, as belonging to his anceſtors, and withall affirmed that he had the opinion of the heraults therein, and ſo to his indictment he pleaded, not guilty. And for that he was no lord of the parliament, he was enforced to ſtand to the triall of a common inqueſt of his countrey, which found him guiltie, and thereupon he had iudgement of death: and ſhortly after, to wit, on the 19. of Ianuary he was beheaded on the tower hill.

Tombe for king Henry the 8. made by cardinall Wolſey.

The king lying dangerouſly ſicke (as yée haue heard) and in great perill of death, made his laſt will and teſtament, dated the thirtith daie of December, the 38. yeare of his raigne, &c. Wherein, amongſt other things, he appointed his body to be buried in his colledge or free chappell at Windſore, in an honourable tombe prepared, and at that time almoſt finiſhed for that purpoſe, which tombe I haue ſeene, with this inſcription caſt in the grates or incloſure thereof (being copper) Henricus octauus rex Angliæ, Franciæ, dominus Hiberniæ, fidei defenſor: he appointed the tombes of king Henry the firſt, and of Edward the fourth to be more princely made in the ſame places they then ſtood: one thouſand markes to be giuen in almes to the moſt needy, in as ſhort time as may be after his deceaſe, and to twelue poore knights, to each of them 12. pence the day for euer, and euery yeare to each of them a long gowne of white cloth, with the garter embrodered vpon the breaſt, with a ſhield and croſſe of S. George, and a mantle of red cloth, &c. He appointed his firſt heire to the crowne to be prince Edward: the ſecond, lady Mary daughter to Quéene Katherine: and the third to be the lady Elizabeth, by Quéene Anne Boleine. More, he toke order, that during the minoritie of his ſonne prince Edward, his executors ſhould be counſellers and aiders to him in all things, as well concerning priuate as publike affaires, they were in number ſixteene, whoſe names inſue as followeth:

Earle of Hertford made lord protector.

The first of Februarie, the earle of Hertford was nominate, elected and chosen, by al the executors, to be protector and chiefe gouernor of the kings person, vntill he came to his lawfull age of 18. yéeres, and so was he proclaimed.

King Edward made knight. Lord Maior of London made knight.

The first date of Februarie the earle of Hertford lord protector in the tower of London, endued king Edward with the order of knighthod: and then immediatly the king standing vp, vnder the cloth of estate, Henry Hoblethorne lord Maior of London was called, who kneeling downe, the king toke the swoord of the lord protector and made him knight, which was the first that euer he made. Then the lords called the iudges and communed with them, and then euery of them came before the king, who put forth his hand, and euery of them kissed it: then master William Porteman one of the iudges of the kings bench was called forth, whom the king made knight, and then the king mouing his cap departed to his priuie chamber againe.

1547 The 11. of Aprill being munday in the Easter weke, the Complin (being a part of the euening praier) was sung in English, in the kings Chappell. Also the same month of Aprill, doctor Glasier preaching at Paules crosse, affirmed there, that the Lent was not ordained of God, to be fasted, neither the eating eating of flesh to be forborne, but that the same was a politike ordinance of men, and mought therefore be broken by men, at their pleasures. More on the 15. of May being sunday, Doctor Smith master of Whittington College in London, doctor of diuinitie, and reader of the same in the kings College at Oxford, recanted at Paules crosse, declaring his former bokes, and teachings to be erronious, and hereticall. Also on the nineteenth of June, one Peren did recant in the parish church of S. Andrew Undershaft in London, where he had before (to wit on S. Georges day) preached that it was good to worship the pictures of Christ, and of Saints, but now hee saide he had béene deceiued, and was sorie that he had taught such doctrine, &c.

And the same day, the Epistle and Gospell was read in English at the high masse in Paules church. And on the 11. of September, Edmond Bonner bishop of London was by the Councell committed prisoner in the Fleete. And on the 25. of September Stephen Gardener bishop of Winchester was likewise committed to the Fleete. And Nicholas Ridley was made bishop of Rochester.

The 24. of October, Richard lord Rich, was made lord chancelor.

Parliament at Westminster.

The 4. of November, the parliament begun at Westminster, and that same day masse was sung before the lordes of the parliament in the English tong. Sir Iohn Baker knight, chancelor of the fruites and tenthes was speaker of the common house for the said parliament: In the which was granted to the king, all colledges, chantries, free chappels, hospitals, fraternities, brotherhods, and guildes. And an acte was made for the receiving of the sacrament, in both kindes of bread and wine; and the statute of the six articles was repealed.

Colledges, chantries, free chappels; and hospitals given to the king.

The 17. of November was begon to be pulled downe the Rode in Paules church with Mary and Iohn, and all other images in that church, and then the like was done in all the Churches in London, and so throughout England, and textes of scriptures were written upon the wals of those churches against Images, &c. And on the 24. of December the parliament was prorogued.

Henry II. K. of France.

In the 1. of Ianuary doctor Latimer preached at Paules crosse, which was the first sermon by him preached in almost eight yéres before, for at the making of the six articles, he being bishop of Worcester would not consent unto them, and therfore was commanded to silence, and gaue up his bishoprike: he also preached at Pauls crosse on the 8. of Ianuary; where he affirmed, that what soeuer the cleargie commanded, ought to be obeyed, but he also declared that the cleargie are such as sit in Moyses chaire, and breake not their masters commission: adding nothing thereto, nor taking any thing there from: and such a clergy must be obeied of all men, both high and lowe. He also preached at Paules on the 15. and on the 29. of Ianuary. And on the 2. of February being the feast of the purification of our Lady, commonly called Candlemasse day, the bearing of candles in the church, was left off throughout the whole Citie of London.

The 12. of February being Shroue sunday, and the munday, and tuesday following, was great iusts, and warlike feates done in the parke at Greenewich, where was a castle or fort of turues, besieged and assaulted, to shew the king the maner of wars, wherein hee had great pleasure. The wednesdaie following commonly called Ashwednesday, the vse of giuing ashes in the church was also left.

The 7. of March, being wednesday was a pulpit set vp in the kings priuie garden at Westminster, and therein doctor Latimer preached before the king, where he mought be heard of more then foure times so manie people as could haue stood in the kings chappel: and this was the first sermon preached there. And this yéere the ceremonie of bearing of palmes on palme sunday was left off and not vsed as afore.

About

About the beginning of the month of March, the K. sent his commissioners into euery shire in England to suruey all Colledges, free chappels, and chantries with bothe bods as faces in the articles of their commission. 1548 Surueiors sent out.

Also in the said moneth of March, the K. sent forth his proclamation, with a booke for the order of receiuing of the holy communion of the body and blod of Christ, vnder both kinds of bread and wine to bee ministred by the priest to all persons at Easter, and at all times after, when the people required it. Whereupon at Easter following began the communion and confession in English, but no man constrained thereto except he would: but after Easter began the seruice in English in diuers parish churches, and at Whitsontide at Pauls, by the commandement of Doctor W. May Deane of the same Church. Barking chappell nigh the tower of London, and the Colledge Church of S. Martins le Grand nigh the Shambles, were pulled downe. Also the parish churches of S. Nicholas in the Shambles, and Saint Ewines within Newgate, were pulled down, and the parishoners appointed to the late dissolued Grey friers church which is nowe named Christes Church, founded by king Henrie the eight. Also the Parish Church at the Strond without Temple bar was pulled downe, with Strond Inne, and Strondbridge, in place whereof to build the Protectors house. Ann. reg. 2. *Fr. In the moneth of May, by meanes of a proclamation for inclosures, the commons of Somersetshire and Lincolnshire made a commotion, and brake vp certain parks of sir W. Herberds, and L. Sturtons, but sir W. Herberd slewe and executed many of those rebels.

Commotion in Somersetshire & Lincolnshire.

In July, the commons of Esser & Kent, Suffolk & Norfolk, rose against inclosures, and pulled downe diuers parks and houses.

Also the Commons of Cornewall and Deuonshire rose against the nobles and gentlemen, and required not onely that the inclosures might bee disparked, but also to haue their old religion, and act of sixe articles restored: these beseged the citie of Excester, which was valiantlie defended. Against these rebels was sent Iohn L. Russell Lord priuy seale, with a number of souldiers, who entred the city of Excester the 5. of August, where they slew and took prisoners of the rebels more than 4000. and after hanged diuers of them in the towne and country about. The L. Gray was also sent with a number of strangers Almaine and Germaine horsemen, who in diuers conflicts slewe manie people, and spoiled the country.

Commotion in Cornwall and Deuonshire.

Rebels subdued.

The last of July, Wil. L. marques of Northampton, entred the city of Norwich, and on the next morning, the rebels also entred the towne, burned parte thereof, put the L. marques to flight, and slew the L. Sheffield.

Commotion at Norwich. Lord Sheffield slaine.

In this meane time diuers persons were apprehended as aiders of the foresaid rebels or reporters of their doinges, of the which one was the Bailife of Romford in Esser, hanged within Aldgate, and an other of Kent, at the bridge fot toward Southwark, both on Mary Magdalens day by martiall law.

Martiall Law.

The 8. of August the French K. ambassador did in name of his master the F. king, make defiance vnto the K. of England, and so the wars to begin with all their force, & the same night following, all Frenchmen were taken prisoners, and their goods registred.

The French K. galleis inuaded Gernesea and Jersie.

In the beginning of August, the French K. determining to take the Iles of Gernesea and Jersea, did set there sodainelie vpon our shippes with a great number number of galleis, but they were so manfully encountred by the kings nauy, that with the losse of a thousand men, and great spoile of their galleis, they were forced to retire into France, and desist from their purpose.

The 16. of August, a man was hanged without Bishopsgate of London, and one other without Aldgate, the third at Totenham, the fourth at Waltham, and so forth in diuers other places, all by martiall law.

The 8. of August, the French ambassadors gaue a defiance to the lord protector, whereupon all French men with their goods being no denizens were apprehended and committed to prison.

French men apprehended.

The rebels in Norffolke and Suffolke encamped themselues at mount Surrey, in a wood called S. Nicholas wood, neere vnto Norwich, against whom sir Io. Dudley earle of Warwike went with an army, where both he & a great number of gentlemen meeting with the rebels were in such danger, as they had thought all to haue died in that place, but God that confoundeth the purpose of all rebels, brought it so to passe, that aswel there as in all other places, they were partly by power constrained, partly by promise of their pardon, perswaded to submit themselues to their prince: the earle of Warwike entred the citie of Norwich the 27. of August, when he had slaine aboue 5000. of the rebels, and taken their chiefe captaine Robert Ket of Windham Tanner, which might dispend in lands fifty pound by yeere, and was worth in mouables aboue a thousand markes, when he had put to execution diuers of the rebels in diuers places about Norwich, he returned.

The earle of Warwike went against the rebels at Norwich.

The 28. of August tidings was brought to K. Edward, and the lord protector, that the French men had taken Blackneis, Hamiltew and Newhauen by Boleine, and had slaine all the Englishmen, and taken the kings ordinance and victuals, which was reported to be begun by one Sturton a bastard son of the lorde Sturtons, which had betraied Newhauen, and went himselfe to the French kings seruice: hereupon the captaine of Boleine Barke for feare of the French army conueied all the ordinance, victuals, goods, and men of that fort, to the high towne of Boleine, and after their departing, with gunpowder blew vp the fort.

Newhauen by Boleine woon by the French.

About this time also, a commotion began at Semer in the north-riding of Yorke shire, and continued in the east-riding, and there ended: the principall raysers whereof were William Ombler of east Hesterton yeoman, Thomas Dale parish clearke of Semer, and Steuenson of Semer: being preuented by the lord president from rising at Wintringham, they drew to a place at Semer by the sea coast, and there by night rode to the beacon at Starton, and set it on fire, and so gathered a rude route: then they went to maister Whites house, and take him, and Clopton his wiues brother, Sauage a merchant of Yorke, and Bery seruant to sir Walter Mildmay, which foure they murthered a mile from Semer, and there lefte them naked: their number increased to 3000.

Commotion in Yorkeshire.

On the one and twentith day of August, the kings pardon was offred, which Ombler and other refused, who were shortly after taken, and brought to Yorke, where Thomas Dale and other were executed the 21. of September.

Rebels executed at Yorke.

The first of September Edmond Boner bishop of London preached a sermon at Paules crosse, for the which he was accused vnto the councel by William Latimer, parson of S. Laurence Pountney, and Iohn Hooper, sometime a white monke, and so conuented before the Archbishop of Canterbury and other commissioners at Lambheath on the thirteenth, the sirteenth, the eightteenth, and on the one and twentith day of that same month he was sent to the Marshalsea in his habite of a bishop, but on the first of October he was depriued of his bishoprieke, for disobeying the kings order in religion.

On the sirt day of October in the morning, the earle of Warwike with other lords of the counsel sent for the lord Maior and the Aldermen of London, to his place in Holborne, where was declared to them by the lorde Chancelor and other of the kings counsell, diuers abuses of the L. protector, concerning the kings person, and his affaires both in England and also in Scotland, and other his peces beyond the seas. And that after none was kept a court of the aldermen in the Guild hall, where was shewed a letter, from the king and the lord protector for to haue one thousand men of the citie, well harnessed with weapons for defence of the kings maiesties person. And another letter also from the lords of the counsell, to haue two thousand men to aide them, for defence of the kings person: and also, that the citie should bee well kept with watches both day and night, &c.

And the same sirt day, the king being at Hampton court, the lord protector caused proclamations to be made in diuers towns neere to the court, for men to aide the king against the lords, and also sent letters to diuers townes to the same effect: whereupon great assemblies of people were made at Hampton court. And in the night of the same day, he conueyed the king to Windsore, with a great number of horsemen and sotmen.

My lords, we commend vs most hartily vnto you: and whereas the kings maiestie was enformed that you were assembled in such sort as yee doe nowe remaine there, was aduised by vs, and such other of his counsell, as were here about his person, to send master secretary Peter vnto you with such a message as whereby might haue ensued the soretie of his maiesties person, with preseruation of his realme and subiects, and the quiet both of vs, and your selues, as master secretary can well declare vnto you, his maiestie, and we of his councell here, do not a little marueil that you stay still with you the said master secretary: and haue not (as it were) vouchsafed to send an answere to his maiesty, neither by him, nor yet by any other. And for our selfe, we do much more marueil, and are right sory, as we and you haue good cause to be, to see the manner of your doings, bent with force and violence to bring the kings maiestie and vs to those extremities, which as we doe intend, if you will take none other way but violence, to defend vs, as nature and our allegiance doth binde vs to extremity of death, and put it vnto Gods handes, who giueth victory as pleaseth him. So if our reasonable conditions and offers will take no place, as hitherto none hath beene signified vnto vs from you, nor we doe not vnderstand what yee doe require or seeke, nor what yee do meane, and that yee speake no hurt of the kings maiesties person: as touching all other priuat matters, to auoide the effusion of christian blond, and to preserue the kings

maiesties person, his realme, and subiects, ye shall finde vs agréable to anie reasonable conditions that you will require. For we do estéeme the L. wealth and tranquillity of the realme more than all other worldly things, yea more than our owne liues. Thus praying you to sende vs a determinate answere herein by M. secretary Peter (or if yée will not let him go) by this bearer, we beseech God to giue both you and vs grace to determine this matter as may be to Gods honor, the preseruation of the king, & the quiet of vs all, which may be, if the fault be not in you. And so we bid you most hartily farewell. From the kings maiesties castle of Windsor the 7. day of October, 1549.

Your L. louing friends, E. Somerset, &c.

A letter from the duke of Somerset to the earle of Warwike.

My lord, I cannot perswade my selfe that there is any ill conceiued in your heart as of your selfe against me, for that the same séemeth vnpossible, that where there hath bén from your youth and mine so great a friendship and amitie betwixt vs, as neuer for my part to no man was greater, now so suddenly there should be hatred, and that without iust cause, what soeuer rumours and brutes, or perswasion of others haue moued you to conceiue, in the sight and iudgment of almighty God, I protest & affirme this vnto you, I neuer meant worse to you than to my selfe, wherefore my lord, for God sake, for friendship, for the loue that euer hath bin betwixt vs, or that hereafter may be, perswade your selfe with truth, and let this time declare to me and the world your iust honor, and perseuerance in friendship, the which God be my witnesse, who séeth all harts, was neuer diminished, nor euer shall be whilest I liue. And because my heart and minde shall be more plaine and open than my writings: this bearer master Hobie shal declare vnto you the effect thereof at length, to whom I pray you giue credite, &c. the 8. of October, 1549.

A letter from the lords at Windsor to the lords at London.

After our harty commendations vnto your good L. we haue receiued from the same a letter by master Hunnings, dated at London yesterdaie, whereby you doe vs to vnderstand the causes of your assemble there, and charging the lord protector with the maner of gouernment, require that he withdraw himselfe from the kings maiestie, disperse the force which hee hath leuied, and be contented to be ordered according to iustice and reason. And so you will gladlie commune with vs, as touching the suretie of the kings maiesties person, and the order of all other things, with such conformitie on that behalfe as appertaineth; and otherwise you must (as you write) make other account of vs, than you trust to haue cause, and burden vs, if things come to extremities. To the first point we verily beléeue, that as brutes, rumors, and reportes, that your lordships intended the destruction of the lorde protector induced his grace to sée to the defence which he hath assembled, excuse your lordships, hearing that his grace intended the like destruction towards you, haue bin moued to doe as you haue done, so as for lacke of vnderstanding one of an others right meaning, things be growen to such extremities, as if the saluing of the kings maiesties person, and the common weale, take not more place in his grace and your lordships, than priuate respect or affaires, you sée, we doubt not, as we doe, that both our king, our countrie, and also our selues shall as verily as Gods is God, be vtterly destroied and cast away. Wherefore, might it it please you, for the tender passion of Jesus Christ, vse your wisedome, and temper your determination in such sort, as no blod bee shed, nor crueltie vsed, neither of his graces part, nor of your lordships; for if it come to ỹ point, both you and we are like to see presently with our eies, that which euery veine of all our hearts will bleed to behold. Wherefore, as true subiectes to the kings Maiestie, as faithfull Counsellors, though vnworthie Counsellors to his Maiestie and his realme, and as lamentable petitioners, we beseech your lordships most humblie, and from the bottome of our hearts, to take pity of the king and the realme, whereof you be principall members, and to set apart Summum ius, and to vse at this time Tum bonum & æquum; and thinke not that this is written for anie priuate feare or other respect of our selues, but for that vndoubtedlie we heare and know more of this point with your fauors, than you there do know; yea, and howsoeuer it shall please you to account of vs, we are true men to God, to the King, to the realme, and so will we liue and dy whersoeuer we be, and in respect of them thée esteéme little anie other person or thing, no not our owne liues; and hauing cleere consciences, as somewhat soeuer ill mate followe, vpon the vse of extremitie there, that neither now is, nor shall be found fault in vs, and so quieting our selues we rest. Now to that you would haue the lorde protector to do, for his part his grace and wee haue communed herein, & much to our comfortes and yours also, if it shall like you to waie the case, who is contented if you will againe for your parts vse equity, to put that now in execution which many times he hath declared by his wordes, that is to saie, so as the king and the realme mate be otherwise well serued, hee passeth little for the place he now hath. Mary he doth consider, that by the kings maiestie with all your aduices, and the consents of the nobles of the realme he was called to the place (as appeereth in writing vnder his maiesties great Seale and Signe, whereunto your owne handes also and ours, with all others the Lordes of the vpper house in parliament are subscribed): And therfore in violent sort to be thus thrust out against his will, he thinketh it not reasonable: he is here with the kings person, where his place is to be, and we bee heere with him we trust in God for the good seruice of the king, the weale of the realme, and the good acquiting both of his Grace and of your Lordeshippes, which wée most heartilie desire, and sée such hope heere thereof, as if you bée not too sore bent vpon the extremities, as is reported, and as equitie cannot take no place, my Lordes grace mate liue in quiet, and the kings Maiesties affaires maintained in such order, as by his Maiesties Counsellors shall bée thought conuenient; marie to put himselfe simplie into your handes, hauing heard as both we and he haue, without first knowledge vpon what conditions, it is not reasonable. Life is swéete my Lords, and they saie, you seeke his bloode and his death; which if ye do, and mate haue him otherwise conformable to reason, and by extremitie driue him to seeke extremitie againe; the bloude of him and others that shall die on both sides innocentlie, shall bee by God instlie required at your handes. And when peraduenture you woulde haue him againe vpon occasion of seruice, you shall forethink to haue lost him. Wherefore good my Lords, we beseech you againe and againe, if you haue conceiued any such determination, to put it out of your heads, and incline your harts to kindnesse and humanitie, remembring that he hath neuer bén cruell to any of you, and why should you be cruell to him? as we trust you be not, what soeuer hath bén said, but will shew your selues as conformable for your parts, as his grace is contented, for the zeale he beareth to the king and the realme, to bee for his part, as this bearer sir Phillip Hobie will declare vnto you, to whom we praie you to giue credite, and to returne him hither againe with answere hereof. And thus beséeching the liuing God to direct your hearts to the making of a quiet end of these terrible tumults, we bid your lordships most hartilie well to fare. From the kings maiesties castle of Windsor the eight of October, 1549.

These letters notwithstanding, the same eight of October, after a common councel in the Guild hal at London, whither all the lords of the counsell came, the lord Chancelor and other declared diuers abuses of the lord protector, desiring the citizens to be ayding and assisting with them, for the preserning of the kings maiesties person, which they greatly feared, being in his aduersaries hands. The lords dined with maister Yorke one of the sheriffs, and in the afternoone proclamation was made in diuers places of the citie with trumpets, heraults, and kings at armes, wherein was contained diuers articles touching the euill gouernment of the lord protector.

First they charged him with making inward diuision, whereby the quiet state of the realm left by king Henry the 8. was now disturbed, and thousands of the kings naturall subiects slaine.

Item, the losse of his maiesties peces beyond the sea, which his highnes father (not long before his decease) wan to the honor of himselfe, and commoditie of the realme, not without the auenture of his owne person.

Item, that in all times of the wars in France and Scotland he hath enriched himselfe, and builded sumptuous and faire houses, leauing the kings poore souldiers vnpaid of their wages.

Item, that he hath labored to make himselfe strong in all countries.

That he hath subuerted all lawes, iustice, and good order of the Realme, whereby he hath fearfully shaken the chaire of the kings state.

That he hath little estéemed the graue aduice of the kings good and faithfull counsellors.

That he hath little regarded the order appointed by the late K. Henry the 8. for the gouernment of the king his sonne, his realmes and dominions in his tender age.

That he hath labored to sowe diuision in the realme among the nobles, gentlemen, and commons.

Finally, that it is easie for euery man to sée what losse the king and realme haue of late suffered by his wilfull negligence, and lacke of prouision and furniture of the peces beyond the sea. Subscribed,

Sir Edward Mountague knight, chiefe Iustice of the common place.
Sir Ralph Sadler knight.
Sir Iohn Baker knight.
Sir Edward Wotton knight.
Doctor Wotton deane of Canterburie.
Sir Richard Southwell knight.

The tenth of October, by a common counsell at the Guild hall, was granted fiue hundred men of the citie, (100. to be horsemen) to bee readie on the next morrow: and this day the lords dined with maister Turke one of the shrieffes of London.

The 11. of October, the lords sitting at the L. great maisters, sir Anthony Wingfield captaine of the gard was sent to the king at Windsor, and seuered the L. protector from his person, and caused the garde to watch him till the lords comming. On the morrow, the lord chancelor with the rest of the counsell, rode to Windsor to the king, and that night the lord protector was put in warde into Beauchamps tower in the castle of Windsor.

The 14. of October in the afternone, the duke of Somerset was brought from Windsor, riding betwixt the earles of Southampton, and of Huntington, through Oldborne in at Newgate, and so to the tower of London, accompanied with diuers lords and gentlemen, with 300. horse: the lord maior, sir Ralph Warren, sir Iohn Gresham, maister Recorder, sir William Lock, and both the shrifs, and other knights sitting on their horses against Soper lane, and all the officers with halbards, and from Holborne bridge to the tower, certaine aldermen or their deputies on horse-backe in euery streete, with a number of houholders standing with bils as he passed. There was with him committed to the tower, sir Michaell Stanhope, sir Thomas Smith, sir Iohn Thin knights, Wolfe of the priuie chamber, and Grey of Reading. Lord protector brought to the tower.

The 17. of October, king Edward came from Hampton court to his place in Southwarke, then called Suffolke place, and there dined, where after dinner he made maister Iohn Yorke one of the shrieffes of London knight, and then rode through the citie of London to Westminster. King Edward rode through London.

Now when the duke of Somerset was first apprehended, Steph. Gardener B. of Winchester then being prisoner in the tower (as before ye haue heard) was borne in hand, he should be set at libertie, in hope wherof he prepared him new apparell for that purpose, thinking verily to haue come abroade within eight or tenne daies: but when he was forgotten, and nothing said vnto him, by the space of one moneth after, he thought it good to put the lords in remembrance by his letters, wherin (after commendations had vnto them) he wrote as followeth: I haue continued here in this miserable prison nowe one yere, one quarter and one moneth, this same day that I write these my letters, with want of aire to relieue my body, want of bookes to relieue my mind, want of good companie, the onelie solace of this world, and finallie, want of a iust cause why I shoulde haue come hither at all. More of this Letter came not to my hands, but that the lords toke it in good part, & laughed verie merrilie thereat, saying, hee had a pleasant heade, for rewarde whereof they gaue him leaue to remaine still in prison fiue or sixe weekes after, without saying or sending any word to him, which when he considered, then hee wrote to them this letter following.

After my due commendations to your good lordships: Howsoeuer the time is stolen from you with the multitude of businesses and varietie of matters, wherewith ye bee trauelled, whereby ye rather want time (as I suppose) than bee glutted with it; yet with mee (beeing alone comfortles in this miserable prison) the time passeth more sensibly, and as the griefe groweth in length, so it bringeth more encombrie and trauell with it. And being now the time of parliament, whereof I am a member in my degrée, called vnto it by writ, and not cut from it by any fault, but only by power kept here: it is a double calamity to be detained in prison by so intollerable wrong, and excluded from this assemblie so much against right. I haue suffered the like in the late lord protectors time against all reason; which god hath giuen you power now to reforme. And among manie other thinges which in his time were wrythed amisse, no one thing (as I suppose) was of woorse example, ne more preiudiciall to the good order of the high court of Parliament, which is the direction of all mens liues, lands, and goods in this realme, than to allowe for a president, that anie one man being member therof, might without cause be excluded, and so letted to parle there his minde in publike matters, for the wealth of the realme, and such other priuate causes as do occur. If the strength of the parliament be not empaired by wrong in one, because right consisteth not in number, it shall bee at the pleasure of him that ruleth, to do the same in mew, whereby others may take more harme then I, as experience hath shewed in such examples. But I know it becommeth me not to reason the strength of that court, ne the order of it: the lawyers of this realm know that, and to their knowledge I submit my iudgment, and take for good that they allow. But this I dare say, when religion is entreated in a general councel of Christendom, if the rulers of the councel let any mans repaire thither that hath right to be there, what soeuer is there concluded, is in the lawes of the world abroad taken of no force, by excluding of one member wrongfullie that should furnish the bodie, which I write vnto your lordships, for the good opinion I haue of you, trusting that ye intend not to vphold or followe the late lorde protectors doinges by wrong, but so fashion your proceedings, as they maie agree with iustice at home, and seem agreeable to reason, to others abroade: beeing so assured of mine innocencie, that when your lordships shal heare what can be said against me & mine answer thereunto, there shal appeere cause why I should haue had praise, thanks & commendations of the late L. protector (if truth, honestie, and due obedience might take therfore) and no cause of trouble or displeasure at al, so wrongfully haue I bẽ tormented in this prison, so boldly dare I speake to you of my cause, with such an opinion and estimation of your wisedoms which I know, and reuerence, as I ought not, ne would not vainly hope to abuse you with words: but vpon certain confidence of your indifferencies, verily I trust that ye will deeme & take things in such sort, as being plainly and truly opened, shall appeare vnto you by-matter indeed. In consideration whereof, I renew my suit vnto your lordships, instantly requiring you that I may be heard according to iustice, & that with such speed, as ẏ delay of your audience giue not occasion to such as be ignorant abroad of my matter, to think that your lordships allowed and approued the detaining of me here. Which without hearing my declaration I trust ye will not, but haue such consideration of me, as mine estate in the common wealth, the passing my former life amongst you, and other respects do require, wherein you shall bind me, and do agreeably to your honors and iustice: the free course whereof, you haue honorably taken vpon you, to make open to the realm without respect, which is the onely establishment of al common welths, and therfore the zeale of him was allowed that said, Fiat iustitia, & ruat mundus: signifying, that by it the world is kept from falling indeede, although it might seeme otherwise in some respect, and some trouble to arise in doing it. And this I write, because in the late L. protectors time there was an insinuation made vnto me, as though I were kept here by policie, which with the violation of iustice take neuer good effect, as I doubt not of your wisedoms ye can and will consider, and do therfore accordingly: for the effectuall execution whereof I shall not faile to praie almightie God with the preseruation and increase of your honors. From the tower. Thus much concerning these letters haue I thought good to set downe, for that I find not the same otherwise extant in larger discourses of the said B. writings.

Robert ket and William ket hanged.

The 29. of November, Robert Ket and William Ket his brother were deliuered out of the tower of London, to sir Edmond Windham knight, and the riffe of Norffolke to be conueied to Norwich, where Robert Ket was hanged in chaines on the top of Norwich castle, and William Ket likewise hanged on the top of Windham steeple.

Holds lost in Scotland.

In the moneths of November and December, the Scots take Wartierage in Scotland, and other holds then possessed by Englishmen, where the Scots slue man, woman, and childe, except sir John Lutterell the captaine, whome they take prisoner.

The lords of the counsell resorted to the tower of London, and there charged the lord protector with sundrie articles, which he confessed, and subscribed vnto them as followeth.

1 First, you did take vpon you the offices of protector and gouernor vpon condition expressedly and specially, that ye would do nothing in the kings affaires publike or priuate, but by the assent of the late kings executors, or the most part of them.

2 Item, you contrarie to the same condition and promise, of your owne authoritie did staie and let suffice, and subuerted the lawes as well by your letters, as by your commandement.

3 Item, you caused diuers persons rested and imprisoned for treason, murther, manslaughter, and felonie, to be discharged and to go at large, against the lawes and statutes of this realme.

4 Item, you haue made and ordained lieutenants for the kings armies, and other the kings waightie affaires, vnder your owne writings and seales.

5 Item, you haue communed with the ambassadors of other realmes, discussing alone with them the waightie matters and causes of this our realme.

6 Item, you haue sometimes rebuked, checked, and taunted as well priuately as openly, diuers of the kings most honorable counsellors, for shewing and declaring their minds & aduices or opinions against your purpose in the kings waighty affaires, saying sometime to them, that they were not worthy to sit in counsell, and sometimes saying to them, that you need not to open matters to them, and ye will be otherwise aduised, and that ye would if they were not agreeable to your opinions, put them out, and take in other at your pleasure.

7 Item, ye had and held against the lawes, in your own house, a court of requests, and thereby did inforce diuers of the kings subiects to answer for their free holds & goods, and determined the same to the subuersion of the same laws.

8 Item, you being none officer, without the aduice of the councel, or the more part of them, did dispose the officers for money of the kings gifts, and granted leases and wards of the kings, and gaue presentations of the kings benefices and bishoprickes, hauing none authoritie so to do: and further, ye did meddle with selling of the kings lands.

9 Item, you commanded multiplication and alcumistrie to be practised, thereby to abate the kings coine.

10 Item, you are charged that ye haue diuers & many times both openly and priuatly said & affirmed, that the nobles and gentlemen were the only causes of the dearth of things, whereby the people rose & did reform things themselues.

11 Item, you caused proclamations to bee made concerning inclosures, whereby the common people hath made diuers insurrections, and leuied open war, and destroied and spoyled the kings subiects, which proclamation went forth against the wils of all the counsell.

12 Item, you caused an iniunction with certaine articles thereunto annexed, to be made out concerning inclosures, commons, highwaies, decaying of cottages, and diuers other things, giuing the commissioners authoritie to heare and determine the same causes, to the subuersion of the lawes and statutes of this realme, whereby much sedition, insurrection, and rebellion haue risen and growen among the kings maiesties subiects.

13 Item, you suffered the rebels and traitors to assemble and lie in camps and armor against the kings nobles and gentlemen, without any speedie subduing or appeasing them.

14 Item, you did comfort and encourage diuers of the said rebels, by giuing to them diuers summes of your owne money, and by promising to diuers of them fées, rewards, and seruices.

15 Item,

15 Item, you in fauor of the saide rebels did against the lawes, and caused proclamation to be made, that none of the said rebels or traitors should be sued or vexed by anie maner of person, for anie of their offences in the said rebellion, to the cleere subuersion of the lawes heere.

16 Item, you haue said in the time of rebellion, that you liked well the doings and procedings of the said rebellious and traitors, and said that the couetousnesse of gentlemen gaue occasion to the common people to arise: saying that better it were for the commons to die, than for to perish vtterly for lacke of liuing.

17 Item, you said that the lords of the parliament were loth to incline themselues to reformation of inclosures and other things, therfore the people haue god cause to reforme the things themselues.

18 Item, you after the report and declaration of the defaults and lackes reported to you by them that did survey Boloigne, and the peces, you saide you would neuer amend the faults.

19 Item, you would not suffer the kings peces beyonde the sea called Newhauen and Blacknes, to be furnished with men and victuals, although that ye were aduertised of the defaults therein by the captaines of the said peces, as by others, and was also aduertised by the kings counsell, whereby the French king being the kings enemy was encouraged and comforted to inuade and win the said peces to the kings great losse and dishonor.

20 Item, also you said, ye would not suffer the noble men and gentlemen to subdue and to represse the said rebellious in time conuenient, neither would you giue any authoritie to the said nobles and gentlemen, to the subduing of the said rebels, but wrote your letters to them to speake faire to the rebels, and to handle them gently.

21 Item, you haue caused the first of October last past, at Hampton court for the defence of your owne cause, diuers seditious bils to be written in counterfeited handes, and secretly to be throwen abroad in diuers partes of this realme, thus beguiling the good people, &c. meaning thereby for to stir and raise vp the kings subiects vnto armor and open war.

22 Item, when that the kings maiesties priuie counsellors of their loue and zeale that they did beare vnto the king and the realme, did counsell at London to come to you, to the intent to commune with you charitably, to amend your doings and misgouernance: you hearing of their assembly, did cause to be declared by letters in diuers places, the said lords to be traitors to the K. to the great disturbance of the realme.

23 Item, you declared and published vntruely as well to the kings maiestie and other the yong lordes attendant vpon his maiesties person, and to the kings subiects at diuers and sundrie times and places, that the said lordes at London minded to destroie the king, and you required the king neuer to forget it, but to reuenge it, and likewise required the said yong lords to put the king in remembrance thereof, to the intent to make sedition and discord betwene the kings maiestie and his lords.

24 Item, you said in the month of October last at Hampton court, and the right of the same month at Windsor, or at one of the same places these words: The lords of the counsell at London doe intend to kill mee, but if I die, the K. shall die, and if they famish me, they shall famish the king.

25 Item, you caused and procured by your owne letters, the kings people in great number to rise, and assemble in armor after the maner of war, to your aid and defence.

26 Item, the 9. of October last, you did of your own head so dainly remoue the kings maiesties person late in the night from Hampton court to Windsor, without anie prouision there made for his Grace, whereby his highnesse was not onelie in great feare, but tooke also such disease as was to his great perill.

27 Item, you caused your owne seruants and friendes at Hampton court, and at Windsor to be harnessed with the kings armor, the kings graces seruants hauing none armor nor harnesse.

28 Item, you caused at Windsor your own person in the night time to be garded in harnesse by many persons, leauing the kings maiesties person vngarded, and would not suffer his owne gard or seruants to be next the kings person, but appointed your seruants and friends to keepe the gates.

29 Item, you minded for to fly to Jarsey or to Wales, and laide poste horse and a bote and men for the same intent.

Edward D. of Somerset his first submission.

I Edward Duke of Somerset, haue read and considered these saide 29. articles before specified, and doe acknowledge my saide offences, faultes, and crimes, done and contained in the same, and most humblie prostrate on my knees, do fullie and wholie submit my selfe to the most aboundant mercy and clemencie of the kings Maiestie, for the moderation of my saide offences, hauing my full trust and confidence, that his Maiestie with the aduise of his highnesse most honourable counsaile, will consider mine offences, faultes, wordes, and procéedings, that if anie of my said offences be by his clemencie, pardoned, remitted, or otherwise discharged, that I maie enioie the benefite thereof, although the same become vnknowne. And farther I do most humblie beséech all my Lordes and other his maiesties most honorable counsayle, not onelie to be mcanes to his maiestie, to take awaie and consider mine offences to haue procéeded more of ignorance, negligence, follie, wilfulnes, and for lacke of good consideration, than of anie cankered or malicious hart, euill entent or thought, tending to any treason to his maiestie or realme: but that it may please his maiestie by the charitable aduise of their good lordships to haue pitie vpon me, my wife, and children, and to take some mercifull waie with me, not according to the extremitie of his lawes, but after his great goodnes and clemencie, whereunto what soeuer it shall bee, I doe most humbly with all my hart submit my selfe. Written with mine owne hande the 23. day of Decemb ber, in the 3. yeere of the raigne of our soueraigne L. king Edward the 6.

The submission of the D. of Somerset prisoner in the tower, made the 2. of February.

I am most fearefull and full of heauinesse my verie good Lordes, to vnderstande that my last letters were no better accepted at your lordships handes, to whome I am bounde during my life, for your most gentle and mercifull dealing with me, that it pleased your goodnesse to bring my case to a fine. I trust your Lordshippes neuer thinke that I euer did or would intende to stande against the kings Maiestie and your lordships goodnes, or that I would goe about to iustifie my cause, seeing his maiestie and your Lordships offereth clemencie, mercie and pardon. Although the fine be to me importable, yet I doe commit myselfe wholie to his highnesse, and your Lordships mercies, I pray onelie the moderation of it: And did couet to declare to your goodnesse mine inhabilitie to beare it: And yet referred all to his Maiestie, and your wisedome, goodnesse, and discretion. And I most humblie desire your Lordships not to thinke that I was about to contende with your Lordships, when I did speake of my conscience, I might erre, in that I thought I did for the best, as I doe acknowledge and confesse, that neither I am the wisest man in the world, Edward D. of Somerset his second submission.

worlde, nor yet if I were, I shoulde not escape without a most singular grace, but manie times I shoulde offende: But I leaue all that, and most humblie, simplie, wholie, and lowlie, I submit my selfe to the kings Maiestie, and to your good lordships, appealing from the rigour and extremitie of his Maiesties lawes, to his maiesties great mercie and clemencie, praying your goodnesse to bee meanes to his Maiestie not to bee offended with mee, nor to exclude his maiesties mercie and benignitie from me, for my rudenes and lack of discretion, but to accept my good minde as one that faine woulde doo that were well. And when I cannot, or haue not doone that thing I ought to do, I woulde gladlie amende, and am readie at all times, without condition to doo and suffer willinglie that thing that your honours will appoint mee, accepting what clemencie or mercie soeuer I obtayne to bee of his Maiesties, and your goodnesse. most humblie on my knees praying, his Maiestie and your good Lordeshippes to pardon mine offences, and to order mee for them as to his moste high mercifull clemencie shall appeere conuenient. And finallie flying from extremitie of iustice, desire mercie, as you bee and are called most mercifull counsellours, not imputing my writings, and doings hitherto as of stoutenesse or stubburnnesse, but onelie for lacke of discretion and wisedome. For the which once againe I require pardone fauor to be shewed. And if it pleased your good lordships to heare me, I trust ye should finde lowly vnto yours honors, and so conformable vnto your lordships orders, that I trust to make amends, and obtaine pardon for my former folly. And thus I most humbly commit your good lordships to almighty God: To whome I shall alwaies pray that ye maie long continue in honor. From the Tower the 2. of Februarie.

Of the like counterfeite physition haue I noted (in the summarie of my Chronicles Anno 1382.) to be set on horse-backe, his face to the horse-taile, the same taile in his hande as a bridle, a collar of Iordans about his necke, a whetstone on his breast, and so led through the citie of London, with ringing of basons, and banished. Whereunto I had added as followeth. Such deceiuers no doubt are many, who being neuer trained vp in reading, or practise of physicke and Chirurgerie, boast to do great cures, especially vpon women, as to make them straight that before were crooked, corbed, or crumped in any part of their bodies, &c. But the contrary is true, for some haue receiued gold, when they haue better deserued the whetstone. These wordes tending generallie against all such counterfeit phisitions, hath bin so hardly taken to hart, by one priuate person, not of the best, or second sort, (but my common aduersary) that he hath largely libelled against me, to my great slander, but to the ful bewraying of himselfe, as one touched more then other, that being wiser, holde their peace. Stephen Gardener bishop of Winchester, hauing been diuers times conueyed from the Tower of London to Lambeth, (to wit, on the 15. and the 18. of December,

Bishop of Winchester deprined

December, the 8. the 12. and the 16. of January, the 13. and 14. of February) and at euery the said times, examined by the archbishop of Canterburie, and other the kings high commissioners, he was now on the said 14. of February depriued of his bishoprick, and committed againe to the tower: Into his place was translated doctor Poynet, late bishop of Rochester: and maister Iohn Scorie was made bishop of Rochester.

The 5. of Aprill, sir Thomas Darcey Vicechamberlaine, and captaine of the garde, was created lord Darcey at Grænewich.

The 24. of Aprill, George of Paris a dutchman was brent in Smithfielde for an Arian. An Arian brent

The 25. of May about none, was an earthquake at Blechingly, Godstone, Titsey, Rigate, Croydon, Benington, Alberie, and diuers other places in Southerey. Earthquake.

In the month of Iune, the earle of North-hampton, the bishop of Ely and other, were sent ambassadors into France, who were there honorably receiued and entertained. And after that came diuers lords of France into England, who were lodged at Suffolke place in Southwarke.

The 9. of July, the base moneies (coyned in the time of king Henry the eight, and king Edward the first) was proclaimed the shilling to go for 9. pence the groate for 3. pence, which toke effect immediatly after the Proclamation was made. First fall of the base moneies.

The 15. of Aprill, the infectious sweating sicknesse began at Shrewsbury, which ended not in the North part of England vntill the ende of September. In this space what number died, it cannot be well accompted, but certaine it is that in London in fewe daies 960. gaue vp the ghost: it began in London the 9. of July, and the 12. of July it was most vehement, which was so terrible, that people being in best health, were sodainly taken, and dead in foure and twenty houres, and twelue, or lesse, for lacke of skill in guiding them in their sweat. And it is to be noted, that this mortalitie fell chiefely or rather on men, and those also of the best age, as betweene thirty and fortie yeares, fewe women, nor children, nor olde men died thereof. Sleeping in the beginning was present death, for if they were suffered to sleepe but halfe a quarter of an houre, they neuer spake after, nor had any knowledge, but when they wakened fell into panges of death. This was a terrible time in London, for many one lost sodainly his friends, by the sweat, and their money by the proclamation. Seauen honest householders did sup togither, and before eight of the clocke in the next morning, six of them were dead: they that were taken with full stomacks scaped hardly. This sickenesse followed English men as well within the realme, as in strange countries: wherefore this nation was much afeard of it, and for the time began to repent and remember God, but as the disease relented, the deuotion decaied. The first weeke died in London 800. persons. Sweating sicknesse. John Caius.

The 17. of August, the shilling which of late was called downe to nine-pence, was called downe to 6. d. the groate to 2. d. the halfe groate to one penny, the penny to an halfe penny. Second fall of base moneies.

Duke of Somerset beheaded.

The 22. of January Edward duke of Somerset was beheaded on the tower hill. The same morning early the constables of euery warde in London (according to a precept directed from the counsell to the Maior) streightly charged euerie houshelde of the same citie not to depart any of them out of their houses before ten of the clocke of that day, meaning thereby to restraine the great number of people, that otherwise were like to haue bene at the said execution: notwithstanding by seuen a clock the tower hill was couered with a great a great multitude, repairing from all parts of the citie, as well as out of the suburbs, and before 8. of the clocke the duke was brought to the scaffold inclosed with the kings gard, the sherifs officers, the warders of the tower, & other with halbards: the duke being ready to have been executed, suddenly the people were driuen into a great feare, few or none knowing the cause: wherfore I thinke it good to write what I saw concerning that matter. Great feare with smal cause

The people of a certaine hamlet, which were warned to be there by 7. of the clocke to giue their attendance on the lieutenant, now came through the posterne, & perceiuing the D. to be alreadie on the scaffold, the foremost began to run, crying to their followes to fellow fast after, which suddennes of these men being weaponed with bils and halbards thus running, caused the people which first saw them, to thinke some power had come to haue rescued the duke from execution, and therefore to crie away, away, whereupon the people ran some one way some another, many fell into the tower ditch, and they which tarried thought some pardon had been brought, some saide it thundered, some that a great rumbling was in the earth vnder them, some that the ground moued, but there was no such matter, more than the trampling of their feete, which made some noise. The 12. of July, the lady Mary sent to Norwich to be proclaimed there, which they refused to do, for that they were not certain of the kings death: but on the next day after, they did not only proclaime hir, but also sent hir men and munition to aid her.

The same twelfth of July, word was brought to the Councell, being then in the tower with the ladie Iane, that the ladie Mary, eldest daughter to king Henry the eight, was at Keninghall castle in Norffolke, and with her the earle of Bath, Sir Thomas Wharton sonne to the Lorde Wharton, Sir Iohn Mordant sonne to the Lorde Mordant, Sir William Drurie, Sir Iohn Shelton, Sir Henry Bedingfield, Maister Henry Iernigham, Maister Iohn Sulierde, Maister Richard Freston, Maister Sargeant Morgan, M. Clement Higham of Lincolnes Inne, and diuers others, and also that the Earle of Sussex, and Maister Henry Ratcliffe his sonne were comming towardes her: whereupon by speedie counsell it was there concluded, that the Duke of Suffolke with certaine other noblemen, shoulde go towards the ladie Mary, to fetch hir vp to the tower: this was first determined: but by night of the same date, the said voiage of the Duke of Suffolke was cleane dissolued by the speciall meanes of the lady Iane his daughter, who taking the matter heauilie, with weeping teares made request to the whole councell, that hir father might tarry at home in her company: whereupon the counsell perswaded with the duke of Northumberland, to take that voiage vpon him, saying, that no man was so fit therfore, because that he had atchieued the victory in Norffolk once already, and was therfore so feared, that none durst once lift vp their weapon against him: besides that, he was the best man of warre in the realme, as wel for the ordering of his campes and souldiers both in battell and in their tentes, as also by experience, knowledge & wisedome, he could both animate his army with witty perswasions, & also pacify and alay his enimies pride with his stout courage, or else to disswade them if need were, from their enterprise. Finally said they, this is the short and long, the Queene will in no wise grant, that her father shall take it vpon him: therefore (quoth they) we think it good, if it may please your grace, it lieth in you to remedy the matter. Well (quoth the duke then) since ye think it good, I and mine will go, not doubting of your fidelity to the queens maiestie which I leaue in your custody: So that night he sent for both lordes, knightes and other that should go with him, and caused all things to bee prepared accordinglie: then went the counsell in to the ladie Iane, and tolde her of their conclusion, who humbly thanked the Duke for reserving her father at home, and beseeched him to vse his diligence, whereto he answered, that he would do what in him laie.

The morrow following, great preparation was made, the D. earely in the morning called for his owne harnesse, and sawe it made readie at Durham place, where he appointed all his retinue to meete.

The same day carts were laden with munition and artillery, and fielde peeces were set forward.

The same forenoon the duke moued effsones the counsell to send their powers after him, as it was before determined, ỳ same to meet with him at New Market, and they promised they would. He said further to some of them: My lordes, I and these other noble personages, with the whole army that nowe go forth, as well for the behalfe of you and yours, as for the establishing of the K. highnes, shall not onelie aduenture our bodies and liues amongst the bloudie strokes and cruell assaults of our aduersaries in the open fields, but also we do leaue the conseruation of our selues, children, and families at home here with you, as altogither committed to your truth and fidelities, whom, if we thought ye woulde through malice, conspiracy, or dissention leaue vs your friendes in the briers and betraie vs, wee coulde as well sundry waies foresee and prouide for our owne safegardes, as anie of you, by betraying vs, can doe for yours. But nowe vpon the onelie trust and faithfulnes of your honors, whereof wee thinke our selues most assured, wee do hazarde our liues, which trust and promise if yee shall violate, hoping thereby of life and promotion, yet shall not God countpt you innocent of our bloods, neither acquite you of the sacred and holie oth of allegeance made frelie by you to this vertuous lady the quenes highnesse, who by your and our enticement, is rather of force placed therein, than by her owne seeking and request. Consider also, that Gods cause, which is the preferment of his worde, and feare of papistes entraunce, hath beene (as yee haue heere before alwaies saide) the originall ground whereupon ye euen at the first motion graunted your good willes and consentes thereunto, as by your handes writing appeareth: and thinke not the contrarie, but if ye meane deceyte, though not forthwith, yet hereafter God will reuenge the same. Duke of Northumberland sent against the lady Mary, his words to the Lordes.

I can saie no more, but in this troublesome time wish you to vse constant hearts, abandoning all malice, enuie, and priuate affections: and therewith all the first course for the lords came vp, wherefore the duke shut vp his talke with these wordes; I haue not spoken to you in this sort vpon anie mistrust I haue of your truthes, of which alwaies I haue euer hitherto conceiued a trustie confidence, but I haue put you in remembrance thereof, what chance of variance soeuer might grow amongst you in mine absence, and this I praie you, wish mee not woorse good speede in this iourney, than yee woulde haue to your selues. My lord, saith one of them, if ye mistrust any of vs in this matter, your grace is far deceiued, for which of vs can wash his hands cleane thereof? and if we should shrinke from you as from one that were culpable, which of vs can excuse himselfe to be guiltles? therefore herein your doubt is too far cast, I pray god it be (quoth the duke) let vs go to dinner: and so they sate down. After dinner the duke went in to the M. where his commission was by that time sealed, for his lieutenantshippe of the army, and then toke his leaue of hir, and so did certaine other lords also.

Then as the Duke came through the counsell chamber, hee tooke his leaue of the Earle of Arundell, who praied God bee with his grace, saying, he was sorie it was not his chance to go with him, and beare him companie, in whose presence he could find in his heart to spend his bloude, euen at his feete: then the earle of Arundell tooke Thomas Louell the Dukes boie by the hande, and saide, farewell gentle Thomas with all my heart. Then the duke, with the L. Marques of Northampton, the L. Grey, and diuers other, tooke their barge, and went to Durham place, and to White hall, where that night they mustered their men: and the next daie in the morning, the Duke departed with the number of 600. men, or thereabouts. And as they rode thorough Shorditch, saith the duke to the Lorde Grey, the people preste to see vs, but not one saieth God spede vs.

The same day sir Iohn Gates and other went out after the duke.

By this time word was brought to the tower, that the Lady Mary was fled to Flamingham castle in Suffolke; where the people of the countrey almost wholy resorted to hir; and that William L. Windsor, sir Edward Hastings, Sir Edmond Pecham with others, were proclaiming Quæne Mary in Buckinghamshire, sir Io. Williams in Orfordshire, &c.

About this time, fiue Ships well manned, that were appointed to lie before Yarmouth, and to haue taken the ladie Mary if she had fled that waie, were by force of weather driuen into the Hauen, where one Maister Iernigham was raising power on the Ladie Maries behalfe, who hearing thereof, came thither, whereupon the captaines tooke a boate and went to the ships, but the Sailers and Souldiers asked Maister Iernigham what he would haue, and whether he would haue their Captaines or no? and he said yea: marie said they, ye shall haue them, or we will throwe them into the bottome of the Sea, but the Captaines sayde forthwith, that they woulde serue Quæne Marie willingly, and so brought forth their men, and conueied with them their great Ordinance: Of the comming of these Shippes the ladie Marie was woonderfull ioyous, and afterwarde doubted little the Dukes puissance: but when newes thereof was brought to the Tower, each man there beganne to draw backward, and ouer that, word of a greater mischiefe was brought to the Tower, that is to saie, that the Noblemens tenantes refused to serue their lords against quæne Marie.

The duke thought long for his succors, and wrote somewhat sharpelie to the counsell at the tower in that behalfe, as well for lacke of men as of munition, but a slender answere had he againe: And from that time forward certaine of the counsell, to wit, the earle of Pembroke, and sir Th. Cheyney lord Warden, and other, sought to get out of the Tower to consult in London, but coulde not yet.

The 16. of July, being Sunday, doctor Ridley Bishop of London, by commandement of the counsel preached at Pauls crosse, where he vehementlie perswaded the people in the title of the ladie Iane, late proclaimed Q. and inueied earnestly against the title of lady Marie, &c.

The same 16. of July, the lorde Treasurer was gone out of the tower to his house in London at night, and forthwith about 7. of the clocke the gates of the tower vpon a sodain were shut vp, and the keies born vp to the lady Iane, which was for feare of some packing in the L. treasurer, but he was fetched again to the tower, about 12. of the clocke in the night.

The 18. day, the D. perceiuing that the succors promised came not to him, and also receiuing from some of the counsel letters of discomfort, hee returned from Bury backe againe to Cambridge.

The 19. of Julie, the Councell, partlie moued with the right of the ladie Maries cause, partlie considering, that the most of the realme was wholy bent on her side, chaunged their mindes, and assembled themselues at Bainardes castle, where they communed with the Earle of Pembrooke: And the earle of Shrewsburie, with Sir Iohn Mason Cleark of the Councell, spake to the lorde Maior secretlie, that he with the Sheriffes and such other of the Aldermen with the Recorder, as he thought best, to méte him and the Councell at Bainardes Castle, within lesse than an houre: which they did, where the councell declared to the lorde Maior and his brethren, that hee and they must ride with them into Cheape to proclaime a newe Quéene, which was the ladie Maries grace, daughter to King Henry the eight; and they riding from thence to Paules Church-yarde, and into Cheape, the people were so assembled, that the Lordes coulde not ride by them to the Crosse, where Maister Gartar king at armes in his rich Coate of armes, with a Trumpet beeing readie, the Trumpet was sounded, and then they proclaimed the ladie Mary, Daughter to King Henry the eight and Queene Katherine, Queene of England, Fraunce, and Irelande, defender of the faith, &c. Which Proclaimation ended, the Lorde Maior, and all the Counsell rode to Paules Church, where the Canticle of Te Deum was soung. And the same night the Earle of Arundell, and the Lorde Paget, rode in Poste to Queene Mary with thirtie horse with them.

The councell assembled at Bainards castle.

Lady Mary proclaimed Queene.

The 20. of Julie, Iohn Duke of Northumberlande, beeing then in Cambridge, and hauing sure knowledge, that the ladie Mary was by the Nobilitie and others of the Counsell remaining at London proclaimed Queene; about fiue of the clocke the same night, he with such other of the nobilitie as were in his companie, came to the market crosse of the towne, and calling for an Herault, himselfe proclaimed quæne Mary, and among other he threwe vppe his owne cappe, and within an houre after he had letters from the counsell, by the handes of Richard Rose herault: Dated at Westminster the 20. of June in forme following.

Duke of Northumberland proclaimed Q. Mary at Cambridge.

In the name of our Soueraigne Lady Mary the Quæne to bee declared to the duke of Northumberland, and all other of his band of what degrée soeuer they be.

Yée shall command and charge in the Quéenes highnesse name, the saide Duke to disarme himselfe, and to cease all his men of war: and to suffer no part of his armie to doe any villanie, or any thing contrary to the peace: and himselfe to forbeare his comming to this citie vntill the Quéenes pleasure be expressedly declared vnto him. And if he will shewe himselfe like a good quiet subiect, we will then continue as wee haue begunne, as humble suters to our soueraigne lady the Quenes highnesse for him and his, as for our selues. And if he do not, we will not faile to spend our liues in subduing him and his.

Item, yée shall declare the like matter to the Marquesse of Northampton, and all other noble men and gentlemen, and to all men of war being with anie of them.

Item, yee shall in all places where yée come, notifie it, If the Duke of Northumberland do not submit himselfe to the Quénes highnesse, Quéne Marie, he shall be accepted as a traytour. And all we of the nobilitie that were counsellers to the late king, will to the vttermost portion, persecute him and his to their vtter confusion. Thom. Cant. archbishop, Thomas Elie Chancelor, Will. Winchester Marquesse, I. Bedforde Earle, H. Suffolke duke, F. Shrewsburie Earle, W. Penbrough Earle, Thomas Darcy Lorde Chamberlaine, R. Cotton, W. Peter secretarie, W. Cecill second secretarie, I. C. I. Baker Chancelor of the tenths, I. Mason master of requests, R. Bowes master of the Rols.

Duke of Northumberland arrested.

The rumour of these letters was no sooner abroad, but euery man departed. And shortly after, the Duke was arrested in the Kings College by one master Slegge, Sergeant at armes. At the last letters were brought from the counsell at London, that all men should go each his way: Whereupon the Duke said to them that kept him, Yée doe me wrong to withdraw my libertie, sée yée not the Counsels letters without exception, that all men should go whither they woulde? At which wordes, they that kept him and the other Noble men, set them at libertie, and so continued they for that night, insomuch, that the Earle of Warwike was readie in the morning to haue rode awaie, but then came the Earle of Arundale from the quéene to the Duke into his Chamber, who went out to méete him, and as soone as hee sawe the Earle of Arundale, hee fell on his knées, and desired him to be good to him, for the loue of God, consider (saieth hee) I haue done nothing but by the consents of you and all the whole Counsell: My Lord (quoth the Earle of Arundell) I am sent hither by the Quénes maiestie, and in her name I doe arrest you: and I obey it my Lord (quoth he) I beseech you my Lorde of Arundell (quoth the Duke) vse mercie towardes mee, knowing the case as it is: my Lorde (quoth the Earle) yée should haue sought for mercie sooner, I must doe according to my commandement, and therewith he committed the charge of him, and of other to the guard and gentlemen that stoode by.

The

The 25. of July, the Duke with other were brought vp to the Tower of London, vnder the conduct of Henry Earle of Arundale, with a great number of light horse-men, bowes and speares, they came into London at bishops gate, all the strætes as he passed by standing with men, in harnesse afore euery mans doore, till hee came to the Tower wharfe: the prisoners names that came in at that time, were the Duke of Northumberlande, the Earle of Warwike, the Earle of Huntingdon, the lorde Hastings, lorde Ambrose Dudley, lorde Henrie Dudley, sir Andrewe Dudley, sir John Gates, Henrie Gates, sir Thomas Palmer, doctor Sands, but when they came to the Tower, the Earle of Arundell discharged the lorde Hastings, and had him awaie with him. Duke of Northumberland brought to the Tower.

On the fire and twentith, the lord Marquesse of Northampton, the bishop of London, the lorde Robert Dudley, and sir Robert Corbet were brought from the Quænes campe into the Tower. And thus was the matter ended without bloudshed, which men feared would haue brought the death of many thousands.

Queene Mary.

MAry, the eldest daughter of king Henrie the eight, began her raigne the first of July, in the yeare 1553. when she dissolued her campe at Framingham, which was to the number of 13000. men, the Earle of Sussex being lieutenant of the armie: victuals were of such plentie, that a barrell of beere was solde for fiue pence with the caske, and foure great loaues of bread for a penny. An. reg. 1.

The 27. of July, sir Roger Cholmely lorde chiefe Iustice of the kings bench, sir Edmond Mountague lord chiefe iustice of the common place, were sent to the Tower, on the next morrow Henry duke of Suffolke, and sir Iohn Cheeke were had to the Tower.

On the 30. of July, the lady Elizabeth sister to the Quæne, rode from her place at Strand, (where she had lien the night before) through the citty of London, out at Aldgate toward the Quæne, accompanied with 1000. horse, of knights, ladies, gentlemen and their seruants.

On the 31. of July, the duke of Suffolke was discharged out of the tower, by the earle of Arundell, and had the quænes pardon.

Quæne Mary came from Wansted in Essex, to London on the 3. of August, being brought in with her nobles very honorably, and strongly, the number of veluet coats that did ride before her, as well strangers as others were 740. and the number of ladies and gentlewomen that followed, was 180. The earle of Arundale riding next before her, bare a sworde in his hand, and sir Anthony Browne did beare vp her traine. The lady Elizabeth her sister followed lowed her next, and after her the lord marquesse of Excesters wife. The garde followed the ladies, and after them Northamptonshire and Oxfordshire men, and then Buckinghamshire men, and after them the lords seruants: the whole number of horse-men were estéemed to bee about 1000. The Quéene staied without Aldgate, before the stage, whereon the poore children of the hospitall were placed, and one of them made to her an Oration. Sir George Barnes then lord Maior, with the Aldermen, brought her into the citie, the lord Maior riding next to the earle of Arundale, with a Scepter or mace in his hand. A great peale of ordinance was shotte off at the Tower of London, when the Quéene entered the Citie through Aldgate, vp to Leaden hall, then downe Grace stréete, Fanchurch stréete, Parke lane, Tower stréete, and so into the Tower, where Thomas duke of Norfolke, doctor Gardener late Bishoppe of Winchester, Edward Courtney sonne and heire to Henry marquesse of Excester, the Dutchesse of Somerset, prisoners in the Tower, knæling on the hill within the same tower, saluted her grace, and she came to them and kissed them, & said, these be my prisoners. On the next morrow, Edward Courtney was made marquesse of Excester, and the other forenamed prisoners pardoned, and discharged in the Quænes chamber.

The 5. of August, Edmond Bonner late Bishop of London, prisoner in the Marshalsea, and Cutbert Tonstall the olde bishop of Durham prisoner in the Kings bench, had their pardons, and were restored to their Seas. Shortlie after all the Bishops which had béene deprined in the time of king Edward the first, were restored to their Bishoprickes, and the other which were placed in king Edwards time, remoued: also all beneficed men that were married, or would not forsake their opinion, were put out of their liuings, & other known to be of the contrarie part, were set in the same, especially if any were aliue, that had of late béene put out of the same, as bishop Daie of Chichester, Heath of Worcester, &c.

Bishops restored and other displaced.

Sir Nicholas Hare maister of the Rols, was made képer of the great seale, for the space of a fortnight or thereabout.

The 9. of August, in the afternoone, the Quæne helde an Obsequie in the tower for king Edward, the dirge being sung in Latin, and on the morrowe a masse of Requiem, whereat the Quæne with her ladies offered. The same daie the corpes of king Edward was buried at Westminster, the lord Treasurer, the Earle of Pembroke, and the Earle of Shrewsburie being chiefe mourners, with diuers other noble men and other. Doctor Daie Bishop of Chichester preached at the said buriall, and all the seruice with a Communion was in English.

The 11. of August, certaine gentlemen minding to passe vnder London bridge in a wherrie, were there ouerturned, and 7. of them drowned, one was maister T. Bridges sonne.

Men drowned at London bridge.

The 13. of August, maister Bourne a Chanon of Paules preaching at Paules crosse, not onely praied for the dead, but also declared, that Doctor Bonner bishop of London (late restored, and there in presence) for a sermon by him made in the same place, vpon the same Gospell, was about foure yéeres since, vniustlie cast into the vile Prison of the Marshalsea, and there kept during the raigne of king Edward: which saying so offended some of the audience, that they breaking silence, said the bishop had preached abhomination, other some cried (meaning of the preacher) pull him out, pull him out, and some being nére the pulpit, began to clime, wherewith the preacher stepped backe, and one Maister Bradford a Preacher of King Edwards time, stepped into his place, and gentlie preswaded the audience to quietnes and obedience, alleadging S. Paul to the Romains: Let euery soule submit himselfe to the authoritie of the higher powers, &c. Neuertheles maister Bourne standing by Maister Bradford, one threw a dagger at him, which hit a side post of the pulpit, and rebounded back again a great way, whereupon M. Bradford brake off his speech, and forced himselfe with the helpe of Io. Rogers another Preacher, to conuey M. Bourne out of the audience, which with great labor they brought into Pauls Schoole.

The 18. of August, Iohn Dudley Duke of Northumberlande, William Parre Marques of Northampton, and Iohn earle of Warwike son and heire to the duke, were arraigned at Westminster hall, before Thomas D. of Norffolke, high steward of England, where the duke of Northumberland with great reuerence towards the iudges, protested his faith and alleageance to the queen, whome he confessed grieuously to haue offended, and said, that he meant not to speake any thing in defence of his fact, but requested to vnderstande the opinion of the court in two points. First, whether a man doing any act by authoritie of the princes councell and by warrant of the great seale of England, and doing nothing without the same, might bee charged with treason for anie thing which he might do by warrant thereof. Secondly, whether any such persons as were equally culpable in that crime, and those, by whose letters and commandements he was directed in all his doings, might be his iudges, or passe vpon his tryall as his Péeres.

Duke of Northumberland and other arraigned.

Whereunto was answered, that as concerning the first, the great Seale (which he laid for his warrant) was not the seale of the lawfull Queene of the realme, nor passed by authoritie, but the seale of an vsurper, and therefore could bee no warrant to him. As to the second, it was alledged, that if any were as deeply to be touched in that case as himselfe, yet so long as no attaindor were of record against them, they were neuertheles persons able in law to passe vpon any triall, and not to be chalenged therefore, but at the princes pleasure. After which answere, the Duke vsed few words, but confessed the inditement, by whose example the other prisoners arraigned with him did the like, and thereupon had iudgement.

And when iudgement was giuen the duke saide, I beseech you my lordes, all to be humble suters to the M. maiestie, and to grant mee foure requestes, which are these. First, that I maie haue that death which noble men haue had in times past, and not the other. Secondlie, that her Maiestie will bee gratious to my children, which maie hereafter do good seruice, considering, that they went by my commandement, who am their father, and not of their own free willes. Thirdly, that I maie haue appointed to mee some learned man for for the instruction and quiet of my conscience. And fourthlie, that thee will send two of the counsell, to commune with mee, to whome I will declare such matters as shall be expedient for her and the common weale: and thus I beseech you all to pray for me.

On the nineteenth of August were arraigned at Westminster, Sir Iohn Gates, Sir Henry Gates, Sir Andrew Dudley, and sir Thomas Palmer, where without anie quest they pleaded guiltie, and submitted themselues to the Queenes mercie, and so hadde iudgement.

The twentieth of August, Doctor Watson, Chaplaine to the Bysshoppe of Winchester preached at Paules Crosse, by the Quenes appointment, and for feare of the like tumult, as had beene the Sundaie last past, certain lordes of the Counsell repaired to the Sermon, as the Lorde Treasurer, the Lorde Priuie Seale, the Earle of Bedforde, the Earle of Pembrooke, the Lorde Wentworth, the Lord Rich, and Sir Henrie Gernigam captaine of the gard, with 200. of the guard, which stode about the Preacher with halberts. Also the Maior had warned the companies of the citie to be present in their liueries, which was well accepted of the Quenes counsell, and the Sermon was quietlie ended.

The twentie two of August, Sir Iohn Gage Lieuetenant of the Tower, deliuered to the Shyriffes of London, by Indenture these prisoners following: first Sir Iohn Gates was brought foorth, and set at the Garden Gate, then the Duke of Northumberlande, was likewise brought foorth, and Sir Thomas Palmer after him: When the Duke and Sir Iohn Gates mette, Sir Iohn saieth the Duke, God haue mercie vpon vs, for this daie shall ende both our liues, and I praie you forgiue mee what soeuer I haue offended, and I forgiue you with all my heart, although you and your counsell was a great occasion hereof: Well my Lorde quoth Sir Iohn Gates, I forgiue you, as I woulde bee forgiuen, and yet you and your authoritie was the originall cause of all together, but the Lorde pardon you, and I praie you forgiue me. So either making obeisance to other, the Duke proceeded, and when he came vpon the Scaffolde, hee putting off his Gowne of Crane coloured Damaske, leaned vpon the East Raile, and saide to the people: Good people, all you that be heere present to see mee die, though my death bee odious, and horrible to the flesh, yet I praie you iudge the best in Gods workes, for hee doth all for the best. And as for mee, I am a wretched sinner, and haue deserued to die, and most iustlie am condemned to die by lawe. And yet this Acte wherfore I die, was not altogether of mee (as it is thought) but I was procured and induced thereunto by other, I was, I saie induced thereunto by other: Howbeit, God forbidde that I shoulde name anie man vnto you, I will name no man vnto you, and therefore I beseech you looke not for it. I for my part forgiue all men, and praie God also to forgiue them. And if I haue offended any of you heere, I praie you and all the worlde to forgiue mee; and most chiefelie I desire forgiuenesse of the queenes highnesse, whome I haue most greeuouslie offended. And I praie you all to witnesse with mee, that I depart in perfect loue and charitie with all the worlde, and that you will assist me with your praiers prayers at the houre of death. The rest of his speech almost in euerie point, was the like as hee hadde saide in the Chappell of the Tower, in the date before, saying, when hee hadde made confession of his beleefe, hee hadde these wordes. And heere I doe protest vnto you good people, moste earnestlie, euen from the bottome of my heart, that this which I haue spoken is of my selfe, not beeing required nor moued thereunto by any man, nor for any flatterie, or hope of life, and I take witnesse of my Lorde of Worcester heere, mine olde friende and Ghostlie father, that hee founde mee in this minde and opinion, when hee came to mee; but I haue declared this onelie vpon mine owne minde and affection, and for the zeale and loue that I beare to my naturall Countreie. I coulde good people rehearse much more euen by experience that I haue of this euill that is happened to this Realme by these occasions, but you knowe I haue an other thing to doe, whereunto I must prepare mee, for the time draweth awaie. And now I beseech the Queenes highnes to forgiue mee mine offences against her Maiestie, whereof I haue a singular hope, for as much, as she hath alreadie extended her goodnesse and clemencie so farre vpon mee, that where as shee might forthwith, without iudgement or anie further tryall, haue put mee to most vile and cruell death, by hanging, drawing, and quartering, for as much as I was in the field in armes against her highnesse, her Maiestie neuertheless of her most mercifull goodnes suffered me to be brought to my iudgement, and to haue my triall by law, where I was most iustlie and worthilie condemned. And her highnesse hath now also extended her mercie and clemencie vpon mee, for the manner and kinde of my death. And therefore my hope is, that her grace of her goodnesse will remit all the rest of her indignation and displeasure towardes mee, which I beseech you all most heartilie to praie for, and that it maie please God long to preserue her Maiestie to raigne ouer you in much honour and felicitie. After hee had thus spoken he kneeled downe, saying to them that were about him; I beseech you all to beare me witnesse that I die in the true Catholike faith, and then saide the Psalmes of (Miserere and De profundis, his Pater noster, and five of the first Verses of the Psalme, In te Domine speraui, ending with this verse; Into thy handes O Lorde I commend my spirite; and when hee had thus finished his prayers, the executioner asked him forgiuenesse, to whome hee sayde: I forgiue thee with all my heart, and doe thy parte without feare. And bowing towarde the Blocke, hee saide, I haue deserued a thousande deathes, layde his heade vpon the Blocke and so was beheaded. Whose bodie with the heade was buried in the Tower, by the bodie of Edwarde late Duke of Somerset, so that there lieth before the high Altar, in S. Peters church two dukes, betweene two queenes, to wit, the duke of Somerset, and the duke of Northumberland, betweene quéene Anne, and quéene Katherine, all foure beheaded.

At the same time and place also, was likewise beheaded Sir Iohn Gates, and Sir Thomas Palmer, which Sir Iohn Gates in that place vsed these or like wordes. all the dates of my life as any man hath don in the world. I was the greatest reader of scripture that might be of a man of my degree: And a worse follower thereof not liuing: for I did not read to the intent to be edified thereby, nor to seeke the glory of God: but contrariwise, arrogantlie, to bee seditious, and to dispute thereof, and priuatelie to interpret it after my owne braine and affection. Wherefore good people I exhort you all to beware howe, and after what sort you come to read Gods holie word; for it is not a trifle, or playing game to deale with Gods holie mysteries: stand not too much in your own conceits, for like as the bee of one flower doth gather honie, and the spider poison of the same, euen so you, except you humblie submit your selues to God, and charitablie reade the same to the intent to bee edified thereby, it is to you as poison, and worse: and it were better for to let it alone. And then after hee had asked the Quenes highnes forgiuenes, and all the world; he desired the people of their charitie to praie vnto God with him for remission of his sinnes, and then refusing the kerchiefe laide downe his heade, which was stricken off at three blowes. Sir Thomas Palmer, as soone as he came to the scaffold, tooke euery man by the hand, and desired them to pray for him; then putting off his gown, hee leaned vpon the East Rayle, and saide these wordes in effect: My Maisters (quoth hee) God saue you all: it is not vnknowne vnto you wherefore I come hither, which I haue woorthilie well deserued at Gods handes, for I know it to be his diuine ordinance, by this meanes to call mee to his mercie, and to teach mee to know my selfe, what I am, and whereunto we are all subiect: I thanke his mercifull goodnes, for he hath caused me to learne more in one little darke corner in yonder Tower, than euer I learned by any trauell in so many places as I haue bin, for there (I say) I haue seen God, what he is, & how vnsearcheable his wonderous woorks are, and how infinit his mercies be; I haue seene there my selfe throughly, and what I am, nothing but a lumpe of sin, earth, dust, and of all vilenes most vilest; I haue seen there and know what the world is, how vaine, deceitfull, transitorie, and short it is, how wicked and loathsome the woorks thereof are in the sight of Gods maiesty, how he neither regardeth the manaces of the proud men and mighty ones, neither despiseth the humblenes of the poore and lowly which are in the same world. Finallie, I haue seene there what death is, how neere hanging ouer euery mans head, and yet how vncertaine the time, and how vnknowne to all men, and how little it is to be feared; and should I feare death? or be sad therefore? haue I not seene two die before mine eies? Yes, and within the hearing of mine eares? No, neither the sprinkling of the blood, or the sheading thereof, nor the bloody Axe it selfe shall make me afraid; and now taking my leaue to the same, I pray you all to pray for me: come on good fellow (quoth he) art thou hee that must do the deed? I forgiue thee with all my hart, and then kneeling down, laying his head on the blocke, said, I will see how neat the blocke is for my necke, I praie thee strike not yet, for I haue a few praiers to saie, and that done, strike on Gods name, good leaue haue thou, his praiers ended, and desiring each man to praie for him, hee laid downe his heade againe, and so the executioner tooke it from him at one stroke.

The 12. of September the Quéene remoued to S. James.

The 14. and 15. of September master Latimer and doctor Cranmer archbishop of Canterbury were sent to the tower of London.

The 27. of September, Q. Mary came to the tower by water, accompanied with the Lady Elizabeth her sister, and other ladies, before whose arriuall was shot a great peale of guns.

The last of September, Quéene Mary rode through the Citie of London towards Westminster, sitting in a chariot of cloth of tissue drawen with fiue horses, all trapped with the like cloth of tissue. She sate in a gowne of purple veluet furred with powdered ermine, hauing on her head a caule of cloth of tinsell, beset with pearle and stone, and aboue the same vpon her head, a round circlet of gold beset so richly with pretious stones, that the value therof was inestimable, the same caule and circlet being so massie and ponderous, that she was faine to beare vp her head with her hand, and the canapy was borne ouer her chariot. Before her rode a number of gentlemen and knights, then iudges, then doctors, then bishops, then lords, then the councell: after whome followed the knights of the Bathe, thirteene in number, in their robes, the bishop of Winchester lord Chancelor, and the marquesse of Winchester lorde high treasurer, nert came the duke of Norfolke, and after him the Earle of Oxforde, who bare the sword before her, the maior of London in a gowne of crimosin veluet bare the scepter of gold, &c. after the Quéenes chariot, sir Edward Hastings led her horse in his hand: then came an other chariot, hauing a couering all of cloth of siluer all white, and fiue horses trapped with the like, therein sate the lady Elizabeth and the lady Anne of Cleue, then Ladies and Gentlewomen riding on horses trapped with red velure, and their gownes and kirtles likewise of red velure: after them followed two other chariots Coronation.

couered with red sattin, and the horses betrapped with the same, and certaine gentlewomen betweene euery of the saide chariots riding in crimosin sattin, their horses betrapped with the same, the number of the gentlewomen so riding were 46. besides them in the chariots. At Fanchurch was a costly pageant made by the Genowayes: at Grace-church corner there was another pageant made by the Easterlings. At the vpper ende of Grace-streete there was an other pageant made by the Florentines verie high, on the top whereof there stode foure pictures, and in the midst of them and most highest, there stode an angell all in greene, with a trumpet in his hand, and when the trumpetter who stode secretly in the pageant did sound his trumpe, the angell did put his trumpe to his mouth, as though it had beene the same that had sounded, to the great maruelling of many ignorant persons: this pageant was made with three thorow fares or gates, &c. The conduit in Cornehil ran wine, and beneath the conduit a pageant made at the charges of the citie, and another at the great conduit in Cheape, and a fountaine by it running wine. The standart in Cheape newe painted, with the waites of the Citie aloft thereof playing. The crosse in Cheape new washed and burnished. One other pageant at the little conduit in Cheape next to Paules made by the Citie, where the aldermen stode: and when the Quéene came against them, the Recorder made a short proposition to her, and then the chamberlaine presented to her in the name of the maior and the city, a purse of cloth of gold, and 1000. marks of gold in it: then she rode forth, and in Paules churchyard against the schole, one Master Haywod sate in a pageant vnder a vine, and made to her an oration in Latine and English. Then was there one Peter a Dutch man stode on the weathercocke of Paules steeple, holding a streamer in his hand of fiue yardes long, and wauing thereof, stode sometime on the one sote, and shoke the other, and then kneeled on his knées, to the great maruell of all people. He had made two scaffoldes vnder him, one aboue the crosse, hauing torches and streamers set on it, and one other ouer the bole of the crosse, likewise set with streamers and torches, which could not burne the winde was so great: the said Peter had sirteene pound thirteene shillings and foure pence giuen him by the citie for his costs and paines, and all his stuffe. Then was there a pageant made against the deane of Paules gate, where the queristers of Pauls plaied on vials, and song. Ludgate was newly repaired, painted, and richlie hanged, with minstrels playing and singing there: then was there an other pageant at the conduct in Fléete streete, and the Temple barre was newly painted and hanged. And thus shee passed to White hall at Westminster, where shée toke her leaue of the lord maior, giuing him great thankes for his paines, and the Citie for their cost. On the morrow, which was the first daie of October: the Quéene went by water to the olde palace, and there remained till about eleuen of the cloche, and then went on sote vpon blew cloth, being railed on either side vnto Saint Peters Church, where shée was solemnelie crowned and annointed by the Bishop of Winchester, which coronation and other ceremonies and solemnities then vsed according to the olde custome, was not fully ended till it was nigh foure of the clocke at night that shée returned turned from the Church, before whom was then borne three swords sheathed, and one naked. The great service that day done in Westminster hall at dinner by diuers noble men, would aske long time to write. The Lorde maior of London and twelue citizens kept the high cupbord of plate as butlers, and the Quéene gaue to the Maior for his fée a cup of golde with a couer waying seuentéene ounces.

The 5. of October, the parliament began at Westminster, sir Iohn Yorke, and Henry Dudley, were deliuered out of the Tower. Parliament.

The 25. day of October, the Barge of Grauesende, a Catch running vpon her, was ouerturned, and foureténe persons drowned, and sixtéene saued by swimming. Grauesend Barge ouerturned.

Cardinall Poole, who had long time bene forth from this realme, and now in great estimation in the court of Rome, was sent for by Quéene Mary to returne into his countrey of England. Cardinall Poole.

The 3. of Nouember, the weathercocke of Paules was set vp, which cocke wayed forty pound, his length from the bill to the taile was foure foote, and his breadth ouer the wings three foote and a halfe, the which cocke being of copper, was ouer gilt. Weathercock of Paules.

The thirteenth of Nouember, Doctor Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, Ladie Iane that was before proclaimed Quéene, and the lorde Guilford her husband, and the Lorde Ambrose Dudley, were arraigned at the Guild hall of London, and condemned of treason: sir Henry Gates was deliuered out of the Tower.

The Parliament was dissolued on the first of December. And on the one and twentith of December, began throughout England the Church service to be done in Latin, as was enacted by the last Parliament, and as the same had béen left in the last yéere of K. Henry the eight. The Lady Iane had the liberty of the Tower, to walke in the Quéenes Garden and on the hill. The Lorde Ambrose Dudley, and the Lorde Gilford Dudley, had the liberties of the ports where they were lodged: the Marquesse of Northampton had his pardon and was deliuered. Latin seruice in the church.

In the beginning of the month of January, the Emperor sent a noble man called Edmond, and certaine other Ambassadors into England to conclude a marriage betwéene K. Philip his son, and Quéene Mary of England. 1554

The 14. of January, doctor Stephen Gardener bishop of Winchester, Lord Chancelor of England, in the chamber of presence at Westminster, made to the Lords, Nobility, and Gentlemen, an Oration very eloquent, wherein he declared that the Quéenes Maiestie, partly for amity, and other waighty considerations had, after much suite on the Emperors and Prince of Spaines behalfe made, determined by the consent of the Counsell and Nobilitie, to match her selfe with the saide Prince in most godly and lawfull matrimonie: and declared further, that she should haue for her ioynter 30000. duckets by the yéere, with all the low-countrey of Flanders, and that the issue (if there happened any) betwéene them two lawfully begotten, should be heire as wel to the Kingdome of Spaine, as also to the said low-countrey. Wherfore that they were all bound to thanke God that so noble, worthy, and famous a Prince would vouchsafe so to humble himselfe, as in this marriage to take vpon him rather as a subiect, than otherwise, for the Quéene and her councell should rule all things as she did before, and that there should be of the councel no Stranger, neither to haue the custody of any forts, or Castles, &c. nor beare any rule or office in the quénes house, or else-where in all England, with diuers other articles there by him rehearsed, wherefore he said the quéns pleasure and request was, that like good subiects for her sake, they would most louingly receiue him with reuerence, ioy and honor.

The next day, the Lord maior of London, with his brethren the aldermen, were sent for to the court, and to bring with them fortie of the head commoners of the citie, vnto whom before the councell, the lord chancelor made the like oration, desiring them to behaue themselues like good subiectes with all humblenes and reioycing.

Robert Dudley sonne to the late duke of Northumberland, was arraigned at the Guild hall of London of high treason, he confessed the inditement, and had iudgement giuen by the earle of Suffer, to be drawne, hanged, bowelled and quartered.

Within fiue daies after, there was worde brought to the court, how that sir Peter Carow, sir Gawine Carow, sir Thomas Deny with diuers other, were vp in Deuonthire, in the resisting of the king of Spaines comming hither, and that they had taken the city of Excester, and castle there into their custody.

About the three and twentith or fiue and twentith day of January, sir Iames a Crofts departed from London toward Wales, as it was thought, to haue raised power there.

Conspiracy. The purpose of the Quénes marriage was so grieuously taken of diuers men, that for this & for religion, they in such sort conspired against the quéne, that if the matter had not broken out before the time by them appointed, men thought it would haue brought much trouble and danger.

Commotion in Kent by sir Thom. Wyat. The 25. of Ianuarie, sir Iohn Gage lord Chamberlaine, certified the lorde maior of London, that sir Thomas VVyat with certaine other rebels, were vp in Kent about Maidestone, whereupon great watch was kept, and that night the lord maior rode about to peruse the same, and euery night after two aldermen did the like: in the daytime the gates of the Citie were warded by substantiall citizens.

Ioh. Fridrich Elect. after his release resigned ye Electorate to Augustus

The 26. day of Ianuary was brought into the tower as prisoners, the lord marquesse of Northampton, sir Edward Warner, and other. And the same night there went out certaine of the gard, and other against the Kentish men. And the city of London began to be straightly kept and watched by harnessed men, by the appointment of the lord treasurer, who had the day before sent for the lord maior and aldermen, and giuen them so in charge for safety of the city. And the same day, or rather on the day before, the duke of Norfolke with his power went downe toward Grauesend.

About the which time the lord Burgauenny, by chance, encountred with sir Henry Isle (one of sir Thomas Wyats faction) and slue 2. or 3. of his men, he flying

The 27. of January, the Lorde Treaſurer came to the Guilde hall from the councell, to requeſt the citizens to prepare 500. footemen well harneſſed to go againſt Wyat, which was granted and made readie the ſame night, and on the morrow were deliuered to their captaines, and ſent to Graueſend by water.

The 29. of January, the D. of Norffolke lieutenant of the army, and with him the earle of Arundell, M. Henry Iernigham captaine of the guarde, with a great number of the guard, and other ſouldiers, and the captaine and ſouldiers that were ſent from London, minded to aſſault Rocheſter Caſtle, where Wyat and his people late, ſo that vppon Mundate they were ſet in arraie towardes Rocheſter bridge, which was kept by Wyats companie, and furniſhed with 3. or 4. double canons: but before the ſetting forwarde of theſe men, the D. ſent maſter Nory an Herault vnto Rocheſter, with the D. proclaimation of pardon to all ſuch as would deſiſt from their purpoſe, who comming to the bridge, would haue gone through into the citie, but they that kept the bridge would not ſuffer him till that the captaine came, who at the laſt graunted the ſame to be read in the citie, but holding a dag againſt him, cried, ſpeake ſoftlie, or els they would ſhot him through, ſo that they would not ſuffer the people to heare the Proclaimation: which beeing ended, each man cried they had don nothing wherefore they ſhould need any pardon, and in that quarrel which they had taken in hand, they woulde liue and die: neuertheles, at the laſt Sir George Harpar receiued the pardon outwardly, and being receiued vnder the D. of Norffolks protection, came on forward againſt the Kentiſhmen, and euen as the companie were ſet in a readines, and marched forward toward the bridge, Bret beeing captaine of the 500. Londoners, of which, the more parte were in the foreward, turned himſelfe about, and drawing out his ſword, ſaide theſe or like words: Maſters wee go about to fight againſt our native Countrymen of England and our friends, in a quarrel vnrightful, & partly wicked, for they, conſidering the great miſeries which are like to fall vpon vs, if wee ſhall be vnder the rule of the proude Spaniards or ſtrangers, are here aſſembled to make reſiſtance of their comming, for the auoiding of ſo great inconueniences likely to light, not onely vpon themſelues, but on euerie of vs & the whole realme, wherefore I thinke no Engliſh hart ought to ſay againſt them, much leſſe by fighting to withſtande them: wherefore I and others (meaning ſuch as were in that ranke with him) will ſpend our blod in the quarrel of this worthie captaine M. Wyat, and other gentlemen here aſſembled: which words once pronounced, each man turned their ordinance againſt their followers, and thereupon cried, a Wyat, a Wyat, of which ſodaine noiſe, the Duke, the captaine of the guard and other, beeing abaſhed, fled forthwith: immediatlie came in maſter Wyat and his companie on horſebacke, rushing in amongſt as well the guard as the Londoners, and ſaid, ſo manie as will come and tary with vs ſhall bee welcome, and ſo manie as will depart, god leaue haue they, and ſo all the Londoners, part of the gard, and more than three parts of the retinue, went to the campe of the Kentiſhmen, where they ſtill remained. At this diſcomfiture, the Duke loſt eight Peeces of Braſſe, with all other munition and ordinance, and himselfe with fewe other hardly escaped.

The last of Januarie, Wyat and his companie came to Dertford, and the nert day they came full and whole to Grænwith and Depeford, where they remained thursday, friday, and the forenoone of saterday. On the friday, which was Candlemas day, the most part of the houlholders of London, with the maior and aldermen were in harnesse, yea this daie and other daies the iustices, sergeants at the law, and other lawyers in Westminster hall, pleaded in harnesse.

In this meane time, to wit, on the 25. of Januarie, Henry duke of Suffolk, father to the lady Iane, fleeing into Leicestershire and Warwikeshire with the lord Iohn Grey, and the lord Leonard Grey and a small company in diuers places as he went made proclamation against the quænes marriage with the prince of Spaine, &c. but the people inclined not to him.

The first day of Februarie, proclamation was made at London, that the duke of Suffolke was discomfited, and fled with his two brethren. And also that sir Peter Carow, with his uncle sir Gawine Carow and Gibbes, were fled into France: and further, that the quæne did pardon the whole campe of the Kentishmen, except Wyat, Harpar, Rudstone, and Ifely, and that whosoeuer could take sir Thomas Wyat, except the saide foure persons, should haue an hundred pound lands to him and his heires for euer.

Q. Mary came to the Guild hall in London.

The same day in the afternoone being Candlemas æuen, the commons of the city assembled in their liueries at the Guild hall, whither the quæne with her lordes and ladies came riding from Westminster, and there after vehement words against Wyat, declared, that she meant not otherwise to marry than the councell should thinke both honorable and commodious to the realm, and that she could continue vnmarried, as she had done the greatest part of her age, and therefore willed them truly to assist her, in repressing such as contrary to their duties rebelled. When she had done, vnderstanding that many in London did fauour Wyats part, she appointed lord William Howard lieutenant of the citie, and the earle of Pembroke generall of the fielde, which both prepared all things necessary for their purpose.

Lord William Howard lieutenant of the city.

Wyat came into Southwarke.

In the meane season, to wit, the third daie of Februarie, about three of the clocke in the afternoone, sir Thomas Wyat and the Kentishmen marched forward from Depeford towards London with fiue ancients, being by estimation about two thousand, which their comming so soone as it was perceiued, there was shot off out of the White towre fiue or eight shot, but missed them, sometime shooting ouer, and sometime short. After knowledge thereof once had in London, forthwith the draw bridge was cutte downe, and the bridge gates shut. The maior and sheriffes harnessed, commanded each man to shut in their shops and windowes, and to be readie harnessed at their doores, what chance soeuer might happen. By this time was Wyat entred into Kent street, and so by Saint Georges Church into Southwarke. Himselfe, and part of his companie came in good arrey downe Barmondsey streete, and they were suffred peaceably to enter Southwarke without repulse, or anie stroke stricken, either by the inhabitants, or of any other: yet was there many men of the the countrey in the Innes, raised and brought thither by the lorde William and other, to haue gone against the said VVyat, but they all ioyned themselues to the Gentilshmen, and the inhabitants with their best entertained them. Immediatly vpon the said VVyats comming, he made proclamation, that no souldier should take any thing, but that he should pay for it, and that his comming was to resist the Spanish king. Notwithstanding, forthwith diuers of his companie being Gentlemen (as they saide) went to Winchester place, made hauocke of the Bishops goods, (hee being lorde Chancelor) not onely of his victuals, whereof there was plentie, but whatsoeuer else, not leauing so much as one locke of a dore, but the same was taken off and carried awaie, nor a booke in his gallerie or librarie vncut, or rent into pieces, so that men mought haue gone vp to the knées in leaues of bookes, cut out and throwne vnder foote.

Bishop of Winchesters libzary and other his goods spoyled in Southwarke

At the bridge foote he laid two pieces of ordinance, and began a great trench betweene the bridge and him. He laid one other piece of ordinance at Saint Georges, and one going into Barmondsey streete, and an other toward the bishop of Winchesters house.

On Shroue-tuesday the first of Februarie sir Thomas VVyat remoued out of Southwarke, toward Kingston bridge, which was done vpon this occasion. The night before his departing out of Southwarke, by chance as one of the lieutenants men of the Tower named Thomas Menchen rowed with a sculler ouer-against the Bishop of Winchesters place, there was a waterman of the Tower staires, desired the said lieutenants man to take him in, who did so, which being espied of VVyats men, seuen of them with harquebusses, called to them to land againe, but they would not, whereupon each man discharged their piece, and killed the said water-man, which forthwith falling downe dead, the sculler with much paine rowed through the bridge to the tower wharfe with the lieutenants man, and the dead man in his boate, which thing was no sooner knowen to the lieutenant, but that euen the same night, and the next morning, he bent seauen great pieces of ordinance culuerings, and demie-cannons full against the foote of the bridge, and against Southwarke, and the two steeples of Saint Oliues, and Saint Mary Oueries, besides all the pieces on the white Tower, one culuering on Diueling Tower, and three fauconets ouer the water-gate: which so soone as the inhabitants of Southwarke vnderstood, certaine both men & women came to VVyat in most lamentable wise, saying, Sir, we are all like to be vtterly vndone and destroyed for your sake, our houses shall by and by be throwen downe vpon our heads, to the vtter spoile of this borough, with the shot of the Tower, all readie bent and charged towardes vs, for the loue of God therefore take pittie vpon vs: at which wordes, he being partly abashed stayed a while, and then saide: I praie you my friends be content a while, and I will soone ease you of this mischiefe, for God forbid that you, or the least here should bee killed or hurt in my behalfe. And so in most speedie manner he marched awaie. As he marched towardes Kingstone, he met, by chance a merchant named Christopher Dorell, whom he called, saying, Cousin Dorell, I praie you commende me vnto your citizens the Londoners, and say vnto them from me, that when liberty & frædom was offered them, they would not receiue it, neither would they admit me to enter within their gates, who for their frædome, and the disburthening of their griefes, and oppression by strangers, would haue frankly spent my bloud in that their cause and quarrell, but now well appeareth their vnthankefulnesse to vs their friends which meaneth them so much good, and therefore they are the lesse to be moned hereafter, when the miserable tyranny of strangers shall oppresse them, and so he went forward.

This day about 4. of the clocke in the afternoone he came to Kingston vpon Thamis, ten miles west from London, where finding the bridge to be broken, as a 30. foote or thereabout to be taken away, sauing the postes that were left standing, & the other side kept by 200. men, he caused two peces of ordinance to be planted against them, whereupon they durst not abide: then caused he certaine sailers to swim ouer the Thamis, who losed the westerne barges, which there had bẽ tied, and so brought them ouer, by which meanes he passed the water: it was wonder to see what paines he and others toke, whilest the number of souldiers bayted in the towne, he caused the bridge to be repaired with ladders, plankes, and beames, the same being tied togither with ropes, so as by ten of the clocke in the night, it was in such plight, as both his ordinance, and companies of men might passe ouer without perill. And so about 11. of the clocke, Wyat with his band, without resistance marched towardes London, meaning to haue bene at the court gate before day of the nert morning. They came almost to Brainford or euer they were descried by ỳ quẽns scouts, who there by chance mẽting Bret & his company, Bret said to the scout, backe villaine, if thou go further to discouer any thing here, thou shalt die out of hand, so the scout returned in great haste: but as God would haue it, before he came within fiue miles of the citie, staying vpon a piece of his great ordinance, which was dismounted by breach of the wheles, his comming was discouered, & it was 9. of the clocke of the day following, before he came to Hide parke, as ye shall heare anone. Whilest Wyat and his counsell were deuising how to raise his ordinance dismounted, many of his society slipped from him, among the which, M. Harper was one, who went to the court, and opened al the premises aforesaid, to the M. and counsel, where Wyat was, what had chanced, and what was his intention. The breaking of the said gun was such an hinderance to his enterprise, that all about him were amazed, and at their wits end, because by that means, the houre was broken of appointment, wherefore, Vaughan, Bret, and other apprwued souldiers and counsellers, such as had wise heads in other affaires, as doctor Poinet and other, did counsell the said Wyat to march forwards and kẽpe his appointment, and to let the gun lie, which in no wise he could be perswaded to do. Doctor Poinet therfore, considering how many of his confederacie was stolne away from him, he began to perswade with captaine Bret, and other his friends to shift for themselues, as he would do, and at that very place where the gun did breake, he toke his leaue of his secret friends, and said he would pray vnto God for their good successe, and so did depart, and went into Germany, where he died.

The

The same day in the afternoon, were two men hanged on a gibbet in Pauls churchyard by martiall law, the one Iohn Egerley seruant to the duke of Suffolke, and late sheriffe of Leicester, the other a Baker, one of the white coates sent out of the Citie against Wyat: and the same day came tidings, that the duke with his brethren were taken. Execution in Paules churchyard.

The same day towards night, there was laden 10. or 12. carts with ordinance, as bils, pikes, spears, bowes, arrows, poulder, shot, shouels, mattocks, baskets, and other munitions, 2. culuerings, 1. sacre, 3. faucons, and a fauconet, all which stuffe staied in Paules churchyard.

The same night also about fiue of the clocke, a trumpetter went about, and warned all horsemen and men of armes to be at S. Iames field, and all footemen also to be there by fiue of the clocke in the nexte morning.

The Quenes scout vpon his returne to the court, declared Wyats being at Brainford, which sodaine newes, made all in the court wonderfully afraide, Drummes went through London at foure of the clocke in the morning, commanding all souldiers to armor, and so to Charing crosse.

Wyat hearing that the Earle of Pembroke was come into the fielde, hee staid at Knights bridge vntill day, where his men being very weary with trauell of that night, and the day before, and also partly feebled and faint, hauing receiued small sustenance since their comming out of Southwarke restlesse: There was no smal ado in London, and likewise the Tower made great preparation of defence. By ten of the clocke the earle of Pembroke had set his troupe of horsemen on the hill in the high way aboue the new bridge, ouer against S. Iames: his footmen were set in two battels, somwhat lower, & nearer Charing crosse, at the lane turning downe by the bricke wall from Islington ward, where he had set also certaine other horsemen, and hee had planted his ordinance vpon the hill side. In the meane season, Wyat and his companie planted his ordinance vpon a hill beyond S. Iames, almost ouer against the parke corner, & himselfe after a few words spoken to his soldiers, came down the old lane on foote, hard by the court gate at S Iames, with foure or fiue ancients, his men marching in good array. Cuthberd Vaughan and a two ancients turned downe toward Westminster. The earle of Pembrokes horsmen houered all this while without moouing, vntill all was passed by sauing the taile, vpon which they did set, and cut off: the other marched forward in array, and neuer staid or returned to be aide of their taile: the great ordinance shot off freshly on both sides: Wyats ordinance ouershot the troupe of horsemen. The Quenes ordinance, one piece strake three of Wyats companie in a ranke vpon the heads, and slaying them, strake through the wall into the parke: more harme was not done by the great shot of neither partie. The Quenes whole battaile of footemen standing still, Wyat passed along by the wall towardes Charing crosse, where the said horsmen that were there, set vpon part of them, but was sone forced backe. Wyat in Saint Iames field.

At Charing crosse there stode sir Iohn Gage lorde chamberlaine with the garde, and a number of other, being almost a thousand, the which vpon Wyats comming, shot at his company, but at the last fled to the court gates, which certaine pursued, and forced with shot to shut the Court Gates against them. In this repulse the said lord chamberlain and others were so amazed, that manie cried treason in the court, and had thought that the Earle of Pembroke, who was assaulting the taile of his enemies, hadde gone to Wyat, taking his part against the Quéene: there was running and crying out of Ladies and Gentlewomen, shutting of doores and Windowes, and such a shrieking and noise, as was wonderfull to heare. Wyat with his men marched still forward all along to Temple bar, and so through Fléetstréete till hee came to the Bell Sauage an Inne nigh vnto Ludgate, without resistance, his men going not in anie good order or array. It is saide, that at Strand, certaine of the Lorde treasurers band, to the number of three hundreth men, whereof the lorde Chidioke Powlet his sonne was captaine, met them, and so going on the one side, passed by them on the other side, without anie thing saying to them. Also this is more strange, the said Wyat and his company passed along by a great companie of harnessed men which stood on both sides the stréetes, without anie withstanding them. And as hee marched forward through Fléetstréete most with their swords drawne, some crying, Quéene Mary hath graunted our request, and giuen vs pardon: other said, the Quéene hath pardoned vs. Thus some of Wyats men, some say it was Wyat himselfe, came euen to Ludgate and knocked, calling to come in, saying there was Wyat, whome the quéene had granted to haue their requests, but the lord William Howard stoode at the gate, and saide, auaunt traitor, thou shalt not come in heere. Wyat a while staied, and rested him vppon a Stall ouer-against the Bell Sauadge gate, and at the last seeing hee could not get into the citie, and beeing deceiued of the aide hee hoped for, returned backe againe in arraie towardes Charing Crosse, and was neuer stopped till hee came at Temple barre, where certaine horsemen which came from the Fielde, mette them in the face, and then beganne the fight againe, till Clarencius an Herault came and sayde to Maister Wyat: Sir, you were best by my counsell to yeelde, you see this date is gone against you, and in resisting, you canne get no good, but bee the death of all these your souldiers, to your great perill of soule: perchance you maie finde the Queene mercifull, and the rather, if yee stint so great bloudeshead as is like heere to be. VVyat herewith being somewhat astonied (although he saw his men bent to fight) said, Well, if I shall nedes yeelde, I will yeld me to a gentleman, to whome sir Mawrice Barkeley came straight, and bad him leape vp behinde him, and an other toke Thomas Cobham and William Kneuet, and so carried them behinde them vpon their horses to the court, then was taking of men on all sides. It is saide, that in this conflict, one pikeman, setting his backe to the wall at Saint Iames, kept seauentéene horsemen off him a great time, and at the last was slaine. The whole number on both sides slaine at this battell passed not fortie persons, as farre as coulde bee learned by them that viewed the fielde, but there were manie sore hurt. The noyse of women and children, when the conflict was at Charing Crosse, was so great, that it was heard to the toppe of the white tower, and also the great shot was well discerned there out of Saint Iames fielde: there stood vpon the leades the Marques of Northampton, hampton, Sir Nicholas Poines, Sir Thomas Pope, Maister Iohn Seimer, and other.

About fiue of the clocke, Thomas Wyat, William Kneuet, Thomas Cobham, two brethren named Mantels, and Alexander Bret, were brought by sir Henry Iernigham by water to the tower prisoners, where sir Philip Denny receiued them at the bulwarke, and as Wyat passed by he saide, go traitor, there was neuer such a traitor in England: to whome sir Thomas Wyat turned and said, I am no traitor, I woulde thou shouldest well knowe, thou art more traitor than I, it is not the pointe of an honest man to call mee so, and so went foorth: when he came to the tower gate, sir Thomas Bridges lieutenant tooke in through the wicket, first Mantel and said: Ah thou traitor, what hast thou and thy companie wrought? But he holding downe his head saide nothing: then came Thomas Kneuet, whome Maister Chamberlaine gentleman porter of the tower toke in: then came Alexander Bret, whome sir Thomas Pope toke by the bosome, saying: Oh traitor, how couldest thou find in thy heart to worke such a villanie, as to take wages, and beeing trusted ouer a bande of men, to fall to her enemies, returning against her in battell? Bret answered, yea, I haue offended in that case; then came Thomas Cobham whome Sir Thomas Poines tooke in, and saide, Alas maister Cobham, what winde headed you to worke such treason? and hee answered, oh Sir, I was seduced. Then came in Sir Thomas Wyat, whome Sir Iohn Bridges tooke by the collar, and said; O thou villaine and vnhappie traitor, howe couldest thou finde in thy heart to worke such detestable treason to the Queenes Maiestie, who gaue thee thy life and liuing once alreadie, although thou diddest before this time beare Armes in the fielde against her, and nowe to yeelde her battell, to her marueilous trouble and fright? If it were not (saieth he), but that the law must passe vpon thee, I woulde sticke thee through with my dagger; to the which Wyat holding his armes vnder his side, and loking grecuously with a grimme loke vpon the lieutenant, said, it is no maistery now, and so passed on. Thomas Wyat had on a shirt of maile, with sleeues very faire, thereon a veluet cassocke, and a yellow lace, with the windlace of his dag hanging thereon, and a paire of bootes and spurs on his legs, and on his head a faire hat of veluet, with broad bone worke lace about it. Wyat sent to the Tower.

VVilliam Kneuet, Thomas Cobham, and Bret were the like apparelled.

On the morrow, and next day following were brought into the tower prisoners, George Cobham, sir VVilliam Cobham, Anthony Kneuet, Hugh Booth, T. Vane, Robert Rudstone, sir George Harpar, Edward VVyat, Edw. Fog, George Moore, and Cutbert Vaughan; which Cutbert being a verie handsome man, M. Thomas Bridges at his entrie into the Tower, did wonderfullie reproch him, calling him ranke traitor, and said that hanging was too good for him: to whom this Vaughan answered with a stout courage saying; I pray God to sende you charitie, and I would all men knew it; I am as true a man to the queene and common wealth, as any man that I shall leaue behinde mee, and for death, I care not for it.

The tenth of Februarie, the Earle of Huntington, and other Gentlemen, and and to the number of 300. horsemen, brought into the Tower as Prisoner the D. of Suffolk, and the L. John Grey his brother from Couentry, where the D. had remained three daies after his taking in the house and custody of Christopher Warren alderman there.

The 11. day sir Henry Isley, who had fled, was brought into the tower prisoner in an old freese coat, and old paire of hosen, all his apparell not worth 4. s. The same day came in two of the Culpeppers, one Cromer, and T. Rampton the duke of Suffolks secretary.

The 12. of February being Monday, about tenne of the clocke, there went out of the tower to the scaffold on the tower hill, the L. Guilford Dudley, son to the D. of Northumberland, husband to the lady Iane Gray, daughter to the D. of Suffolke, who at his going out, toke by the hands sir Anthony Browne, M. Iohn Throckmorton and many other gentlemen, praieng them to pray for him: and without the bulwarke gate M. Thomas Offley one of the sherifs of London receiued him and brought him to the scaffold, where after a small declaration, he kneeled down and said his praiers, then holding vp his eies and hands to heauen, with teares, at the last he desired the people to pray for him, and after was beheaded: his body being laide in a car, and his head in a cloth, was brought into the chappell within the tower, where the lady Iane, whose lodging was in maister Partridges house, did see his deade carcasse taken out of the car, aswell as shee did see him before aliue going to his death, a sight to hir woorse than death.

By this time was there a scaffold made vpon the greene, ouer-against the white tower, for the ladie Iane to die vpon, who with hir husbande was appointed to haue been put to death on the Friday before, but was staied till then: this lady being nothing at all abashed, neither with feare of her owne death, which then approched, neither with the sight of the dead carcasse of her husband when he was brought into the chappell, came forth, the lieutenant leading her, with countenance nothing abashed, neither her eyes ante thing moistened with teares (although hir gentlewomen Elizabeth Tilney and mistresse Helen wonderfully wept) with a booke in her hand, wherin she praied vntil she came to the said scaffold, whereon when she was mounted, she was beheaded: whose deathes were the more hastened for feare of further troubles and stir for hir title, like as hir father had attempted.

The same day was brought into the tower as prisoner by the lord chamberlaine and 200. of the gard, Edward Courtney earle of Deuonshire, who as hee passed by the lieutenant, being asked the cause of his thither comming, answered, he could not accuse himselfe.

The 14. and 15. of February, about the number of 50. of Wyats faction were hanged on 20. paire of gallowes made for that purpose in diuers places about the citie.

The 17. of February was proclaimation made, that all strangers shoulde auoid the realme within foure and twentie daies next ensuing, vpon paine of their goods to be confiscate, all free denizens, merchantes, and ambassadours excepted.

The

The same seuenteenth date of Februarie the Duke of Suffolke was conueied to Westminster by the clearke of the hearse and the guard, at his going out he went with a cheerefull and a verie stoute countenance, but at his returne verie pensiue and heauie, desiring all such to praie for him, the Lorde Courtney lying in the Bell tower saw both his going out and returning, hee beeing arraigned, and the earle of Arundell sitting vpon him in iudgement, hee saide it was no treason for a peere of the realme, as he was, to raise his power, and to make proclamation, onely to auoid strangers out of the realme, and thereupon he asked the sergeants at lawe standing by whether it were or no, but they would say nothing: then was it laid to his charge, hee mette with 200. men in armes, the Queenes lieutenant the earle of Huntington, which was treason against the Queene, forsomuch as the lieutenant representeth the prince; to the which he answered, that he knew not the said earle to be such a lieutenant, but quoth he, I met him indeed with 50. men or thereabouts, and would not haue thrunke from him if I had had fewer, by which wordes hee was founde to bee guiltie of treason. Moreouer, he partly accused his brother the Lorde Thomas, who had, as he said, perswaded him rather to flie into his country, than to abide, sith it was to be feared, he should againe be committed to the tower, where as being in his country amongst his friends and tenants, who durst fetch him? Touching other articles laid to his charge he said he neuer knew of them, sauing that one should say at his table once at supper, that he would vndertake for xxx. onely with 100. men to set the crowne vpon Courtneys head, and so hee was condemned.

Benedict Arias Montanus one of the greatest Diuines that Spain ever bred attended the Bp of Segouia to the Councell of Trent &c.

The 18. of Februarie, Alexander Bret one of the Captaines of the Londoners that fled to Wyat, and 22. persons more of the Gentilmen, were deliuered to the sherife of Kent, to be executed in diuers places of Kent, but for the most part they were all pardoned. This Bret going out of the tower embraced M. Chamberlaine the gentleman porter, & desired him to commende him to sir T. Wyat, then praieng al men to pray for him, he said, I am worthy of no lesse punishment than I nowe go to suffer, for besides my owne offence, I refused life and grace three times offered, but I trust God doeth all for the best, that I might repent, and thereby obtaine grace.

The 20. of Februarie William Thomas late clearke of the counsel, William Winter, and Sir Nicholas Throckmorton were sent to the Tower, and on the next morrow were Sir Iames Crofts and the Lorde Thomas Grey sent to the Tower.

The 20. of Februarie certaine of Wyats faction, to the number of 400. and more were ledde to Westminster, coupled togither with halters about their necks, and there in the tiltyard, the Q. (who looked forth of hir gallery) pardoned them.

Gentilmen pardoned.

The 23. of Februarie Henry Grey duke of Suffolke was beheaded on the tower hill, his wordes on the scaffold were these: God people, I am come hither to die, being iustly condemned for my disobedience against the Q. highnesse, of whom I do most humbly aske forgiuenes: doctor Weston answered and saide, my Lord, her grace hath already forgiuen you: then saide the Duke,

D. of Suffolke beheaded.

I

I beseech you all good people, to let me bee an example to you for obedience to the K. and the magistrates, for the contrary therof hath brought me to this end. I desire you all to beare me witnes, that I die a true christian man, beleeuing to be saued by none other meanes but by almighty God, through the passion of his son Iesus Christ; and now I praie you to praie with me: then kneeling downe, t doctor Weston with him, they said the psalme of Miserere mei Deus, and In te Domine speraui, the duke one verse, and doctor Weston another, which done, he put off his gowne and dublet, knit the kerchiefe about his eies, held vp his hands, laid his head ouer the block, which head at one stroke was taken from him.

The 26. of Februarie William Thomas had almost slain himselfe, by thrusting a knife vnder his paps.

The 11. of March, Wil. L. Howard admirall of England, was created baron of Effingham at Westminster.

The 14. of March, the earle of Bedford L. priuy seale, chiefe ambassador to the prince of Spain, set forward on his voiage to fetch him hither.

The 15. of March, sir T. Wyat was arraigned at Westminster, of whose arraignement you maie reade in larger volumes, wherein I haue bestowed my labors.

The 18. of March being Palmsunday, the lady Elizabeth the K. sister, was by the L. treasurer and the earle of Suffer conueied to the tower of London, from Westminster by water.

The 24. of March, were released out of the tower, the Marques of Northampton, the L. Cobham, sir Wil. Cobham, Iohn Few Williams, Culpepper, H. Vane, Iohn Harington, Corbet &c.

Parliament. The 2. of Aprill, the parliament began at Westminster, which was appointed to haue bin kept at Oxford.

Barons created. The 5. of Aprill sir I. Williams was created baron of Tame at S. Iames.

The 7. of Aprill sir Edw. North was created baron of Chartlege by writ at S. Iames.

Cat hanged in Cheape. The 8. of Aprill, sir Iohn a Bridges was created baron Chandois of Sudley at S. Iames. The same 8. of Aprill, being then Sunday, a cat with hir head shorn, and the likenes of a vestment cast ouer hir, with hir fore fet tied togither, and a round peece of paper like a singing cake betwirt them, was hanged on a gallowes in Cheape, neere to the crosse, in the parish of S. Mathew, which cat being taken downe, was carted to the Bish. of London, and he caused the same to be shewed at Pauls crosse, by the preacher D. Pendleton. The 10 of Aprill D. Cranmer archb. of Cant. D. Ridley B. of London, and Hugh Latimer once B. of Worcester, were conueied prisoners from the tower of London to Windsor, and after from thence to Oxford, there to dispute with the diuines and learned men of the contrary opinion.

Disputation at Oxford.

Thomas Wyat beheaded. The 11. of Aprill, sir Th. Wyat was beheaded on the tower hill, and after quartered, his quarters were set vp in diuers places, and his head on the gallowes at Hay hill neere Hyde parke, from whence it was shortly after stolne and conueied awaie. This sir Tho. Wyat before his comming down out of the the tower, was conueied by the L. chamberlaine, and the Lord Shandos to the tower ouer the water gate, where the L. Courtney laie, and there he remained in talke more than halfe an houre, but what was spoken betwixt them I know not. Then was he brought downe, and at the garden pale, the L. chamberlain toke his leaue of him, and likewise did maister secretary Bourne, to whome sir Thomas Wyat saide, I praie you to pray for me, and be a meane to the quéene for my poore wife and children, and if it might haue pleased her grace to haue geanted me my life, I trust to haue done her such good seruice as should haue recompenced mine offence: but since not, I beseech God to haue mercie on me, to the which maister Bourne made answere, and so Wyat came toward the hill betwixt Doctor Weston and the lord Shandos: when he was vpon the scaffold, he desired al men to pray for him and with him, and then said in effect the se or the like words: Good people, I come presentlie here to die, being thereto lawfully and worthily condemned, for I haue sore offended against God and the quénes maiestie, I trust God hath forgiuen me, and will take mercy vpon me; I beséech the Q. maiestie also of forgiuenes: She hath forgiuen you quoth Doctor Weston: then, quoth he, let euerie man beware howe hee taketh anything in hande against the higher powers, vnlesse God be prosperable to his purpose it will neuer take good effect or succesle, whereof you may now learne of me, and I pray God I may bee the last example in this place, for that or any other like. And where it is said and noised abroad, that I should accuse the lady Elizabeth and the lord Courtney, it is not so good people: for I assure you, neither they nor any other now ponder in holde was priuie of my rising before I began, as I haue declared no lesse to the Q. councell, and that is most true. Then said doctor Weston at those words, marke this my masters, he saith that, that which hee hath shewed to the councell in writing of them is true, and is without anie more talke sir Tho. Wyat turned him, and put off his gowne, vntrussed his points, then taking the earle of Huntington, the L. Hastings, sir T. Stranguish, and many other by the handes, hee plucked off his dublet and waskcoat, and then kneeling downe, laid his head to the block, and rassing himselfe againe on his knées after a few wordes spoken, with his eies lifted vp toward heauen, hee knit the kerchiefe ouer his eies, and holding vp his handes, sodainelie laide downe his heade, which the executioner tooke from him at one stroke. The 22. of June, was proclaimation made, forbidding the shoting in handguns, and bearing of weapons.

Ann. reg. 2. A spirit in a wall.

The 15. of July, Elizabeth Croft a wench about the age of 18. yeres, stoode vpon a scaffold at Pauls crosse all the sermon time, where she confessed, that she being mooued by diuers lewde persons thereunto, had vpon the 14. of March last before passed, counterfeited certain speeches in a wall of an house without Aldersgate of London, through the which the people of the whole Citie were wonderfully molested, for that all men might heare the voice, but not see her person. Some said it was an angel: a voice from heauen, some the holy ghost, &c. This was called the spirit in the wall: shee had laine whistling in a strange whistle made for that purpose, which was giuen hir by one Drakes, seruant to sir Anthony Neuill: then were there diuers companions, one named Myles, clearke of S. Botolphs without Aldersgate, a plaier, a weauer, Hill clearke of S. Leonardes in Foster lane, and other confederate with hir, which putting themselues among the preasse, took vpon them to interpret what the spirit said, reuealing certaine seditious words against the queene, the prince of Spaine, the masse, confession, &c.

The 19. of July the prince of Spaine arriued at Southampton, the 4. daie after he came to Winchester in the euening, and there going to church was honorably receiued of the bishop, and a great number of nobles: the next daie he met with the queene, with whom he had long familiar talke.

On

On S. Iames day, the marriage was solemnized betweene him and queene Mary, at which time the emperours ambassador being present, pronounced, that in consideration of the marriage, the emperour had giuen vnto his sonne the kingdome of Naples. The solemnitie of this marriage being ended, the king of heraults proclaimed their title as followeth: Philip and Mary by the grace of God, King and Queene of England, Fraunce, Naples, Hierusalem, and Ireland, defenders of the faith, princes of Spaine and Sicilie, archdukes of Austrich, dukes of Millaine, Burgundy and Brabant, counties of Aspurge, Flanders and Tyrroll: which being ended, the trumpets blew, the king and queene came foorth hand in hand, and two swords borne before them. Shortly after king Philip and queene Mary remooued from Winchester to Basing, from thence to Windsor, where on the 1ift of August the king was stalled in the noble order of the garter, where he kept a great feast, and at that time the earle of Sussex was made knight of the garter.

The second of September, sir Anthony Browne maister of the kings horse, was made vicount Montague for him & his heires males, with the gift of twenty marks the yeare of Surrey, at Hampton court.

In this moneth of September, deceased Thomas Howard duke of Norfolke at Framingham in Norfolke, and was honorably buried amongst his ancestors.

The 2. of October was brought into the tower of London twentie carts laden with 97. chests, each of them a yard and fower inches long, filled with siluer bolion to be coyned, conducted by certaine Spaniards, and English men of the kings gard.

Siluer bolion brought to the tower.

The fire & twentieth of October, a Spaniard was hanged at Charing crosse for killing of an English man in fight there, he was seruant to sir George Gifford, there was offered for his life by other strangers fiue hundred crownes, but all that would not stay iustice.

A Spaniard hanged.

The 4. of November being sonday, three priests that being maried, would not leaue their wiues, and two lay men that had two wiues apeece, were punished alike, for they went on procession about Paules church in white sheetes ouer them, and either of them a taper of ware in the one hand, and a rod in the other, and so they sate before the preacher at Paules crosse during the sermon, and then were dispiled on the heades with the same rods.

The twelfth of November, the parliament began at Westminster.

Cardinall Poole came into Englād.

The 24. of November, cardinall Poole came out of Brabant into England, and and was receiued with much honour: he was by parliament restored to his old dignitie that he was put from by king Henry, and shortly after came into the parliament house, where the king, queene, and other states were present. Then he declared the cause of his legacie, first exhorting them to returne to the communion of the church, and restore to the pope his due authoritie. Secondly, he aduertised them to giue thankes to God that had sent them so blessed a king and queene. Finally, he signified, for so much as they had with great gentlenesse restored him to his honour and dignitie, that he most earnestly desired to see them restored to the heauenly court, and vnitie of the church.

The next day the whole court of parliament drew out the forme of a supplication, the summe whereof was, that they greatly repented them of that schisme that they had liued in, and therefore desired the king, queene, and cardinall, that by their meanes they might be restored to the bosome of the church, and obedience of the sea of Rome.

The next day the king, queene, and cardinall being present, the lord chancellor declared what the parliament had determined concerning the cardinals request, and offered to the king and queene the supplication before mentioned, which being read, the cardinall in a large oration declared how acceptable repentance was in the sight of God, &c. And immediatly making prayer vnto God by authoritie to him committed, absolued them. When all this was done, they went all vnto the chappell, and there singing Te Deum with great solemnitie, declared the ioy that for this reconciliation was pretended.

The 28. of November, the lord maior of London, with the aldermen in scarlet, and the commons in their liueries assembled in Paules church at nine of the clocke in the forenoone, where doctor Chadsey one of the prebends preached in the quire in presence of the bishop of London, and nine other bishops, and read a letter sent from the queenes councell, the tenor whereof was, that the bishop of London should cause Te Deum to be sung in all the churches of his diocesse, with continuall prayers for the Queenes maiestie, which was conceiued and quicke with child: the letter being read, he began his sermon with this Anthetime: Ne timeas Maria, inuenisti enim gratiam apud Deum. His sermon being ended, Te Deum was sung, and solemne procession was made of Salue festa dies, all the circuit of the church.

The queene bruted to be with child.

The second of December, cardinall Poole came from Lambeth by water and landed at Paules wharfe, and from thence to Paules church, with a crosse, two pillars, and two pollaxes of siluer borne before him. Charles lord Sturton and his men cruelly murthered maister Argile and his sonne: he caused them to be stricken downe with clubbes, then their throates to be cut, and after to be buried in his owne house 15. foot deepe, for the which he was arraigned and condemned at Westminster, and after conueyed from the tower of London through the citie, and so to Salisburie, and there hanged with foure of his men seruants, the 6. of March. Lord Sturtō executed.

King Philip returned into England, and landed at Douer on the 18. of March, and the 23. of March passed through London with the queene and nobles of the Realme. K. Philip returned into England.

Thomas Stafford, and other hauing conspired diuers treasons against the King and Queene, fearing iust punishment for their deserts, fled beyond the Seas, and there remayning attempted diuers times to stirre rebellion within this Realme, by sending Bookes, Billes, and letters, written and printed, farced full of vntruthes, and at length the said Stafforde, and other English rebels, and some straungers, entred this Realme, on the fower and twentieth of Aprill, and tooke by stealth the Castle of Skarborough in the countie of Yorke, and set out a shamefull Proclamation, wherein he traiterously called and affirmed the Queene to be vnrightfull and most vnworthie Queene, and that the King had brought into this Realme the number of twelue thousand Spaniardes, and that into their hands were deliuered twelue the strongest holdes in this Realme. In which Proclamation the said Stafford named himselfe Protector and gouernor of this Realme, but he with the other his complices, by the good diligence of the Earle of Westmerland and other noble men, were apprehended on the last of Aprill. T. Stafford tooke Skarborough castle.

The last of Aprill, Thomas Percy esquire, was made baron Percy at Westminster, and on the next morrowe which was the first of May, he was created Earle of Northumberland, and the Queene gaue him all the lands which had bene his ancestors remaining in his hands. Percy Earle of Northumberland.

The eight and twentieth day of May, Thomas Stafford was beheaded on the Tower hill, and on the morrow three of his companie, to wit, Stretchley, Bradford, and Proctor, were drawne to Tyborne, and there hanged and quartered. Thomas Stafford beheaded.

The 7. of June, for that the French King had supported the treason of the Duke of Northumberland, and also the trayterous band of Wiat, and not long after when the diuell put in the heads of Dudley, Ashton and others their complices, Warre with France.

complices, to enter into a new conspiracie, the said kings ambassadour was not onely privie, but receiued them into his house, there to assemble and contriue their malicious and diuellish enterprise: & although the said king were aduertised thereof by our ambassadors, neuertheless, Dudley, Ashton, and others flying into France, were both receiued of the king, and also maintained with annuall pensions by him giuen, contrarie to his promise. Also he hath receiued sundrie famous pirats, and notorious enemies, and of late he sent Strafford with other rebels, who he had entertained, furnished with armour, money, munition and ships, to suppresse the castle of Skarborough: proclamation was made to giue warning to our subiects to forbeare all traffike with any of that Realme, and to repute the French king and his subiects as open enemies, &c.

The last of June, the lord Philip Howard, sonne of Thomas Duke of Norfolke, was borne in London, at the earle of Arundels house without Temple bar, which house sometime belonged to the bishop of Bath, and shortly after was christened in the queenes chappell at Westminster in a font of gold, where Philip king of Spaine, and Nicholas Heath archbishop of Yorke, then chancelor of England were his godfathers in proper person, and the ladie Elizabeth duches of Norfolk his great grandmother, was his godmother. This lord Philip was the onely begotten child of the said Duke, borne of the ladie Marie, daughter and heire of Hery fitz Allen, the last earle of Arundell of that name. To whome the inheritance and dignitie of the said Earle therefore descended.

English men sent to Saint Quintins.

The 6. of July, the king passed ouer to Calcis, and so into Flaunders, where he made great prouision for warre against the French king. The same moneth, the Queene sent ouer an armie of a thousand horsemen, foure thousand footmen, and two thousand pioners, to ayde king Philip, whereof the earle of Pembroke was Generall. The lord Robert Dudley maister of the Ordinance.

Lady Anne of Cleue. Ann. reg. 5.

The 15. of July, died the lady Anne of Cleue at Chelsey, and was buried at Westminster on the 3. of August.

Noblemen of France taken prisoners.

The 10. of August, were taken of Fraunce the chiefest captaines, the Duke of Montmorency Constable of Fraunce, and his sonne Monsieur de Merne, the Duke of Monpencier, the Duke of Longuille, the Marshall of Saint Andrew, the Reinegraue colonell of the Almaines, Roche du Maine, the count de Rochfoucault, the Vicount of Touraine, the baron of Curton, the prince of Mantua, besides many gentlemen and captaines.

Saint Quintines won.

The eighteene of August, the towne of Saint Quintines was taken by king Philip, with the helpe of Englishmen, at the siege whereof the lord Henry Dudley, youngest sonne to Iohn late Duke of Northumberland, was slaine with a gunne: which Henry Dudley and sir Edward Windsore were the first that aduanced banner on the wall.

This yeare in Michaelmas terme, men might haue seene in Westminster hall at the kings bench barre, not two men of law before the Justices, there was but one named Fostar, who looked about, and had nothing to do, the Judges looking about them. In the common place, no mo sergeants but one, which was sergeant Bouloise, who looked about him, there was elbow roome enough, which made the lawyers complaine of their iniuries in that terme. The 30. of November, sir Thomas Tresham knight, receiued the order of the Crosse, and was made lord prior of S. Iohn of Jerusalem in England. Lord prior of S. Iohns.

The first of Januarie, the duke of Guise with a great armie of French men, entred a plot of ground, entrenched at Sandgate, and there dividing his power into two parts, sent the one with certaine peeces of ordinance along the downes towards Rilebanke: and the other with battering peeces to Newnam bridge, which two forts both at one time they shot at, and soone recouered without resistance, for there was not a man in them, for they vtterly fled into the towne of Calcis. The next day therefore the Frenchmen began a battery from the sandhils next Rilebanke, against the wall of Calcis, betwixt the watergate and the prison, and continued the same by the space of two or three daies, vntill they had made a little breach, but not yet sawtable, neither was it meant, but to make the Englishmen to haue the lesse regard to the defence of the castle, where they were assertained to haue an easie entrie: so that while the Englishmen trauelled to defend that breach, the Frenchmen being passed through the ditch full of water, entred the castle, and thought to haue entred the towne that way: but by the prowes of sir Anthonie Agar knight, and marshall of the towne, they were put backe into the castle, but the same sir Anthonie Agar lost his life, and this was on the first of Januarie. The same night William L. Wentworth, deputie or lieutenant of the towne, sent Nicholas Fellowes alias Gwins, and Richard Turpin alias Hams to the castle to demaund parle, which they graunted, putting forth of the posterne two French gentlemen, and receiued in pledge of them into the castle I. Hiefield, maister of the ordinance, and Edmond Hall a constable of the staple. Hereupon they falling in talke, at length agreed, that the towne with all the artillerie, victuals and munition, should be yeelded to the French, the liues of the inhabitants saued, they vnder safe conduct to passe whither they would, sauing the lord deputie with 50. other, such as the duke of Guise should appoint, to remaine prisoners, & to be put to raunsome. The next morning, the Frenchmen entred the towne and possessed it. And forthwith, all the men, women and children were commaunded to leaue their houses, and to go into certaine places appointed for them, there to remaine till order were further taken for their sending away. The places appointed for them to remaine in, were chiefly foure, the two churches of our lady, and of Saint Nicholas, the deputies house, and the staple, where they rested part of

of that day, the night following, and the next day till the afternoone. And while they were thus in these foure places, proclamation was made in their hearings, straightly charging them that were inhabitants of the towne of Calais, hauing about them any money, plate, or iewels to the value of foure pence, to bring the same forthwith, and lay it on the high altars of the said churches vpon paine of death, bearing them in hand they should be searched. By reason of which proclamation there was made a sorowfull offering, and while they were at this offering in the churches, the Frenchmen rifled their houses, where they found inestimable riches & treasure: but especially in that towne, ordinance, armour, & other munitions, as the Frenchmen write, besides the great riches of gold & siluer, coine, iewels, plate, wools, & other marchandize (which was inestimable,) there were found 30. peeces of brasse mounted on wheeles, & as many of yron, with such furniture of powder, pellits, armor, victuals, & other munitions of war scarcly credible. On the next day being ỳ 7. of January in the after noon, a great number of ỳ meanest sort were suffered to passe out of the towne in safety, being garded through the army with a nũber of scottish light horsemen, who led the Englishmen very well & friendly, and after this, euery day for the space of 3. or 4. daies, there were sent away diuerse companies, till they were all auoided, those excepted that were reserued prisoners.

Julius Cæsar Scaliger dies at Agen in Guienne

There were in the towne of Calais, 500. English souldiers in ordinarie pay, & of the towns men about 200. fighting men: & there were in the whole number of men, women & children, as they were accounted going out of the gate, 4200. persons or thereabout. The lord Wentworth deputie of Calais, sir Ralph Chamberlaine captaine of the castle, Iohn Harlestone captaine of Risebanke, Nicholas Alexãder captaine of Newnam bridge, Edward Grimstone controller, Iohn Rogers surueior, with other to the number in al of 50. were sent prisoners into Frãce. The losse of this towne seemed strange to many men of great experience, the same towne being so many yeres so strongly fortified with all munitions that could be deuised, should now in so short space be taken of our enemies without fight or slaughter of any man, more then sir Anthonie Agar, as ye haue heard. The counsel of England had with all expedition raised a great power, to haue bene sent for the defence of that town, but it auailed not, for such a tempest of wind arose, as the like in many yeares had not bene seene, whereby no ship could brooke the sea, by meanes whereof our men were forced to remaine at Douer in a readinesse to haue passed the seas, till newes was brought the towne was lost as ye haue heard, and then euery man returned to his home. And shortly after, to wit, in the same moneth of January ỳ strong forts of Guisnes and Hames, though most valiantly defended by the lord Gray of Wilton and others, English men, was wonne by the French, & by them possessed: whereof maister George Ferrers hath written at large, for he collected the whole historie of Q. Mary, as the same is set downe vnder the name of Richard Grafton.

The 18. of Januarie, Edward Hastings knight of the garter, lord chamberlaine to the Q. was created baron Hastings of Loughborough at Westminster.

A parliamẽt.

The 20. of Januarie began a parliament at Westminster.

A prest to the queene.

In the moneth of March, a prest was granted to the queene by the citizens of London, of twentie thousand pound, which was leuied of the companies, for the which which summe to be repaid againe, the Queene bound certaine lands, and also allowed for interest of the money twelue pound of euery hundred for a yere.

The 28. of Aprill, Francis the French kings eldest sonne called the dolphin, was maried vnto Mary Stewart daughter and sole heire of Iames the fift late king of Scotland, in the citie of Paris, with great pompe and triumph. Queene of Scots married into Fraunce.

The losse of Calcis being generally grieuous to the whole realm of England, but specially to queene Mary, she ceased not to trauell with king Philip her husband, as with her owne counsell, & lords of the realm which way should be best to reuenge this iniurie, especially now whilest the French king was occupied in wars with king Philip, to endomage some of his countries by way of inuasion, & to surprise some of his townes vpon a sudden. And amongst sundry deuises none was thought so fit to be attempted as an hauen towne in Britaine called Brest, a towne as well for the situation thereof conuenient to receiue fresh succors, & victuall out of England by sea, as also for that it was knowne to the queene & her counsell at that present not to be furnished with any garrison of souldiers sufficient to repulse the power of a prince vpon a sudden. Wherfore there was immediatly order giuen to Edward lord Clinton then high admiral of England, with al expedition to prepare himselfe, with all the queenes ships of war, furnished with soldiers, munition, & victuall, to ioyne with the admirall of king Philip, who had like order frō ỹ said king to ioyn with ỹ nauy of Englād for the atchieuing of this enterprise.

In the meane time while K. Philip being absent from the low countries, was occupied with his wars in France, monsier de Thermes captain of Calcis, being a man very expert in the wars, taking out of Calcis so many of his soldiers as might be spared from thence, adioyned to thē all the forces of the French garisons in Artoys, Bollonois, & Picardy, whereof together with the soldiers of Calcis, being to the number of 700 footmen & 300. light horsemen, there were assembled 14. ensignes of the French footmen, 18. Vanlins of Almains, 4. or 500. men at armes of France, beside the light horsemen Scots, amounting in the whole to the number of 9000. footmen, & 1500. horsemen, entred into Flanders with full determination to spoile king Philips countrie along the sea coast, & namely a proper hauen town called Dunkerke, & with like purpose to haue surprised the town of Graueling. This captain of pollicie passing by the towne of Graueling, laid siege to a litle towne not far from thence called Berghes, which he wan with final resistance. And without long staying marched on to Dunkerke, & planting a siege there, battered the same so sharply with the canon, that within lesse then foure daies he wan the town, which he (like as the other) put to sack, & after setting the town on fire, he with his French men spread abroad, walked the most fruitfull quarter of that part of Flanders almost to Newport: the army withdrew, & incamped within halfe a mile of Graueling. The county Egmont lieutenant generall for king Philip in the low countrie, assembled all the power as well of king Philips garrisons, as also of mē of war in the low country, to the nūber of 14. M. or more footmen, & 2. or 3. M. horsmen, determining so to affront the French, that either they shold passe no further into the country, or at the least to impeach thē frō the siege of Graueling: mōsier de Thermes hearing of this power assembled, made all possible hast toward Graueling, where he was no sooner arriued, but that he saw his enimies readie Dunkerk in Flaunders brent.

ranged in the field, by reason whereof his studie was now nothing else but how he might bring home his army in safety to Calcis. The county Egmond espying the Frenchmẽ bent to march away with the spoile of the countrie, cut betweene the and home, placing his battels in such order, that the Frenchmen had no way to passe, but vpon the sands betweene the towne and the sea: whereas by good chance lay a great fleete of Q. Maries ships of warre, within the danger of whole gunshot the French men had no shift, but to passe as their iourney lay: and so being forced either to famish or to fight at disaduantage. Monsier de Thermes without staying any longer, caused his vauntgard to passe ouer the riuer somewhat neare the towne to auoid the shot of the English ships, and staid vpon the further side for the residue of his battels: there came such thicke haile shot of artillerie out of the towne on the one side, and from the English ships on the other side, that there was a full batterie made vpon the Frenchmen on all sides, which they neuertheless abode without breaking order for the time, when suddenly appeared before them two great troupes of horsemen of 1500. a peece, part swart Rutters, and part Burgonians, whereof the one in front, and the other in flanke, gaue strong charges vpon the French vantgard, who being well backed with their other battels, stoutly repulsed those two first troupes. Thus both parties being at a stay, the countie Egmond with 1800. men of armes, and his foote battels following, before the French had well recouered breath, recharged vpon them with all his forces together so terribly, that he shokt all their battell, and the number take the to flight, the victorie was soone had, by reason the Almaines beaten backe with the artillerie, as well of the towne as of the ships, brake their order, and came not to the shocke, whereby the whole charge of the battell rested vpon the Frenchmens heads. This field was foughten the 13. of July, vpon the sea sands neare to Graueling, where besides those that were slaine which were esteemed to the number of fiue thousand, there were taken prisoners the marshall de Thermes captain of Calcis, monsier Senerpont gouernor of Boloigne, monsier Villebon gouernor of Picardie, monsier Annabault sonne to the late admirall, monsier de Moruilliers gouernor of Abuile, monsier de Channe gouernor of Corbier, beside a number of gentlemen, captaines and souldiers, but specially the bands of Calcis went to wracke, so as very few returned home. The admirals before named knew nothing of this matter, wherefore, following their prescribed course, and ioyning together at the place appointed, sailed from thence with prosperous wind, and on the nine and twentith of the same moneth, with seuen score ships of warre appeared before the hauen of Conquet in Britaine: at whose arriuall there, they sounded their trumpets, and with a peale of great ordinance, gaue a loude salue to the Britaines: and by eight of the clocke the same morning, the Englishmen manning foorth their ship-boates, recouered landing, and within short time became maisters of the said towne of Conquet, which they sacked and brent with a great abbey, & many prety townes and villages neare thereabouts, where our men found great store of pillage.

Towne of Conquet brent.

This being done, the Englishmen withdrew downe to the sea side, where their ships lay readie to receiue them. But the Flemmings being couetous of the spoile, passing further into the land, before they could recouer their ships againe, were

were encountred by the power of the countrie, by whom there were slaine of them to the number of foure or fiue hundred. The admirall perceiuing the power of the countrie greatly to increase, thought it not best to attempt any assault against the towne of Brest, or to make longer abode there, but returned home.

In this meane time, while king Philip and the French king with two most puissant armies afronted each other neere vnto the water of Some, either of them being obstinately bent to driue the other out of the field, for which cause they entrenched their camps: diuers conferences were had concerning peace, and at the last concluded vpon all controuersies, except the restitution of Calcis, required by the ambassadors of Queene Marie, which the French part would in no wise heare of, by reason of which difficultie, this treatie could take no effect, nor come to good conclusion. King Philip thinking himselfe bound to stand in that case with the Queene his wife, did therefore stay a long time before he concluded peace with the French king. A treatie of peace about the deliuerie of Calcis.

The second of July, the Lord Wentworth and diuerse other that had bene gouernors of Calcis, were attainted of treason being then in France.

The 11. of July, within a mile of Nottingham was a maruellous tempest of thunder, which as it came through two townes, beate downe all the houses and churches, the bels were cast to the out side of the Church yards, and some webs of lead foure hundred foote into the field, writhen like a paire of gloues. Ann. reg. 6. Tempest at Nottingham

The riuer of Trent running betweene the two townes, the water with the mud in the bottome was carried a quarter of a mile, and cast against the trees, the trees were plucked vp by the roots, and cast twelue score off. Also, a child was taken foorth of a mans hands two speares length hie, and carried a hundred foote, and then let fall, wherewith his arme was broken, and so died. Fiue or sixe men thereabout were slaine, and neither flesh nor skin perished: there fell some haile-stones that were fifteene inches about, &c. Ch. V. dyed 21 Sept. 1558. Ferdinand I. Emp. of Germany.

This yeere in haruest time, the quartaine agues continued in like manner or more vehemently, than they had done the last yeere passed, wherethrough died many olde people, and specially priests, so that a great number of parishes were vnserued, and no curates to be gotten, and much corne was lost in the field for lacke of workemen and labourers. Quartaine agues raigned sore.

In the beginning of this yeere, corne rose to fourteene shillings the quarter, and wood waxed scant in London, and was sold for thirteene and fourteene shillings the thousand of billets, and coles at ten pence the sacke, by reason of the great death and sickenes the last summer for lacke of helpe and cariage. Corne and wood deare.

King Philip being absent out of the realme (as ye haue heard) and Queene Marie being dangerously sicke, ended her life at her manor of Saint Iames by Charing crosse the seuenteenth of November, in the yeere 1558. when she had raigned fiue yeeres, foure monethes and odde daies. The same day deceased cardinall Poole at Lambeth, and a little before, two of her physitions, besides diuerse bishops and noble men. Queene Marie was buried at Westminster, and cardinall Poole at Canterburie.

Queene Elizabeth.

Ann. reg. 1. ELIZABETH our moſt gracious and ſoueraigne Lady, borne at Greenwich, ſecond daughter to king Henry the eight, to the great comfort of England, was with full conſent proclaimed Queene of England, Fraunce, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. on the 17. of November, in the yeare of our Lord God 1558. Forthwith the ports and hauens were ſtopped, and none ſuffered to paſſe out of the realme without licence. Proclamation was made, forbidding all men to preach, ſaue ſuch as ſhould be appointed: alſo to alter any rites or ceremonies vſed in the church, ſaue as it was in her Graces chappell.

The Queene commeth from Hatfield.

The 19. of November, Queene Elizabeth came from biſhops Hatfield in Hertfordſhire, vnto the lord Northes houſe in the late diſſolued Charterhouſe of London, the ſheriffes of London meeting her grace at the farther end of Barnet towne within the ſhire of Middleſex, and ſo rode before her, till ſhe came to the Charterhouſe gate next Alderſgate, where her grace remained.

The Queene remooueth to the towre.

On monday the eight and twentith of November, about two of the clocke in the after noone, Queene Elizabeth rode from the lord Northes houſe along by the Barbican in at Creeplegate, then along by the wall to Biſhopſgate, which gate was richly hanged, where the waites of the city plaid, and ouer againſt the kings-head tauerne, a ſcholler of Paules ſchoole made a ſhort oration to her maieſty in Latin verſes, the company of Mercers ſtanding in their railes next the ſcholler, & ſo all the other companies of the city in order from thence to Mart lane end next vnto Barking church in tower ſtreete, the lord maior of London riding with maiſter Garter king at armes, bearing a ſcepter before her maieſty, which lord maior met her at the Charterhouſe gate next Alderſgate, where maiſter Recorder ſaluted her grace in the name of the lord maior and the whole city, and ſo with lords, knights, and gentlewomen richly apparelled, brought her to the tower of London: but when her grace entred at Mart lane, a peale of guns began to be ſhot off at the tower, which continued almoſt halfe an houre.

The firſt of December, the Queene remooued by water from the tower to Somerſet place neare to the Strand.

Sir Thomas Cheny treaſurer of the houſhold and lord warden of the cinque ports, diſceaſed the 8. of December.

Sir Nicholas Bacon Attourney of the court of wards, was made lord keeper of the great ſeale of England the 20. of December.

Queene Mary buried.

The 13. of December, the corps of queene Mary was honorably conueyed from Saint Iames to the abbey of Weſtminſter, and there placed vnder a rich hearſe decked with penons, banners, and eſcutchions of the armes of England and Fraunce, where ſhe remained that night, and on the morrow, after the maſſe of Requiem, and a ſermon preached by Doctor White biſhop of Wincheſter was ended, ſhe was buried in the chappell of king Henry the ſeuenth on the north ſide.

The foure and twentith of December, was ſolemne obſequie kept in the abbey of Westminster for Charles the fift late Emperor, which deceased in Spaine in the moneth of September last past: Queene Maries hearse yet standing, altered with the armes of the Emperor, and richly hanged with a rich pall-cloth of gold lying on the hearse, the Emperors ambassador being chiefe mourner, with other peeres and Lords of England assistant with him, &c. Obsequie for Charles the emperor.

The first of Januarie, the lord Maior and Aldermen gaue in commandement to euery ward in London, that the parson or curate in euery parish church in London, should reade the Epistle and Gospell of the day in the English toung in the masse time, and the English procession then vsed in the Queenes chappell, according to a proclamation sent from her maiestie and priuie counsell, proclaimed in the Citie of London the 13. of December, which commandement was that day obserued in most parish churches of the citie. 1559. Procession, Epistle, and Gospell in English.

The ninth of Januarie in the morning, the image of Thomas Becket which stoode ouer the doore of the Mercers chappell in London toward the streete, was found broken and cast downe, and a bill set on the church doore deprauing the letters vp thereof. Image of T. Becket throwen downe.

The twelfth of Januarie, the Queenes maiestie remooued from her place of White hall to the Tower by water, the lord maior of London and his brethren the aldermen in their barge, and all the Crafts of the citie in their barges richly decked with targets and banners of euerie mysterie. The batchelors of the maiors companie in their barge, with a foyst, hauing three tops, trimmed and richly decked to waite on them, which shot off guns all the way: all these awaited on her Maiestie, who tooke her barge about two of the clocke in the after noone, the lord maior following after, and euery company in order with great melodie of musicall instruments, till her grace was through London bridge, and landed at her priuie staire of the tower wharfe, and then the maior after leaue taken and thankes of the queene, returned through the bridge with the flood, and landed at the three cranes wharfe in the vinetree.

The 13. of January were created in the tower of London, these noble men following, sir William Parr knight was created marques of Northampton, Edward Seymour was made viscount Beauchamp & earle of Hertford, lord Thomas Howard viscount of Byndon, sir Oliuer Saint Iohn knight, lord Saint Iohn of Bletsall, Sir Henry Carew knight, lord Carew of Hundesdon.

The fourteenth of January, at which time the Londoners had made sumptuous prouision of pageants and otherwise, as hath bene accustomed, the queenes maiestie passed through the city of London to her palace at Westminster: the next day she was crowned by doctor Oglethorpe bishop of Carlile. Coronation.

The fiue and twentith of January, began a parliament at Westminster, before the states whereof, doctor Coxe late come from beyond the seas, and sometime schoolemaister to king Edward the first, made a learned sermon. Parliament.

In this parliament, the first fruites and tenthes were graunted to the crowne, and also the supreame gouernement ouer the state Ecclesiasticall. The first fruits and tenthes grãted to the crowne.

Likewise, the booke of common prayer and administration of the Sacraments in our vulgar toung was restored, to be done as in the time of K. Edward the first.

Moreouer, in the time of this parliament a motion was made by the common house, that the Queenes maiesty might be sued vnto, to graunt her graces licence to the speaker, knights, citizens and burgesses to haue accesse vnto her graces presence, to declare vnto her matter of great importance, concerning the state of this her graces realme. The which petition being mooued to her grace, she most honourably agreed and consented thereunto, and assigned a day of hearing: when the day came, the speaker and common house resorted vnto her graces pallace at Westminster called the White hall: and in the great galery there, her grace most honorably shewed her selfe ready to heare their motion and petition. And when the speaker had solemnly and eloquently set foorth the message, the speciall matter whereof was, to moone her grace to mariage, whereby to all our comforts we might enioy the royall issue of her body to raigne ouer vs, &c.

Motiō made to her maiestie for mariage.

The Queenes maiesty after a little pause, made this answer following, As I haue good cause, so do I giue you all my hearty thankes for the good zeale and louing care you seeme to haue, as well towards me, as to the whole estate of your countrey: your petition I perceiue, consisteth of three parts, and mine answer to the same shall depend of two.

Answer of her maiesty.

And to the first part I may say vnto you, that from my yeares of vnderstanding, sith I first had consideration of my self, to be borne a seruitor of almightie God, I happily chose this kind of life, in the which I yet liue, which I assure you for mine owne part hath hitherto best contented my selfe, and I trust hath bene most acceptable vnto God. From the which, if either ambition of high estate offered to me in mariage by the pleasure and appointment of my Prince, whereof I haue some records in this presence (as you our treasurer well know) or if eschewing the danger of mine enemies, or the auoiding of the perill of death whose messenger, or rather a continuall watchman, the princes indignation, was no little time daily before mine eyes, by whose meanes, although I know, or iustly may suspect, yet I will not now vtter, or if the whole cause were in my sister her life, I will not now burthen her therewith, because I will not charge the dead: if any of these, I say, could haue drawne or dissuaded me from this kind of life, I had not now remained in this estate wherein you see me, but so constant haue I alwaies continued in this determination, although my youth and words may seeme to some hardly to agree together: yet is it most true, that at this day I stand free from any other meaning, that either I haue had in times past, or haue at this present, with which trade of life I am so throughly acquainted, that I trust God, who hath hitherto therein preserued and led me by the hand, will not of his goodnesse suffer me to go alone.

Alex. Eueham.

For the other part, the manner of your petition I do well like, and take it in good part, because that it is simple, and containeth no limitation of place or person; if it had bene otherwise, I must needes haue misliked it very much, and thought it in you a very great presumption, being vnfitting and altogether vnmeete, for you to require them that may cōmand, or those to appoint, whose parts are to desire, or such to bind & limite, whose duties are to obey, or to take vpon you to draw my loue to your likings, or to frame my will to your fantasie: for a guerdon constrained, and gift freely giuen can neuer agree together. Neuertheless, if any of you be in suspect, that when soeuer it may please God to incline my heart to another another kind of life, you may well assure your selues, my meaning is not to do or determine any thing, wherewith the realme may or shall haue iust cause to be discontented. And therefore put that cleane out of your heads, for I assure you, what credit my assurance may haue with you, I cannot tell, but what credit it shall deserue to haue, the sequele shall declare, I will neuer in that matter conclude any thing that shall be preiudiciall to the realme: for the weale, good and safety whereof, I will neuer shun to spend my life. And whom soeuer my chance shall be to light vpon, I trust he shall be such, as shall be as carefull for the realme and you, I will not say as my selfe, because I cannot so certainly determine of any other, but at the leastwise by my good will and desire, he shall be such, as shall be as carefull for the preseruation of the realme, and you as my selfe. And albeit it might please almighty God to continue me still in this mind to liue out of the state of mariage, yet is it not to be feared, but he will so worke in my heart and in your wisedomes, as good prouision by his helpe may be made in conuenient, whereby the realme shall not remaine destitute of an heire, that may be a fit gouernor, and peraduenture more beneficiall to the realme, then such ofspring as may come of me. For though I be neuer so carefull of your well doings, and mind euer so to be, yet may issue grow out of kind, and become perhaps vngracious. And in the end this shall be for me sufficient, that a marble stone shall declare, that a Queene hauing raigned such a time, liued, and died a virgine. And here I end, and take your comming vnto me in good part, and giue vnto you all effsoones my harty thankes, more yet for your zeale and good meaning, then for your petition.

Preachers at the Spittle, and at Pauls crosse.

On Low Sunday, the 2. of Aprill, maister Samepsone, lately come from beyond the seas, made the rehearsall sermon at Paules crosse: but when the Lord Maior and aldermen came to their places in Paules Churchyeard, the pulpet doore was locked, and the key could not be heard of: whereupon the lord Maior sent for a smith to open the locke, which was done, and when the preacher should enter the place, it was found very filthy and vncleane: moreouer, the Verger that had the key of the place where the bishops and prelats vse to stand to heare the sermon, could not be found: whereupon certaine gentlemen, with a forme brake open the doore. This disorder chanced by reason that since Christmasse last past, there was not a sermon preached at Paules crosse, for an inhibition had bene sent from the counsell vnto the bishop of London, that he should admit no preacher, because of the controuersie betwixt the bishops, and them of the clergie that were newe returned into the realme from beyond the seas.

Conference appointed betwixt the old bishops and other preachers.

The last of March, the parliament yet continuing, a conference was begun at Westminster, concerning articles of religion, betwixt the bishops and other of the clergy on the one part, and certaine learned preachers, of whom some had bene in dignity in the Church of England, before that time on the other part. The declaration of the proceeding wherein, and the cause of the breaking vp of the same conference by default and contempt of certaine bishops, part of the said conference was published in a treatise printed by Richard Iugge and Iohn Cawood, printers to the Queenes maiestie as followeth.

The Queenes most excellent maiestie, hauing heard of diuersitie of opinions in certaine matters of religion, amongst sundry of her louing subiects, and being very desirous to haue the same reduced to some godly and Christian concord, thought it best by the aduise of the lords and other her priuy counsell, as well for the satisfaction of persons doubtfull, as also for the knowledge of the very truth in certaine matter of difference: to haue a conuenient chosen number of the best learned of either part, to conferre together their opinions and reasons, and thereby to come to some good and charitable agreement. And hereupon by her maiesties commandement, certaine of her priuy counsell declared this purpose to the Archbishop of Yorke (being also one of the same priuy counsell) and required him that he would impart the same to some of the bishops, and to make choyse of eight, nine or ten of them, and that there should be the like number named of the other part: and further also declared to him (as then was supposed) what the matters should be: And as for the time, it was thought meete to be as soone as possible might be agreed vpon. And then after certaine dayes past, it was signified by the sayd archbishop, that there was appointed by such of the bishops to whom he had imparted this matter, eight persons, that is to say, foure bishops, and foure doctors, who were content at the Queenes maiesties commandement to shew their opinions, and as he termed it, render account of their faith in those matters which were mentioned, and that specially in writing, although he sayd they thought the same so determined, as there was no cause to dispute vpon them.

Dionys. Lambin flor. in Italy of Amiens. he dyd 1572 at 56. he was killd at the Massacre of Paris

It was hereupon fully resolued by the Queenes maiestie, with the aduise aforesayd, that according to their desire, it should be in writing on both parts, for auoyding of much alteration in words, and that the sayd Bishops should (because they were in authority, of degree superiours, first declare their minds and opinions to the matter, with their reasons in writing: and the other number being also eight men of good degree in schooles, and some hauing bene of dignity in the church of England, if they had any thing to say to the contrary, should the same day declare their opinions in like manner. And so each of them should deliuer their writings to the other, to be considered what were to be improoued therein, and the same to declare againe in writing at some other conuenient day, and the like order to be kept in all the rest of the matters: all this was fully agreed vpon with the archbishop of Yorke, and so also signified to both parties. And immediatly hereupon diuerse of the nobility and states of the realme, vnderstanding that such a meeting and conference should be, and that in certaine matters, whereupon the court of Parliament consequently following, some lawes might be grounded: they made earnest meanes to her maiestie, that the parties of this conference, might put and reade their assertions in the English tongue, and that in the presence of them of the nobility, and others of the parliament house, for the better satisfaction and inabling of their owne iudgements, to treate and conclude of such lawes as mought depend thereupon. This also being thought very reasonable, was signified to both parties, and so fully agreed vpon, and the day appointed for the first meeting to be the friday in the forenoone, being the last of March, at Westminster Church, where both for good order, and for honour of the conference, by the Queenes maiesties commandement, the Lords and others of the priuie counsell were present, and a great part of the Nobilitie also: and notwithstanding the former order appointed and consented vnto by both parties, yet the bishop of Winchester, and his collegues, alleaging they had mistaken that their assertions, and reasons should be written, and so onely recited out of the booke, sayd their booke was not readie then written, but they were ready to argue and dispute, and therefore they would for that time repeate in speech that which they had to say to the first proposition. This variation from the order, and specially from that which themselues had by the sayd archbishop in writing before required, adding thereto the reason of the Apostle, That to contend in words is profitable to nothing but to subuersion of the hearer, seemed to the Queenes maiesties counsell somewhat straunge, and yet was it permitted without any great reprehension, because they excused themselues with mistaking the order, and agreed that they should not faile but put it in writing, and according to the former order, deliuer it to the other part, and so the said Bishop of Winchester and his collegues appointed Doctor Cole Deane of Paules to be the vtterer of their minds, who partly by speech onely, and partly by reading of authorities written, and at certaine times being informed of his collegues what to say, made a declaration of their meaning, and their reasons to their first proposition, which being ended, they were asked by the priuie Counsell, if any of them had any more to be said: and they said no. So as then the other part was licensed to shew their mindes, which they did according to the first order, exhibiting all that which they meant to be propounded in a booke written, which after a prayer and inuocation made most humblie to almightie God, for the enduing of them with his holy spirite, and a protestation also to stand to the doctrine of the Catholike Church, builded vpon the Scriptures, and the doctrine of the Prophets and the Apostles, was distinctly read by one Robert Horne Bachelor in Diuinitie, late Deane of Durelme. And the same being ended with some likelihood, as it seemed, that the same was much allowable to the audience, certaine of the Bishops began to say contrarie to their former answere, that they had much more to say to this matter: wherein although they might haue bene well reprehended for such maner of cauillation, yet for auoyding of any mistaking of orders in this colloquie or conference, and for that they should vtter all that which they had to say: it was both ordered and thus openly agreed vpon of both parts in the full audience, that vpon the monday following, the Bishops should bring their minds & reasons in writing to the second assertion, and the last also if they could, and first reade the same, & that done, the other part should bring likewise theirs to the same. And being read, each of them should deliuer to other the same writings.

And in the meane time the bishops should put in writing, not onely all that which Doctor Cole had that day uttered: but all such other matters as they any otherwise could thinke of for the same, and assoone as they might possible, to send the same booke touching that first assertion to the other part, and they should receiue of them that writing which maister Horne had there read that day, and upon monday it should be agreed what day they should exhibite their answeres touching the first proposition. Thus both parts assented thereto, & the assembly quietlie dismissed. And therefore upon monday, the like assemblie began againe, at the place and houre appointed, and there, upon what sinister or disordered meaning is not yet knowne (though in some part it be understanded) the Bishop of Winchester and his collegues, and especially Lincolne, refused to exhibite or reade, according to the former notorious order on friday, that which they had prepared for the second assertion. And thereupon by the Lord keeper of the great seale, they being gently and fauourably required to keepe the order appointed: and that taking no place, being secondly as it behooued, prest with more earnest request, they neither regarding the authoritie of that place, nor their owne reputation, nor the credite of the cause, utterly refused that to doo. And finally, being againe particularlie euerie of them apart distinctly by name, required to understand their opinions therein, they all sauing one (which was the Abbot of Westminster, hauing some more consideration of order, and his duetie of obedience than the other) utterlie and plainelie denied to haue their booke read, some of them as more earnestly than other, some so also, some other more vndiscreetelie, and vnreuerently then others. Whereupon, giuing such example of disorder, stubburnnesse and selfewill, as hath not bene seene and suffered in such an honourable assemblie, being of the two Estates of this Realme, the Nobilitie and the Commons, besides the presence of the Queenes Maiesties most honorable priuie Counsell, the same assemblie was dismissed, and the godly and most Christian purpose of the Queenes Maiestie made frustrate. And afterward for the contempt so notoriouslie made, the Bishops of Winchester and Lincolne, hauing most obstinately both disobeyed common authoritie, and varied manifestly from their owne order, and especially Lincolne, who shewed more folly than the other, were condignly committed to the Tower of London, & the rest (sauing the Abbot of Westminster) stood bound to make dayly and personall appearance before the counsell, & not to depart the citie of London and Westminster, vntill further order were taken with them for their disobedience & contempt.

Treatie of peace renued.

In this meane time a treatie of peace, which had bene in hand the last yeare, betwixt the two kings of Spaine and Fraunce, was now renued againe, and the deputies were appointed to meete at Chasteau Cambresi, a fiue miles distant from Cambray. For the king of Spaine, the Duke of Alua, the prince of Orenge, the bishop of Arras, Rigomes de Silua Earle of Mellito, Monsieur Vigilius Zwichen knight, and president of the prime counsell in the Low countries, who was letted by sicknesse, and could not come. For the French king there came the cardinall of Lorayne, the Constable, the Marshall of Saint Andrew, the bishop of Orliance, and Claude de Aubespine the said kings secretary. For the Queene of England, the bishop of Elye, the Lord William Howard baron of Effingham, lord Chamberlaine to the said Queene, doctor Nicholas Wotton deane of Canterburie and Yorke. After this treatie had continued long, and now rested nothing to stay them from concluding a generall peace, but onely the article touching Calcis, at length that matter was also accorded by a speciall treatie betwixt the Queenes maiestie of England and the French King. The substance of which article was, that Calcis should rest in the French mens hands for the terme of 8. yeeres, and at the end of that terme, to render the same to the Queenes highnes or for default thereof, to forfeite vnto her the sum of 500000. crownes: & for surety hereof, to deliuer fower hostages, such as her Maiestie should thinke sufficient. It was concluded also a firme peace betwixt the Realmes of England & Scotland, such fortresses to be raised as had bene built, and made by the Scots and French in the borders towards England. Sir Iohn Mason knight, secretarie for the French toung, was sent ouer in post with instructions vnto the English commissioners, after whose comming, within two or three daies, a generall peace was concluded betwixt all the parties. And so on the 7. of Aprill, the said peace was proclaimed, to wit, betwixt the Queenes maiestie on the one party, and the French king on the other, their Realmes, Dominions & Subiects, and likewise betwixt her Maiestie and the king Dolphin & Queene of Scots his wife, their Realmes, Dominions and Subiects. This Proclamation was made at London by Garter & Norrey kings at armes, accompanied with three other heraults, and fiue trumpeters, the Lord Maior and Aldermen in their skarlet gownes, being present on horsebacke.

The 8. of May, the parliament brake vp, in which parliament, besides other things before recited, a subsidie was graunted to the queene of two shillings eight pence the pound of mooueable goods, and foure shillings of lands to be paid at two seuerall paiments of euery person, spirituall and temporall.

Church seruice in the English tong

The 8. of May being Whitsunday, the seruice in churches began according to the booke of common prayer, set foorth and established by this last parliament, correspondent to that of king Edwards time.

Citizens of London mustered at Greenwich.

The 2. of July, the citizens of London had a muster afore the Queenes maiestie at Greenewich in the parke, of 1400. men, whereof 800. were pikemen, all in fine corselets, 400. harquebuts, in shirts of maile, with mozins, and 200. halberters in almain riuets, which were furnished and set foorth by the companies of the citie of London: they had to euery hundred two wiffelers richly apparelled, and twelue wardens of the best companies riding in coates of blacke velues to conduct them with drums and fifes, and fiue ensignes, all in ierkins of white bridges satten, cut and lined with blacke sarsenet, with caps, hosen, and skarfes according, the captaines Robert Constable and maister Saunders, brought them in battell ray afore the Queene, euen as they should haue fought, which made a goodly shew before her Maiestie, the emperours and French kings ambassadours being present.

10 July. H. II. died in grieuous pain.

In the moneth of July, the old bishops of England then liuing, were called and examined by certaine of the queenes maiesties counsell, where the bishops of Yorke, Ely, and London with other, to the number of thirteene or fourteene, for refusing to take the oth touching the Queenes supremacie and other articles, they were deprined from their bishoprickes. And likewise were diuerse deanes, archdeacons, parsons, and vicars, deprined from their benefices, and some committed to prison in the tower, Fleete, Marshalsea, and kings bench.

Commissioners.

Commissioners were likewise appointed for the establishing of religion through the whole Realme. For London were appointed sir Richard Sackuile knight, Doctor Horne a Deuine, Doctor Huicke a Ciuilian, and maister Saluage, who called before them diuerse persons of euery parish, and sware them to enquire and present vpon certaine iniunctions.

Iniunctions.

Also the houses of Religion erected by queene Mary, as the priorie of S. Iohn of Ierusalem by Smithfield, the nunnes and brethren of Sion and Sheene, the blacke friers in Smithfield, and the friers of Greenewich were all suppressed: the abbot and monkes of Westminster were put out, a deane, prebends, and canons placed there, and so named the colledge of Westminster founded by M. Elizabeth.

Houses suppressed.

Church images burned.

On the euen of Saint Bartholomew, the day and the morrow after, &c. were burned in Paules church yard, Cheape, and diuerse other places of the citie of London, all the roodes and other images of Churches, in some places the copes, vestments, altar clothes, bookes, banners, sepulchers, and rood lofts were burned.

The 5. of September there fell a three houres tempest at London in ỳ forenoon in the end whereof a great lightning with a terrible clap of thunder, strake the spire (being stone) of the steeple of Allhallowes Church in Bredstreete, about a ten foote beneath the top, out of the which fell a stone that slew a dogge, and ouerthrewe a man playing with the same dogge, and not long after the same spire was taken downe by the Church wardens, to saue the charges of repairing. And at the same instant, by the same tempest, one of the south doores of S. Dionies Church in Fanchurch streete, with the doore of the vestrie of the same Church, were both stricken through and broken. Churches in London striken and broken by tempest.

The 8. and 9. of September. a solemne obsequie was kept in Paules Church at London, for Henrie the second of that name King of France, who deceased about the 10. of July last past, of a wound receiued the 29. of June, in running at tilt in solemne Iustes holden at Paris, in honor of the mariage celebrated betwixt his sister the lady Margaret of France, and Philibert Duke of Sauoy. He was striken on the visor with a launce, as he ranne against the Counte Mountgomerie: the splits entring by the sight of his head peece, and piercing through his eie into his head, so perished his braine, that there was no meane to saue his life. The obsequie for him was kept in very solemne wise with a rich hearse made like an imperiall crowne, susteyned with eight pillars, and couered with blacke velure, with a valence fringed with gold, and richly hanged with scutchions, penons, and banners of the French Kings armes, without any lights. And on the beere was laid a palle of cloth of gold, with a coate armour of the armes of France, and a crest with an imperiall crowne standing vpon the beere. Doctor Parker Archbishop of Canterburie elect, Doctor Barlow bishop of Chichester elect, and Doctor Scory bishop of Hereford elect, executing at the dirige of the euening song in English, they sitting in the Bishops of Londons seate, in the vpper quire in surplices, with doctors hoods about their shoulders. After the Sermon, sixe of the Lords mourners receiued the Communion with the Bishops, which bishops were in copes on their surplices, onely at the ministration of the said Communion. Which being finished, there was a great dinner kept in the Bishop of Londons palace by Paules, where the mourners apparelled them, and so ended the solemnitie of the said obsequies.

Troubles in Scotland.

In this meane time, through controuersie raised betwixt the Scottish nobilitie, and the queene Dowager of Scotland, which chanced specially about matters of religion, certaine of the lords there minding reformation therein, and the queene resisting them to her power, diuerse companies of souldiers and men of warre, were sent out of Fraunce into Scotland to aide the said queene, where they were placed in diuerse townes and forts, to the displeasure of the more part of the Scottish nobilitie, who were forced to sue vnto the queene of England for aide to expell the French. Their suite was the better liked of, for that it was doubted lest the French men vnder pretence of bringing an armie into Scotland to appease the Scots, might attempt some inuasion here in England, considering that by procurement as was thought of the duke of Guise, vnkle to y queene of France and Scotland, a title should seeme to be pretended by his neece the aforesaid queen, as might be gathered by coniectures. The names of the lords of Scotland that made suite for aide against the French men at this season were these:

The laſt of March, the army marching by Dunbar, there iſſued out of the towne certaine horſemen and footmen, offering to ſkirmiſh, towards whom certaine of the Engliſh launces and piſtolets, with certaine harquebuſiers made forwards, but they kept themſelues within their ſtrength, two of the enemies horſemen, and one footman were ſlaine. This done, the army marched on to Linton bridges, where the footmen encamped that night. The horſemen lay at Hadington and in diuerſe other ſmall townes, ſir Iames Croſts lay at Clarkington weſt of Hadington, at the lord of Cockburnes houſe. The firſt of Aprill, the camp remoued to Salt Preſton, and there incamped: this euening, ſir Iames Croſt, with diuerſe of the captaines in his company, met with the earle of Arraine, the lord Iames prior of Saint Andrewes, the maiſter of Marwell, ſir William Kirkaudy lord of Grange, and diuerſe other of the Scottiſh nobilitie with three hundred horſe in their traine.

After they had ſaluted each other, they rode together to Salt Preſton, where the lord Grey lord lieutenant met them, where they entred into communication, and and after departed. The 2. of Aprill, the lord Grey, sir Iames Croft, ẏ lord Scrope, sir George Howard, with other captaines rode to Hulkelborough church, whither came to them the duke Chateau le Reault, with his sonne the earle of Arrain, the earles of Arguile, Glencarne, Southerland, Mentithe, and Rothus, the lord Iames prior of Saint Andrewes, the lord Ruythuen alias Riuen, the lord Ogletree, the lord Boyde, the maister of Maxwell, the L. of Dunclone, the maister of Lindsey, the bishop of Galloway, , the abbot of Saint Colmes Inch, the abbot of Culros, the lord of Pettirow, the lord of Cunningham head, ẏ lord of Grange and other, about 200. horse, there they sate in counsell, and departed for that night.

The fourth of Aprill, fiue young gentlemen appointed to passe into England for pledges, their names were, lord Claude Hamilton, fourth sonne to the duke Chateau le Reault, Robert Dowglas, Archebald Cambell, lord of Longhennel, George Gream second sonne to the earle of Mentithe, Iames Coningham, sonne to the earle of Glencarne.

The first of Aprill, the campe raised from Salt Preston and marched forwards, halfe a mile from Lesterike, beneath a Cragge called Arthurs seate, the duke of Chateau le Reault, the earle of Arraine, the earle of Arguile, the lord Iames prior of Saint Andrewes, and the rest of the noble men of Scotland, accompanied with two hundred horsemen, and fiue hundred footmen, staid for the comming of the English armie, whereupon the lord Grey, sir Iames Croft, the lord Scrope, sir George Howard, and sir Henry Percie repaired to them, & had conference there with the duke, and other the Scottish lords that were in his company.

In the meane while the army staid, but yet at length the horsemen, the vantgard and battell, were commaunded to march forth, who accordingly passed along by the place where the duke and Scottish lords stood, vntill they approched neare to Lesterick: There came Trombull, the Queene Regents trumpet, to the lord lieutenant, and brought with him a safeconduct, giuen vnder the hand and seale, for the safe repaire of sir Iames Croft, sir George Howard, and sire other to accompany them. Whereupon, they preparing themselues, departed towards Edenborough, where the said Queene as then lay within the castle. There went with them maister Sommerset, maister Pelham, and foure other gentlemen. Whilest they were in conference with the Queene, the Frenchmen to the number of nine hundred or a thousand shot, backed with fiue hundred corslets and pikes, and about fiftie horsemen, were come forth of Lieth, vnder conduction of maister Doysell, and the countie Martigues coronell of the French footemen. The Lord Grey vnderstanding thereof, came vp to the hill, appointed an officer at armes called Rouge Croste to go vnto them, with commaundement from him, that they should retire their forces forth of the field into the towne of Lieth: for if it were not for the promise which he had made to the queene Dowager, he would cause them to depart. The herault doing his message, receiued answere, that they were vpon their maister and mistresse ground, and therefore meant not to remoue from it. Rouge Crosse returning with this answere, was sent againe, to command them eftsoons to go their way backe to Lieth, for if they did not, they should be sent away with a mischiefe. But vnneth had the herault done this second message, when the French men stepping forth, discharged a whole volie of their shot into the field against the Lord Grey and his companie. Hereupon, the Englishmen and they fell in skirmish, which continued for the space of foure houres and more, so hote and earnestly mainteyned on both parts, that the like had not lightly beene seene long time before: yet at the length the Englishmen droue the French footemen ouer the hill, and wan the Crag from them, and put them from a Chappell, where they had stood a great while, vsing it for a couert from the Englishmens shot. Then the enemies that were in Lieth shot off diuers peeces of their great artillerie out of the Towne against the Englishmen, who on the other part brought forth two field peeces, and couered them with a troup of horsemen, and hauing planted them to some aduantage, discharged the same among the enemies, who perceiuing that, gaue place, and sodainely the English demilances gaue a charge on them, brake in amongst them, and slue diuerse of them, whereby they were forced to ritire backe into Lieth, being followed welneere to the gates of the Towne. There were slaine in this skirmish of the French about 140. beside them that remained prisoners. Of the Englishmen there were also diuerse slaine, and many hurt. The same day sir Iames Croft and sir George Howard returned from the Q. Regent, after they had spent a long time in talke with her.

The seuenth of Aprill, a new trench was cast beside the Crag, and thereon two peeces of ordinance planted. The eight of Aprill, the Frenchmen shot at the English campe very sore out of Saint Nicholas steeple, where were planted two great peeces of ordinance, although they did no great hurt: but the same night the Englishmen cast a trench beyond the Crag, and placed in the same trench certaine small peeces of artillerie, which went off the next day against the enemies, and they likewise shot off against the English. The twelfth of Aprill, a bullet of a great peece of ordinance, being shot out of Lieth, did light in the camp and slue three men: but they were answered againe with our Canons. The fourteenth day of Aprill, being Easter day, the Englishmen shot off their great Ordinance, and the Frenchmen answered them againe all that day. The footemen also skirmished, so that diuerse were hurt on both parties. The same day the pile of Blackenesse was surrendred to maister Winter. The same day, 9. French men apparelled like woomen came forth of Lieth, and counterfeiting some light demeanor, trained one of the English scowts within their danger, whom they tooke, and chopped off his head, which they set vpon the toppe of one of their Church steeples. The fifteenth day of Aprill, a fiftie horsemen, and about fiue hundred harquebusiers, who making to the new trenches, were vpon the English men that warded vpon such a sodaine, that they slue and wounded no small number, and possessing the trenches awhile, stopped the touch holes of three peeces of the artillerie, tooke maister Mawrice Barkeley prisoner, and his enseigne:

Brian Fitz Williams was sore wounded, &c. The alarme being brought to the campe, sir Iames Croft and other repaired towards the trench with all expedition, and perceiuing the French men to be maisters of one of the trenches, he commanded captaine Vaughan with his band to enter the trench, and to releeue those that were hardly beset of the Frenchmen, which was done with such manhood, that the enemies were expulsed, and sixteene of them slaine: captaine Sommerset and captaine Reade with their bands followed them, as they retired, and maister Arthur Grey with certaine demilances, and charging them with great courage, draue them into the towne, and made of them great slaughter, but Arthur Grey was shot through the shoulder. The 16. of Aprill, a supply of 2200. footemen came to the campe, ouer whom was captaine sir Andrew Corber, sir Rowland Stanley, sir Thomas Hesketh, sir Arthur Manwering, sir Laurence Smith, maister Francis Tunstall, maister Edward Littleton, captaine Caruell, Philip Shurley, and Dauid Morris. They were garded with 500. horsemen, sir Ralph Sadler, sir Francis Leake, sir Iohn Foster, and sir Nicholas Strange, hauing charge to see them safely conducted, who after they had brought the past all danger of enemies, left the in safety by the way, and were come a day or two before them to the campe.

The 17. of Aprill, Maister Winter caused diuerse of the ship boats, being well manned, to giue a great alarme at the side of the towne towards the water, discharging many bulles and harquebusiers of croke into the towne, during which time there was a piteous cry made by the women and children within the towne. The 20. of Aprill, many peeces were shot off out of the trenches into the towne. There issued out at the gates one hundred shot, to haille such of the Englishmen as came foorth to offer skirmish, the pioners both Scots and English were occupied in making of a new trench neare to the towne.

The twentith of Aprill, the Bishop of Ualence, accompanied with sir Henry Percie, and three hundred horsemen, came to Lesterick, the Lord Lieutenant, sir Iames Croft, the lord Scrope, and sir Ralfe Sadler, met him at the further end of the ward. After they had receiued him with salutations, he was conducted by Rouge crosse from the campe vnto Edenborough, and so vp to the castle to confer with the Queene Dowager. He was no sooner in the castle, but there issued foorth of Lieth the number of two hundred Frenchmen, and began a hot skirmish, which continued two houres, at which diuerse were slaine on both parts. The same night, nine peeces of ordinance were planted in the new trench, so that the next day the same peeces were shot off toward the steeple of S. Anthonies Church, whereby the peeces of ordinance that lay in the same steeple, were dismounted by them, and likewise those that lay in the steeple of Saint Nicholas Church, where a Gunner was slaine that stood at one of them, the peece and the gunner tumbling downe both together: a great peece of this church was beaten downe, and the steeple defaced. The Bishop of Ualence after he had talked with the Queene, returned to commune with the Lords of the congregation.

The 23. of Aprill, the Pioners Scottish and English, were busied in casting of trenches.

On the 24. of Aprill, there issued out of Lieth seauenteene horsemen, who offered the skirmish, and vnder the place called little London, 300. or 400. of them shot wer-were placed, at length certaine of the English Launces gaue a charge vpon their horsemẽ, who therewith retiring drew the Englishmẽ within danger of their shot, but ỳ French were forced to retire, without any great hurt done to ỳ Englishmẽ.

The 25. of Aprill, the Pioners finished the new fort, named Mount Pelham, to the gard whereof Captaine Vaughan was appointed gouernor with 1200. souldiors. This fort was railed on the south side of the towne, the plot whereof was cast square with foure bulwarkes at euerie corner, and 12. battering peeces planted in places conuenient. This day, there issued out of Lieth on the East side, 70. or 80. horsemen, and 200. harquebuliers offering the skirmish, towards whom certaine of the English light horsemen made, and charging them, drane thẽ backe to their footemen, who with their shot receiued the light horsemen so sharply, that they were forced to retire: in the which retire Iames Hamilton a Scottish man was taken prisoner. This day captaine Perith, and captaine Hayes, hauing charge of a troupe of light horsemen, vnder sir Henry Percy, and the lord of Grange, were taken prisoners before Dunbar, and to the number of 20. or 30. other were likewise taken or slaine. The same night also 2000. footemen with the pioners, were sent to the other side of the towne, beyond the Canon milles, where the pioners cast a trench for the safe lodging of the army, which remooued the next day from Lesliricke downe into the valley by the said Canon milles, called the red Braes. As the army was incamping, certaine of the enemies horsemen and footemen skirmished with the English Launces and light horsemen a long time, there were two Frenchmen slaine with their horses also. In time of this skirmish, two Canons were conueyed and planted in the new trench, which discharged diuers shot at the enemies.

The seuen and twentith of Aprill, the great artillerie was planted aloft on the hill aboue the campe, within lesse than a curiors shot of the towne wals, and the pioners were set a worke to cast new trenches, from the place where the same ordinance was lodged vnto Mountpelham, drawing so neere vnto Lieth, as the harquebuse might reach them that watched and warded within the great bulwarke. The French kept the same day a trench which they had made without the towne, continually shooting at the English men in the campe, but the same night the English men won that trench from them, slue diuers of them therein with their scout, which being done, they gaue a great alarme to the towne both by land and water, the ship-boates shooting off against the towne very hotly, and they within the towne likewise at the English men. The same night was the great ordinance planted, and maister Markham hurt. The 28. the said great ordinance went off, and shot continually the more part of the day. The bishop of Valence departed the same day towards Barwike, and this night sir George Howard, that had bene sent backe to Barwicke, to signifie to the D. of Norfolke the estate of the siege, returned with sir Richard Lee, being conducted with 500. horsemen.

The 30. of Aprill, the great artillerie were shot off very hotly, and the French likewise shot off theirs, and comming forth of the towne, skirmished with the Englishmen: this night the pioners made new trenches towards the South bulwarke. The last of Aprill, a sodaine fire was raised within the towne, which hugely encreased and continued the most part of the night following: at the beginning when it first appeared, the English ordinance was shot off to the place where the fire was, which shot together with help of the wind that was very great, did marvellously augment the same fire: neuertheless the French at that present time offered a skirmish, & continued the same neare the space of two houres. It was appointed, that certaine bands should make alarme to the towne, in so much that captaine Vaughan, with diuerse other souldiers of Mountpelham entred the ditch, and approched the wals, but retired without receiuing any great hurt. The first of May, the Frenchmen early in the morning set vp their may-poles in certaine bulwarkes, and 14. enlignes, the which being discouered of them in the campe, they saluted them with a peale of great ordinance, and likewise the French answered them againe, and so continued the most part of that day.

Abt. this time flor. St. Charles Borromeo Cardinl. Archby of Milan.

The second of May, the pioners made the trenches for the artillery to be planted in battery. The night following they placed the artillery in the new trench, and the next morning, the same battery went off, and continued all that day. The night ensuing, the pioners made a trench by the Citadell, wherein they might lodge some shot, and captaine Vaughan with diuerse of the bands in Mountpelham, gaue two fierce assaults to the towne, entred the ditches and viewed the flankers: whereupon the French shot off the same flankers, and manning their wals, shot off two or three volies of their small artillery, slaying and hurting to the number of twenty Englishmen, among other little Norton was one.

The fourth of May, there were three enlignes appointed to gard the new trenches, and towards night the Frenchmen that were in the trench vnder the Citadell, made a sally vpon the Englishmen that garded the sayd trench, but could not preuaile. The same night the Englishmen conueyed two culuerings ouer the water to scoure the mils, and before the breake of the day they had brent one of the same mils. The fift of May, 4. souldiers belonging to our great ordinance set fire & brent the other mill. This day also, as French gentlemen came foorth to discouer the English trenches, captaine Reade commanded one of his souldiers to shoote at them, but through mishap his peece burst, and a shiuer thereof brake the arme of the sayd captaine.

The sixt of May, the English ordinance on the further side the water, began to shoote off against the enemies very hotely. This day the earle of Argile, and diuerse other noble men of Scotland, came to Edenborough with two thousand horsemen and footemen, who shewed themselues in order of a muster on the hill vnderneath the castle, which being perceiued of the French within Lieth, they shot of three great peeces of artillery at them, but hurt them not. The night ensuing, the great ordinance in the English mens trenches and bulwarkes, continued shooting on euery side: and herewith commandement was giuen by the lord lieutenant and the counsell, that the whole army should be ready armed by midnight. In the morning by two of the clocke, diuerse bands passed foorth towards the towne, and entring the ditches offered to scale, other captaines with their men approched the bulwarkes, and other were appointed to enter beside the milles. Beside the English bands, there were a thousand Scots ioyned with them, whereof fiue hundred with captaine Vaughan and other were commanded to attempt the bulwarke next to Mountpelham, and other fiue hundred went with such such Englishe captaines as were commanded to assault the breach.

Moreouer, as well the lances as light horsmen, were assigned to gard the fields: sir George Howard with the lances keeping betwixt the fort of Mountpelham and the sea westward, and sir Henry Percy with the light horsemen, betwixt the campe and the sea eastward. The rest of the footmen that went not to the assault, were also appointed to gard the trenches and field, in such wise as was thought expedient, and vpon warning giuen by captaine Randall sergeant maior, such as had bin commanded to giue the assault in their seuerall appointed places, prealed with courage, & boldly aduentured to climbe the wals, and enter at the breaches, but yet their attempt wanted the wished successe: for what through the policy of the frech, in stopping the currāt of the riuer that night, & what by reason of the vnfitnesse of the ladders, being too short, the assailants were repulsed, & were forced to retire with the losse of 7. or 8. score englishmen, or more, which were slaine outright, besides those that were wounded, being at the least two or three hundred.

The 8. of May, sir George Howard and sir Richard Lee departed toward Barwike with certaine companies of horsemen for their safe conduction.

The ninth of May, the Frenchmen wrought within the towne to fortifie and repaire the breaches. The same day also the French had manned to the sea-wards a bote fraught with fifty harquebuliers, meaning to conuey them ouer to Insketh, but the English ships discouering them, prepared certaine botes to encounter thē, whereof they being aware, returned.

The 10. of May, maister Ingleby, captaine Pickman, and captaine Browne came to the campe from Barwike with a supply of foure hundred & fifty souldiers.

The twelfth of May about midnight, the Frenchmen to the number of two hundred sallied foorth of the towne, minding to giue a camisado to the Englishmen that kept watch in the trenches at the west side of Mountpelham, but they were descried and repulsed.

The fifteenth of May, sir Francis Leake came to the campe with a supply of fiue hundred men from Barwike.

The one and twentieth of May about seuen of the clocke at night, there issued foorth of Lieth six horsemen and a hundred footemen harquebuliers, marching toward Mountpelham to offer skirmish: whereupon captaine Vaughan went foorth to them very orderly, and skirmished with them a prety while, in the end the Frenchmen were driuen to retire. The same night maister Francis Sommerset and other captaines were appointed to keepe a fort built aboue the campe, and tooke the name of him being captaine thereof, & was called Sommersets mount. The 22. sir Peter Carew came to the campe, being sent from the court. The 24. of May at night about seuen of the clocke, the French sallied foorth to the number of 200. footmen and 20. horsemen, meaning, as it appeared, to haue wonne the trenches from the Englishmen, whereupon a sore skirmish followed, diuers slaine, and many hurt on both parts: yet in the end the French were driuen home by force. The same day the Frenchmen of Dunbarre tooke an English hoy laden with beare, beefe, and bacon.

campe, where they arriued on the 10. of June, on which day the queene Dowager departed this life.

The thirteenth of June, sir William Cicill principall secretary to the quenes maiesty, with sir William Cordall, and doctor Wotton deane of Canterbury and Yorke came to Barwike, appointed commissioners on her said maiesties behalfe to treate of an accord with the countie de Randon, and the bishop of Valence commissioners sent for that purpose from the French king and his wife Mary queene of Scots.

The fourteenth of June a certaine number of Frenchmen came foorth of Lieth to gather cockles on the sands towards Mountpelham, whereof the Englishmen perceiuing, set vpon them, slue 70. and tooke 16. of them prisoners.

The sixteenth of June, the forenamed commissioners came to Edenborough, and as maister Secretary and the other passed the English forts and campe, they were saluted with a gallant peale of harquebusiers.

The seuenteenth of June about eight of the clocke, an abstinence of warre was concluded, warning being giuen by the discharging of two peeces of ordinance out of the castle, and then the Frenchmen shewed themselues vpon their rampiers.

The 22. of June, the abstinence of warre was broken off.

The 4. of July about 3. of the clocke in the afternoone, the French came out of Lieth to gather cockles, whereupon the lord lieutenant being at that present in Mountpelham, sent a drum vnto monsieur Doysell, to signifie vnto him, that his souldiers had gone further without their bounds then they might do by the order taken by the commissioners of both parts: Doysell answered, that they were no souldiers, but poore people which went to gather cockles for their releefe and sustenance. The drum sayd, that if they kept not themselues within their appointed limits, the lord lieutenant meant to send them backe not greatly to their ease: whereunto Doysell replied, that if he so did, he would do the best he could to ayde thē: hereupon the English horsemen and footmen of Mountpelham gaue a charge vpon them, and slue of them to the number of 50, and tooke certaine prisoners.

The first of July issued out of Lieth foureteene horsemen, and a hundred footemen, which offered the skirmish, but vpon the shooting of the great artillery from Mountpelham, they retired home againe into the towne. The night following about twelue of the clocke, one Scattargood an English man that was a gunner, and had fained himselfe to flie from the English campe for manslaughter into Lieth, and was receiued of the frenchmen, beleeuing that he had meant no deceipt, came out of the towne, after he had remained there about seuen dayes, in which meane while he had vnderstood fully the state of the towne, and now vpon his returne, made relation thereof as he knew.

The first of July, the lord Grey lord lieutenant, sir William Cicill secretary, and sir Ralph Sadler, about three of the clocke in the after noone, gaue order, that there shold no peece be shot, nor shew of hostility made vntil seuen of the clocke the same night: and herewith sent Gerueys Clifton vnto all the souldiers that warded in the trenches and bulwarkes on the west side of Lieth, to command them to obserue the like order, and sir Iohn Neuill was sent with like order vnto the souldiers that lay in Somerset mount.

The

The peace now bing concluded, on the seuenth of July, sir Francis Leake, and sir Gerueis Clifton, accompanied with two French gentlemen were sent to the towne of Lieth, to signifie vnto monsieur Doysell, the bishop of Amiens, Labrosse, Martignes, and other the French lords and captaines, that they were come thither by commaundement from the commissioners to cause the peace alreadie concluded, to be proclaimed, which accordingly was done in manner following: Peace concluded in Scotland.

The most mightie princesse, Elizabeth by the grace of God, Queene of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. And the most christian king Francis and Mary, by the same grace of God king & queene of Fraunce and Scotland, haue accorded vpon a reconciliation of a peace and amitie to be inuiolably kept betwixt them, their subiects, kingdomes and countries, and therfore in their names it is straitly commaunded to all manner of persons borne vnder their obeisances, or being in their seruice, to forbeare all hostilitie either by sea or land, and to keepe good peace each with other from this time forwards, as they will answere thereto at their vttermost perils. Immediatly after this proclamation was ended, sir Francis Leake, and sir Gerueis Clifton were brought to monsieur Doysels lodging, where was prepared for them a banquet of thirtie or fortie dishes, & yet not one either of flesh or fish, sauing one of a pouldered horse, as was auouched by one that auouched himselfe to haue tasted thereof. Peace proclaimed in Scotland.

Articles of the peace, thirteene in number, were to this effect.

1 First, the French king and queene do not onely relinquish the stile, title and armes of England and Ireland, but do also bind themselues from henceforth to forbeare any more to vse or beare the same, and shall forbid their subiects the vsing of the same title, in what sort soeuer it be, within any of their countries or dominions, forbidding also as much as in them lyeth, the ioyning or quartering any manner of waies the armes of England with those of Scotland or France. Articles of peace at the siege of Lieth.

2 All such letters patents, or other writings as haue bene heretofore made, wherein the said title is mentioned, or whereunto any stile concerning the said armes is annexed, shall be reformed, and new made, without putting to them the title or armes of England or Ireland, and that all manner of writings or instruments concerning the said title, and being sealed with the said armes, not being renewed or reformed within fiue moneths after the publication of this treatie, shall be void and of none effect.

3 Scotland shall be gouerned by a counsell of twelue of the noblest of that countrey, which nobilitie shall be taken out of foure and twentie, to be first chosen by parliament, by the three estates there, and of those twelue, seuen shall be named by the Scottish queene, and fiue by the lords of the parliament.

4 All things passed there since March 1558. shall be ouerpassed and forgotten, and by parliament the surety of the same shall be confirmed, and euery man restored to his office in that realme.

5 No French man shall haue any office in Scotland.

6 Sixe score French men souldiers only shall remaine in Scotland, viz. three score in Dunbar, & 3. score in Inskith, & those to be monthly mustered, and payed by the counsell of the realme, and to be iustified by the lawes of Scotland.

7 No munition nor victuals shall be brought into Scotland, but from fiue moneths to fiue moneths, and then onely for those places, and for the said number of fiue score souldiers.

8 No forraine ships or men of warre shall be from henceforth brought into Scotland, but by the consent and will of the Scots.

9 Leith shall be demolished by the view of the Queenes maiesties commissioners, and in such sort as they shall think conuenient.

10 The new buildings of Dunbarre shall also be raced.

11 Matters of religiō in Scotlād be ouerpassed in silēce without any alteratiō.

12 The league betweene the Queenes maiestie and the nobilitie of Scotland is also passed ouer without any reuocation.

13 Finally, in the treatie betweene her highnesse, and the said French king and queene, the said king and queene, are by the speciall clause bound to her highnesse to performe and keepe the said couenants that touch the Realme and subiects of Scotland.

After that this peace was then fully established, the French men were embarked at Leith in English vessels, those onely excepted that were appointed to remaine as pledges with the English men till the ships came backe againe, and a few other that were permitted to passe through England into their countrey.

The queenes maiestie made great preparation of armor, munition, and powder, to be in a readinesse to defend her realme, if need should happen.

The merchant Tailors free-schoole.

The one and twentieth of March a notable grammer schoole was founded by the maister, wardens, and assistants of the worshipfull companie of the merchant Tailors of London, in the parish of Saint Laurence Pountney in the same city: Richard Hils late maister of that company hauing giuen fiue hundred pound toward the purchase of an house, called the Hanmor of the Roole, sometime the duke of Buckinghams, wherein the schoole is kept.

Edict of January in France. Toleration to Wil. Geffrey whipped.

The 10. of Aprill was one William Geffrey whipped from the Marshalsea in Southwarke to Bedlem without Bishops gate of London, for that he professed one Iohn Moore to be Christ our Sauiour: on his head was set a paper wherein was written as followeth: William Geffrey a most blasphemous heretik, denying Christ our Saviour in heauen. The sayd Geffrey being stayed at Bedlem gate, Iohn Moore was brought foorth, before whom William Geffrey was whipped till he confessed Christ to be in heauen. Then the sayd Iohn Moore being examined and answering ouerthwartly, was commanded to put of his coate, dublet and shirt, which he seemed to do very willingly, and after being tied to the cart, was whipped an arrowes shoote from Bedlem, where at the last he also confessed Christ to be in heauen, and himselfe to be a sinfull man: then was Iohn Moore sent againe vnto Bedlem, and William Geffrey to the Marshalsea, where they had laine prisoners nigh a yeare and a halfe, the one for professing himselfe to be Christ, the other a disciple of the same Christ.

The beginning of y^e troubles of France

This yeare was such a scarcity of wheate and other graine, that sir William Chester maior of London, and other the principall magistrats of the city, were forced to make prouision for wheate & rie from beyond the seas, to a great quantity, which was a releefe, not only to the citizens, but also to the countries neare adioyning.

On Wednesday the fourth of June, betweene foure and fiue of the clocke in the afternoone, the steeple of Paules in London, being fired by lightning, brast foorth (as it seemed to the beholders) two or three yards beneath the foote of the crosse, and from thence brent downe the sphere to the stone worke and bels, so terribly, that within the space of foure houres, the same steeple, with the roofes of the church so much as was timber, or otherwise combustible, were consumed, which was a lamentable sight, and pitifull remembrance to the beholders thereof.

The Q: Mother declard Regent

The length of Paules church in London is twelue score Taylors yards, which is seuen hundred and twentie foote: the breadth thereof is one hundred and thirty foote: the height of the steeple was fiue hundred and twentie foote, whereof the stone worke is two hundred and sixtie foote: and the sphere which now is burnt, was likewise two hundred and sixtie foote: the height of the body of that church is one hundred and fiftie foote.

After this mischance, the M. maiestie being much grieued for the losse of so beautifull a monument, directed her highnesse letters to the Maior of London, willing him to assemble the citizens, to take some order for speciall ayde & helpe for the repairing againe of the same, and she of her most gracious disposition, to giue a comfort vnto other, for the furtherance thereof, did presently giue and deliuer in gold 1000. marks, & a warant for 1000. load of timber to be taken out of her maiesties woods or elsewhere. And the citizens of London granted one benevolence, & three fifteenes to be foorthwith paid. And the clergie of England vnder the prouince of Canterbury granted to giue the fortieth part of the value of their benefices, being charged with first fruits, & not being charged with first fruits, to pay the thirtieth part. And the clergie of the diocesse of London graunted to giue the thirtieth part of their benefices, being in first fruits and the 20. part being out of first fruits. And immediatly by the commandement of her maiestie, her priuie counsell tooke order, that fiue citizens of London, and two of the clergie of the church of Paules had charge to ouersee, and set forward this worke, who made such expedition, that within one moneth next following the burning thereof, the same was couered with boords and lead, after the manner of a false roofe: and the greatnes of the worke dispatched in so short time could scarsely be credited of any but such as saw the same. And the cause of this great hast, was for feare of raine which might haue perished the vaults, to the destruction of the whole church: and before the said yeare was fully ended, all the side Iles of the said Church were framed of new and maine timber, and couered with lead, and fully finished. And the same yeere also the great roofe of the west end was framed and made of new and great timber in Yorkeshire, and brought to London by sea, and set vp and couered with lead, and fully finished. And in like manner within the said yeere, the whole roofe and frame of the east end of the said church was made in Yorke shire, and brought by sea to London, and after set vp as the rest of the roofes, but the roofes of the north and south endes of the same church remained couered with boords till 1564. that the bishop (as I am informed) tooke vpon him the charge of repairing them, and for the same laid out 720. pound, and so that worke ceased to proceed any further.

Ann. reg. 4. New coines.

The fifteenth of November, the Queenes maiestie published a proclamation for diuers small peeces of siluer money to be current, as the sixe pence, foure pence, three pence, two pence, and a penny, three halfe pence, and three farthings: & also forbad all forraine coines to be current within the same realme, as well gold as siluer, calling them into her maiesties mints, except two sorts of crownes of gold, the one the French crowne, the other the Flemish crowne: whereupon for the space of halfe a yeere, was weekely brought into the Tower of London 8000. 10000. 12000. 16000. 20000. 22000. pound of siluer plates: & as much or more in pistolets, and other gold of Spanish coines, & one weeke in pistolets and other Spanish gold 26000 pound, all these to be coined with the queenes stamps.

The 26. of December, sir Ambrose Dudley knight, called lord Ambrose Dudley second sonne of Iohn late Duke of Northumberland, was created baron Lisle, and afterward the same day earle of Warwike at Westminster.

1562. Monstrous birthes.

This yeare in England were many monstrous births: in March a mare brought forth a foale with one body, and two heads, and as it were a long taile growing out betweene the two heads. Also a sow farrowed a pigge with foure legges like to the armes of a man child, with hands and fingers, &c. In Aprill a sow farrowed a pigge with two bodies, eight feete, and but one head, many calues and lambes were monstrous, some with collers of skin growing about their neckes, like to the double ruffes of shirts and necker-chefes then vsed. The foure and twentieth day of May, a man child was borne at Chichester in Sussex, the head, armes, and legges wherof, were like an Anatomie, the breast and belly monstrous bigge from the naull, as it were a long string hanging: about the necke a great collar of flesh and skin growing like to the ruffe of a shirt or necker chefe, comming vp aboue the eares pleyting and folding, &c.

Declaration of her maiestie, causes why to arme her subiects into France.

The realme of France being in great trouble about this season, by meanes of ciuill dissension and warres that rose amongst themselues, the queenes maiestie and her honorable priuy counsell being enformed thereof, first published a booke entituled, A declaration of the Queenes Maiestie, containing the causes which haue constrained her to arme certaine of her subiects for defence both of her owne estate, and of the most christian king Charles the ninth her good brother, and his subiects. The booke followeth thus:

The Triumvirate of the D. of Guise, K. of Navarr & the Constable

Although the miſerable and afflicted eſtate of the realme of France is to be lamented of all chriſtian princes and nations, and requireth ſome good remedy, not onely for preſeruation of the king there, with the queene his mother, and the ſubiects of that realme from danger and ruine: but alſo for the ſtay of the reſt of chriſtendome in peace, and to be free from the like ciuill warre, into the which, as it appeareth by theſe ſtrange dealings in the ſayd realme, it is meant the ſame ſhall fall: yet there is no prince that hath more iuſt cauſe to haue regard hereunto, nor that hath more indifferently and earneſtly intended the recouery of quietneſſe and accord therein, then the queenes maieſty of this realme of England, both by her owne gracious diſpoſition and by aduiſe of her counſell. For as the matter is now plainely diſcouered to the world, and as her maieſty hath prooued the ſame ſufficiently by her owne late experience, ſhe is not onely touched as other princes ought to be, with great compaſſion and commiſeration for the vnnaturall abuſing of the French king her good brother, by certaine of his ſubiects, the danger of his perſon and his blood, the lamentable and barbarous deſtruction, hauocke and ſpoile of ſo many chriſtian innocent people beyond all meaſure: but her maieſty alſo euidently ſeeth before her eyes, that if ſome good remedy be not by Gods goodneſſe prouided in ſeaſon, the very fire that is now kindled and diſperſed there, is purpoſely meant and intended to be conueyed and blowne ouer to inflame this her crowne and her realme. Which great perill, although it be ſo plainely ſeene to all wiſe and prouident men both at home and abroad, that they cannot miſlike her care and prouidence to remedy the ſame in time, yet hath her maieſty thought not conuenient to notifie ſome part of her dealings herein, ſo as it ſhall well appeare how ſincerely her maieſty hath both hitherto proceeded with her neighbours, and how plainely and vpright ſhe is determined to continue.

The queene of England neareſt touched with the French troubles.

The Maſſacre at Vaſſy by the D. of Guiſe

The Ciuil warr freſh out in France

Firſt, it hath bene well ſeene to the world how well diſpoſed her maieſtie was euen at the beginning of her raigne, to the reſtitution of peace to chriſtendome, that for loue thereof, was contented to forbeare for certaine yeeres the reſtitution of a portion of her ancient dominion, when all other parties to the ſame peace, with whom, and by whoſe alliance her crowne ſuſtained loſſe, were immediatly reſtored to the moſt part of their owne in poſſeſſion: and yet it cannot be forgotten within how ſhort a ſpace, or rather no ſpace after, and by whom, and vpon how great euident and iuſt cauſes (as well by meanes of force and armes firſt taken, as by other open attempts againſt her M.) ſhe was conſtrained to prepare like armes of defence onely, euen for her whole crowne and kingdome, and ioyntly therewith for the ſafetie of her next neighbors from a plaine tyrannie. And alſo how ſincerely her maieſtie proceeded therein: firſt by ſundrie requeſtes and meanes made, to forbeare their attemps: next, by open declaration of her intent to be onely for defence of her ſelfe, and by the whole handling of the matter: and laſtly, by the euent and iſſue of the cauſe, all the world hath clearely vnderſtood.

The proceedings for the quietneſſe in Scotland. 20. Aprill 1560.

After which dangerous troubles pacified, the M. of Scots at her returne to her countrey, feeling the great commoditie hereof following, both to her ſelfe and her realme, & vnderſtanding the ſincere dealing of the M. maieſtie in all her former actions, did by diuers meanes giue ſignification to her maieſtie of a great deſire to enter with with her into a ſtraighter kind of amitie: whereunto her maieſtie being of her owne nature much enclined, readily accorded. And how far and prosperously they both proceeded therein by many and sundrie mutuall offices of friendship, aswell the good will shewed by her maiestie to the Queene of Scots vncles, the Guises, and to all her friends and ministers passing and repassing through this her realme, as also the accord of the enteruiew intended betwixt them both this last summer, hath well declared.

1. March 1562. The slaughter at Vassy.

But in the midst of these her M. quiet and peaceable determinations, she hath bene to her great griefe vtterly disappointed, and constrained for her owne interest to attend and intermeddle in the pacification of these great troubles in France neere to her realme, the same being stirred vp by such as both were her last manifest great enemies, and haue also (they know how) continued the cause of mistrust till this day, by manifest arguments of iniustice, which her maiestie is content to conceale, for the great affection that she beareth to the Scottish M. First her maiestie at the beginning, doubting by the increase of these French troubles, that not onely that realme should fall into danger of ruine by diuision, as it now is, but also, that the rest of christendome, and specially her owne realme, both for the neerenesse thereto, and for the respects of them which were the principall authors and parties in these troubles, should be also disturbed and brought to danger: vsed all the meanes that might be by messages, by solicitations, by aduise, yea by a speciall ambassade of a person of good credit, to haue some mediation made betwixt these parties being at controuersie. But such was the policy and violence of the one partie in hastly proceeding euen at the first, as no mediation could be heard of or allowed. And yet could not her M. discontinue her good intent, but seeing the cruelties increase, the bloodshedding and murders continued: yea, which was most perilous, the young king and the M. his mother being sodainly assailed, and found without force, were directed & drawne altogether by the very authors of the troubles, to suffer their name & authoritie to be abused, euen to the killing of the kings owne vnarmed innocent people, the spoyling of his rich townes, the breaking of his best aduised Edicts, the persecuting of his own blood and his nobilitie, the destroying of his faithfull approoued seruants, with many such other heapes of mischiefs: and all these for no other cause but for the particular appetites of some, and to breake with violence the ordinances of the realme, specially those which were lately deuised by the long and great councell of the realme, both for quietnesse in matters of religion, and for the relefe of the Kings estate diuers waies.

And finally, her M. vnderstanding very certainely of an open destruction & subuersion there put already in vre, & likewise intended against all states and persons professing the gospell abroad, her maiestie thought it very needful to thinke of some other meanes of more efficacie, to induce the authors of those troubles, to giue care to some reasonable motions of accord, & not to aduenture the ruine of a realme for their particular appetites: and therefore determined to send a solemne ambassade of a certaine number of personages of her councell, being of great authoritie, experience, & indifferencie, to repaire into France, to assay how some stay might be reasonably deuised for these extremities, by preseruing of both parts indifferently, to the seruice of the K. their soueraigne, according to their estats of birth and calling.

16. Iuly 1562. An Ambassage intended by the queene of England.

But this maner of proceeding also could no wise be liked nor allowed, neither could could answer be had hereunto from the good young king, nor the timerous queene his good mother, without the only direction of that part, which both began and continued the troubles from the beginning.

And whilest her Maiesty was thus well occupied, meaning principally the weale and honour of the king her good brother, and secondly, well towards both the parties being at diuision, without the preiudice of either: a plaine contrary course and proceeding was vsed against her Maiesty, by the which was made manifest what was further meant and intended by them that had so oftentimes refused to heare her Maiesty speake for mediation and accord. All her Maiesties subiects and marchants as well of her cities of London and Exceter, as of other port townes in the west parts of the realme, being at that very time in diuers parts of the countrey of Britaine, resorting thither only for trade of marchandises, and ready to returne to their owne ports, were in the same time apprehended, spoiled, miserably imprisoned: yea, such as sought to defend themselues cruelly killed, their ships taken, their goods and marchandise sealed and nothing layd nor deuised to charge them, but onely furiously calling them all Hugonots, a word though very strange and foolish to many of the honest marchants and poore mariners: yet fully sufficient to declare from whence these commandements came, and what their intent is to prosecute, when their time shall serue them: neither were these spoiles small or few, but in value and number great and many: neither done by priuate fury, but by publike officers, who were also maintained by gouernours of the countries: yea none of her maiesties subiects were spared that could be taken, though some escaped with great hazard. Well, hereof complaint was made where it ought to be, but therein hath bene as small regard had, as was before for robbing of her maiesties owne messengers with her letters from her embassador, and yet the fact vnpunished without any satisfaction for the same: wherein her maiesty surely noteth and pitieth the lacke rather of authority, then of good will in the K. or the queene his mother, or the king of Nauarre his lieutenant: but seeth manifestly by this and by all other proceedings, in what hard termes the estate of the young king is set, that can neither be permitted to preserue his owne people and seruants, his owne lawes and ordinances, neither to answer to other princes and people in forme of iustice, that which he ought to do.

Upon these and other former dangerous enterprises against her maiesty and her crowne, may it well appeare to all persons of indifferent iudgement, how these violent proceedings in Fraunce, conducted at this time by the duke of Guise and his adherents, do touch the queenes maiesty, much nearer for her state and realme then any other prince of Christendome. Wherefore seeing the authority of the king & the queene his mother, with their quiet good counsellors, cannot at this time haue place to direct their affaires neither towards their owne people, nor towards their neighbours, neither can any mediation sought by her maiesty for concord be allowed: but contrariwise, the tender persons of the king and the queene his mother be manifestly abused, and dangerously caried about for the particular pleasures onely of a few persons, and specially those of Guise, to waste the kings countries, to sacke and spoile his rich and great townes, to kill and murder the multitude of his good and true subiects: and seeing also the quarrell manifestly published and prosecuted both by writing and otherwise by them, is to subuert the whole profession of true religion through Christendome by force, without mercy, and thereby to stir vp a ciuill bloudy lamentable war in all Christendome. Lastly, seeing they which be the authors and maintainers of all these diuisions, are well knowne to the world to be the same, that when time serued them, bent their whole endeuours to offend and diminish the crowne and dignity of this realme of England, and of late time for the exaltation of their particular house, deuised vniustly to assaile the whole crowne of England by sundry waies, though by Gods goodnesse their practises and counsels turned for that time to their owne confusion: As by the same goodnesse they shall at all times hereafter.

The principall quarrell is to subuert religion.

1560. French armies sent by way of Scotland and other deuises, to claime the crowne of England, &c.

How may her maiestie, without note of manifest vnkindnesse to her deare young brother and confederate, of vnmercifulnesse to her next neighbours his subiects, of vncarefulnesse to the common quiet of Christendome: and lastly, which is nearest to her selfe, of meere negligence to the surety of her owne estate, her countrey and people, suffer these few troublesome men first to destroy and shed the bloud of a number of Christian people, whose bloud by nearenesse of place to her maiesties realme may be stopped, or some wayes saued, next to surprise & take such townes and hauens, whereby their former long intended and manifest practises against the crowne of this realme, may be most easily for them, and dangerously for this realme, put in vre and execution? Wherefore for these reasonable, euident, vrgent, and necessarie considerations, and not without the lamentable and continuall request of the French kings subiects her maiesties next neighbours, crying to her maiestie onely for defence of themselues, their ports and townes from tyranny and subuersion, during this their kings minority, or at the least during this his vnhability to pacifie these troubles: Her maiestie hath put certaine numbers of her subiects in order both by sea and land, to saue some part of her good brothers innocent people from this tyranny, slaughter and ruine, and to preserue some speciall townes and ports of importance, for the king her good brother, that they come not into the possession of them: who if they had them, might more easily thereby prosecute their old particular practises against this realme, as in times lately past they did manifestly attempt, whereby of necessitie they must needes endanger the perpetuity of the peace betwixt the French king and her maiestie, and so consequently, though against the meaning of the king, deprine her maiestie of her good right to her towne of Calcis and the members thereof: Whereof it behoueth her maiestie, as things be handled to haue good regard. And in this sort her maiestie doubteth not, but the sincerity of her doings, tending onely to procure Christian quietnesse by sauing of Christian bloud, shall well please almighty God, content the king her good brother, when he shall be in estate and liberty to ponder the same indifferently, and serue also for the iust and naturall defence of her selfe, her peoples and countries: and finally by Gods grace shall establish the continuance of some more assured peace and concord betwixt both their maiesties and countries, so as either of them may quietly enioy and rule their owne. And in the meane time, her maiestie assureth the sayd king, the queene his mother, the king of Nauarre, and all his good counsellours and subiects, that whatsoeuer any malicious or mislontented person shall sinisterly report of her intent and doings: Her M. meaneth nothing herein, but sincerely, & as ỹ necessitie of the time & cause requireth, without usurping any thing, or doing wrong or violence towards any the French kings subiects, protesting before God and all the world, that her meaning is for a necessarie defence onely of the true and good subiects of the French king, which otherwise apparantly in this troublesome time should be violently killed or destroyed: and so consequently her M. intendeth by all maner of meanes possible, to keepe and continue good peace with the said king and all his countries, and to neglect no reasonable meanes that may procure libertie to himselfe, & quietnesse betwixt his subiects, which then shall succeede when it shall please almighty God to giue to the first and chiefe authors of these troubles, grace to content themselues with their owne estates, and to liue within the compasse of their degrees like quiet subiects and fauourers of the common peace and tranquilitie of Christendome. A matter more necessarie at this time to be sought for, rather by coniunction of Christian princes and states in vnitie of mind and loue of peace and concord, then in this sort by sword and fire, by priuate deuises and secret factions to stir a diuision and ciuill warre in Christendome, vnder the cloke and pretence of religion.

The queens maiesties intent to procure peace, and to obserue it.

They of Guise to liue in their degrees without superioritie ouer the king and the rest of his bloud.

A free generall counsell by the consent of christian princes meeter then ciuill warre, to bring the Church to vnitie.

These causes thus published at the request of the French themselues, namely, monsieur de Vidame then captaine of Newhauen, the bailife of Roane, the treasurer of Diepe and other, profering the foresaid townes whereof they had charge, vnto her maiestie (if it would please her to further their proceedings of the Gospell) for that her maiestie was true inheritor not onely to those townes, but to all the whole kingdome of Fraunce, as they themselues confessed. In the moneth of September, her maiestie sent a band of her subiects to the towne of Newhauen in Normandy: who were embarked at Portsmouth, because that hauen is most apt for transportation to that place, vpon whose arriuall the townes-men and inhabitants ioyfully surrendred themselues and their towne into the possession of the Queenes maiestie, which was kept by Englishmen from this moneth of September in Anno 1562. vnto the 29. of July then next following in the yeare 1563, as more at large shall be shewed. For the conduction of such forces as were to be sent ouer, her maiestie ordained the lord Ambrose Dudley earle of Warwike to be her principall lieutenant, captaine generall, chiefe leader and gouernour of her said subiects, that should in such wise passe ouer into Normandy. Hereupon the said earle the 17. of October, tooke shipping at Portsmouth in the hauen there, being aboord himselfe in the Queenes ship called the New barke, and setting forward sailed all that afternoone, and the night following directly towards Newhauen: but in the morning when he was within twentie miles of the towne of Newhauen, the wind suddenly changed contrarie to his course, so that being driuen to returne, about the next midnight he arriued in the Downes, and there remained at anchor till the next morning, and then was set on land by boate at Sandon castle beside Deale, and the same day at night came to Douer, and there lay till the 28. of October, and then taking ship againe sailed forth, but finding the wind nothing prosperous to his course, after he had lien all that night and day following, tossing on the seas, he was constrained backe againe to the hauen of Douer, where he remained till the 28. of October, and on the 29. he landed at Newhauen, where he was most ioyfully received with a great peale of artillerie. The 30. of October, there came to Newhauen from Dieppe 50 light horsemen Scots, brought by one of maister Killigrewes seruants. The last of October, the earle of Warwikes commission was proclaimed in Latin, English, and French, by Blew Mantell pursuant at armes, which being ended, his lordship went into the church, & there sir Adrian Poinings knight Marshall, gaue him his oth, and then my lord gaue the said sir Adrian his oth, and after him were sworn Cuthbert Vaughan controller, Iohn Fisher knight porter, William Bromfield maister of the ordinance, William Robinson, Walter Bailiffe, and captaine T. Wood clarke of the counsel. The second of November, the earle of Warwike with the knight marshall and the controller, rode out of Newhauen to Hauteuille, and so towards Mondeuille accompanied with all the horsemen English and Scottish, and a thousand footmen. The Scottish men and Montgomeries band passed foorth and skirmished with them of Mondeuille, and the Scots brought away with them a bootie of 300. sheepe, but in the morning they were returned backe againe by commaundement of the earle of Warwike. Maister Controllers souldiers went as far as Harflew, and there skirmished with them of the garrison, but without any hurt to either part. The 4. of November, a barke of Newhauen belonging to Francis Clarke, brought into the hauen of the same towne 4. Britains laden with Gascoine wine to the quantitie of 200. tuns, which they meant to haue brought to the enemies, but was discharged in Newhauen, and stood the English in good steade. The 6. of November, a great alarme was raised in the towne of Newhauen, for vpon the hils on the north side of the towne, the Reingraue & other shewed themselues with 2000. footmen, & 500. horsemen: and therewith the Reingraue sent a trumpeter to the towne, to aduertise the L. lieutenant, that he was there on the hils, & that if it would please him to promise vpon his honour & by the faith of a gentleman that he might come and go safe, he would be glad to come and see him, and talke with him. Whereupon ỹ lord lieutenant taking with him certaine captains and gentlemen, rode foorth of the towne, and sent before him sir Adrian Poinings the marshall with Stephen Medcalfe her maiesties trumpeter, vnto ỹ Reingraue, who talking with him, returned and met with the lord Lieutenant, who therewith passed forward, and meeting with the Reingraue, they embraced each other, and conferred together: and the Reingraue told the lord lieutenant, that he was come to be his neighbour, with such other merry speech, and after taking leaue each of other, they returned. The countie Montgomerie and monsieur Beauuoys had some talke also with the Reingraue, casting out bitter words in reproofe of the duke of Guise, and other whom they hated. The Reingraue comming backe to his army, forrayed all the countrie, and droue away the more part of all the cattell that they could find, and comming to the church of Hauteuille, where an hundred and fiftie of Montgomeries band lay, they skirmished with them, and in the end Montgomeries souldiers were forced to retire, and abandon the place, & came to Newhauen: but the next morrow they returned, tooke the church, and kept it against the enemies as afore.

The 11. of November, a proclamation was made in the name of the lord lieutenant, lieutenant, as well for good orders to be kept by the soldiers against the French inhabitants of the towne, & reforming of certaine greeuances whereof the French had made complaint, as also for their comming to church to heare common praier and preaching at due times, for the auoiding of vnlawfull games, &c. The 12. of November, there went out of Newhauen towards Harflew three bandes of French men, containing about fiue hundred footemen, and suddenly they were beset by the Almaines & French men of the garrison of Harflew, so that the French men of Newhauen were driuen to take the village of Grauile, where they maintained the skirmish for the space of two howers, till the lord lieutenant sent foorth with the controller the number of one thousand footemen, and all the English and Scottish horsemen, and maister Beauuoys with diuerse French horsemen, who comming before Harflew, fell in skirmish with the enimies, to whose succour there issued foorth of Harflew a great number of the Almaines both horsemen and footemen: but the Englishmen behaued themselues so valiantly, that they beate them out of the field into the towne: and the Englishmen returned to Newhauen with honor, hauing not lost past eight of their soldiers that were slaine, and fiue hurt.

The 13. of November, a pinnesse of the French men that belonged to Newhauen, being gone foorth the night before, brought into the hauen a ship laden with Rochell wine fiue and twentie tuns, that was bound to the enemies. The 14. of November, another ship fraught with twentie tuns of Falcoine wine was brought in as a prise, taken by a barke of Newhauen. The 17. of November, a proclamation was mad concerning orders taken by the lord lieutenant, that no English man nor French man should shoote off any harquebut within the towne, nor that any French man, except monsieur Beauuoys, or monsieur Bricquemault, or their companies should be out of their lodgings after nine of the clocke at night till the next morning, on paine of death, except in alarmes.

Prises of wine brought into Newhauen.

The 23. of November, the Reingraue was seene on the north hils of the towne with fower score horsemen, whereupon the Scottish horsemen and three bands of footemen issued out, marched vp towards the same hils in hope to meete with the enemies, but they were retired towards Mondeuille, and so nothing was done. The 25. of November, a soldier was hanged in the market place in Newhauen, and therewith proclamation made that none should take any thing forcibly from the French, on paine of death. The same day came into the hauen hoyes and boates laden with wine, cider, perrie, wheate, beefe, bisket, meale, &c. The same day also there landed at Newhauen fiue hundred soldiers vnder the leading of Auerie Darcie, Reignald Higate, and William Twedie. The same day the Queenes ship called the Hare comming from Portsmouth, arriued at Newhauen, and in her came sir Iohn Portinarie, a man of great experience in fortification, they were by the way assailed by a French ship of ninetie tuns and better, but they that were aboord the Hare vanquished the enimies, tooke the same ship, and brought her with them, being laden with wines. The same day sir Iohn Moore landed at Newhauen, bringing ouer with him fiue hundred soldiers for a supply of the garrison.

The 8. of December, monsieur de Beauuoys, captaine Francis Somerset, and captaine captaine Edward Horſey, with diuers other captaines and gentlemen, rode to the Reingraue, lying at a faire houſe not far from Mondeuille, where they dined with him, had great cheere, and returned to Newhauen. The Reingraue ſent for a preſent to the earle of Warwike a great horſe, very faire, with ſaddle and bridle, eſteemed to be well worth an hundred pound. The ſame day at night, the double Roſe with other boates paſſed out of the hauen, Edward Dudley and captaine Iohn Warde, being aboord with other to the number of an hundred good ſoldiers, ſailing downe the riuer, landed beſides Tankeruille, and lay cloſe all that night in a wood: in the morning monſieur Bimarre enſigne-bearer to the countie Montgomerie, with ſix or ſeauen French men vnarmed went to the caſtle gate, & there fell in talke with monſieur Dimence, that was captaine of that fortreſſe, hauing about him ten ſoldiers. Whileſt they were thus in talke, the Engliſh men and French men comming forth of the wood that was there at hand, reared vp their ladders at the breach, which was made the ſommer before, and entring by the ſame, came downe into the baſe court. Which thing when the French ſoldiers that kept talke at the caſtell gate perceiued, the captaine beholding as good as three ſcore armed men within the caſtell at his backe, he ſuddenly yeelded himſelfe, and in this ſort was the caſtell taken, and the captaine brought priſoner to Newhauen.

and footemen. The 19. of Januarie, there landed at Newhauen captaine Tremaine with fiftie horsemen very well appointed to serue there. The 24. of Januarie, Francis Clarke Frenchman arriued at Newhauen with two tall ships of his owne, right well appointed for the wars, bringing with him three rich prises.

The first of Februarie, two ships of Britaines laden with Gascoine wine, butter, bacon, salt, and other victuals, were brought into Newhauen by a shalop of Killebeuf, that was resiant with other Frenchmen in Newhauen, and had taken these two vessels as they were going to victuall the enemies. The first of Februarie, three mightie ships of war belonging to Francis Clarke, brought into Newhauen three rich prises laden with sacks, bastards, sugar, orenges, graines, and other marchandises. This Clarke had not bene fourth past five weekes at this time, and yet he had got aboue 18. prises well worth the summe of 50000. pounds. The 7. of Februarie, was Hunsdon summoned by an herault sent from the French admirall, monsieur de Chatillon. The 8. of that moneth, the said admirall came before Hunsdon with 6000. horsemen Reisters, and other of his own retinues, beside footemen, and 1000. horsemen of the countries thereabout, and about five of the clocke at night, there was a great peale of ordinance shot off at Newhauen for a welcome to the said admirall.

Prises brought into Newhauen.

The 12. of Februarie, the French galliasse of Newhauen passing forth and waiting about Hunsdon to seeke aduentures in hope of purchase, by reason the lord admirall of France lay thereby at Tonque, roade at an anchor, whilest some that were aboord in her went aland to gaine somewhat of the enemies, but they within Hunsdon perceiuing this, made out their great galliasse with 50. mariners and soldiers, who comming vpon the galliasse of Newhauen, put her in great danger of taking, but waying anchor drew toward the shore, tooke in the rest of their companie, and stood at their defence, behauing themselues so well, that continuing in fight aboue a long hower, at length they ouercame their enemies, slew 7. of them, wounded 37. tooke their galliasse, and brought her to Newhauen with thirteene bels, diuers coapes and church ornaments, sheepe, and other spoiles which they had got abroad in the countrie, together with 43. prisoners, and the artillerie of the galliasse. The fourteenth of Februarie, there came from the lord admirall of France lying then at Tonque, monsieur de Rohen and monsieur de Grandemont a knight of the order, monsieur Telegnie the admirals sonne in law, & diuers other French gentlemen to confer with the lord lieutenant, who receiued them right gladly, and made them great cheere: they remained there till the 18. and then departed and went to Cane, whither the said lord admirall was remooued, and had entred the towne, preparing to besiege the castell. The same day monsieur Briquemault and sir Nicholas Throckemorton knight arriued at Newhauen. The admirall Chatillon kept the castell of Cane besieged, within the which was the marques Dalbeuf, there were sent vnto him from Newhauen the fiue and twentith of Februarie, seuen canons, two demy culuerings, and one minion. The fire and twentith sir Nicholas Throckmorton, monsieur Briquemault and monsieur Beauvoys with a thousand souldiers French, and as many English: to wit, captaine Zouch, captaine Twedie, captaine Higate, each of them two hundred, captaine Iohn Warde, captaine Parkenson, captaine Saule, and master Wheeler, captaine Fisher lieutenant with his band, each of the with his hundred, and captaine Pelham with the laborers, were embarked in the roade of Newhauen, and sailed forth towards Caen to come to the siege, which the Admirall of Fraunce had layd to the castle there. The same day, as county Montgomerie had embarked at the hauen of Dieppe in an English vessell, and was coming towards Newhauen, there came from Fits campe three shalops, by the appointment of the Reingraue, which made towards Montgomerie, whose meaning when he perceiued, he set vpon the strongest of the same shalops, so that there followed a sharpe conflict betwixt them, but in the end the victory fell to Montgomerie, the shalope being taken, the captaine and maister slaine, and three English victualers relieued, which the said shalope had taken. Montgomerie herewith arriuing at Newhauen, and bringing with him his prise was ioyfully receiued, & went abroad againe, and sailed to Caen there to conferre with the admirall. The first of March, they began to batter Caen in such wise, that about foure of the clocke in the after noone they within the towne began to parley, but it tooke none effect. And then went off the artillery againe till night, and in the morning, the battery ceassed began, and before that two tires of the sayd artillery had gone off, they within offered againe to parley, and finally agreed by composition to yeeld, and so that same day the castle was surrendred vnto the French admirall, and the marques Dalbeufe and other that had kept that place departed.

The castle of Caen surrendred to the admirall.

The third of March, the towne of Bayeux was yeelded to the admirall, and on the morrow following, Falaise, and after Saint Lo, with diuerse other townes and castles yeelded vnto him.

The 10. of March, the great galley and the foysles were sent from Newhauen with a canon, and shot, powder, &c. to Hunflew, where they met with Monsieur de Mouy, that came thither with a faire company of horsemen, and diuerse footemen, French: and of the Englishmen, captaine Tuttie with his two hundred and captaine Fisher with his hundred. The canon was immediatly planted, and shot off a fiue times. Whereupon they within began to parley, and in the end agreed to yeeld vp the castle vnto Monsieur de Mouy with condition: and so left the castle vnto Monsieur de Mouy, whereby his souldiers as well English as others gained greatly by the spoile: whereas Monsieur de Beauuoys had by the admirall Chatillons commandement, charged by proclamation, all strangers, forreiners, and French souldiers to depart the towne of Newhauen, by the 23. of March last past: and that all other, hauing their wiues and families, should depart with them, or within foure dayes after, to giue ayde for the keeping of the townes of Hunflew, Caen, Bayeux, Falaise, Saint Lo, and other places, lately brought vnder the obedience and authority of the prince of Condy, vnder paine for making default, to be taken as good prisoners of warre, to those that should apprehend them. Proclamation was also thereupon made in the lord lieutnants name, the 25. of March, that it should be lawfull to the queenes maiesties subiects to apprehend and take as their good and lawfull prisoners, all such as contrarie to the former proclamation should remaine in the towne of Newhauen after fiue of the clocke after noone of the day next following, those persons onely excepted whose names were enrolled, remaining with the lord lieutenants Secretarie.

The French apointed to depart from Newhauen.

The 5. of Aprill the Reingraue with 400. horſemen, and about 500. footmen, came downe the hill, betwixt Saint Addreſſes and Engleſield, where ſir Hugh Pawlet knight met with him, by appointment of the lord lieutenant, accompanied with 40. horſemen, and 1000. Engliſh footemen, and after they had talked together, ſir Hugh Pawlet returned into Newhauen, and the Reingraue to Mondeuile.

All this time was born Don Francisco Quevedo de Villegas K^t of S^t James & Author of Severall ingeniose both serious & Lamorous pieces, he was born in ye Country of March in New Castile & dyed very old 1647.

On Eaſter euen, two ſouldiers that ſerued vnder captaine Parkenſon were hanged in Newhauen, for running away to the Reingraue.

The firſt of May, Gartar king at armes, arriued at Newhauen, bringing with him the garter to Ambroſe earle of Warwike the lord lieutenant, thoſin on Saint Georges day laſt paſt, to be one of that moſt noble order.

The 17. of May, proclamation was made, that all manner of furniture and apparell, appertaining to ſhips, within the garriſon, hauen, or roade of the towne of Newhauen, ſhould be brought in, or a note to be giuen thereof in writing to the lord lieutenant and counſell there.

The 22 of May, about one of the clocke in the morning, the Reingraue with 500. horſemen, and 22. enſignes of footemen, came downe to a village called Lheure, neare vnto the new fort, which by order of the lord lieutenant was lately before begun to be built. The enemies meaning was, to haue taken the ſame fort by a ſudden aſſault, but the Engliſh ſcoutes gaue intelligence to the lord lieutenant therof, who incontinently going to the bulwarke Ryall, ſet out by the Poſterne captaine Ward with his 100. ſouldiers, and captaine Parkenſon with his 100. to paſſe to the fort, there to be an ayde and defence to them that lay in the ſame. About three of the clocke in the morning the Reingraue ſuddenly with his bands of horſe and footemen, gaue them in the fort a hot alarme, and immediatly the earle of Warwike gaue in charge to captaines, Read, Appleyard, Tutty, Souch, Antwiſell, Warde, Morton, and Parkenſon, hauing with them 1000. footmen and 200. horſemen, to ſet vpon the enemies in the village of Lheure, neare adioyning vnto the ſaid new fort, where the Engliſh ſouldiers beat backe their enemies, ſlue and tooke of them to the number of an hundred, beſides thirty faire horſes, and an enſigne, and ſet fire on the towne, becauſe the enemies ſhould not come to encampe therein as their purpoſe was.

Alarme giuen to the new fort by Newhauen.

The 26. of May, the Frenchmen in number aboue three thouſand horſemen and footemen, came downe towards the wind-mils, neare to the bulwarke called Saint Addreſſes, againſt whom the Engliſh horſemen and footemen iſſued forth of the towne, giuing them a hot ſkirmiſh, where were ſlaine two hundred of the French, beſides two hundred and aboue that were hurt. Amongſt the Engliſh, captaine Tremayne and about ſome twelue perſons more were ſlaine: but the French were driuen to retire. The firſt of June, at ſeuen of the clocke at night, the Reingraue hauing layd in the village of Lheure an ambuſh of fiue hundred horſemen, and fifteene hundred footmen, there came downe alſo betweene the abbey and the village called Engleſield towards the towne, the number of a thouſand footemen, which began a very hot ſkirmiſh, firſt at the new fort, comming euen hard to the ditches, where the Engliſhmen manfully encountered them. Herewith alſo, the Reingraue appointed other to come downe and approch the bulwarkes of Saint Andrewe, Saint Francis, Michaell and other, round about the towne, so that there were of them the number of fiue thousand, that were employed in this skirmish, which was maintained right fiercely, for the space of two houres, till in the end the enemies were forced to giue place, with the losse of fiue hundred of their men, Almaines, Frenchmen and other. Of English men three were hurt, captaine Iolbert, and captaine Pelham, and about fifteene other hurt and slaine.

The 7. of June, the first canon-shot light within the towne of Newhauen, neare to the bulwarke of Saint Andrewe. The ninth of June, arriued at Newhauen three Captaines with their bands of an hundred the peece, being of the garrison of Barwike. Also the same day landed there Edward Randoll, appointed to be knight Marshall. For you must vnderstand that sir Adrian Poinings being knight Marshall, vpon his returne into England went not backe againe: and then was sir Thomas Finch of Kent appointed to go ouer to supply the roomth of knight Marshall, who making his prouision readie, sent ouer his brother Erasmus Finch to haue charge of his band, and his kinseman Thomas Finch to be prouost marshall, whilest he staying till he had euery thing in a readinesse to passe ouer himselfe, at length embarqued in one of the Queenes shippes, called the Greyhound, hauing there aboorde with him besides three score and fire of his owne retinue, foure and fortie other Gentlemen, two of them being brethren to the Lord Wentworth, to wit, Iames Wentworth, and Iohn Wentworth with diuerse others, who in the whole (accompting the mariners) amounted to the number of two hundred persons and vpward: and as they were on the farther coast towards Newhauen, they were by contrarie wind and foule weather driuen backe againe toward the coast of England, and plying towards Rie, they forced the captaine of the shippe a very good sea-man, named William Maine, and also the maister and mariners, to thrust into the hauen before the tyde, and so they all perished, seuen of the meaner sort onely excepted, whereof three dyed shortly after they came on land. After this mischaunce, Edmond Randoll was appointed knight Marshall.

The 15. of June, the captaines Richard Saunders, and William Saul, with their bands of an hundred souldiers a peece, and captaine Drurie with two hundred arrined at Newhauen, and the morrow after arrined captaine Roberts with an other hundred souldiers. On the seuenteenth day sir Francis Knowles, vicechamberlaine to the Queenes maiesties house, landing at Newhauen, sent to view the state of the towne.

The 18. of June, two souldiers were executed for drawing weapon against their captaine.

The 28. of June, the French men came downe to the village of Theure, and there very neare to the fort, began a skirmish with the English men: there were of them tenne ensignes of footemen, and two hundreth horsemen, this skirmish lasted three houres, and yet not past foure persons slaine. The night following, they placed fiue canons betwixt the Towne and the brickehilles, and likewise other peeces of Artillerie at the foresaid Village of Lheure, ſo that they ſhot both into the towne and fort. The firſt of July, about midnight, they iſſued foorth of their trenches, and ſkirmiſhed with the Engliſh ſcoutes, droue them vnder the bulwarke of Saint Addreſſe, and there perceiuing that the Engliſhmen had prouided to ſally out, after a long ſkirmiſh they retired. About the third of Julie, there landed nine hundred ſouldiers well appointed all in yellow clokes, and blew, Captaine Sanders was hurt in the legge whereof he dyed. The twelfth of July, about foure of the clocke in the morning, the French laid batterie to the Bulwarke of Saint Addreſſes, continuing the ſame all that day. They alſo diſmounted the ſame day the Ordinance in the ſteeple of Newhauen, and beat downe the great bell, cleane defacing the ſteeple: the ſame euening, was William Robinſon eſquire, baylife of Newhauen, ſlaine with a ſhot, and William Bromfield, maiſter of the ordinance hurt, whereof he died ſhortly after.

The 14. of July, ſir Hugh Pawlet knight landed at Newhauen, bringing with him eight hundred ſouldiers. The ſame day came downe the Frenchmen to the number of 3000. euen hard to the gates of the towne, beating the Engliſh men out of their trenches, but in the end they were forced to retire, and not paſt twentie Engliſh men ſlaine, and about an hundred hurt: but the French loſt (as was thought) aboue foure hundred horſemen and footmen. The ſame day, the little Galiaſſe called the Fore, went out of Newhauen, fraught with fiftie men, to flanke alongſt the ſhore, and to beate the French men with her ſhot, but a linſtoke fell into a barrell of powder and ſet it on fire together with the veſſell, ſo that ſhe ſuddenly ſunke, and all that were aboord in her were loſt, ſauing fifteene that ſaued themſelues by ſwimming. A Galiaſſe of Newhauen brent.

The 21. of July, the Conſtable of Fraunce, and many other lords of Fraunce came to the abbey of Graville, where the marſhall Briſſac was lodged, who had the generall charge in the army, before the comming of the ſaid Conſtable. Conſtable of Frãce came to the ſiege of Newhauẽ.

The 23. of July, the Conſtable came to the trench that was caſt ouer againſt the bulwarke of Saint Addreſſe, alongſt by the ſea ſide, and ſent his trumpet to ſommon the towne. The Lord lieutenant appointed ſir Hugh Pawlet to go foorth and make the anſwere in his name, which was in effect, that the Queens maieſtie had appointed him and others to keepe the Towne, and therefore they meant not to deliuer it to any other perſon, without her Graces commaundement. The Engliſh men were no ſooner departed, but that the enemies hauing planted eight canons in batterie againſt the caſtle and bulwarke of the hauen, cauſed the ſame to be ſhot off, continuing the batterie vntill the eight and twentieth of July.

The 28. of July, the prince of Condy, and the duke of Montpenſier, came to the campe and alighted at the Conſtables lodging, went from thence to the trenches to relieue the marſhall Montmorancie, and to ſupplie his roomth, whileſt he might in the meane time goe to ſuppe with his father, and ſo to take his reſt: Monſieur Deſtree, and the other that had charge about the planting and ordering of the artillerie, vſed ſuch diligence, and were ſo earneſtly called vpon and encouraged by the prince of Condy, continually remaining in the trenches, that on the 27. in the morning, the artillerie beganne to batter the bulwarke The prince of Condie came to the campe before Newhauen.

of Saint Addreſſe and other places. This was not done without great daunger of the pioners and men of warre that guarded them: for as the French deſperately made theſe approches, they were made by the Engliſh gunners to taſt the bitter fruite thereof: but ſuch was the multitude of the French men that were now aſſembled in hope to recouer that towne, (which being poſſeſſed by the Engliſh, cut off all traffique from Roane, Paris and other places) that with their generall ayde, and drawing the water downe to the ſea, the marſhes were made paſſable and firme ground, which to men of great experience was thought a thing impoſſible. The Caſtle, the wals, and other defences of the Towne, were battered, breaches made, and the trench, which before the comming of the Conſtable, was but brought to the point ouer againſt the bulwarke of Saint Addreſſe, was now within fower daies aduanced neere hand the ſpace of two miles, vpon the cauſey or breach which was all of ſtone, without any earth to couer them, ſo that they were driuen to make the beſt ſhift they could with wool-ſackes, ſand-bags, baſkets, and fagots. Yet all this had neuer come to paſſe, without infinite ſlaughter, and farre more loſſe of French blood, if the great mortalitie of peſtilence (which entred the Towne about the beginning of Sommer) through a venimous infection, had not ſo greatly increaſed, that it ſlue dayly great numbers of men, ſo that the ſtreets lay euen full of dead corpſes, not able to be remooued, by reaſon of the multitude that periſhed. And now the ſhot of the canon, lying within a ſire an twentie paſes of the Towne, was ſo terrible (as the like had not bene lightly heard of, and ſundrie breaches there were, which were already made, namely, two verie great and eaſie to be entered: All theſe dangers and miſeries notwithſtanding the Earle of Warwike with his Captaines and ſouldiers, in couragious order, ſtoode at thoſe ſeuerall breaches, readie to defend the ſame, if the enimies had preſumed to haue giuen the aſſault, which when the Conſtable perceiued, he cauſed a trumpet to ſound the blaſt of emparley, that talke mought be had for the concluding of a compoſition betwixt both the parties, to auoyd the imminent ſlaughter and effuſion of bloud: which offer ſeeming not vnmeete, both parties concluded that parley ſhould be had. The eight and twentieth of July therefore, the Conſtable came to the end of the trenches next to the towne, where ſir Mawrice Denis, treaſurer of the towne, ſir Hugh Pawlet, captaine Horſey, captaine Pelham, captaine Iohn Shute prouoſt marſhall, and Nicholas Malby Secretarie to the lord Lieutenant, came forth and paſſed ouer the hauen to commune with him, and during the parley betwixt them, a truce was accorded, and aſſented to by both parties. But the Conſtable tooke vpon him to haue onely authoritie to accept or refuſe ſuch conditions as ſhould be offered or agreed vpon by the Engliſh commiſſioners in this treatie: and ſo at length they paſſed certaine articles in forme as followeth. Firſt, that the earle of Warwike ſhould render the Towne of Newhauen into the hands of the Conſtable of France, with all the artillerie and munitions of warre then being in the Towne, belonging to the French king and his ſubiects. Item, he ſhould leaue the ſhips that were in the Towne at that preſent, belonging to the king or his ſubiects, with all

Item, the saide Earle should presently deliuer into the hands of the Constable, the great Tower of the said hauen, so that the souldiers thereof enter not into the Towne: and that the said earle should deliuer fower such hostages as the said Constable should name. Item, that the next day by eight of the clocke in the morning, the said earle should withdraw his souldiers from the fort, to deliuer it immediatly into the hands of the said Constable, or his deputies, at the said houre. Item, that all prisoners should be deliuered on either side, without paying any ransome. Item, that the Constable should for his part suffer the said Earle of Warwike and all those that were in garrison in the said Newhauen to depart, with all things whatsoeuer that belonged to the queene of England or her subiects. Item, that for the departure alwell of the said Earle, as the remouing of his souldiers and other things: the said Constable agreed to giue them fiue dayes, to begin the twentie nine of July, during the which they might frankly take and carie away the said things. Item, the said Constable did likewise permit, that all the ships and English vessels appointed for the portage and conueying away of the said things, should safely and freely passe in, to, and fro the said hauen, without any stay or impeachment, either by the French or other. The fower hostages were appointed to be maister Oliuer Maners, brother to the Earle of Rutland, Captaine Pelham, Captaine Horsey, and Captaine Leighton. In witnesse whereof, the said Lords, the Constable of France, and Earle of Warwike signed these articles, the eight and twentieth of July. The last of Julie, the most part of the Englishmen tooke ship and departed homewardes: for glad was he that could get soonest out of that vnwholsome ayre: manie sicke persons yet were left behinde, impotent, and not able to helpe themselues a shippe boorde, the miserie whereof Edward Randolph esquier, high marshall of the Towne (who was appointed to tarrie and see the vttermost of the composition accomplished) perceiuing, mooued with naturall pittie of his countreymen relinquished without comfort, caused the said sicke persons to be caried aboord, not sparing his owne shoulders, at that time feeble and full of the plague, himselfe and his men still bearing and helping the poore creatures on ship boord: a rare fact, worthie reward, and no doubt in remembrance with God, the true recorder of mercifull deserts. Beside the meaner sort of those that died at Newhauen of the pestilence, during the siege, I finde noted as chiefe, Cuthbert Vaughan Comptroller of the Towne, Frauncis Somerset cousin to the Earle of Worcester, Auerie Darcie brother to the Lord Darcie, Iohn Zouche, brother to the Lord Zouche, Edward Ormesby, Thomas Drurie alias Poignard, Richard Croker, Iohn Cockson, Thomas Kennish, Iohn Prowde, William Saule, Wilfride Antwisell, these of the plague. There were diuerse also that were slaine in the fielde, as both the Tremaynes brethren, Nicholas and Andrew, Captaine Richard Saunders, with maister Robinson and maister Bromfield, also one Leighton a gentleman, and diuers other.

Haure de Grace

As yee haue heard, the plague of pestilence being in the Towne of Newhauen, through the number of soldiers that returned from thence into England, the infection thereof spread into diuers parts of this realme, but especially the citie of London was so infected, that in the same whole yeere, that is to say, from the first of Januarie, 1562. till the last of December, 1563. there died in the City and liberties thereof containing, 108. parishes of all diseases, 20. M. 3. C. 72. and of the plague, (being part of the number aforesaid) 17. M. 4. C. 4. persons. And in out parishes adioyning to the same citie, being 11. parishes, died of all diseases in the whole yeere, 3. M. 2. C. 88. persons, and of them, of the plague, 2. M. 7. C. 32. persons so that the whole number of all that died of all diseases, as well within the Citie and liberties, as in the out parishes, was 23. M. 6. C. and 60. and of them, there died of the plague, 20136.

The 8. of July, in the morning, hapned a great tempest of lightning & thunder, whereby ough a woman and three kine were slaine in the Couent garden neere to Charing crosse. At the same time in Essex a man was borne downe, as he was carying hay, his barne was borne downe, and his hay brent: both stones and trees were rent in many places.

Tempest at London.

30 Aug. dies at Bern Wolfgang Musculus a very learned man.

The councell of king Philip at Bruxels commanded proclamation to be made in Antwerp and other places, that no English ship with clothes should come into any places of their low countries: their colour was (as they said) the danger of the plague, which was that time in London, and other places of England: notwithstanding, they would gladly haue gotten our woolles: other causes they alledged, as the raising of impostes as well vpon goods inwards as outwards, as well vpon Englishmen as vpon strangers, &c. Also for that in the first parliament of the Queenes maiestie, by a statute then made, diuers wares and commodities were forbidden to be brought into this Realme out of Flaunders or other places being wrought there, which was done to the end to set our subiects a worke heere, as by the statute doth appeare, for that no man English or stranger might ship out any white clothes vndyed, being of the price aboue fower pound, without licence, &c. but the Queenes maiestie through suit of our marchant aduenturers, caused the wooll fleete to be discharged, and our cloth fleete was sent to Emden in east Friseland about Easter next following, in Ann. 1564.

And on the 22. day of December, in the yeare of our Lord 1568. the marchants of London, left their meetings in Lombard streete, at such times as they had accustomed there to meete, and this day they came into the new Burse, builded by sir Thomas Gresham, as is afore shewed.

The commissioners before named appointed for the matters of Flaunders, keeping their diet at Bruges, agreed to referre the whole matter to the princes on both sides, and if they could not agree, then the marchants to haue forty dayes to repaire home with their marchandise, and in the meane time, all things to stand as they were then. Our commissioners departed from Bruges about the 25. of June.

The 31. of August, the Queenes maiesty in her progresse came from Woodstocke to the Vniuersity of Oxford, and was of all the students, which had looked for her comming thither two yeares, so honorably and ioyfully receiued, as either their loyalnesse towards the Queenes maiesty, or the expectation of their friends did require. Concerning orders in disputation, and other academicall exercises, they agreed much with those, which the Vniuersity of Cambridge had vsed two yeares before. Comedies also and Tragedies were played in Christs Church, where the Queenes highnesse lodged. Among the which the Comedy entituled Misfortune at Oxford.

Palemon and Arcet, made by maister Edwards of the Queenes chappell, had such tragicall successe as was lamentable: for at that time by the fall of a wall and a paire of staires, and great preasse of the multitude, three men were slaine.

The fift of September, after disputations, the Queene at the humble suite of certaine of her nobilitie, and the king of Spaines Ambassador, made a briefe oration in Latine to the Universitie, but so wise and pithie, as England may reioyce that it hath so learned a prince, and the Universitie may triumph, that they haue so noble a patronesse.

The first of September after dinner, her grace comming from Chrills Church ouer Carfor, and so to Saint Maries, the scholers standing in order according to their degrees, euen to the east gate, certaine doctors of the Universitie did ride before in their scarlet gownes and hoodes, and maisters of Art in blacke gownes and hoodes. The Maior also named maister Williams with certaine of his brethren, to the number of fourteene or fifteene, did ride before her in scarlet to the ende of Magdalen bridge, where their liberties ended: but the doctors and maisters went forward still to Shot-ouer, a mile and more out of Oxford, because their liberties extended so farre, and there after Orations made, her highnesse with thankes to the whole Universitie, bade them farewell, and rode to Ricote to maister Norrice house an eight miles from Oxford.

The 18. the earle of Northumberland went to Richmond, then to Northallerton, after to Borow-bridge, and on Sonday the 20. of Nouember, he with his lady countesse of Northumberland, met againe with the earle of Westmerland at Ripon, and there had Masse, where (to get the more credit among the fauourers of the old Romish religion they had a Crosse with a banner of the fiue wounds borne before them by Richard Norton, and that night they went to Borow-bridge, and on the monday to Wetherbie, on which day at night some bands of them entred Tadcaster, and tooke a 200 footmen, chasing their captaines which were leading them towards Yorke to the earle of Sussex. On tuesday, they mustred on Clifford moore, nigh vnto Bramham moore, where they were 1600. horsemen, and a foure thousand footmen, which was the greatest number that euer they were. From thence, they intended to haue marched toward Yorke, but their minds being suddenly altered, by report they heard that sir George Bowes had mustred within the Bishoprick, and Richmondshire, and leuied great bands. On the Wednesday they returned againe to Wetherby: on Thursday to Northallerton: on Friday to Richmond: on Saterday Westmerland went to Rabies his owne house: on Sonday at night the Earle of Northumberland came to him there. On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, they mustred in all Richmondshire and the Bishoprick, bestowing their footmen in bands vnder captaines leading: and the same day, which was the last of Nouember, they besieged Barnard or Barne castell vpon Tese, builded by Barnard Bayliol, about Anno Domini 1174. which castell was valiantly defended by sir George Bowes and Robert Bowes his brother, the space of eleuen daies. In the meane space, the Earle of Westmerland and his ladie went to Durham with seuen or eight hundred horse, where they remained till the thirteenth of December, in which space, to wit, the seuenth day of December, sir Iohn Foster Warden of the middle marches, accompanied with sir Henry Percie, did giue to the said Earle a great skirmish. The first of December, sir George Bowes put foorth of the castell two hundred horsemen, whereof two persons were slaine, and thirtie taken by the Rebels. The tenth of December, sir George Bowes deliuered the said Castell, vnder composition to depart with armour, munition, bagge and baggage, and foorthwith marched with his garrison towardes Yorke. In this meane time, to wit, on the foure and twentith of Nouember, the queenes Maiestie had caused the said Earles of Northumberland and Westmerland to be proclaimed traitors, with all their adherents and fauourers, and foorthwith prepared an armie to be sent out of the South for their suppression. The same day, sir Iohn Foster Warden of the middle marches, with the garrison and force of the same, entred likewise into Tiuidale vpon Erpes gate, 16. miles from Warke, where in like order they brent, rased, and spoyled the countrey before them, till they came to a strong castell called Craling, in the possession of the mother of the lord Fernihersh, which likewise they ouerthrew, rased, and brent. There both the armies met, and so marched by the riuer of Tiuite, raling, burning, and spoyling Castles and pyles along the riuer, till they came to Gedwoorth, where they both lodged, and were curteoussie receiued. The next day the lord Chefford Warden of the middle marches of Scotland, came in with all the principall men of his kinred to the lord Lieutenant, and did submit themselues, and were assured, for that they had not receiued the English rebels, ayding or assisting them, neither had made any inuasion into England. The nintenth, the armie deuided into two parts, the one part whereof passed the riuer of Tiuite, and brent the Castell of Fernihersh, and all other Castles and Townes belonging to the Lord of Fernihersh, Huntill and Bedzell, and so passed to Mint, where both the armies met againe, and so brent on both sides the riuer, till they came to a great towne called Hawicke, where they intended

The 20. day, the armie marched forwards to a houſe of the lord of Bucklugh, which they ouerthrew with poulder, and then marched Northward to the riuer of Tiuiet, where they brent and ſpoyled ſuch Caſtles, pyles and townes, as belonged to the lords of Fernihirſt and Bucklugh, their kinſmen and adherents, and that night returned to Gedworth. The one and twentith day, part of the armie went to the riuer of Bowbent, vnder the leading of the ſaid marſhall, where maiſter George Heron, keeper of Tiuidale and Riddale, with them of that countrey, met with him, and ioyning together, rode on, burning and ſpoyling all on both ſides of the riuer, and the other part marched to the riuer of Trile, where they waſted and brent all on both ſides the riuer, and returned to Killey, where the lord Lieutenant lodged of purpoſe to beſiege Hewme Caſtell in the night, and the Lord Gouernor with his companie went to Warke, to bring the ordinance from thence in the morning, which was diſappointed by the negligence of ſuch as were put in truſt for thoſe matters, who ſuffered the cariage horſes to returne to Barwike the day before, which ſhould haue drawne the ſame, the lacke whereof cauſed the Lord Lieutenant with the whole armie, to returne to Barwike the two and twentith of Aprill, in which time there was neuer any ſhew by the Scots made, to reſiſt or defend their countrey.

The lord Scrope entred Scotland.

The lord Scrope Warden of the weſt marches, entred Scotland the eighteenth of Aprill, brent and ſpoyled thoſe parts almoſt to Domfrees, he had diuers conflikes, gaue ſundrie ouerthrowes, tooke many priſoners, and returned ſafely. During all theſe inuaſions, the marches of England in all places were ſo guarded by the Lord Euers, ſir George Bowes, and other of the Biſhoprick, as the Scots durſt not once offer to enter into England, ſo that not one houſe was burned, nor one cowe taken out of England. There were raſed, ouerthrowne, and brent in this iourney, aboue fiftie ſtrong Caſtles and pyles, and aboue three hundred Townes and Villages, ſo that there be verie few in the countrey, that either haue receiued our Engliſh Rebels, or inuaded England, that either haue caſtell, pile, or houſe for themſelues or their tenants, beſides the loſſe of their goods. The 26. the lord Lieutenant accompanied with the lord gouernor, the marſhall and diuers luſtie gentlemen, captaines and ſoldiers, to the number of three thouſand, ſet forward to Warke, and ſo to Hewme Caſtell, which Caſtell they beſieged till the ſame was yeelded, the lord Gouernor, the Marſhall, and diuers other, tooke poſſeſſion for our ſouereigne Ladie the Queenes maieſtie, and expelled the Scots that were therein, to the number of 168. perſons, in their apparell on their backs onely, without armor, weapon, bagge or baggage, among whom there were two Engliſhmen, one Hiliard the Earle of Northumberlands man, and a vagarant perſon named William Godſwher, which both were carried to Barwike and there executed the 24. of May. The eleuenth of May, the lord Lieutenant made foure knights, viz. Sir William Drewry, sir Thomas Manners, sir George Care, sir Robert Constable. And the same day, sir William Drewry being Generall, set forward toward Edenborough with diuers footebands with shot, armed pikes, and peeces of great ordinance, to ioyne with the earles of Leunor, Morton, Glencarne, and Marre, and other of the kings power of Scotland, in pursuing of the English rebels, and such of the Scots as supported them, as the Duke Hamilton, and other who were in armes at Lithcoe, twelue miles from Edenborough, to defend their cause. The foresaid new knights with their bands came to Edenborough, the thirteenth of May, and there rested three nights, and departed from thence to Lithcoe, where the Regent was slaine. The 17. the footemen marched to Faukirke, fiue miles from Sterling, and sir William Drewry with the horsemen, marched to Starling to see the King, whom they found so perfect in all things as age and nature could permit. The 18. they departed to the footebands, and so together marched to Glasco, where the lord Hamilton had besieged a house of the kings, but hearing of their comming, he fled with dishonor, and the losse of nine & twentie of his men. The 19. the generall with other horsemen and some shot, passed to Dunbarton, to view the straites of the castell there, being kept by the lord Fleming, the bishop of Saint Andrewes, and other his adherents, to the Queene of Scots vse. Our generall sent his trumpetor to require a parley with assurance safely to returne, whereunto the lord Fleming subtilly consented, and minding so to wind him into his danger, conueied certaine shot, and armed men into a secret place, so that our generall comming alone to haue parled, his trumpetor not returned, they shot at him, meaning to haue slaine him, but he bestowed his pistolets as freely at them as they at him, and returned to his companie and so to Glasco: from whence sir George Care, being maruellously offended with the subtill dealing of the lord Fleming, wrot a letter of challenge to combate with him body for body, which the lord Fleming by his letter of answere refused, whereupon sir George Care wrote a sharp and pithie reply, &c.

Knights made by the earle of Sussex.

The one and twentith day, our generall accompanied with the gentlemen and horsemen, went to Dunbritton againe to parley with the lord Fleming, vpon his promise that he would meete him three miles from the said castell, but the place of parley being viewed, was found to be subiect to the shot of the castell, & therefore our generall required another place, which would not be grãted by the L. Fleming.

The 22. the lord of Leunor, the lord Glencarne, & the Lord Simple, with their friends and tenants, came to our generall, & mustered before Glasco, to the number of foure thousand horsemen and footemen.

Hamilton in Scotland besieged.

The 23. our generall with the whole army marched toward the castell of Hamilton, & there had parley with the captaine, whose name was Arthur Hamilton,

but

but he would not deliuer the castell, whereupon, our ordinance being placed, was shot very lore, but did no great harme, for that they were field peeces.

The foure and twentith day, our generall gaue commons to the said castell which would not yeeld, whereupon he sent to Starling for bigger ordinance for the batterie, and so went from thence, accompanied with the earles of Lennor and Northaine, with the horsemen and certaine shot, marched in the countrey to a faire house of the Abbots of Kelwing neere adioyning, whose name was Gawyn Hamilton, which house they burned, & vtterly spoyled, with seuenteene houses more of good countenance of that name, wherof one was the lord Lanhappes, which had married with the sister of Iames Hamilton of Bedwilhough, which slue the Regent. There was burned seauen other faire houses thereabouts, not of that name, but of alie: besides those, there were diuers of their kinred & alie, that came in with humble submissiō, & assured themselues, promising their obedience to their king, &c.

The 23. of January, the queenes maiesty accompanied with her nobility, came from her house at the Strand called Sommerset place, and entred the city of London by Temple barre, Fleetstreete, Cheape, & so by the north side of the Burse, to sir Thomas Greshams in Bishops gate street, where she dined. After dinner, her grace returning through Cornehill, entred the Burse on the south side, and after her highnesse had viewed euery part thereof aboue ground, especially the Pawne, which was richly furnished with all sorts of the finest wares in the city, she caused the same Burse, by an herault and a trumpet to be proclamed, the Royall Exchange, so to be called from thencefoorth, and not otherwayes. 1571. Royall Exchange.

The seuenteenth day of February, at a place called Kinnaston, neare Marclech hill in the county of Hereford, was seene the ground to open, and certaine rockes with a peece of ground, remooued and went forward the space of foure dayes, making at the first a terrible noyse as it went on the earth: it remooued it selfe betweene fiue of the clocke in the euening and seuen the next morrow, forty spaces, carrying great trees and sheepecotes, some sheepecotes with three score sheep in them, some trees fell into the chinkes, other that grew on the same ground, grow now as firmely on a hill, and some that stood east, stand west, and those that stood west, stand east. The depth of the hole where it first brake out, is thirty foot, the breadth of the breach is eight score yeards, and in length aboue twenty score yeards. It ouerthrew Kingstone chappell. Also, two high-wayes be remooued nigh one hundred yeards, with the trees of the hedge-rowes. The ground in all is fiue and twenty acres, and where tillage ground was, there is pasture left in place, and where was pasture, there is tillage ground gone vpon it. The ground as it remooued, drawe the earth before it, and at the lower part ouerwhelmed the ground, so that it is growne to a great hill of twelue fadome high. It remooued from saterday till monday at night following, and so staied. A strange kind of earth mouing.

In the moneth of February, sir Thomas Sackeuile baron of Buckhurst was sent in ambassade from the Queenes maiesty to Charles the ninth French king, as well to congratulate for his mariage with the daughter of the emperor Maximilian, as for other weighty affaires. And as his ambassage was great, so was his charge no lesse in furnishing himselfe and his traine accordingly, being both in number and furniture, such in euery point as did appertaine: and his receiuing and entertainement in Fraunce by the king and others, was agreeable thereto, for he was receiued vpon the coast by the gouernours of the fortified townes right honourably, by order from the king. Among other, the Bournoisell was one, who being very well mounted and appointed, left not his lordship before he came to the court, and from thence accompanied him backe vntill his embarkement homewards. In the maine countries, he was accompanied with the gouernours and nobles of the places about: and in the good townes where he passed, he was presented by the chiefe magistrates, though his lordships rewards ouer valued their presents. Sir Thomas Sackuile sent into France.

At his approch neare to Paris, he was encountred on the way by two Marquesses of Trans and Saluces, this being of the house of Sauoy, and the other of the family of Foix. These wanted not such as accompanied them, euen of the best sort, sort. At the lord ambassadors first audience, which was at the castle of Medzill otherwise called Bologne neare Paris, where the K. the lay, the queenes Almaine coaches very brauely furnished, were sent to Paris for him, in one of the which his lordship with the marquesse of Trance rode toward the court, very narrowly escaping from a shrewd turne, by reason the same coach was ouerthrowne, by the duch wagoners their negligence, who in a brauery galloping the field, made an ouer short turne, wherewith the marques was sore bruised. The lord ambassador at his arriuall, was very honorably received, he was banqueted by diuerse, and that very sumptuously, which by him was not vnrequited, but his reward at the kings hand was onely a chaine, waying one thousand French crownes. At this present, the riuer of Sayne, that runneth through the city of Paris, was not passable with bellels, by reason of the great frosts, and thereby not onely all kind of victuals but also hay and wood was hard to come by, and not to be had but at exceslive prises, the countrie thereabouts hauing bene sore harried and spoiled by the ciuill tumults: by reason whereof, not onely the lord of Buckhurst for the space he remained there, but also sir Henry Norrice, and maister Francis Walsingham her maiesties Ambassadors, liegers successiuely, were driuen to an increase of expences, paying for euery thing they bought an higher price then had bene accustomed. After that my lord Buckhurst had bene feasted and banqueted by the king, and others of the French nobilitie, and had accomplished the points of his ambassage, he tooke leaue of the king, and departed homewards, arriuing here in England a little before Easter.

A parliamẽt. The second of Aprill a Parliament began at Westminster, wherein was granted to the queenes maiestie (toward her great charges, in repressing the late rebellion in the North, and pursuing the sayd rebels and their fautors, which were fled into Scotland (by the cleargy, a subsidy of 6. s. in the £. and by the temporalty two fifteenes, with a subsidy of 2. s. 8. d. in the £.

Iustes at Westminster The first, second, and third of May, was holden at Westminster before the Queenes maiestie, a solemne Iust, at the tilt, turney, and barriers. The chalengers were Edward earle of Oxford, Charles Howard, sir Henry Lee, and Christopher Hatton esquier, who all did very valiantly, but the chiefe honour was giuen to the earle of Oxford.

Doctor Story executed. The first of June, Iohn Story a doctor of the cannon law, who before had bene condemned of high treason, was drawne from the tower of London to Tiborne, and there hanged, bowelled and quartered, his head set on London bridge, and his quarters on the gates of the city.

A combate appointed at Tuthill. The 18. of June, in Trinity terme, there was a combate appointed to haue bene fought for a certaine Manour and demaine lands belonging thereunto, in the Isle of Hartie, adioyning to the Isle of Sheppey in Kent, Simon Low and Iohn Kyme were plaintifs, and had brought a writ of right against Thomas Paramore, who offered to defend his right by battell, whereupon the plaintifs aforesayd, accepted to answer his challenge, offering likewise to defend their right to the same Manour and lands, and to proue by battel that Paramore had no right nor no good title to haue the same.

Hereupon the sayd Thomas Paramore brought before the Iudges of the common place at Westminster, one George Thorne, a bigge, broad, strong set fellow.

and the plaintiks brought Henry Nailor maister of defence, and seruant to the right honorable the earle of Leicester, a proper slender man, and not so tall as the other: Thorne cast downe a gauntlet, which Nailor tooke vp. Upon the Sonday before the battell should be tried on the next morow, the matter was stayed, and the parties agreed, that Paramore being in possession should haue the land, and was bound in 500. pound to consider the plaintiks, as vpon hearing the matter the Iudges should award. The Queenes maiesty was the taker vp of the matter, in this wise: It was thought good, that for Paramores assurance, the order should be kept touching the combate, and that the plaintiks Low and Kime should make default of appearance, but that yet such as were sureties of Nailor, their champions appearance, should bring him in, and likewise those that were sureties for Thorne, should bring in the same Thorne in discharge of their band, & that the court should sit in Tuthill fields, where was prepared one plot of ground one and twenty yeards square, double railed for the combate, without the west square, a stage being set vp for the Iudges, representing the court of the common pleas. All the compasse without the lists was set with scaffolds one aboue another, for people to stand and behold. There were behind the square where the Iudges sate, two tents, the one for Nailor, the other for Thorne. Thorne was there in the morning timely. Nailor about 7. of the clocke came through London, apparelled in a dublet and galey gascoigne breeches, all of crimosin satten cut and raced, a hat of blacke veluet with a red feather and band, before him drums and fifes playing: the gauntlet that was cast downe by George Thorne, was borne before the sayd Nailor vpon a swords point, and his baston (a staffe of an elle long, made Taper-wise, tipt with horne) with his shield of hard leather, was borne after him, by Askam a yeoman of the Queenes garde: he came into the pallace of Westminster, and staying not long before the hall doze, came backe into the kings streete, and so along through the sanctuary, and Tuthill streete, into the field, where he stayed till past nine of the clocke, and then sir Ieronie Bowes brought him to his tent. Thorne being in the tent with sir Henry Cheiney long before. About ten of the clocke, the court of common pleas remoued, and came to the place prepared: when the Lord chiefe Iustice with two other his associates were set, then Low was called solemnely to come in, or else he to lose his writ of right. Then after a certaine time the sureties of Henry Nailor were called to bring in the sayd Nailor champion for Simon Low, and shortly thereupon sir Ieronie Bowes leading Nailor by the hand, entreth with him the lists, bringing him downe that square by which he entred, being on the left hand of the Iudges, and so about till he came to the next square iust against the Iudges, and there making curtesie, first with one leg, and then with the other passed forth till he came to the middle of the place and then made the like obeisance and so passing till they came to the barre, there he made the like curtesie and his shield was held vp aloft ouer his head: Nailor put off his heather stockes, and so bare foote and bare legged, saue his silke scaulonions to the ankles and his dublet sleeues tied vp aboue the elbow, and bare headed, came in as is aforesayd. Then were the sureties of George Thorne called to bring in the same Thorne, and immediatly sir Henry Cheyney entring at the vpper end on the right hand of the Iudges, vsed the like order.

order in comming about by his side, as Nailor had before on that other side, and so comming to the barre with like obeisance, held vp his shield, proclamation was made in forme a followeth: The Iustices commaund in the Queenes maiesties name, that no person of what estate, degree, or condition that he be, being present, to be so hardy to giue any token or signe, by countenance, speech, or language, either to the prouour or to the defender, whereby the one of them may take aduantage of the other: and no person remoue, but still keepe his place: and that euery person and persons keepe their staues and their weapons to themselues: and suffer neither the sayd prouour nor defender to take any of their weapons or any other thing, that may stand either to the sayd prouour or defender any auaile, vpon paine of forfeiture of lands, tenements, goods, chattels, and imprisonment of their bodies, and making fine and ransome at the Queenes pleasure.

Then was the prouour to be sworne in forme as followeth: This heare, you Iustices, that I haue this day neither eate, drunke, nor haue vpon me either bone, stone, ne grasse, or any inchantment, sorcerie, or witchcraft, where-through the power of the word of God might be inleased or diminished, and the diuels power increased: and that my appeale is true, so helpe me God and his saints, and by this booke.

After all this solemne order was finished, the lord chiefe Iustice rehearsing the maner of bringing the writ of right by Simon Low, of the answere made thereunto by Paramore, of the proceeding therein, and how Paramore had chalenged to defend his right to the land by battell, by his champion George Thorne, and of the accepting the triall that was by Lowe, with his champion Henry Nailor, and then for default in appearance in Lowe, he adiudged the land to Paramore, and dismissed the champions, acquitting the sureties of their bands. He also willed Henry Nailor to render againe to George Thorne his gantlet, whereunto the said Nailor answered, that his lordship might commaund him any thing, but willingly he would not render the said gantlet to Thorne except he could win it: and further, he chalenged the said Thorne to play with him halfe a score blowes, to shew some passime to the lord chiefe iustice and the other there assembled: but Thorne answered, that he came to fight, and would not play. Then the lord chiefe Iustice commending Nailor for his valiant courage, commanded them both quietly to depart the field, &c.

Sir William Powlet lord treasurer.

The tenth day of March, deceased sir William Powlet knight, lord Sent-Iohn earle of Wiltshire, marquesse of Winchester, knight of the honourable order of the garter, one of the queenes maiesties priuy counsell, and lord high treasurer of England, at his manor of Basing in Hampshire. This worthy man was borne in the yeare of our Lord 1374. in the fourteenth yeare of king Edward the 4. at Filliarton de la Moze in Wiltshire on Whitsonday, and liued about the age of ninety and seauen yeares, in fiue kings and queenes dayes. He serued fiue kings and queenes, Henry the seuenth, Henry the eight, Edward the first, queene Mary, and Q. Elizabeth. All these he serued faithfully, & of them was greatly fauored. This man in his time passed many offices, for in the time of the late K. Henry the 8. he enioyed successiuely the roomes of maister of the wards & liueries, controller, treasurer, lord chamberlaine, and lord steward of the kings houshold, and lastly, lord treasurer of England in the time of king Edward the first, which he continued about one and twenty yeares: he was aduanced to sundry honours, for by the said king Henry the eight he was created lord Sent-Iohn of Basing, and knight of the garter, and by king Edward the first he was aduanced to be earle of Wiltshire, and marques of Winchester. Himselfe did see the children of his childrens children growne to the number of one hundred and three: a rare blessing giuen by God to men of his calling.

Pikemen & shot trained vp in Lond.

The fiue and twenty and fiue and twenty of March, by the commandement of the queenes maiestie her counsell, the citizens of London assembling at their seuerall hals, the maisters chose out the most likely and actiue persons of euery their companies, to the number of three thousand, whom they appointed to be pikemen and shot, the pikemen were foorthwith armed in faire corslets and other furniture, according thereunto: the gunners had euery of them his caliuer, with the furniture, and murrians on their heads. To these were appointed diuerse valiant captaines, who to traine them vp in warlike feates, mustred them thrise euery weeke, sometimes in the artillery yard, teaching the gunners to handle their peeces sometimes at the Miles end, and in Saint Georges field, teaching them to skirmish. In the which skirmish on the Miles end the tenth day of Aprill, one of the gunners of the goldsmithes company, was shot in the side with a peece of a crowzing sticke left in one of the caliuers, whereof he died, and was buried the twelfth of Aprill in Saint Paules churchyeard, all the gunners marching from the Miles end in battell ray, shot off their caliuers at his graue.

The foure and twentith of May, Martin Bullocke was hanged on a gibbet by the well with two buckets in Bishops gate streete of London, for robbing and most shamefully murdering of a merchant named Arthur Hall, in the parsonage of Saint Martine by the said well. This Martin had procured the said Arthur Hall to come to the said parsonage, to buy of him certaine plate: but after the said Arthur had well viewed the same, he said, this is none of your plate, it hath doctor Gardeners marke, and I know it to be his: that is true said Martin Bullocke, but he hath appointed me to sell it, &c. After this talke, whiles the said Arthur was weighing the plate, the same Martin fetcht out of the kitchin a thicke washing beetle, and comming behind him, strake the said Arthur on the head, that he felled him with the first stroke, and then strake him againe, and after tooke the said Arthurs dagger, and sticked him, and with his knife cut his throat, and after would haue trussed him in a Danske chest, but the same was too short: whereupon he tumbled him downe a paire of staires, and after thinking to haue buried him in the cellar, his legges being broken with the first fall, and stiffe, he could not draw him downe the cellar staires being winding, wherefore he cut off his legges with an hatchet, and in the end, trussed him with straw in a dry fat, and saying it was his apparell and bookes, caused the same to be carried to the waters side, and so shipped to Rie. But as God would haue it, there was suspition gathered against the murtherer, whereby he was examined before Alderman Branch one of the sheriffes of London, but seemed so innocent and guiltlesse in that case, that one Robert Gee a cloth-worker, being of good credit, undertooke for his foorth-comming: whereuppon Bullocke slipt away, first to Westminster, where taking boat, he was rowed vp the riuer westward till he came to Okingham in the forrest 8. miles beyond the towne of Windsore: from whence (by Gods prouidence) he came backe againe vnto London, where he lodged at the red lion in Holborne. In the meane time Robert Gee, vpon knowledge had that Bullocke was slept aside, was not only had in suspition, but also committed to ward, albeit so, as he had libertie to send abroad such as should make sute after Bullocke, & amongst other, one of his seruants was sent to Rie, after the dry fat, & comming thither, the same drie fat was opened, where the mangled corps of Hall was found; whereby the truth of the matter came to light, & by the will of God, Bullocke was at the very same time discouered at the place in Holborne afore mentioned, & there apprehended, receiued, as ye haue heard, due punishment for his wicked fact.

The 25. of March being Wednesday in Easter weeke, and the feast of the Annunciatiō of our Lady, George Browne cruelly murdered two honest men neare vnto Shooters hill in Kent, the one of them was a wealthy marchant of London, named George Sanders, the other Iohn Beane of Woolwich: which murder was com-committed in manner as followeth.

On Tuesday in Easter weeke (the foure and twentieth of March) the sayd George Browne receiuing secret intelligẽce by letter frõ mistres Anne Drewry, that maister Sanders should lodge the same night at the house of one maister Barnes in Woolwich, and from thence go on foote to Saint Mary Cray the next morning, lay in waite for him by the way, a little from Shooters hill, and there slue both him and Iohn Beane, seruant to maister Barnes: but Iohn Beane hauing ten or eleuen wounds, and being left for dead, by Gods prouidence reuiued againe, and creeping away on all foure, was found by an old man and his maiden, & conueyed to woolwich, where he gaue euident markes of the murtherer.

Angelo Bassi Politian. born at Monte Policiano in Tuscany. flor. at Florence

Immediatly vpon the deed doing, Browne sent mistres Drewry word thereof by Roger Clement (among them called trusty Roger) he himselfe repaired forthwith to the court at Greenewich, and anon after him came thither the report of the murther also. Then departed he thence vnto London, and came to the house of mistres Drewry, where, though he spake not personally with her, after conference had with her seruant trusty Roger, she prouided him twenty pounds that same day, for the which she layd certaine plate of her owne, and of mistresse Sanders to gage. On the next morrow being thursday (hauing intelligence, that Browne was sought for) they sent him fiue pounds more by the same Roger, warning him to shift for himselfe by flight, which thing he forebare not to do: neuertheless the lords of the queenes maiesties counsel, caused so speedy and narrow search to be made for him, that vpon the eight and twentieth of the same moneth, he was apprehended in a mans house of his owne name at Rochester, and being brought backe againe to the court, was examined by the counsell, to whom he confessed the deed, as you haue heard, and that he had oftentimes before pretended and sought to do the same, by the instigation of the sayd mistresse Drewry, who had promised to make a mariage betweene him and mistresse Sanders (whom he seemed to loue exceslliuely) neuertheless he protested (though vntruly) that mistres Sanders was not priuy nor consenting thereunto. Vpon his confession he was arraigned at the the kings bench in Westminster hall the eightenth of Aprill, where he acknowledged himselfe guilty, and was condemned as principall of the murder, according to which sentence, he had iudgement, and was executed in Smithfield on Monday the 20 of Aprill, at which time also vntruly (as she her selfe confessed afterward) he laboured by all meanes to cleare mistres Sanders of committing euill of her body with him, as also of procuring or consenting to the murther of her husband, and then beginning to sing a Psalme, O Lord turne not away thy face, &c. he flung himselfe beside the ladder, and so shortned his owne life: he was after hanged vp in chaines neare vnto the place where he had done the fact.

George Browne hanged in Smithfield.

In the meane time mistresse Drewrie an her man being examined, as well by their owne confessions, as by falling out of the matter (and also by Brownes appeachment thought culpable) were committed to ward. And after mistresse Sanders being deliuered of child, and churched (for at the time of her husbands death she looked presently to lye downe) was vpon mistresse Drewries mans confession, and other great likelihoods, likewise committed to the Tower, and an

on Wednesday the first of May arraigned with mistresse Drewrie at the Guild hall, the effect of whose inditement was, that they by a letter written had bene procurers of the layd murther, and knowing the murther done, had by money and otherwise relieued the murderer: whereunto they pleaded not guilty, howbeit, they were both condemned as accessaries to maister Sanders death, and executed in Smithfield the thirteenth of May, being Wednesday in Whitson weeke, at which time they both confessed themselues guiltie of the fact. Trustie Roger mistresse Drewries man was arraigned on Friday the eight of May, and being there condemned as accessary, was executed with his mistresse at the time and place aforesayd. Not long after, Anthony Browne, brother to the foresayd George Browne, was for notable felonies conueyed from Newgate to Yorke, and there hanged.

This yeare the Queenes maiestie of England, being moued by the Regent of Scotland, in the behalfe of the young king of Scots her cosin, sent a power of 1500. Englishmen to the siege of Edenborough castle, sir William Drewry knight marshall of Barwike, to be generall of her forces there, with captaines as followeth, sir Francis Russell knight, captaine Reade of Barwike, and these following also, captaine Yaxley, captaine Wood, captaine Brickwell, captaine Pikeman, captaine Gamme, captaine Cace, captaine Carew, captaine Erington prouost marshall, captaine Atholl, captaine Sterlee captaine of the pioners, and captaine Barton also of the pioners. Diuerse other gentlemen also went thither to serue of their owne free wils, as sir George Carie knight, sir Henry Lea knight, maister Thomas Cicill maister Michaell Carie, maister Henrie Carie, maister William Knolles, maister Thomas Sutton, maister Cotton, maister Kelway, maister Diar, maister Tilney, maister William Killigrew, maister William Selby, and other. Sir William Drewry with the captaines, gentlemen, and number of souldiers before mentioned, passed from Barwike to Lieth, from whence on the 25. of Aprill they marched on to Edenborough, entred the towne, and the same day sommoned the castell in forme as followeth:

Aide sent into Scotland against the castle of Edenborough.

Sir William Kirkaudie, sometime of Exange knight, for as much as the Queenes maiestie my soueraigne lady, vpon the earnest request of her deare cosin the king of Scots, your soueraigne lord, made to her highnesse by his regent, nobility, & states of this realme, after all good meanes vsed to haue reduced you to dutiful obedience of his authority by treaty, which hitherto you haue not duly harkened vnto, to the onely hinderance of the vniuersall peace in this realme, by withholding that his highnesse castle, meaning as it seemeth, to reserue the same for a receptacle of forraine forces, to the manifest daungers both of this realme and of my soueraignesse, and therefore necessarie to remoue so perillous a daunger to both the realmes, for which consideration her maiestie hath sent her aide & succors of men, ordinance and munition, vnder my charge & leading for the repugnation & recouery of the sayd castle, to the said kings vse and behalfe, and therefore according to her maiesties commandement and commission, this shall be in due manner to warne, require, and summon you, that you render & deliuer the sayd castle, with the whole ordinance artillery, munitions, iewels, houshold-stuffe, and such other implements within the same, to me & the vse and behalfe of the king your soueraigne, & his regent in his name, immediatly after this my letter of summons, or knowledge of the same, shall come to you: which if you obey, as of duty you ought, then shall I in her maiesties name interpone my selfe to trauell with the regent, counsell, and nobility here for the safety of your liues, &c. Otherwise if you continue in your former obstinacy, abiding the canon, then no further to looke for grace or fauor, but you and the rest within that castle to be pursued to the vttermost, and holden as enemies to her maiestie, your owne soueraigne and country. Giuen at Edenbrough by me sir William Drewry knight, generall of her maiesties forces now in Scotland, this 25. of Aprill, 1573.

Du Bartas & Fr. poet. flor.

The Lord Grange captaine of the castle, notwithstanding this summons, refused vtterly to yeeld the castle, who thereupon receiued such answer from the generall, as stood not to his contentation. Hereupon were the pioners set in hand to cast trenches, and to raise mounts in places conuenient to plant the ordinance vpon. And then began the siege of the castle in fiue places, where were erected fiue mounts. The first was for the regent, called the kings mount. The second for sir William Drewry generall there. The third was gouerned by sir George Carie. The fourth by sir Henry Lea. The fift by maister Thomas Sutton maister of the ordinance in the north part of England. There was at this siege as is reported 1500. Englishmen, and of Scots fiue hundred, or rather 1500. there was also one with another peeces of artillery 30. to wit, 6. canons, nine halfe canons, nine culuerings, fiue sakers. They within spared not to bestow such as they had, as well at the pioners as souldiers, in so much that diuerse were hurt, and some slaine, before the trenches and mounts might be brought to perfection, but they within escaped not free, especially after that the trenches & mounts were brought in state to defend the assailants, who watching and warding in the trenches, answered them within the castle very roughly. On the 17. of May began the battery of the castle, so that there were thirty canons shot off against the same, and so well bestowed at Dauids tower, that by the ruines thereof then and after, the force of the English canons were easie to be seene. The 18. 19. and 20. of May, the canons and demy canons were not idle, but the one and twenty the whole battery began on each side, the castle from the trenches and mounts very hotly, & still they within ceased not to make answer againe with their artillery, killing and hurting diuers both English and Scots, but such was the diligence of the English gunners, that they displaced the ordinance in the castle, and stroke one of their chiefe canons iust in the mouth, whereby the same was broken in peeces. The 26. of May the assault was giuen at seuen of the clocke in the morning to the Spurre, which by the hardy manhood of the assailants was won, and was no sooner entred by the Englishmen, but that the generals ensigne was shewed and spied vpon the front and top thereof, to the great discomfort of them within the castell. In the meane time whilest these were appointed to give the assault thus to the Spurre, there were certaine English men and Scots commaunded to make a countenance of an assault at the west side of the castell, whereby those that assaulted the Spurre might the more easily obtaine their purpose, but they rashly aduenturing further then they had in commaundement, were beaten backe and repulsed, with 28. or 30. of their company slaine and hurt. The same day toward night, they within the castell by a drumme demaunded parley, which being graunted, with assurance of all hostilitie from that houre vnto the 28. of May, the lord Peterroe was let downe by a rope from the castell, and afterward the lord Grange himselfe captaine of the castell, and Robert Melain came likewise downe to talke with the Generall, and such other as were appointed to accompanie him: hereupon at length, to wit, the said 28. of May, the castell was surrendred into the hands of sir William Drewrie, and so it rested in his possession for the time, and his ensigne was set vp and spread during the same time in sundrie places of the castell, and afterwards to the great honour of England, by him it was deliuered vnto the vse of the king of Scots, and part of the spoile of the castell was giuen to the souldiers, the cannons and artillerie, with certaine other instruments, left to the king. If the English men by force had taken it, it was decreed that they should haue had the whole spoile except the artillerie, & so should haue enioyed it by the space of three daies.

Edeborough castell yeelded to the Englishmen.

Causes of deliuerie of the castell were three:

1 Lacke of water: the well within the castell was stopped and defiled by the ruines of the castell: the other well without the castell could not serue them, for that there was a mount made to hinder them. Another water there was which was vnknowne to them which were without, and was taken from them when the Spur of the castell was taken, out of the which they were wont to haue a pint a day for euery souldier.

2 Diuerse sicke.

3 Diuerse hurt.

4 Not many to maintaine the castell, which had no space to take any rest they were so plied and ouerwearied.

5 Diuerse diuided in opinion.

6 Some were no souldiers.

7 No aide was to be looked for.

The 16. of June, the prisoners were deliuered by the said sir William Drewry in presence of sundry Scots and Englishmen, vnto the regent, and that done, the same day the said sir William Drewrie with his power departed toward Barwike. The names of the prisoners were these, sir William Kerkaudie lord of Grange, and Captaine of the castell of Edenborough, the lord Hume, the lord Ledington Secretarie, the Lord of Peterroe constable of the castle, the countesse of Argyle, the ladie of Ledington, the ladie of Grange, with others: in all to the number of men, one hundred fortie foure, women thirtie foure, boyes ten.

Peter Burchet wounded maiſter Hawkins.

The 11. of October, Peter Burchet gentleman (of the middle Temple) with his dagger, ſuddenly aſſailed, cruelly wounded, and meant to haue murdered a ſeruiceable gentleman named Iohn Hawkins eſquire, as he with ſir William Winter and another gentleman rode towards Weſtminſter, in the high ſtreete neare to the Strand beyond the Temple bar of London, for which fact the ſaid Burchet being apprehended and committed to the tower, was after examined concerning the fact, who anſwered that he tooke the ſaid maiſter Hawkins for another gentleman, to wit, ſir Chriſtopher Hatton: and being further examined, he was found to hold certaine erronious opinions, for the which he was ſent to the Lollards tower, from thence being called into the conſiſtorie of Paules church, before the right reuerend father Edwin biſhop of London, and other, and by them examined, he ſtoode in his opinions, till the ſentence of death,

Peter Burchet found to be an heretike.

as an heretike was readie to haue bene pronounced against him on the fourth of November: but through the earnest perswasions of diuers learned men, who tooke great paines in that matter, it was said he renounced, forswore, and abiured his opinions for erronious and damnable, promising neuer to returne to them, and also willingly to do and performe all such penance as the bishop his Ordinarie should iniopne him, but nothing was done, wherefore on the ninth of November by commandement of the Counsell, the said Peter Burchet was remooued from the Lollards tower to the Tower of London, where on the next morrow about noone, whilest one of the twaine that had by appointment kept him companie was gone downe, and locked the doore after him, leauing the other with him, called Hugh Longworth, who stood at a window reading in the Bible, the said Burchet walking vp and downe in the chamber, tooke a billets end out of the fire, and knocked the said Longworth on the head, and left not till he had stricken him starke dead and then drawing him behinde the chamber doore, he awaited the comming vp of the other, likewise to haue dispatched him, but the other opening the doore, and missing his fellow from the window where he left him: taking good regard, espied him lying behinde the doore, which he clapped to, ran downe for more helpe, and returning found his fellow murdered as is afore shewed. For the which fact on the next morrow, he was arraigned and condemned at Westminster, and from thence returned to Somerset house at the Strand, where he remained that night. And the next morrow being the 12. of November, he was brought out to a gibbet, set vp for that purpose, nigh the place where he wounded maister Hawkins, he had no speech, nor shewed signe of repentance, but was by force and strength of men partly drawne, partly borne and thrust vp to the gibbet, where after his right hand being stricken off, and nayled to the gibbet, he was hanged.

Peter Burchet abiured his heresie.

Peter Burchet submitted himselfe to do penance as it was said.

A monstrous fish.

The ninth of July, at fiue of the clocke at night, in the isle of Thanet beside Ramesgate in the parish of Saint Peter vnder the cliff, a monstrous fish or whale of the sea did shoot himselfe on shore, where for want of water, beating himselfe on the sands, he died about fiue of the clocke in the next morning, before which time he rored, and was heard more then a mile on the land. The length of this fish was two and twentie yards, the neather iaw twelue foote the opening, one of his eyes being taken out of his head, was more then fiue horses in a cart could draw, a man stood vpright in the place from whence the eye was taken, the thicknesse from the backe whereon he lay, to the top of his belly (which was vpward) was fourteene foote, his taile of the same breadth, betweene his eyes twelue foote, three men stood vpright in his mouth, some of the ribs were sixteene foot long, his toung was sixteene foot long, his liuer two cart loade, into his nostrils any man might haue crept: the oile being boyled out of the head was parmacetie, the oile of his body was whitish, and sweet of tast.

Peter Ramus Agnes Bridges and Rachell Pinder at Paules crosse for counterfetting to be possessed.

The fifteenth of August being Sonday, Agnes Bridges a maid about the age of twenty yeares, and Rachel Pinder a wench about the age of 11. or 12. yeares, who both of them had counterfeited to be possessed by the diuell, (whereby they had not onely marueilously deluded many people, both men and women, but also diuerse such persons as otherwise seemed to be of good wit and vnderstanding) stood before the preacher at Paules crosse, where they acknowledged their hypocriticall counterfetting, with penitent behauiours, requiring forgiuenesse of God and the world, and the people to pray for them. Also their seuerall examinations and confessions were there openly read by the preacher, and afterwards published in print, for the further posteritie hereafter to beware of the like deceiuers.

A lad of 18. yeares old drowned in a chanell at London.

The fourth of September in the afternoone, such a storme of raine happened at London, as the like of long time could not be remembred, wherethrough the chanels of the citie suddenly rising, ranne with such forcible course towards the common shores, that a lad of the age of 18. yeares, minding to haue lept ouer the chanell neare vnto Dowgate, was borne ouer with the streame, and by the same carried from the conduit there towards the Thamis, with such a swiftnesse, that no man with staues or otherwaies could stay him, till he came against a cart wheele ỳ stood in the water gate, afore which time he was drowned & starke dead.

Terme adiourned. Two tides in one houre.

Michaelmas terme, which had bene adiourned by proclamation, began at Westminster on the first of November. The foure and twentith of Februarie, the feast of S. Matthie, on which day the faire was kept at Tewkesburie, a straunge thing happened there, for after a flood which was not great, but such as thereby the medowes neare adioyning were couered with water, in the afternoone there came downe the riuer of Auon great numbers of flies and beetles, such as in summer euenings vse to strike men in the face, in great heapes, a foot thicke aboue the water, so that to credible mens iudgement, there were seene within a paire of butlengths of those flies aboue an hundred quarters. The mils thereabouts were dammed vp with them for the space of foure daies after, and then were cleansed by digging them out with shouels: from whence they came is yet vnknowne, but the day was cold and a hard frost. 1575 Flies in Februarie, the number strange. The 26. of Februarie, betweene foure and fiue of the clocke in the afternoone, great earthquakes happened in the cities of Yorke, Worcester, Glocester, Bristow, Hereford, and in the countries about, which caused the people to run out of their houses for feare they should haue fallen on their heads. In Tewkesburie, Bredon, and other places the dishes fell from the cupboords, and the bookes in mens studies from the shelues. In Norton chappell the people being on their knees at Euening prayer, the ground mouing, caused them to runne away in great feare that the dead bodies would haue risen, or the chappell to haue fallen: part of Rithen castell fell downe, with certaine bricke chimneis in gentlemens houses. The bell in the shire hall of Denbigh was caused to toll twise by shaking of the hall &c. Earthquake.

On Easter day, which was the third of Aprill, about nine of the clocke in the forenoone, was disclosed a congregation of Anabaptists Dutchmen, in a house without the barres of Aldgate at London, whereof seuen and twentie were taken and sent to prison, and foure of them bearing fagots recanted at Paules crosse on the fifteenth day of May, in forme as followeth: Anabaptists bare fagots at Paules crosse.

Whereas I. I. T. R. H. being seduced by the diuell the spirit of errour, and by false falſe teachers his miniſters, haue fallen into certaine moſt deteſtable and damnable hereſies, namely:

1 That Chriſt tooke not fleſh of the ſubſtance of the bleſſed virgine Mary.
2 That infants of the faithfull ought not to be baptized.
3 That a chriſtian man may not be a magiſtrate, or beare the ſword or office of authority.
4 That it is not lawfull for a chriſtian to take an oath.

Now by the grace of God, and through conference with good and learned miniſters of Chriſt his Church, I do vnderſtand and acknowledge the ſame to be moſt damnable and deteſtable hereſies, and do aske God here before his church, mercy for my ſayd former errors, and do forſake them, recant and renounce them, & abiure them from the bottome of my heart, profeſſing that I certainly beleeue,

1 That Chriſt tooke fleſh of the ſubſtance of the bleſſed virgin Mary.
2 That infants of the faithfull ought to be baptized.
3 That a chriſtian man may be a magiſtrate, or beare the ſword and office of authority.
4 That it is lawfull for a chriſtian to take an oath.

And further I confeſſe, that the whole doctrine and religion eſtabliſhed & publiſhed in this realme of England, as alſo that which is receiued and preached in the Dutch church here in the city, is ſound, true, and according to the word of God, whereunto in all things I ſubmit my ſelfe, and will moſt gladly be a member of the ſayd Dutch church, from henceforth vtterly abandoning and forſaking all and euery Anabaptiſticall error.

Archbiſhop of Canterbury deceaſed.

The 17. day of May, about midnight following the right reuerend father in God Matthew Parker, doctor of diuinity, archbiſhop of Canterbury, deceaſed at Lambeth, and was there honorably buried.

This reuerend father examined throughly the Engliſh tranſlation of the holy Bibles, wherein he partly vſed the helpe of his brethren biſhops, and other doctors, and cauſed the ſame to be newly printed in the largeſt volume, for the furniture of many churches then wanting. Alſo making diligent ſearch for the antiquities of the Brytons, and Engliſh Saxons, to the end thoſe monuments might be carefully kept, he cauſed them to be well bound and trimly couered, and ſuch whereof he knew very few examples to be extant (among the which was Matthew Paris, Matthew Florilegus, Thomas Walſingham & other, all which he receiued of my hands) he cauſed to be printed. The famous pallace of his ſea at Canterbury, firſt builded by Stephen Langton one of his predeceſſors, & ſince by long continuance decayed, and in Thomas Cranmers time conſumed with fire, he renued, builded, and fully reſtored with the charges of more then 1400 l.

And here I thinke good to set downe a declaration sent by the Queenes maiestie of England vnto the King of Spaine, containing a iustification of her proceedings with the States of the low countries.

The Queenes maiestie being giuen to vnderstand of diuerse most slanderous and false bruits giuen out touching her proceedings and dealings with the states of the Low countries, tendings as it were to make her the authour and principall nourisher of the ciuill troubles in the said countries: and doubting that the sowers and spreaders abroad of the said bruits, to seeke by all meanes they may to induce her good brother the king of Spaine to beleeue the said false and malicious surmises to be true, with meaning thereby to breed a breach & interruption of the good amitie betweene them: her Maiestie hauing therefore nothing more in recommendation then her honour, and to be reputed a Prince that desireth to maintaine and continue good amitie with the Princes her neighbours (whatsoeuer hath bene giuen out maliciously to the contrarie) being able to iustifie her whole actions before God and the world, alwell towards him as other Princes her neighbours, hath thought it very expedient for the earnest desire she hath to satisfie the said king, to set downe in writing a declaration (such as she will maintaine to be true in the word of a Prince) of her proceedings with the States, to the end the said King being truly informed therein, such causes and scruples of suspition, as might any way hinder the good amitie betweene them, might be remooued, and the same restored to as great perfection and integritie as hath bene heretofore betweene any their progenitors, which said declaration, tending to that good end aboue mentioned, her Maiestie also hath thought meete to accompany alwell with an aduise vnto the said king, what way in her opinion were most fit for him to take for the continuance of the said countries vnder his obedience, and the restoring of the vnto their former quietnesse and repose, as also with her resolution in those cases of the Low countries, in case the said king shall not condescend to take some way of pacification, according to her Maiesties most sincere and friendly aduise. A declaratiō sent by the Queene to the king of Spaine.

Car. Sigonius flor. at Padoua.

And first touching her proceedings with the States, she doubteth not but that if the king shall reuert to his owne knowledge, and call to remembrance how often sithence the first breaking out of the ciuill dissention in those countries, her Maiestie hath mooued him by sundrie ministers, sent as well vnto himselfe as vnto his vnder-gouernours in the said countries, forewarning both him and them of the mischiefes presently then fallen out, and aduised him to take some speedie way for the preuention of the same, he cannot but in honour and conscience confesse, that her Highnesse hath therein discharged the dutie of a faithfull friend, and good allie in that behalfe. Of which aduise if it might please him to haue taken profite, those his countries being presently in a most perplexed state, had bene staied from the ruine and destruction they are now apparantly running into, his people and subiects preserued from slaughter and bloudshed, his rich townes continued vnspoyled, and the whole gouernement kept from perill of alienation: and if herein for her

Maiesties iustification, neither these friendly offices, nor the word and faith of a Prince may suffice, yet her owne accounts themselues may serue to iustifie her in the eies and sight of all the world: That she hath sought to continue those countryes vnder the Kings obedience, and hath not at any time intended to impatronize her selfe of any part of them, a matter which perhaps other Princes hauing like aduantages offered by some part of his people, would not haue refused, and therefore may thinke her selfe euill dealt withall, in case so rare an example should be so hardly or rather vnfriendly interpreted. And as her Maiestie hath not left any good office vndone towards the King and his ministers tending to pacification, and the perswasions of those countries vnder his obedience: so on the other side, she hath not omitted by sundrie messengers sent both to the Prince of Orenge and the States, aswell to perswade them to cease their ciuill warres, and to take some way of peace and agreement amongst themselues, as also to continue their auncient obedience vnder the said King their naturall Lord and Soueraigne, being prouoked thereto vpon secret, but yet verie true and certaine aduertisements giuen her of great offers made vnto them by some (whom she forbeareth to name for good respects) to haue withdrawen them from their obedience. And herein if besides many perswasions vsed by messengers sent of purpose to aduise them to continue their obedience to the King, her Maiestie had not furnished them in the time of their necessitie with a portion of money, aswell to serue them for the speedy execution of the pacification then in Treatie betweene Don Iohn and them, as for the keeping of them from a desperate putting off themselues into the hands of other princes, it did manifestly appeare that the pacification and accord had not bene so soone made, and that they for lacke thereof should haue bene driuen for their defence, to haue deliuered some part of those countries, to the possession of such as would not haue bene remooued without the spending of many millions, and the losse of many thousand mens liues. Of the true cause of this support, her Maiestie is the more willing to make mention, for that she is informed, that notwithstanding her good and sincere meaning in that behalfe, other wrong and sinister interpretations haue bene made of the same, as the like also hath bene done of other her proceedings. Amongst the rest, her Maiestie hath thought it expedient to answere one calumniation contained in a letter fathered on Don Iohn, and published in a booke lately set out by the States in their Iustification, by the which her Maiestie is charged to haue encouraged the Prince of Orenge not to stand to the pacification, and withall did for his better encouragement, offer vnto him any assistance she could yeeld (a matter most slaunderous and vntrue) for that her Maiestie being giuen to vnderstand by the Viscount of Gaunt, sent vnto her from Don Iohn, how he found himselfe greeued with the Prince of Orenge, for that (as he affirmed) the said Prince did not obserue the said pacification, her Maiestie did immediatlie dispatch an expresse messenger vnto the said Prince, both to charge him with Don Iohns accusation, as also to aduise (and that most effectuallie) to obserue duely the said pacification, vsing towards him some threats in case he should seeke to violate the same, wherein she could find no other disposition, but that he was most desirous to keepe all the parts of the said pacification, as the onely meane of the ending of the long ciuill warre. The like aduise did she also giue to the States, receiuing no lesse contentment of the pacification, being ratified first by Don Iohn, and then afterwards by the King, then they to whom the benefite thereof did most properlie and peculiarly appertaine. Her Maiesties proceedings and dealings with the Prince and States hauing bene such as hath bene before alleadged and deduced, she doth appeale to the King himselfe, who she thinketh will truely and fullie looke into the truth of the matter, and also to all others that shall not be transported with passion, whether the said proceedings are not to be maintained to be both iust and honourable, whatsoeuer hath bene maliciouslie giuen out to the contrarie. And herein hir Maiestie is perswaded, that hardlie any other Prince that hath some waies bene so vnfriendly dealt withall, and found so little account made of her aduises giuen both to the King and to his gouernours of those countries, would haue dealt in such friendly sort as she hath done: notwithstanding the said discouragements, her Maiestie thinketh it honourable for her, and meete for the place she holdeth, being the ancients allie that the Kings progenitors as Dukes of Burgundy haue, so continue still her former course in giuing friendly counsell vnto the King: can not but proceede to the second point aboue mentioned, which is to yeeld her aduise, what way in her opinion, is to be taken for the appeasing of the present troubles, and the continuing of them vnder his obedience.

Wm Harvey who found out ye Circulation of ye Blood born at Folkston in Kent bred up in Caius Coll. Cambridge studied at Padua 5 years. was Physician to K. Ch. 1. dy'd a Batchelor in 1657. aet. 80

First, it is apparant that the pacification is broken, and as great hostilitie intended on both sides as may be, wherof she is heartily sorie: the end, if it goe on, will be an vtter desolation of the countries, or the losse or alteration of them from the kings obedience, for helpe whereof her maiestie thinketh the best and expedientest remedies to be, that it would please him to receiue his subiects to his grace and fauour, that he would permit them to continue in their auncient liberties & charters, that he would commaund the due and iust execution of the pacification, and that he would appoint such a gouernour of his owne blood, as might like him and be gratefull to them, whereby they with great contentation might yeeld to him all due obedience, continue in their religion according to his pleasure, and do all things accorded in the pacification: which by reason of the great distrust growne on both sides, betweene Don Iohn and them, can neuer take effect, so long as Don Iohn shall remaine gouernor, for it seemeth they haue put on a determination, that rather then they will endure ỹ hard dealing which they think themselues assured they shall receiue by his gouernment, they will throw themselues into the protection of any other prince. They charge him with the breach of the pacification: he on the other side offereth to stand to his iustification, charging them with the said breach. Her Maiestie hauing heard the allegations of the ministers sent hither, both from Don Iohn, and the States, meaneth not to be a iudge betweene thẽ, hauing rather a greater desire to reconcile thẽ if she could, & to do them both good, thã to discourse the faults & blemishes of either party. To reconcile thẽ she findeth it impossible, and therefore for the stay of the troubles and of those mischiefes that otherwise are like to ensue, the onely way of remedie will be to make choise of some other tied to him by propinquitie of blood to be substituted vnder him in that gouernment, by which temperate course the troubles may well be appeased, the great effusion of blood auoyded, and the countries continued vnder his obedience, which otherwise are like to be alienated from him. If he shall like to follow this aduise, she seeth no disposition in the people to change their king, being dutifully minded towards him, with intention (in this behalfe they may be reckoned) to innouate nothing, but to maintaine, and duly obserue the late pacification made at Gant.

And like as for the contentment of the States and the appeasing of the troubles she wisheth Don Iohns reuocation: so considering how euill affected he sheweth himselfe toward her, as well by letters intercepted, as by secret practises and dealings with the Queene of Scots, a matter very dangerous to the good quiet of her state, as the bearer can more amplie informe him touching diuerse particularities in this behalfe: she can not but in respect of the continuance of the good amitie which she wisheth to be betweene the King and her Maiestie, be the more earnest to presse the King therein, looking for no continuance of good amitie and good neighbourhood, so long as a minister so euill affected towards her shall reside there, and being desirous that such ministers might be imployed on both sides, as would desire rather to increase the amitie than to hinder it.

This her aduise tending to none other end, but to preserue those countries vnder her obedience, and the continuance of good amitie betweene them, she hopeth the King will accept in no lesse friendly part then it is by her sinceritie meant. And in the meane time vntill his minde be knowne in this behalfe, her maiestie fearing the great forces prepared by Don Iohn, with the assistance of the French already marching towards him, will driue her auncient friends the states of the low countries, to the one of these two extremities: either to be ouercome by forraine forces, and so endangered to forraine seruitude: or else constrained for the withstanding thereof to giue themselues ouer to some other prince, both which can not but be perillous to the king presently, dangerous to her Maiestie hereafter, and an vtter destruction to the whole countrey. Her highnes therefore for the benefit of the said King, & the auoyding of her owne perill (vpon promises and assurance giuen by the said states, to yeeld the king his due obedience, & make no further innouation in matters of religion, but to obserue the pacification of Gaunt) hath promised for the causes & respects aboue mentioned, to yeeld them a support of money and men, onely to stay them from further danger of alienation, or else their ruine.

Which proceedings of hers, if the King shall not be induced to like of, whereby her Maiestie shall discouer that his intention is by force of armes to alter and dissolue the ancient forme of gouernment, and by taking away their ancient lawes and liberties, to make it a land of conquest, and to people it with garrisons of men of warre And that the end and scope of his intention should tend to that which is discouered by Esconedoes letters, wherein he writeth that the enterprise of England is of more facility then the enterprise of the Iles, whereby her Maiestie shal perceiue the disposition of so ill a neighbour to her and her royall estate, then her Maiesties resolution is to employ all the power she shall be able to make for the defence of her neighbors, and preseruation of her owne estate.

As

As on the contrary side, if he shall encline to their reasonable demand, in giuing them such a gouernor as they can better like of, then of Don Iohn, and they notwithstanding shall go on in disobedience against him, & make other innouations contrary to the promises they haue giuen and professed to her, she will turne her force against them, and in assistance of the king yeeld him the best ayde she can to bring them to reason and conformitie. And in the meane season, vntill she may be throughly enformed hereof, she hath thought good, for auoyding of effusion of christian blood, and for many other good and necessary respects, to deale both with Don Iohn and the States for a surceance of armes, which if he shall refuse to yeeld vnto, and the States shall be willing, because she seeth it manifestly, that it concerneth the Kings honor, and profite of his countrey, she will not cease to go on with like offices towards them, as she hath begun. Thereby onely to defend them from forraine tyrannie, to keepe them in the kings obedience from alienating themselues to any other potentate, and to defend her selfe and her dominions from the perils that thereby she seeth manifestly to ensue. This declaration in Latine was sent to the King of Spaine, by maister Wilkes the 20. of December. Anno 1577.

The seuenteenth day of Ianuarie, Simon Pembrooke dwelling in Southwarke, being a figure flinger, and vehemently suspected to be a coniurer, by commandement of the ordinarie Iudge of those parts, appeared in the parish Church of Saint Sauiour, at a court holden there, which Simon being busied in entertaining a Proctor, and hauing money in his hand, leaned his head vpon a pewe, wherein the proctor stood: which after he had done a certaine space, the proctor began to lift vp his head, to see what he ayled, and found him departing out of life, and straightway the said Simon fell downe ratling a little in the throat, and neuer spake word after: this was done euen as the Iudge came into the church, who said it was the iust iudgement of God towards those that vsed sorcerie, and a great example to admonish other to feare the iustice of God. After his clothes being opened, there were found about him fiue diuelish Bookes of coniuration and most abhominable practises, with a picture of tinne of a man hauing three dice in his hand, with this writing, Chaunce Dice fortunately, and diuerse papers of such like matters, as he had dealt in for men, such as are mentioned in Leuiticus the twentieth Chapter and the first verse; If any soule turne himselfe after such as worke with spirits, and after soothsayers, to go a whooring after them (saith the Lord,) I will put my face against that soule, and will cut him off from among my people. 1578. Frobishers third voyage

The 31. of May, Martin Frobisher with 15. saile of good ships, manned, victualled, & other wayes well appointed, departed from Harwich in Essex, on his 3. voyage towards Catayа. And on the 31. of July, after many attempts, & sundry times being put backe by Ilands of ice in his streights, he recouered his long wished port, & came to anchor in the Ilands, newly by her maiesty named Meta Incognita, where (as in the yeare before) they fraught their ships with the like pretended Gold ore out of the mines, & then on the last of August returning thence, arriued safely in England about the first of October, but their Gold ore after great charges proued worse then good stone, whereby many men were deceiued, to their vtter vndoings.

Cassimere receiued.

The 22. of January, about 7. of the clocke at night, Iohn Cassimere Coune Palatine of Rhene, duke of Bauare, landed at the Tower of London, was there by diuerse noblemen and others honourably receiued, and conueyed by cresset light and torch light to sir Thomas Greshams house in Bishops gate streete, where he was receiued with sounding of trumpets, drums, fifes and other instruments of musicke, and there both lodged and feasted till Sunday next, that he was by the nobility fetched to the court at Westminster, where he talked with her maiesty, and after lodged in Sommerset house. In the weeke following, he hunted at Hampton court. On Sonday the first of February, he beheld a valiant Iusting and running at the Tilt at Westminster: on the next morrow he saw them fight at barriers with swords on horsebacke. On Tuesday he dined with the Lord Maior of London: On Wednesday with the Dutches of Suffolke, at her house called the Burgokening or Barbicane, by red crosse streete: On Thursday at the Stilyard, &c. On the 8. of February, the queene made him knight of the garter, by deliuering to him the collar, and putting the garter on his leg at White hall: and on the 14. of February, he departed from London homewards, with great rewards giuen by the queenes maiesty, the nobility, men of honor, the maior of London, and the citizens of that city.

Deepe snow.

The 4. of February, and in the night following, fell such abundance of snow, that on the fift in the morning, the same was found at London to lye two foote deepe in the Hallowell, and otherwise, being driuen by the wind, very boysterous in the Northeast, on bankes, an ell or yard and halfe deepe, in the which drifts of snow in the countries, many cattell, and some men and women were ouerwhelmed and lost: it snowed till the 8. day, and freezed till the tenth. Then followed a thaw with continuall raine a long time after, which caused such high floods, that the marshes & low grounds being drowned for the time, the water rose so high in Westminster hall, y after the fall thereof, some fishes were found there to remaine.

Great land water floods.

Lord keeper deceased.

The 20. of February, deceased sir Nicholas Bacon, lord keeper of the great seale of England, who was honorably buried vnder a sumptuous monument or tombe (by him in his life time erected) in Paules church of London the 9. of March. He also in his life time gaue for 6. schollers, to be found in Benet Colledge at Cambridge, to each of them 3. li. 6. s. and 8. d. the yeare for euer.

The 24. of Aprill, fell such a snow betwixt the houres of foure of the clocke in the morning, and nine of the clocke before noone, that at London some was found to lye almost one foote deepe.

The 25. of Aprill, sir Thomas Bromley, knight, was made lord Chancelor of England. Sir Thomas Bromley L. Chancelor.

The 26. of Aprill, William Kympton Alderman of London was by the lord Chancelor sent to the fleete, about a letter late by him receiued, from the Vicar of Hadley in Middlesex beside Barnet. This letter amongst other matters mentioned of a pale pulled downe at Northall, by the commons there, &c. for concealing of which letter the said Alderman was committed as aforesaid. And on the 15. of May, was in the Starred chamber condemned to pay 500. marks fine, and to remaine prisoner at the pleasure of her maiestie. Alderman Kympton committed to the fleete.

The 4. of May, were arraigned at Barnet in Hartfordshire, certaine men of Northall, Wyms, and the parts neere adioyning, for pulling downe a pale at Northall, late set vp (on the common ground) by the Earle of Warwike, eight of them were condemned, two were brent in the hand, two were hanged betwixt Barnet & Whetstone, the other foure condemned remained prisoners in Hartford Gaole long after, many were bound to appeare at the next sise, & such as could not put in baile for their appearing were committed, &c. Mathew Hamont of Hetharset, by his trade a plowgh wright, three miles from Norwich, was conuented before the bishop of Norwich, for y he denied Christ to be our Sauiour. At the time of his appearance it was obiected, that he had published these heresies following. Men hanged at Barnet for a riot made at Northall. An heretike brent at Norwich.

That the new Testament and Gospell of Christ are but meere foolishnesse, a fable of men, or rather a meere fable.

Item, that man is restored to grace by the meere mercie of God, without the meane of Christs blood, death and passion.

Item, that Christ is not God, nor the Sauiour of the world, but a meere man, a sinfull man, and an abhominable Idoll.

Item, that all they that worship him are abhominable Idolaters: And, that Christ did not rise againe from death to life by the power of his Godhead, neither, that he did ascend into heauen.

Item, that the holy ghost is not God, neither that there is any such holy ghost.

Item, that baptisme is not necessarie in the Church of God, neither the vse of the Sacrament of the body and blood of Christ. For the which heresies, he was condemned in the consistorie, and sentence was read against him by the bishop of Norwich, the 14. of Aprill, and thereupon deliuered to the Sheriffes of Norwich, and because he spake words of blasphemie against the Queenes maiestie, and others of her counsell, he was by the Recorder maister Sergeant Windham, and the Maior sir Robert Wood of Norwich, condemned to lose both his eares, which were cut off the thirteenth of May in the market place of Norwich, where he confirmed his blasphemous speeches against our Sauiour Iesus Christ, for the which on the twentith of May he was brent in the castell ditch of Norwich.

The first of June, deceased Robert Horne Doctor of Diuinitie, Bishop of Winchester at Winchester place in Southwarke, & was buried at Winchester. Bishop of Winchester deceased.

The 17. of July, the Queenes maiestie, being on the riuer of Thames, betwixt her highnesse Mannour of Greenewich and Detford, in her prime barge, accompanied with the French Ambassador, the earle of Lincolne, & maister Vicechamberlaine, &c. with whom she entred discourse about weightie affaires: it chanced, that Traiterous fact of Thomas Appletree.

The man bleeding abundantly, the queenes maiesty shewed such noble courage as is most wonderfull to be heard and spoken of, for beholding him so maimed, she neuer bashed thereat, but bad him be of good cheere, and sayd he should want nothing that might be for his ease, &c. For the which fact the sayd Thomas being apprehended, and condemned to death: was on the 21. of July brought to the water side, where was a gibbet set vp, directly placed betweene Detford and Greenewich, & when the hangman had put the rope about his necke, he was by the queenes most gracious pardon deliuered from execution.

Flouds.

In September and October fell great winds and raging flouds in sundry places of this realme, wherethrough many men, cattell, and houses were drowned. In the towne of Newport the cottages were borne downe, the corne lost, pasture ground ouerwhelmed, and cattell drowned. In the towne of Bedford the water came vp to the market place, where cupboords, chests, stooles and fourmes swam about the houses, their fewell, corne and hay was wracked and borne away. Also the towne of Saint Edes in Huntingtonshire was ouerflowne suddenly in the night, when all men were at rest, the waters brake in with such a force, that the towne was almost all defaced, the swans swam downe the market place, and all the towne about, the boats did floate. Gormanchester was suddenly suppressed, their houses flowen full of water when men were at their rest, their cattell were destroyed: about the 14. of October, the sea did swell, the marchats lost their goods, many were drowned, which were after found in great numbers.

The 6. of Aprill being Wednesday in Easter weeke, about 6. of the clocke toward euening, a sudde earthquake hapning in Londõ, & almost generally throughout England, caused such amazednes of the people as was wõderfull for the time, & caused them to make their earnest praiers vnto almighty God. The great clocke bell in the palace at Westminster, strake of it selfe against the hammer with shaking, as diuers clockes & bels in the city & elsewhere did the like: the gentlemen of the Temple being at supper, ran from the tables, and out of their hall with their knives in their hands, a peece of the Temple church fell downe, some stones fel frõ Pauls church: And at Christs church in the sermon while a stone fell from the top of the church, which killed out of hand one Thomas Grey an apprentice, & another stone also bruled his fellow seruant named Mabell Eueret, so that she liued but 4. dayes after: diuerse other were sore hurt with running out of the church: diuerse chimnies in the city, part of thẽ fell downe, the houses were so shaken. The earthquake continued, in or about London not passing one minute of an houre, & was no more felt: but eastward in Kent and on the sea coast it was felt three times: as at Sandwich at fiue of the clocke, the land not onely quaked, but the sea so foamed, that the ships tottered. At Douer also at the same houre was the like, so that a peece of the cliffe fell into the sea, with also a peece of ỹ castle wall there: a peece of Saltwood castle in Kent fell downe, and in the Church of Hide the bels were heard to sound. A peece of Sutton church in Kent fell downe, the earthquake being there both heard and felt. And in all these places and other in east Kent, the same was felt three times to moue, to wit, at fiue, at nine, and at eleuen of the clocke. Earthquake.

Alſo this yeare maiſter Francis Drake returned into England, hauing ſailed round about the world (as is affirmed) thus it was begun: on the 13. of December, in the yeare of Chriſt 1577. he ſet ſaile from Plimoth with a fleete of 5. ſhips (to wit, the Pelicane admirall, the Marigold, the Elizabeth, barke Benedict, and a pinnace) he fell with the cape Canbine on the coaſt of Barbary the 25. of ỹ ſame moneth, and ſo coaſting along, the 27. of December found an Iland called Mogadoz, lying one mile diſtant from the maine: in this Iland the generall erected a pinnace, which he had with three other brought ready framed out of England, which being finiſhed he departed the laſt of December. On the 17. of January he arriued at cape Blank, & left the ſame on ỹ 22. of that moneth, & on the 27. fell with cape de Uerde: on the 30. of January he fell with an Iland called Saint Jego: hauing put off cape de Uerde in the beginning of Febzuary, they ſaw no more land vntill the firſt of Aprill 1578. that they fell with the coaſt of Braſill, in the latitude of 33. degrees beyond the line, and with much ado entred the riuer of Plate: from whence departing he fell with the ſtraite of Magelan the 20. of Auguſt, and paſſed through with three ſhips onely, hauing caſt off the other two as impediments, where, after they had beene toſſed many daies to and fro, in the night the firſt of October the Marigold, wherein maiſter Iohn Thomas was captaine, parted from the generall, and was no more heard of. And ſhortly after, the other wherein maiſter Iohn Winter was captaine parted alſo, who hauing loſt his company, came home againe through the ſtraites. The golden Hind (or Pellicane I thinke) held on her courſe to Chily, Lima, Coquimbo, Arica, Panama, & ſo all along the backe ſide of America to the line-ward, and paſſed the line the firſt day of March, and the ſixteenth of March being on land at the Ile of Caones, he paſſed foorth north-ward till he came to the latitude of fortie ſeuen, thinking to haue come that way home: but being conſtrained by fogges and cold winds to forſake his purpoſe, came backeward to the line-ward the tenth of June 1579. and ſtayed in the latitude of thirty eight to graue and trim his ſhip, vntill the fiue and twenty of July: and from thence ſetting his courſe ſouthweſt, he fell the third of October with an Ile 8. degrees from the line northward, and the 4. of November he fell with Ternate one of the Iles of Moluca, where being curteouſly entertained of the king, he tooke in certaine tun of cloues, and came homeward to a little Iland, where he ſtayed to trim his ſhip 26. daies, where he furniſhed himſelfe with wood, and erected a ſmiths forge for to make ſuch yron worke as was needfull for the repairing of his ſhip: and from thence the 12. of December he went toward Malaca, but not able to continue his courſe weſtward for the wind, was conſtrained to recouer the north of the Iles of Selebees: after this the ninth of January comming towards Iaua maior they ran themſelues vpon ground, and ſtucke faſt twenty houres, not looking but for death, but eſcaping that danger, they continued their courſe ſtill weſt, & came to Iaua maior aforenamed, and there touching they bent their courſe ſouthweſt to ỹ cape of Bona Speranca, thꝰ after they kept

And in the yeare next following, to wit, 1581. on the fourth of April, her maiestie dining at Depeford in Kent, after dinner entred the ship which captaine Drake had so happily guided round about the world, and being there, a bridge that her maiestie had passed over, brake, being vpon the same more then 200. persons, and no man hurt by the fall, and there she did make captaine Drake knight in the same ship, for reward of his seruice his armes were giuen him, the world in a ship, which ship by her maiesties commandement is lodged in a docke at Depeford, for a monument to all posterity of that famous and worthy exploite, whereof a worshipfull gentleman maister William Borough in his preface to a booke entituled, A discourse of the variation of the compasse, of magneticall Needle, hath these words: So now at length (saith he) our countriman sir Francis Drake, for valorous attempt, prudent proceeding, and fortunate performing his voyage about the world, is not only become equall to any of them that liue, but in fame farre surpassing. Sir Francis Drake knighted, and his commendation.

On the tenth of October (some say on the seuenth) appeared a blasing starre in the south, bushing toward the east, which was nightly seene diminishing of his brightnesse vntill the 21. of the same moneth. Blazing starre.

The 17. day of October were made eight sergeants at law, to wit, first William Fleetwood Recorder of London, the second, Edward Flowerdew, the third, Thomas Snagge, the fourth, William Periam, the fift, Robert Halton, the first, Iohn Clench, the seuenth, Iohn Puckering, the eight, Thomas Walmesley, maister Snagge was sicke, and therefore had a writ directed to two maisters of the chancery to take his oath, and so was sworne in his chamber at Greys Inne, the other seuen were sworne at Westminster, and held their feast in the new Temple at London. Sergeants feast.

The 19. of October proclamation was published at London for the apprehension and seuere punishing of all persons suspected to be of the family of loue. Proclamation against the family of loue.

There arriued vpon the west coast of Ireland certaine companies of Italians and Spaniards, sent by the Pope to the ayde of the earle of Desmond in his rebellion, which fortified themselues strongly neare Smerwicke, in a fort which they call Castle del ore, there erecting the popes banner against her maiesty, which when the lord Grey of Wilton deputy of Ireland vnderstood, he marched thitherward, & the 6. of November hearing of the arriuall of the Switsharke, the Tigar, the Aide, the Merlion, and other of the queenes maiesties ships, and also of three barkes fraughted from Limorike and Korke with victuals, on the morrow after marched towards the fort, vnto the which he gaue so hote an assault, that on the ninth of November the same was yeelded, all the Irish men and women hanged, and more then foure hundred Spaniards, Italians, & Biscayes put to the sword, the colonell, captaines, secretary and other (to the number of twenty) saued for ransome. In which fortresse was found good store of money, bisket, bacon, oile, wine, and diuerse other prouisions of victuall, sufficient for their company for halfe a yeare, beside armor, powder, shot, & other furniture for 2000. men and vpwards. 1581. Proclamation against Iesuites.

About the twelfth of Januarie, proclamation was published at London, for the reuocation of sundry the Queenes maiesties subiects remaining beyond the seas, vnder colour of study, and yet liuing contrarie to the lawes of God and of the realme. And also against the retaining of Iesuites and malling priests, sowers of sedition, and other treasonable attempts, &c.

The 16. day of Januarie, the lords & barons of this realme began to sit in the parliament house at Westminster: and on the twentieth day of Januarie the Queenes maiestie went from White hall to the parliament house by water.

Iusting at Westminster

Whereas a great challenge of iusts was signified by way of deuise before her maiestie on Twelfe night last past, to haue bene performed the fifteenth day of Januarie, her maiesties pleasure was, for diuers considerations the same should be deferred vntill the two and twentieth day of the same moneth: on the which day the same was most couragiously accomplished in the accustomed place at Westminster, where many staues were broken, but through the great concourse of people thither repairing, many of the beholders, as well men as women, were sore hurt, some maimed, and some killed by falling of the scaffolds ouercharged.

Mice deuour the grasse in Danesey.

About Hallontide last past, in the marishes of Danesey Hundred, in a place called Southminster in the countie of Esser, a strange thing hapned: there sodainlie appeared an infinite multitude of mice, which ouerwhelming the whole earth in the said marishes, did sheare and gnaw the grasse by the rootes, spoyling and tainting the same with their venumous teeth, in such sort, that the cattell which grazed thereon were smitten with a murreine, and died thereof, which vermine by policie of man could not be destroyed, till at the last it came to passe that there flocked together all about the same marishes, such a number of owles, as all the shire was not able to yeeld: whereby the marsh-holders were shortly deliuered from the veration of the said mice.

Banqueting house at Westminster

This yeere (against the comming of certaine ambassadors out of France) by her maiesties appointment, on the fiue and twentith day of March in the morning (being Easter day) a banquetting house was begun at Westminster, on the southwest side of her maiesties palace of White hall, made in manner and forme of a long square, 332. in measure about, 30. principals made of great masts, being 40. foote in length a peece, standing vpright, betweene euery one of the masts, ten foote asunder and more, the wals of this house were closed with cannas, and painted all the outsides of the same most artificially, with a worke called rustike much like stone. This house had two hundred, ninetie and two lights of glasse. The sides within the same house was made with 2. heights of degrees for people to stand vpon: and the top of this house was wrought most cunningly vpon cannas workes of iuie and holly, with pendants made of wickar rodders, and garnished with with Bay, Rue, & all maner of strange floures garnished with spangles of gold, as also beautified with hanging tokens made of hollie and iuie, with all maner of strange fruits, as pomegranates, orenges, pompions, cucumbers, grapes, with such like spangled with gold and most richly hanged: betwixt these workes of baies and iuie were great spaces of canuas, which was most cunningly painted, the clouds with starres, the sunne and sun-beames, with diuerse other coats of sundry sorts belonging to the queenes maiesty, most richly garnished with gold. There were of all maner of persons working on this house, to the number of 375. two men had mischances, the one broke his legge and so did the other. This house was made in three weekes and three dayes, and was ended the 18. of Aprill, and cost 1744. l. 19. s. &c.

On the 16. day of Aprill, arriued at Douer the noblemen of Fraunce (commissioners from the French king to her maiesty) Francis Burbon prince Dolphine of Auergne, Arthur Cossaie marshall of Fraunce, Lodowic Lusignian lord of Lancoe, Trauergins Caercongin county of Tillit, Bertrand Salingurons lord Mothfenelon, monsieur Manaissour, Barnabie Brisse president of the parliament of Paris, Claude Pinart, monsieur Marchemont, monsieur Verzis, these came from Grauelend by water to London, where they were honourably receiued and entertained, and shortly after being accompanied of the nobility of England, they repaired to the court, and banqueting house prepared for them at Westminster, as is aforesayd, where her maiesty receiued them, and afterward in that place most royally feasted and banquited them. Also the nobles and gentlemen of the court desirous to shew them all curtesie possible, prepared a triumph in most sumptuous order, vpon Whitson monday and tuesday, the chiefe challengers of which attempts were, the earle of Arundell, Frederike Lord Windsore, Philip Sidney, Foulke Grimell, and other: the defendants to the number of one and twenty, all which of them ranne fiue courses against the former challengers, who performed their parts valiantly. On the tuesday they went to the tourney, where they did very nobly, and after that to the barriers, wherein they fought courageously, &c. as more at large I haue set downe, in the continuance of Reine Woolfes Chronicle.

Noblemen of France arriued in England.

Iusting, turneying and barriers.

The one and twenty of June in the night, certaine young men, drawing ropes thwart the streete, on both sides the crosse in Cheape, to stop the passage, did then fasten ropes about the lowest Images of the sayd crosse, attempting by force to haue plucked them downe: which when they could not do, they plucked the picture of Christ out of his mothers lap, whereon he sate, and otherwise defaced her, and the other Images by striking off their armes. Wherevpon proclamation was made, that who so would bewray the doers should haue forty crownes. But nothing came to light, for euery one of them kept others counsell, till their dying dayes.

Crosse in Cheape defaced.

Thomas Butcher brewer (for that he & others on the 27. of June had congregated themselues in west Smithfield of London, and in other places in maner of rebellion) was on the 30. of June whipped from Newgate to west Smithfield, and was there reserued, taken from the bedles, and sent away to shift for himselfe: for Men whipped, and set on the pillory.

for the which fact on the 21. of July, other foure, to wit, three shomakers and a brewer, were whipped from Newgate to the middest of west Smithfield, and there set on the pillorie, whereon they stood from ten till twelue of the clocke.

Bishop of Ely deceased

The thirteenth of July, Richard Coxe Doctor of Diuinitie, sometime schoolemaister to king Edward the sixt, deane of Westminster, and of Christs colledge in Oxford, and since bishop of Elie, deceased and was buried at Elie.

Two men of strange statures.

This yeare were to be seene in London, two Duchmen of strange statures, the one in height seuen foot and seuen inches, in breadth betwixt the shoulders three quarters of a yard and an inch, the compasse of his breast one yard and halfe, and two inches: and about the waist, one yard, quarter, and one inch, the length of his arme to the hand a full yard: a comely man of person, but lame of his legges (for he had broken them with lifting of a barrell of beere.) The other was in height but three foot, had neuer a good foot, nor any knee at all, and yet could he daunce a galliard, he had no arme, but a stumpe to the elbow or little more on the right side, on the which singing, he would daunce a cup, and after tosse it about three or foure times, and euery time receiue the same on the said stumpe: he would shoote an arrow neare to the marke, flourish with a rapier, throw a bowle, beate with a hammer, hew with an axe, sound a trumpet, and drinke euery day ten quarts of the best beere if he could get it. I my selfe on the seuenteenth of July saw the taller man sitting on a bench bareheaded, and the lesser standing on the same bench, and hauing on his head a hat with a feather, was yet the lower. Also the taller man standing on his feete, the lesser (with his hat and feather on his head) went vpright betweene his legs and touched him not.

Euerard Haunce arraigned and executed.

The eighteenth of July, Euerard Haunce a seminarie priest, was in the sessions hall in the old Baily arraigned, where he affirmed that himselfe was subiect to the Pope in ecclesiasticall causes, and that the Pope hath now ỹ same authoritie here in England that he had an hundred yeres past, with other trayterous speeches, for the which he was condemned to be drawne, hanged, bowelled and quartered, and was executed accordingly on the last of July.

Prisoners arraigned for not comming to church.

At the same sessions were brought from the Fleete, the Gate-house at Westminster, Newgate of London, and the Counters, sundrie prisoners indicted for refusing to come to the church, all which being conuicted by their owne confession, had iudgement accordingly to pay twentie pounds for euery moneth of such their wilfull absence from the church.

John Stubs and William Page lost their hands.

The thirtieth of October were arraigned at Westminster hall Iohn Stubbes, Hugh Singleton, and William Page, these were all three condemned to lose their right hands, for writing, printing, and dispersing a libell, which they entituled, the Gaping Gulph, against monsieur Francis Duke of Aniow the French kings brother. And on the third day of Nouember they were all led to Westminster, where Iohn Stubs, and William Page lost their hands by chopping off, but Hugh Singleton had his pardon.

Monsieur D. of Aniow.

The first of Nouember, monsieur Francis Duke of Aniow, the French kings brother, and other nobles of Fraunce (hauing lately arriued in Kent) came to London, and were honorably receiued, and retained at the court with banquetting and diuerse pleasant shewes and pastimes, &c.

An. reg. 24.

On

On the 20. of November, Edmond Campion Iesuit, Ralfe Sherwine, Lucas Kerbie, Edward Rishton, Thomas Cotcham, Henrie Orton, Robert Iohnson & Iames Bosgraue, were brought to the high bar at Westminster, where they were severally, and al together indicted vpon high treason, for that contrary both to loue & duty, they forlooke their native country, to liue beyond the seas vnder the Popes obedience, as at Rome, Rheimes, and diuers other places, where (the Pope hauing with other princes practised the death and deprivation of our most gracious princesse, and vtter subuersion of her state and kingdome, to aduance his most abhominable religion) these men hauing vowed their allegiance to the Pope, to obey him in all causes whatsoeuer, being there, gaue their consent, to aide him in this most traiterous determination. And for this intent & purpose they were sent ouer to seduce the harts of her maiesties louing subiects, and to conspire and practise her graces death, as much as in them lay, against a great day, set and appointed, when the generall hauocke should be made, those onely reserued that ioyned with them. This laid to their charge, they boldly denied, but by a iurie they were approoued guilty, and had iudgement to be hanged, bowelled, and quartered. Ant. Monday. Campion and others arraigned.

The first of December, Edmond Campion Iesuit, Ralfe Sherwine, and Alexander Brian seminarie priests, were drawne from the Tower of London to Tiborne, and there hanged, bowelled, & quartered. Looke more in my continuation of Reine Woolfes chronicle. Campion and others executed.

The first of Februarie the Queenes maiestie with her whole court, accompanied the monsieur Francis Duke of Aniow, from Westminster to Canterburie, where, when she had feasted all the French nobilitie, either tooke leaue of other, & her maiestie returned. The 6. of the same month the D. lodged at Sandwich, & on the next morning tooke the sea, being accompanied of the earle of Leicester, the lord Hunsdon, the lord Howard knights of the garter, the lord Willowby, Lord Windsore, L. Sheffield, L. Howard, and lord Audley, M. Sidney, sir George Cary, M. Iohn and Robert Carie, all three sonnes of the said Lord of Hunsdon, M. William Howard, brother of the said lord Howard, sir T. Sherley sir T. Perot, sir Will. Russell, sir Will. Lecture in Surgerie to be read.

This yeare was firſt founded a publike lecture in Surgerie to begin to be read in the colledge of Phiſitions in Knightriders ſtreete of London, in Anno 1584. on the firſt of May, and ſo to be continued twice euery weeke, to wit, wedneſday and friday for euer, by the honorable Iohn lord Lomley, and Richard Caldwell doctor of Phiſicke: the reader whereof to be Richard Forſter doctor of Phiſicke.

Misfortune by gunpowder.

The nineteenth of July, certaine ferkins of gunpowder (to the number of ſeuen) and as many or more ferkins of ſturgeon, laden in a carre vpon Gally key, neare vnto the tower of London, ſome ſmall portion of the ſame powder being ſhed on the ground, the horſe in the ſaid carre ſtroke fire with his foote, and fired all together, wherethrough the ſturgeon was blowne out of the carre, ſome into the Thamis, ſome elſewhere, one ferkin was driuen through a loamed wall that was boorded ouer, into a houſe there by. The Crane on the wharfe with the houſes neare adioyning were ſore broken, many men and horſes ſore blaſted, ſo that three men and ſeuen horſes died thereof.

Tempeſt in Norfolke.

The twelfth of Auguſt there roſe a great tempeſt of lightning, thunder, whirlwind and raine, with haileſtones faſhioned like to the rowels of ſpurres, two or three inches about in the countie of Norfolke, betweene ỹ townes of north Walſham and Worſted (the towne wherein the making of worſted, commonly called Norwich worſted, was firſt practiſed and tooke there beginning) which tempeſt beat the corne flat to the ground, rent vp many great trees, and ſhiuered them in peeces, or wound them like withs. At Hening, more then a mile from Worſted, the weſt doore of the church, weighing more then 300. pound waight, was lifted off the hookes, and throwne ouer the font within one yard of the chancell dooore, the top of the church was riuen vp, and the lead as it were blowne cleane away, fiue webs of lead were ruffled vp together, like as they had bene clowts of linnen cloth, and blowne into the field without the churchyard. Alſo at eaſt Ruſken were many barnes blowne downe, and houſes vncouered.

An. reg. 25. Terme kept at Hartford.

This yeare Michaelmas terme was reiourned from the Vtas thereof, vntill the fourth returne of the ſame called Menſe Michaelis, & from the ſaid return, vntil the the returne commonly called Crastino animarum next ensuing, and then reiourned from Westminster to the castle of Hartford in Hartfordshire, there to begin in the said Crastino animarum, and to be continued till the end of the said terme, which was done accordingly.

This yeare Peter Morris a Dutch man, but a free denison, hauing made an engine for that purpose, conueyed Thamis water in pipes of lead ouer the steeple of S. Magnus church, at the north end of London bridge, and so into diuers mens houses in Thamis streete, new Fish streete, and Gralle streete vp vnto the north-west corner of Leaden hall (the highest ground of the citie of London) where the wast of the first maine pipe ran first this yeare 1582. on Christmasse euen: which maine pipe being since at the charges of the citie brought vp into a standard there made for that purpose, and diuided into foure seuerall spoutes, ranne foure waies plentifully seruing to the vse of the inhabitants neare adioyning that will fetch it, and also cleansed the chanels of the streetes north toward Bishops gate, east towards Aldgate, south towards the bridge, and west towards the Stocks market: no doubt a great commoditie to that part of the citie, and would be far greater, if the said water were maintained to run continually, or at the least at euery tide some reasonable quantitie, as at the first it did. Thamis water conueyed to the highest ground of London.

Now to returne to Monsieur his successe after the great dignities, authorities, and titles bestowed on him, as ye haue partly heard (but is set downe at large in a particular treatise thereof, which I haue placed in Reine Woolfes chronicle.) Francis of Valois, the kings onely brother, Duke of Lothere, Brabant, Limbourgh, Gelders, Iniow, Alanson, &c. earle of Flanders, Holland, Zeland, &c. marquesse of the sacred empire, lord of Frizeland, &c. hauing now indifferently well (with his good successes had in the victualling and remouing the sieges of Cambrey and Lochem, and winning the townes of Alast and Endonan) gotten the hearts of the people, and by that meanes placed his Frenchmen in Dunkerke, Winerburgh, Dirmide, Dermond, Vilnord, and other places, thought now (vsing young and euill counsell) to make himselfe a more absolute Prince, according to the titles giuen him, and not to rule with the aduise of the States of the countries. Wherefore hauing come to him out of Fraunce the Marshall Byron, with great troupes of Swissers, and Frenchmen, he now causeth them all at one time, to wit, on the seuenth of Januarie, to inuade so many townes as they could make themselues maisters of, which with them tooke effect in the aboue named townes, but at Bruggesse they were put out. And at Antwerpe on the said seauenth day, vnder the pretence to muster his army without the towne, vpon the very noone time of the day when the Citizens were at dinner, he causeth two gates (as vncertaine by which he would go) to be opened for him, and the chaines ouerthwart the streets to be vnchained, which (for some suspition had of the Frenchmen without) were locked: then he issued out with all his Court and a great number of gentlemen, very braue, mounted on great horses aboue 200. many of them being secretly armed vnder their garments, and comming to S. Iames gate, at the bridge without met him certaine of his companies of horsemen, and footemen, who staid themselues on both sides the way, making as it were a lane for the Duke to passe by with a few of his: who being past them, made token to Francis de Valois his exploits and successe. The monsieur attempteth against the States of Antwerp and was ouerthrowne.

thē with his cap, to inuade ỹ city: whereupō his men killed ỹ watch, with ỹ Cozonell Vicrendell ỹ ſtood bare headed, to ſee their prince paſſe. Then entred ỹ gate 17. enſignes of footmen, & foure cozonels of horſemen, the Swiſſers following, & the duke crying to thē, march, march, La ville eſt gagnée, mais ne pillons point, being thus ſtrongly entred they cried, Ville gagnee, vive la meſſe, and tooke in on both ſide the Bulwarkes, turned the ordinance towards the city, and came by diuerſe ſtreetes almoſt to the midſt of the city. The citizens at their dinners hearing the alarum, very furiouſly iſſued out, with ſuch weapons as firſt came to their hands, and ſet vpon them, firſt by the by lanes, and other ſome chayned vp the ſtreets, and ſo barred them from going any further. They turne all againſt the ſouldiers that were entred the city with moſt violent ſhot. In the meane ſpace the citizens neare and about the gate with their harquebuſes beſtow their ſmall ſhot as thicke as haile out of windowes vpon the gate, where firſt they killed a horſe, and then diuers men entring, which troubled the other following, ỹ a great number was euen in the very gate killed, & ſo heaped one vpō another that the gate was ſtopped, whereby all that were entred within the city, in leſſe then in one houres ſpace were killed or taken priſoners. Wherein the citizens behaued themſelues ſo valiantly, & ſo manly, that many for lacke of leadē pellets tooke their money out of their purſes, bowed it with their teeth, and put it in ſteed of pellets in their harquebuſes. In this ſkirmiſh of ſo litle ſpace, were ſlaine aboue 1530. fiftie horſemen, and footmen, told at the burying, and more then 2000. priſoners taken, amongſt the which were the earle of Fernaugus, the biſhop of Conſtance, and many other notable perſonages. And amongſt the dead were the earle of S. Agnan, & his ſon, the earle of Chaſteauroulle, the ſon of the marſhall of France Biron: monſieur de Saiſonall gouernor of Vlnord, the ſon of the L. Miraubeau, and others. A marueilous act of citizens in their defence without any ſouldiers, againſt old ſouldiers & tried men of armes, and number of ſo great nobility. The prince of Orenge with others had refuſed to go footh, and his danger was not ſmall, with other gentlemen more, and lords of the religion. The prince Dolphin, the earle of Lunall and others were with the duke lookers on, and intercceſſours for their friends, whom they reckened dead. After that fact, the duke with his campe was forced for lacke of victuals and neceſſaries, to retire him with his army toward Machlin, and from thence with great difficulty, paſſing great waters, with loſſe of many a man, got to Dormond, where he was kept in by the generall Norris, with 23. enſignes Engliſhmen and Scots, ſo that he lacked victuals, and neceſſaries, whereby he was forced, as alſo to haue his priſoners reſtored, to enter into a treaty with the eſtates, to ſurrender all the townes by his men poſſeſſed, and to retire him to Dunkirke: where further with the ſtates, by intercceſſion of princes was hoped a reconcilement to be made. But he ſeeing the countrey vnwilling, and finding himſelfe ſicke (though melancholie as was thought) retired from Dunkirke toward Fraunce. And ſo ſoone as he was retired, the Prince of Parma for King Philip, cauſed Dunkirke to be beſieged, few Frenchmen left within it. And as the ſtates generall, and the prince of Orenge would haue ſent thither to reſcue the towne, the marſhall Biron with his Frenchmen and Swiſſers, the Flemings, chiefly they of Gaunt, partly for hatred of the French,

French, and partly that many now were become Spanish, would not suffer him to come ouer into Flaunders, whereby Dunkerke was forced to surrender: and this losse being imputed to the Duke, increased his sicknesse, so that he died at Chasteau Thierie the 10. of July. A strange kind of earth mooving in Dorsetshire.

The thirteenth day of Januarie, in the parish of Armitage, in a place called Blackmore in Dorsetshire, a peece of ground containing three acres, remooued from the place where it was first planted, and was carried cleane ouer another close, where Alder and Willow trees grew, the space of fortie goade (euery goad containing 15. foote) and hath stopt vp a high way that directed towards the market towne of Cerne, and yet notwithstanding the hedges wherewith it was inclosed, inuironed it still, and the trees stand thereon bolt vpright, sauing one Oake that is well nigh twenty goads remooued: the place where this ground had his being, is left like vnto a great pit.

The same 13. day of Januarie being sonday, about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, the old and vnderpropped scaffolds round about the Beare garden, commonly called Paris garden, on the Southside of the riuer of Thamis ouer against the citie of London, ouercharged with people, fell suddenly downe, whereby to the number of eight persons men and women were slaine, and many others sore hurt and bruised to the shortening of their liues. A friendly warning to such as more delight themselues in the crueltie of beasts then in the works of mercie, the fruits of a true professed faith, which ought to be the sabboth daies exercise.

Wil. Bruister and Marie Breame smothered to death, though some fable to the contrarie.

The third of Februarie being sonday, William Bruister Haberdasher (a man of more then 60. yeares old) being lodged ouer the southwest porch of Saint Brides church in Fleetstreete, with a woman named Mary Breame (whome the same Bruister had bailed out of Bridewell) were both found smouldered to death, in manner as shall be shewed. On the same sonday in the morning a wedding being celebrated in that church, a strong sauour was smelt, which was thought to be the burning of old shoes, or such like in some gentlemans chamber neare thereabouts, but in the afternoone before euening prayer, the parishioners espied a smoke to issue out of Bruisters chamber, and thereupon made hast to his doore, which they found fast locked on the inside, and were forced to breake it open, and yet could not enter till they had ripped vp the lead and roofe of the chamber, to let out the smouldering stench: which being done, they found Bruister dead, sitting on a settle by the beds side (in his apparell and close trussed) his right thigh and right arme vp to the elbow burnt with the fire of a small pan of coales that stood before him. The woman also lay dead ouer the pan, so that her armes were burnt, with the neather part of her bodie before to the breast, and behind to the shoulders, and nothing else in the chamber burnt but the bottome of the settle whereon Bruister sate. Marie Breame had bene accused by her husband to be a nice woman of her bodie, but her husband being a bad man, and hauing spent faire and large possessions and all whatsoeuer, hauing but two pence left in his purse, hung himselfe on a tree, against a stone wall at Marten abbey in Surrey about Whitsontide, in Anno 1592.

The ſaid earle with the L. ambaſſador ordinarie of England, alonely entred within the ſaid haltpace within the barriers vnto his maieſtie, of whom they were receiued with great curteſie, & as amiable countenance as could be, & the earle deliuered the Queenes maieſties letters vnto the king with great reuerence, & then making rehearſall of that he had in charge to ſay, the ſaid ambaſſador preſented vnto the king the lords Sands and Windſore, and other the Engliſh knights and gentlemen, which all one after another mounted vpon the haltpace, killed their hands, & did their reuerence vnto the king. Then the earle tooke his leaue, and was conducted by all the lords and captaines vnto the place where they had firſt receiued him. Afterward he went to ſalute the queene mother, & at the entrance into her chamber, he was receiued by Monſieur de Lanſac knight of the holy ghoſt, & knight of honor vnto the ſame queene, whom he found accompanied with her neece the princeſſe of Lorraine, ſtanding at her beds head, the princeſſe of Condie and Iontie, and the duches of Neuers ſtanding at the beds feete, the duchelles of Duez, and of Rez, and other ladies & gentlewomen in great number. From thence his lordſhip was conueyed to the queene regents chamber, at the entrance whereof he was receiued by the county de Fieſque knight of the holy ghoſt, and her knight of honor, finding her accompanied with the duchelles of Montpenſier & Ioieulx, who ſtood at her beds feete, the lady of Roiden her lady of honor, and other ladies & gentlewomen in great number, & then returned to ỳ foreſaid hoſtel de Longueuille. On monday the 15. of Februarie, the K. by Monſieur le Mothfenelon told the lord ambaſſador his mind, touching the receit of ỳ order, that he intended to receiue it on Thurſday following in the after noone, at ỳ Auguſtine friers, which was done accordingly, with a mantle of blew veluet, and a hood, & coller of the order, with a booke of the ſtatutes of the order, which all were inueſted vpõ the king, in a place called Mailon de nautralles, but ỳ oth was miniſtred vnto the king in ỳ friers church, Magnificat being ſung. On the 28. of Februarie, ỳ ambaſſador with his traine tooke their leaue, at whoſe returne frõ ỳ court to his lodging, he was preſented ỳ night with a rich cupboord of plate, worth 1200. l. at the leaſt: & vnto maiſter Clarenceaux was giuẽ a chaine of gold, worth 120. l. & better, of 236. linkes, to maiſter Somerſet a chaine of 150. linkes, worth 100. marks, & to Thomas Milles a chaine of the ſame value. On Thurſday next, the earle with his traine ſet forward homewards from Paris vnto S. Denies, & ſo were lodged all the way, in the ſame lodgings that before they had bene receiued in, and arriued proſperouſly in England, from Boloigne to Douer the twelfth of March, & on the Tueſday following were brought to the queenes maieſties preſence at Greenewich, who graciouſly welcomed them home.

William Parry executed.

The 2. day of March William Parry, was drawne from the tower through the city of London to Weſtminſter, and there in the palace court, hanged, bowelled and quartered for high treaſon, as may appeare by a booke extant, intituled, A true & plaine declaration of the horrible treaſons practiſed by W. Parry, &c. & I haue ſet downe the ſame booke in the continuance of Reine Wooſles Chronicle.

This yeere sir Walter Mildmay knight, Chancelor of the Exchequer, and one of her maiesties priuie councell, founded a colledge in the Vniuersitie of Cambridge, vpon the house and ground of the late frier preachers Dominikes, or blacke friers, in the preachers streete, and named it Emanuell colledge. Emanuell Colledge founded.

The 29. of March, the parliament was dissolued, at the breaking vp whereof, the Queenes maiestie made an Oration in the Parliament house, to such effect as followeth. My Lords and ye of the lower house, my silence must not iniurie the owner so much, as to suppose a substitute sufficient to render you the thanks that my hart yeeldeth you: not so much for the safe keeping of my life (for which your care appeareth so manifest) as for the neglecting your priuate future perill, not regarding other way then my present state, no prince herein (I confesse) can be surer tied or faster bound then I am, with the links of your good will, and can for that but yeeld a hart and head to seeke for euer all your best: yet one matter toucheth me so neere as I may not ouerskip: religion, the ground on which all other matters ought to take roote, and being corrupted may mar all the tree: and that there be some faultfinders with the order of the clergie, which so may make a slander to my selfe & the Church, whose ouer-looker God hath made me, whose negligence cannot be excused, if any schismes or errors hereticall were suffered. Thus much I must say, that some faults & negligences may grow & be, (as in all other great charges it happeneth) & what vocation without? all which if you my lords of the clergie do not amend, I mind to depose you, looke you therefore well to your charges, this may be amended without heedles or open exclamatiō. I am supposed to haue many studies, but most philosophicall: I must yeeld this to be true, ẏ I suppose few ẏ be no prokellors) haue read more. And I need not tel you ẏ I am so simple ẏ I vnderstād not, nor so forgetfull, ẏ I remember not, & yet amongst my many volums I hope gods booke hath not bene my seldomest lectures, in which we find ẏ, which by reason (for my part) we ought to beleeue, ẏ seeing so great wickednes & griefes in ẏ world in which we liue but as wai-fairing pilgrimes, we must suppose ẏ God wold neuer haue made vs but for a better place, & of more cōfort then we find here. I know no creature ẏ breatheth, whose life standeth hourely in more perill for it then mine own, who entred not into my state without sight of manifold dangers of life & crown, as one ẏ had the mightiest & greatest to wraslle with. Then it followeth, ẏ I regarded it so much, as I left my selfe behinde my care. And so you see, that you wrong me too much (if any such there be) as doubt my coldnes in that behalfe: for if I were not perswaded that mine were the truth of Gods will: God forbid I should liue to prescribe it to you. Take heede lest Ecclesiastes say not too true: They that feare the hoare frost, the snow shall fall vpon them. I see many ouer-bold with God Almighty, making too many subtill scannings of his blessed will, as lawyers do with humane Testaments: the presumption is so great, as I may not suffer it (yet minde I not hereby to animate Romanists, which what aduersaries they be to mine estate, is sufficiently knowne) nor tollerate new-fangledncsse. I meane to guide them both by Gods true rule: in both parts be perils, and of the latter I must pronounce them dangerous to a kingly rule, to haue euery man according to his own censure o make a doome of the validitie and priuitie of his princes gouernment, with a common baile & couer of Gods word, whose followers must not be iudged but by Parliament dissolued. The queenes maiestie her Oration.

priuate mens exposition, God defend you from such a Ruler that so euill would guide you. Now I conclude, that your loue & care neither is, nor shall be bestowed vpon a carelesse Prince, but such as for your good will passeth as little for this world as who careth least, with thankes for your free subsidie: a manifest shew of the abundance of your good wils, the which I assure you, but to be imployed to your weale, I could be better pleased to returne then receiue. Thus much her Maiesties Oration. In this parliament a subsidie of 2. s. 8. goods, and 4. s. lands was granted, and two fifteenes by the laitie.

4000. Londoners trayned vp with shot, &c.

In the moneth of Aprill about the 14. day, by commandement of her Maiestie, the citizens of London appointed out of their companies of the same citie, to the number of 4000. men, with armor, enlignes, drums, fifes, and other furniture for the wars, the greater part whereof were shot, the other were pikes, and halbards in faire corselets: all those to be trayned vp vnder expert captaines, with sergeants of the bands, wiflers, and other necessary officers, mustered, and skirmished dayly at the Miles end, and in Saint Georges field: and on the 18. of May (hauing ouer night set forward out of S. Georges field) mustered in the parke at Greenewich, and skirmished before the Queenes maiestie, who gaue to them great thanks for their actiuitie and paines.

Earle of Arundell sent to the Towre.

The 25. of Aprill, Philip Howard earle of Arundell was brought prisoner into the tower of London, for attempting to haue passed ẏ seas without licence, &c.

Earle of Northumberland found to haue murdered himselfe.

The 21. of June, Henrie Percy earle of Northumberland, prisoner in the Tower of London, vpon vehement suspition of high treason, was there found dead, and also of his owne diuelish intent, and of his malice before pretended, to haue murdered himselfe, as more at large may appeere, by inquisition made by a substantiall Jurie, taken before the crowner of London, as followeth verbatim with the record.

Copie of the inquisition by the crowner.

In inquisition taken at the citie of London, that is, within the Tower of London, in the parish of Alhallowes Barking, in the warde of the Tower of London, on Monday being the 21. day of June, in the yeere of the raigne of our Soueraigne Lady Elizabeth by the grace of God, Queene of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. the 27. before William Squire Gentleman, Coroner to our said Soueraigne Lady the Queene within the Citie of London and the liberties of the same, vpon the view of the body of Henrie Percie knight, late earle of Northumberland, late prisoner there within the Tower of London aforesaid, for suspitiõ of high treason by him supposed to be done, there lying dead, and slaine: by the othes of Nicholas Wheeler, Simon Horsepoole, T. Gardener, William Leauerson, Owen Morgan, Henry Lodge, William Abraham, William Horne, Thomas Russell, Iohn Porter, Robert Dowe, Anthony Hall, William Curtis, Thomas Wood, Matthew Dolman, Thomas Martin, Richard Sleford, Iohn Trot, Philip Smith, Thomas Tailor, and Henrie Bowdler, of good & lawfull men of the same ward, and of three other wards to the same ward next adioyning, as the manner and custome is in the citie aforesaid, to inquire how, in what manner, and when the said Henrie Percie late earle of Northumberland came to his death. Which Jurie do say vpon their othes, that on the 21. day of this instant moneth of June, in ẏ yeare of the raigne of our soueraigne lady Elizabeth by the grace of God queene of England, Fraunce and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. The 27. aforesayd, and long before the foresayd Henry late earle of Northumberland prisoner in the tower of London situate in the parish of Alhallowes Barking aforesayd, in the ward of the tower of London aforesayd, for suspition of high treason aforesayd, by him against our soueraigne Lady the Queene supposed to be committed, and the aforesayd earle so remaining prisoner, and being placed in a certaine chamber within the tower of London aforesayd, there prisoner remaining, imagining and intending himselfe diuellishly and feloniously to kill & murder before the aforesayd 21. day of June: that is to say, the 16. day of June in the 27. yeare aforesayd, did prepare a certaine dag of iron & steele of the value of 10. s. & with certaine bullets of lead, & a certaine quantity of gunpowder, contained in a small box, & caused the aforesayd gun, the bullets of lead, and the gunpowder to be brought into the foresayd chamber vnto him the sayd earle of Northumberland, & to be deliuered to the same earle then and there by the hands of Iames a Price yeoman to execute his diuelish and felonious purpose and intention, which dag aforesayd, the foresayd earle caused secretly to be hidden in a certaine mattrise vnder the bolster of his bed in the chamber aforesayd, and then and there, the foresaid 21. day of June in the 27. yeare aforesayd, betweene the houres of twelue and one in the night of the foresayd 21. day of June, thinking and intending to prosecute and follow his diuelish intention and purpose aforesayd, did bolt the doore of the aforesayd chamber, and the inner part of his sayd chamber towards himselfe, lest any man should forbeare or withstand his diuelish, felonious, and malicious intent: and the sayd doore of his foresayd chamber being so bolted, the same earle then and there into his bed himselfe did lay, and vpon this afterward, that is to say, the foresaid one and twentith of June, in the seauen and twentith yeare aforesayd, about the houres aforesayd, within the tower of London aforesayd, situate and being in the parish of Alhallowes Barking aforesayd, in the ward of the tower of London aforesayd, not hauing the almighty God or his feare before his eyes, but being mooued and seduced by the instigation of the diuell, of his malice afore pretended, did take vp into his hands the foresayd dagge of yron and steele, then and there made ready, charged with gunpowder, and three bullets of lead, and the aforesayd dagge to the left part of his breast neare vnto the pappe of the same part of his breast, then and there feloniously and diuellishly did put, and vpon the same part of his breast the foresayd dagge did discharge, by reason of the violence of which gunpowder, and of the aforesayd three bullets of lead, the foresayd earle into his body and heart, and through his chine bone, euen into his right shoulder, himselfe then and there with the aforesayd bullets of lead, feloniously and voluntarily did strike, giuing vnto himselfe then and there one mortall wound of the depth of twelue inches, and of the breadth of two inches: of which mortall wound aforesaid, the foresaid earle within the tower of London aforesaid, the day and yeare, parish and ward aforesayd, instantly died. And so the Iury doth say vpon their oathes aforesayd, that the foresayd earle, the day and yeare, and place aboue written, of his diuelish intent aforesayd, and of his malice before pretended, feloniously and voluntarily himselfe did kill, and murther in manner and fourme aforeſayd, againſt the peace of our ſouereigne lady the queene, her crowne and dignity. But what goods and chattels the aforeſayd earle in the time of the felonie and murther of himſelfe aforeſayd committed, had, or as yet hath, the Jury know not, &c. in witneſſe whereof, &c. This was the verdict of the Jurors, whereby it remained to prouide for the bellowing of his wretched carcaſſe, which on the 23. day of June was buried in S. Peters church within the ſayd tower of London. This was the end of that earle, the maner of whoſe murder, and part of his treaſons are dilated, as the ſame was publikely deliuered in the Star-chamber, and after publiſhed in a booke intituled: A true and ſummarie report of the declaration of ſome part of the earle of Northumberlands treaſons, deliuered, &c. Entertainment of the deputies for the States of the Low countries.

On the 26. of June arriued at London, deputies for the States of the Netherlands, or Low countries, who were lodged about the tower ſtreete, and had their diet for the time of their abode here very worſhipfullly appointed (all at the charges of her maieſty) in the clothworkers hall in Mincheone lane, neare to the ſayd tower ſtreete. Theſe on the 29. of June, being the feaſt of the Apoſtle Peter and Paule, repaired to the court, then at Greenewich, where by vertue of their commiſſions from the vnited countries, they preſented to her maieſty the ſouereignty of thoſe countries, to wit, of Brabant, but the commiſſion (for the ſiege) of Antwerpe not full authoriſed, of Guelder, of Flaunders, of Holland, of Zeland, of Vtricht, and of Friſeland: for Brabant, Iaques de Griſe great baily of Bridges, counſeller of the Frankes for Enelerre Rotger of Barfold gentleman: for Flanders, Noell de Garſie lord of Shonewalle: for Holland, Iohn Wanderdoeſt, lord of Noortwike: Ioſſe de Menin penſionarie of Dordreght, Iohn of old Barneuelt, penſionarie of Rotradame, and D. Francis Maello: for Zeland, Iacob Dales counſeller and penſionarie of Tergoeſt: for Vtricht, Paulus Buis, D. of the lawes: for Friſeland, I. Fritzma gentleman, H. Anſona preſident of Friſeland, and Lads Iangema gentleman. All theſe falling on their knees before her maieſtie, and ſo remaining for a long ſpace, one of them, to wit, Ioſſe de Menin counſeller and penſionary of Dordreght, one of the commiſſioners for Holland, made to her maieſty this oration in french: Madam, les Eſtates des Prouinces Vnies des pais, &c. as I haue ſet downe in Reine Woolfe, with alſo the ſame in Engliſh thus: Madam, the States of the vnited prouinces of the Low countries, moſt humbly thanke your maieſty for the good affection and fauour, which it hath pleaſed you to ſhew to the ſayd countries in their neceſſity, and to confirme the ſame with ſo many teſtimonies, and that laſtly, after the execrable aſſault committed vpon the perſon of the late prince of Orenge, at what time it pleaſed your maieſty to let the ſayd States vnderſtand by your Ambaſſador maiſter Daulon, what care you had of our defence and preſeruation, and alſo by Segnieur de Criſt, the great diſpleaſure which your maieſty conceiued, to ſee the States fruſtrated of the hope which they had founded vpon the treatie of Fraunce. But ſince the care which your maieſty hath alwayes had ouer our good and conſeruation is not thereby any whit diminiſhed, but hath more plentifully increaſed, according as the neceſſity the neceſſitie of our affaires required, for which the ſaid countrie in generall, and euery of vs in particular remaine perpetually bound to your Maieſtie, and acknowledge the ſame with all fidelitie and obeiſance. And as the ſaid States (Madame) did conſider that ſince the deceaſe of the Prince of Orenge, they haue ſuſtained the loſſe of diuerſe of their holdes and good townes, and that for the preſeruation of the ſayde Countrie it is needfull for them to haue a Prince and ſouereigne ruler, which may warrant and defend them againſt the tyrannie and vniuſt oppreſſion of the Spaniardes and their adherents, which daily more and more inforce themſelues, by their ſiniſter power, and all other meanes to deſtroy and ouerthrow the ſayde Countries, and reduce this poore people into perpetuall ſeruitude, woorſe then that of the Indians, vnder the importable yoake of the deteſtable Inquiſition of Spaine. Conſidering alſo that the bodie of the Townes and Communalties of the aforeſaid Countries haue a firme hope that your Maieſtie will not ſee them periſh, according to the deſire of their enemies, which make this long and cruell warre, all which outrages, the States of the ſayd Low countries (following the diligence and band which they owe to the Burgeſſes and citizens) are to ſuſtaine, repell, and to turne from them, by reaſon of the manifeſt tyrannie and ſeruitude, which the Spaniards attempt to bring in and to lay vpon the poore people, thereby to preſerue their liberties, rights, priuiledges, and franchiſes, with the exerciſe of the true Chriſtian Religion, whereof your Maieſtie by good right carrieth the title of Protectrice and Defendreſſe, againſt which the ſaid enemies, and their aſſociates alreadie haue and ſtill do make many leagues, deuiſe many ſubtilties, treaſons, and ambuſhes, not ceaſſing daily to practiſe and imagine them againſt the perſon of your Maieſtie, and to the preiudice of the reſt of your realmes and ſtates, whom the good God hath preſerued vntill this preſent, for the wealth of the Chriſtians, and ſuſtentation of their Churches. Wherefore (Madame) it is ſo, that for cauſes, reaſons, and other conſiderations, the ſaid States haue aſſembled and concluded vpon a good and firme reſolution, to haue recourſe vnto your Maieſtie, ſith it is an ordinarie matter amongſt all people, and oppreſſed nations, in their calamities and oppreſſions to craue ſupport, and fauour againſt their enemies, of Kings and Princes neare vnto them, but eſpecially of thoſe who be endued with magnanimitie, pietie, iuſtice, and other princely vertues, to which effect the States haue appointed vs to come vnto your Maieſtie, to preſent vnto the ſame, the Principalitie, Soueraigntie, and iuſt gouernment of the ſaid Prouinces, vnder certaine good and equall conditions, chiefly concerning the preſeruation of the exerciſe of the reformed Religion, and of the ancient priuiledges, liberties, franchiſes and cuſtomes, and next of the adminiſtration of the affaires, pollicie, and iuſtice of the warres in the ſaid countrie. And although that theſe countries haue ſuſtained much hurt by theſe long and continuall warres, and that the enemie hath taken diuerſe ſtrong places and fortes in the ſame countries: yet there is beſides the ſame in the countries of Brabant, Gelderland, Flaunders, Haines, and Duerſet, many good townes and places, which defend themſelues againſt the force of the enemie, and the countries, of Holland, Zeland, Vtrich, and Friſſe, be yet (thankes be to God) entire and whole: in which there be many great and ſtrong townes and places, faire riuers, and deepe Ports and hauens of the ſea, out of which your maieſtie and your ſucceſſours may receiue diuerſe good ſeruices, fruites and commodities, whereof it is needleſſe here to make any long recitall. Onely this amongſt other matters deſerueth good and eſpeciall conſideration, that the uniting of thoſe countries, of Holland, Zeland, Friſſe, and the townes of Sluze, and Oſtend in Flaunders, unto the Realmes of your Maieſtie, importeth ſo much as the abſolute gouernment of the great Ocean ſea, and by conſequence, and aſſurance, and perpetuall felicitie for the ſubiects of your worthie Maieſtie: which we moſt humbly beſeech, that it will pleaſe the ſame to condeſcend unto us in the ſaid points and conditions, and in that which followeth, which is, that you will for you and your lawfull ſucceſſours in the crowne of England, be protectours of the reformed religion, as the principall iuſticer and ſoueraigne gouernour of the ſaid countries: and conſequently to receiue the people of the ſame as your moſt obedient ſubiects under the protection and continuall ſafegard of your Maieſtie, they being a people aſſuredly ſo faithfull and louing to their princes and lords (be it ſpoken without vaunting) as any other nation is throughout Chriſtendome. In doing whereof (Madame) you ſhall preſerue many goodly churches, which it hath pleaſed God to aſſemble in theſe latter times in the ſame countries, at this preſent in many places grieuouſly afflicted, and you ſhall deliuer the ſame countrie and people (of late before the vniuſt deeds of the houſe of Spaine) very rich and flouriſhing, through the great commoditie of the ſea, ports, hauens, riuers, trafique, and marchandize, whereof they be naturally endued: you ſhall I ſay (Madame) deliuer them from ruine and perpetuall bondage of bodie and ſoule, being a worke right royall and moſt magnificent, acceptable to God, profitable to all Chriſtianitie, worthie immortall commendation, anſwerable to the magnanimitie and heroicall vertues of your Maieſtie, and ioyned with the aſſurance and proſperitie of your dominions and ſubiects. Whereupon we preſent unto your Maieſtie the ſaid articles and conditions, reuerently praying the King of kings to preſerue your maieſtie from your enemies, to increaſe your glorie and felicitie, and for euer to keepe you in his holy protection.

This oration ended, and the ſumme thereof conſidered, it pleaſed the Queenes maieſtie, by direction of her wiſe and politicke Counſell, to incline her heart to the eaſe and reliefe of the ſaid oppreſſed people. And becauſe her owne ſubiects ſhould not be vtterly vnacquainted with her highneſſe doings in that caſe, there was publiſhed by authoritie a booke intituled, A declaration of the cauſes mouing the Queene of England to giue aide to the defence of the people afflicted and oppreſſed in the Low countries. Dated at Richmond the firſt of October 1585. and the 27. yeare of the raigne of our ſoueraigne ladie the Queene. This booke was printed in the Latine, Italian, and Engliſh toungs. And I haue ſet downe the ſame in Reigne Wooſſes chronicle.

The fourth of July, Charles lord Howard late lord Chamberlaine was made lord Admirall, and Henry lord Hunſdon was made lord Chamberlaine of houſhold.

The

The fift of July, Thomas Awfield a seminarie priest, and Thomas Welley diar, were arraigned at the sessions hall in the Old baily, found guiltie, condemned, and had iudgement as felons to be hanged: for publishing of bookes containing false, seditious, and slaunderous matter, to the defamation of our soueraigne lady the Queene, these were on the next morrow executed at Tiborn accordingly. Awfield and Welley executed.

On the 16. of July, by the sudden fall of a bricke wall in Thamis streete of London neare vnto Dowgate, fiue persons were ouerwhelmed and slaine, to wit, a man and his wife (the wife being great with child and two children, the one their owne, the other a nurse child, and a poore man that liued by charitie, hauing no knowne dwelling place. Fiue persons slaine by fall of a wall.

On the same fiftenth day of July, was sir Francis Russell knight, lord Russel, third sonne to Francis Russell earle of Bedford, slaine with a dag in the borders of Scotland beside Barwike, by a Scot borne in those parts, as they met vpon a truce day. And on the next morrow, to wit, the 17. of July, Francis Russell earle of Bedford, knight of the garter, and one of her Maiesties priuie counsell (father to the late named sir Francis lord Russell slaine on the borders of Scotland) deceased, and was honorably buried at Cheinies in Bedfordshire, on the eight of September next following. The earle of Bedford and his sonne deceased.

On the three and twentieth of July, certaine souldiers were pressed in the seuerall wards of the citie of London, which souldiers being furnished for the wars, and clothed in red coates, all at the charges of the companies and citizens, set forth toward the seas on the thirteenth of August, and were transported ouer into Holland, Zeland, &c. as other the like souldiers out of other parts of the realme, before had bene transported to serue for the defence of the Low countries vnder generall Norris, and other approued captaines. Souldiers transported into the Low countries.

On the 4. of August, betwixt the houres of foure and fiue of the clocke in the morning, at the end of the towne called Notingham in Kent, eight miles from London, in a lane not farre from the houses, the ground began to sinke, three great elmes being swallowed vp, the tops falling downward into a hole with the rootes vpward, turning round in the falling, and driuen into the earth past mans sight: and before ten of the clocke that present day, the ground and trees were sunke so low that neither the one or other might be discerned, the hole being sometimes filled with water, and other whiles neither bottome, trees, or water may be perceiued. The compasse of this hole was then about fourescore yards, and being sounded with a lead and line of fiftie fadomes, cannot therewith find or feele any bottome. Ground and trees sunke & swallowed vp.

This yeare on the fourteenth of September, sir Francis Drake knight, Generall as well by sea as by land, Christopher Carlile esquire lieutenant Generall, Edward Winter, Martine Frobisher, Fraucis Knowles, with diuerse other gentlemen, captaines, and two thousand three hundred souldiers and sailers in fiue and twentie ships and pinnesses departed from Plimmouth, and passing by the Isles of Bayon and the Canaries, arriued at Saint Iago, which citie they tooke and burned: after they sailed to Saint Domingo, which they spoiled and raunsomed: from thence to Carthagena, which they also with great valour and especiall daunger tooke, spoiled, and raunsomed: and retiring homewards Sir Francis Drake his voiage to Domingo and Carthagena.

raced, and burned the fort and citie of Saint Augustine in Terra Florida: and the seuen and twentieth day of July in Anno 1586. arriued at Plimmouth.

Seminarie and massing priests banished.

On the 15. day of September, to the number of two and thirtie Seminaries, massing priests, and others late prisoners in the Tower of London, Marshalsea, Kings bench, and other places, were embarked in the Marie Martine of Colchester, on the southside of the Thamis right ouer against S. Katherines, to be transported ouer into the coasts of Normandy, to be banished this realme for euer, by vertue of a commission from her maiestie before specified. These being safely transported ouer to Boloigne, wrote their certificate thereof as followeth:

Certificate returned by the banished men.

Whereas vpon your Honors commission directed vnto Anthonie Hall, and Thomas Stockar, for the transporting of vs whose names are vnder written, into the coasts of Normandie, who accordingly tooke vs into a barke called the Marie Martine of Colchester, on the southside of the Thamis, right ouer against that part of Saint Katherines next to London bridge, the fifteenth day of September 1585. according to the computation of England: our will is to testifie vnto your good honors, that they the said Anthonie Hall and Thomas Stocker haue generally so well vsed vs in all respects, that we cannot but acknowledge our selues much beholding to so curteous and louing officers: neuertheless comming along the sea, and meeting with her Maiesties Admirall in the Downes, who promising that we should not be disturbed in our course into the Province of Normandie, according to your Honours sayde commission, we had not from him departed two leagues, when as a Flushinger with his people suddenly entred vpon vs, being peaceably stowed vnder hatches, and in our quiet rest, with their drawne swords, their caliuers and their matches fiered in their hands, to our great terrour and discomfort, the most of vs being very sore sea-sicke, expecting at that instant nothing but either the rigorous dint of the sword, or bullet of the caliuer. Howbeit, parley being had by our commissioners with them, they departed, after which time, we considering the generall daunger on the seas, besought with one consent your Honours commissioners to set vs on land at Calice: but they in no wise yeelding thereunto, at last by reason of our importunitie in such daunger and weakenesse, yeelded to set vs on shore at Boloigne, partly by reason of the feare we were then put in, and partly for that we feared afterward more vnreasonable measure, but specially the greatest number of vs so sore sicke, that very tedious vnto vs it seemed to beare so long and daungerous a passage. In witnesse whereof to this our certificate we haue all subscribed our names, the nintenth of September, 1585. William Gimlet, R. Fen, Iohn Nele, Christopher Small, &c.

Fredericke lord Windsor died at Westminster vpon the second of December.

In the moneths of November and December, many horses and men were shipped at the tower wharfe, to be transported ouer into the Low countries. And on the first of December, the right honorable Robert Dudley earle of Leicester, lord Lieutenant generall (after he had taken his leaue of her Maiestie and the court) with his traine (which was great) entred the towne of Colchester in Esser, where the bailifes and brethren in scarlet gownes and multitudes of people met him, & so with great solemnitie entred the towne, where he lodged that night, and on the next morrow set forward to Harwich into the which towne he was accordingly receiued and intertained. On the eight of December, the said earle accompanied with the earle of Essex, the lord North, the lord Audley, sir William Russell, sir Thomas Sherley, sir Arthur Basset, sir Walter Waller, sir Gerue Clifton, & other knights, esquires and gentlemen, to the number of fiue or seauen hundred horse brauely appointed, all voluntaries and of his friends, followers and seruants, Captaines and souldiers, with his traine, to the number of fiftie sailes of ships and hoyes, set forward towards Flushing, with sound of trumpets and drummes, shoutes and prayers of the people for happie and fortunate successe. On the tenth day he arriued at Flushing, where with his whole traine guarded in his owne person by fiftie archers with bowes and arrowes, fiftie halbarders, and fiftie gunners, he was with the intertainement of souldiers, and shot of the Towne and his noble companie before him, entertained by sir Philip Sidney gouernor vnder her Maiestie of the same towne by Graue Maurice second sonne to the deceased prince of Orenge, by her Maiesties ambassador ligier there, and by the States of the towne, passing honourably entertained, with ringing of bels, and making of bone-fires after their manner, which is to fire greate pitch barrels on the tops of high poles, and then to fire them. He was there feasted and lodged in the Imbassadors house, where according to his accustomed disposition he demeaned himselfe so humbly, that he purchased to himselfe no lesse loue and good liking than among the English. The next day after a Sermon had, and dinner ended, he tooke shipping, and sailed toward Middleborough: in the mid way betwixt Flushing and Middleborough standeth a strong sconce of Rammkens, furnished with English men, at the which he with some of his especiall traine landed, and viewed the same, who returning againe to their ships, were presented on the top of the wals in the front of the sea with fiftie pike men very brauely furnished, hauing their English ensignes displayed, with triumph of shot, sound of trumpets and drums neere two houres together. In the which honorable triumphes, the whole fleete hauing good winde and faire weather, sailed along to Middleborough, where on the shore side at the landing place, were, vnder nine ensignes displaied with great store of shot, the best States of the countrie attending my lords landing: Ouer the gates by the port was painted the red Crosse of England, her maiesties armes, & the States, through which gates the earle and his traine entring, he was thus from his landing to his lodging garded through a lane of musket shot with the ensignes borne before him, with trumpets and drums very royally, almost a quarter of a mile. In the middle of the market place were the English ensignes aduanced, and deliuered vnto him, with the which and the rest borne before him he came to his lodging, where at the intreatie of the States, he staied more than two houres at the gate to see the souldiers marching and their strengthes: after which, because it was neere night, he entred and made his dinner and supper all one. Three of those nine ensignes were new: In the first were her maiesties and the Emperors armes quartered: In the second the earle of Leicesters and the prince of Orenges armes together: In the third were the seuen prouinces yeelded vnto her maiesty, all very excellently emblasoned. In a large table hanged ouer the gate of the English house in Middleborough, were emblasoned the armes of her maiesty along aboue the rest, next vnder that the lord lieutenants armes on the one side at large, hard by the which was set out the armes of the States and their houses: all which artificially by a chaine were linked together, and fastened to the English armes, vnder which was written at the foote of this frame, Quos Deus coniunxit, homo non separet. Thus with great ioy & continuall triumph was he entertained on their Christmas eues eue, after the Romish computation, which they in Zeland and Holland obserue in that order.

and

The Lord lieutenant feasted in the Christmas time, and first on Christmas eue, as followeth.

On Christmas eue, the States of the towne in the States house, which standeth in the midst of the towne or market place, feasted him sumptuously: In the first course of which feast throughout the table was nothing but boiled meates, all flesh most excellent dainty: In the second course was all rost meates that could be thought. pigs serued on their feete, and wild foule part in the feathers: In the third course was all kind of baked meates, as foules in pies with their heads and tailes vnpluckt all beset with pendants of her maiesties, the lord lieutenants, the countries, and diuerse English mens armes on the same. The fourth and last course was a rare banket of incredible workmanship, as a castle of crisfall founded on a rocke of pearle, about the which flowed siluer streames, in which lay foules, fishes, and beasts of all kinds, some hurt, some slaine, and some gasping for breath, on the top of the which was a faire virgin lady leaning, and giuing her hands ouer the castle to succour them, very wonderfully wrought. There was wine in abundance, musicke of all sorts, variety of all things, and wonderfull welcomes. This feast began at eleuen of the clocke before noone, and continued till fiue in the after noone.

Lord lieutenãt feasteth the states on Christmas day.

The next day being Christmas day, the earle to requite the States cost, inuited them all, whom he feasted very royally after the English fashion. On Saint Stephens day he feasted the widow princesse of Orenge, with her second sonne county Maurice, and their traines so sumptuously as beseemed his and their honors. Here dispatching his weighty affaires he continued seuen dayes, after which he determined to saile towards Dort, which by iudgement of the countrie is not past ten houres sailing at the most. On the 17. of December (after the account of England) with faire wind and weather, the whole fleete of Dutch hoies hoised vp saile toward Dort, but on the sudden, being onward on their iourney, the ayre was so ouercast with mists, that they knew not how to saile for succour, neither backewards nor forewards: the reason was this: The riuer they had to saile through, was none other then an ouerflowne country, full of old foundations of houses, churches, and castles, so that the clearest aire did no more then safegard the hoyes from daunger. The 20. day, my lord with some other landed at Williamstate or Rag onhill, where he dined, and went aboord againe. On the one and twentieth of December, diuers ships of men of war and others, with the States of Dort in them, met our fleete on the water, where betwixt their ships and ours was at the meeting of the earle great triumphs with shot, in which came many small scouts of succor to hasten the traines to shore, where in good time they entred

Dort very royally and triumphantly. On the port to gard his person was set his owne gard of archers, shot, and halbards. And ouer the gate of entrance was her maiesties, the earles and the States armes emblasoned. When he was landed, & conducted by the States, he passed from the port through a lane of musket shot, all Dutch, braue and well appointed, with 8. enlignes displaied before him in the midst whereof was the English enligne aduanced, whence with 800. shot he was brought to his lodging. After whose entrance they & the great shot continued triumphing an houre and more: here he continued a day and two nights with singular entertainement, and verses which I ouerpasse. On the 23. of December, the earle tooke scouts to passe to Rotherdame by a riuer of fresh water very narrow, where the boates or scouts are some by men, some by horses dragged along the riuer: but in his passage the night being cleere, suddenly there arose so great a tempest, that it put the small vessels in great daunger, but after an houre the weather ward calme, and the night cleere, only a Dutch captaine and three or foure of his men were drowned: toward night he drew neare to the towne of Rotherdame, where on the water he was met with three barges of pleasure, in euery of which was 12. sailers, the first all in blew ierkins and venetians, with red caps and whole cypres white satire like. In the second 12. all in buffe. In the third 12. all in shag thrummed silke very braue, with their oares red and white: in these boates were great store of fire workes and rockets to cast into the aire, and at the sterne of euery one were cressets, which towards night were lighted, and on the water made an excellent shew. Thus with trumpets sounding all the way, was he brought to Rotherdame by water to his lodging in the middle of the towne. On the other side of them, on the bankes stood rankes of souldiers all with musket shot, betwixt euery foure of them was placed a torch or cresset burning: & thus he entred his lodging, where the States accompanied him to supper that night. Here the inhabitants were ioyfull of the Englishmens comming, making much of the traine. The townes men had made very memorably in the middle of the market place, the whole proportion of Erasmus in a pulpet as though he were preaching, holding a booke of the paraphrasis on the Gospels in his hand, vnder whom was written Erasmus Rotherodame. The earle made hast towards Delph, being from thence accompanied with the States, his barges of pleasure, & whatsoeuer was thought honorable. They came late to Delph, somewhat darke, but lighted by cressets along the narrow riuer, on the which many rockets & fire works were shot. On the landing port stood great store of musket shot, with many new enlignes like a lane for him to passe through, all which brought him to his lodging, which was the house wherein the prince of Orenge was slaine, ouer the gate of which house were verses which I ouerpasse. On the 25. of December the earle was feasted of the states very royally, and on the next morrow the earle feasted them amongst whom was the princesse of Des, with a company of honorable ladies and gentlewomen: at the table was dutch musicke of all kinds. And it is to be noted, that the further the earle went vp into Holland, the brauer the countrey was, and the better was his lordship welcommed, as appeared by his excellent entertainement: from thence he remooued on the 27 of December to Donhage, where he determined to keepe his standing court. In the euening the earle by creſſet light, torches, and deuiſes of fire worke, entred into the towne of Dunhage with his traine of Engliſh men, beſides the ſtates of Rotherodame and Delph, with thoſe of Dunhage that met him on the water, with muſket ſhot very many. At the entrance of my lord by water on the riuer met him certaine fiſher men, which preſented Peter, Iames, and Iohn at their harborough: by them Chriſt walking on the water, who commanding them to caſt out their nets the ſecond time, they drew in abundance, wherewith they made ſhew of preſentment to the earle, for the which with thankes he paſſed by. Further on the riuer ſate the repreſentation of Mars and Bellona, who vttered ſpeeches vnto him as he paſſed. At his landing met him a troupe of horſemen, furniſhed and trapped antikely in colours, before whom hauing fetched many courſes, they rode away. At the entrance of the faireſt ſtreete, there were on each ſide of the ſame galleries, raiſed a mans height each againſt other, all hung with blacke baies, on both which galleries on each ſide ſtood fifteene virgins all clad in white, with branches of palme or bore wreathed about, ware candles light in their hands, euery of which did reuerence vnto the earle, theſe ſtood a ſpeares length diſtant each from other. Betwixt euery one hung a looking glaſſe, and betwixt euery glaſſe vpon a prety antike pearch ſtood a ware candle burning, and at each end of the gallerie ſtood a champion, and a blacke Moore, the one ſupporting the armes of England, and the other the armes of Holland. This ſhew was very proper: all the way as the earle paſſed through were artificially made gates raiſed of ragged ſtaues, and vpon euery ſnagge ſtood a ſmall ware candle burning, by which hung the armes of diuerſe crafts men of the towne. The ſtreete all the way was hanged with broade clothes, vpon the which were placed ſtore of red roſes on ſheetes of paper painted. At the next turning he was entertained with this ſhew. Ouer a gate vpon a very high ſcaffold was a conceiued battell fought betweene the Engliſh ſouldiers and the Spaniards, the Engliſh men ſtill preuailing: vnder which were written verſes to that effect. Paſſing forward, was a lofty ſcaffold very faire builded, with her maieſties armes at large placed: on the top ſtood ſeuen virgins, repreſenting the ſeuen prouinces, euery virgin holding a ſpeare, and the armes at large emblaſoned, which prouince ſhe did ſignifie, in the middeſt of them ſtood Minerua armed, incompaſſed about the body with the armes of England, vpon whom all the reſt ſeemed to relie, All which were repreſented vnto her maieſty by neceſſity, an old Champion. The next was on the like ſcaffold, ſeuen perſons preſenting the ſeuen liberall ſciences in their kinds, yeelded to the earle by deſert: out of euery windowe hung lanthornes and candles, and euery ſtreete was furniſhed with creſſets, torches, and linkes light: one deuice that hung in the middeſt of the ſtreete contained eight and thirty lanthornes and ſeuerall lights burning. Beſides theſe, againſt my lords gate, a barbar had on a wall placed threeſcore or more baſons of bright copper; and in the middeſt of euery one a ware candle burning was placed, in the middeſt of all was painted a Roſe and Crowne, this made a faire ſhew. Ouer the entrance of the court gate was placed aloft vpon a ſcaffold, as if it had bene in a cloud, Arthur of Britaine, whom they compared to the earle. Within were hoboyes, cornets, and diuers kinds of muſike: And thus they brought him to his lodging, and after he was entred in a great hall of that house, they discharged such volies of shot as was wonderful to heare. In ỳ night they vsed fire works of rockets, squibs, wheels, and bals of fire, with a dragon that continued casting out fire an houre, wonderfull artificially made. The next day, on the riuer adioyning to my lords lodging, they deuised a running as it were at the tilt in boates, which was thus: From each end of the riuer came a boate running with fiue oares, in the sterne of which on the top stood a man armed in a red wastcoate, with a staffe in his rest, hauing a but end of corke: now each meeting other with these staues both fell into the water, where spare boates were ready to succour them, for away went their horses: this sport with fresh men they continued till the earle was weary of it.

On the third day of January, the earle with three hundred horses in their furniture very brauely with his retinue entred Leidon, where by the way he was met by the best of the towne, first by twelue Burgomaisters clad in long blacke gownes, and on their shoulders was the townes name in large letters of siluer: next them twelue of the chiefest Burgesses, and then many on horsebacke, all in blacke veluet. At his entrance into the towne all ouer his head and downe to the ground on each side, was hanged with say of diuers colours to his lodging, himselfe with a canapy caried ouer his head was brought to his seate, against the which was a stage, on the which stood two men like poets, who presented seuerall shewes, as first a woman representing the towne, then famine assaulting her, then sickenesse, then Spanish seruitude, then hope to be succoured, ayde promised, and at the last, liberty, victory, and triumph, verses, &c. And after the lord lieutenant had bene there feasted and banqueted, on the 5. of January he came from Leidon to Dunhage. The 10. he mustered part of his horsemen, to the number of 500. or more, & then pointed them into seuerall garrisons, & to seuerall gouernors, the earle of Essex was ỳ day made generall of the horses. The 11. day, the lord lieutenant came from Dunhage to Leidon. The 12. a generall fast was proclaimed through Hollande, Gelderland, and Frikeland, which was kept with great zeale, the lord lieutenant spent that day till night with hearing of preaching reading, and singing of psalmes: neither he nor his eating any thing till night. The 19 of January, he came from Leidon to Dunhage.

The 24 of January, the prince of Portingall came to Dunhage. The 25. the lord lieutenant was installed and sworne, & likewise all the States sworne to the queene. The manner of ỳ installing was thus: At Dunhage is a maruellous faire hall, at the vpper end whereof are fiue or six large steps ascending, which do reach to a faire chamber, at the vpper end whereof on high was placed a cloth of estate, in the midst whereof were the armes of England, and against them my lord was seated, on each side of him two steps descending, sate twelue of the principall States, and below them sate the residue, to the number of twenty, right before my lord, but foure or fiue steps descending. On the right hand of my lord did stand the prince of Portingale, next him the lord Morley, next maister Noris gouernour of Munster, next William Russell, and sir Robert Germin, with diuerse men of great account. On the left hand of my lord did stand the Graue Maurice, next the earle of Essex, sir William Stanley, sir Robert Stapleton, & sir T. Parrat, with diuerse other of great account. Thus being placed, a dutchman made a large oration in Dutch, declaring the causes of the matter in hand, with thanks to the Queenes Maiestie, and the lord lieutenant. Then was read in Latine the couenants betweene the States, the Queene and my Lord: this done, the couenants were deliuered to my Lord, which he deliuered to the States, and the States deliuered an other vnto him: then was my Lord demanded to bowe the same by oath, who holding his hand to heauen did sweare to the couenants. The like did the States, holding vp their hands bowe to performe. Then againe were the States sworne to the Queene and my L. her lieutenant in those affaires. This done my Lord gaue to them seuerall thanks, and they seuerally did giue him the like, which being done, my Lord passed through to his chamber, the trumpets all sounding before him. This day my Lord feasted all the States most sumptuously, so that they had their fill both in their bellies, and heads. This day after dinner the souldiers of the Towne, which were three ensignes, came into the court furnished, and did there shew themselues with drum and fife: at night were aboue an hundred fiers brent about my Lords house.

A placcard containing the authoritie giuen by the States of the Lowe Countries, vnto the mightie prince, Robert Earle of Leicester, Baron of Denbigh, &c. for the gouernement of the said Lowe Countries: translated out of Dutch into English as followeth.

The generall States of the vnited Prouinces of the Low Countries, to all those which shall see or heare these present writings, health and dilection. Euen as it hath pleased her Maiestie of England mercifully to send ouer into these Countries the high and mightie prince and Lord, Robert Earle of Leicester, Baron of Denbigh, and one of the priuie counsell, knight of the noble order of the Garter, and not onely to admit and institute his Excellencie, as chiefe head aboue all militarie souldiers, on horse or foote, which her Maiestie hath sent, or shall send ouer hereafter into these Countries, and to the end to assist vs with counsell and aduise, according to his great experience, policie and wisedome in the direction of publike affaires of the land, as well touching the feates of warre, as otherwise, in conseruation of all that which most tendeth to the profite of the foresaid land, to bring backe and reduce the same into such good order and rule as it hath bene in times past, to the ende that so much the better and orderly, he may resist the force and tyrannie of our enimie, and to frustrate all his practises: but also beside this, to honor and inrich his foresaid Excellencie, with greater authoritie, might and commandement, aboue all her maiesties Admirals and Viceadmirals, and ships of warre, to command them all, and to imploy them to the seruice of these Countries, and in such order as his Excellencie shall finde needefull for the same Countrie: and that his Excellencie following her Maiesties commandement, desirous to shew the effect of the good will and affection which he beareth to these affaires, and to the preseruation of the same, and also of the true Christian Religion, and hath imployed himselfe so willingly in the foresaid matters, that his Excellencie for that onely cause hath left and abandoned his natiue Countries and goods, and transported himselfe hitherward amongst vs: so that her Maiestie and his Excellencie could neuer haue done or shewed vnto vs a greater benefite than this. Therefore are we resolued with good and ripe deliberation, to certifie all men by these presents, that we haue desired, accepted, and authorised the foresaid mightie and honorable Prince Lord Robert Earle of Leicester, &c. to be our gouernor and generall Captaine ouer all the vnited Prouinces, and associate Cities and members of the same. And we giue vnto his Excellencie, besides the authoritie of hir Maiestie giuen vnto him the highest and supreame commandement, and absolute authoritie aboue and in all matters of warfare by sea and by land, to execute and administrate the same to the resistance of the enemie, euen as his Excellencie shall thinke most commodious to the preseruation of those Countries: and so further, to do all such things as appertaine to the office of a generall Captaine. And furthermore, we commit the administration and vse of policie and iustice ouer the foresaid vnited Prouinces, and associate Cities and members of the same into his hands, to execute and administrate the same with such power and authoritie, as haue had in times past all the other gouernors of these Lowe Countries before him, and especially, as haue bene exercised, and lawfully administred in the time of Charles the fift, reserued onely the Lawes and priuiledges of the foresaid Countries: also with especiall power to collect profites, and receiue, and administrate all the contributions, which are agreed and condescended, or shall hereafter be consented or agreed, to the maintenaunce of the warres: and also, that which is or shall be deliuered hereafter into his Excellencies hands: and this all according to the vertue of other letters and missiues written more at large touching the same agreement. All which former charge and commission, his Excellencie though our earnest desire hath accepted, and hath deliuered solemne othe and assurance into our hands: First of all, for the preseruation of the true Christian Religion, and maintenance of the priuiledges and rights of these lands and Prouinces, members, and Cities of the same. We therefore ordaine and commaund maund all gouernours of Prouinces and cities, all Admirals, and Viceadmirals, all officers, Coroners, Captaines, their officers and souldiers by sea and land, and furthermore all other counsellors, officers, treasurers, receiuers, bailifes, Burgomaisters, Marshals, magistrates, gentlemen, burgers, and other inhabitants and subiects of these lands, of what qualitie or condition soeuer, that they and euerie of them do acknowledge his foresaid Excellencie in the qualitie of gouernment and captaine generall ouer the foresaid united prouinces, to honor, respect, and obey him as they ought to do, without making any difficultie in doing the same, vpon paine of falling in the displeasure and anger of his Excellencie, and to be punished according to the heaunesse of the fault, and as reason shall require. And to the end that no body should pretend ignorance, we command expresse to make knowne these ordinances, to proclaime and publish them, where as men are accustomed to proclaime all publications, proceeding, and commaunding to proceede with rigor against all disdainers and neglectors of the same, according to the order of punishment before mentioned, without any fauour or dissimulation to the contrarie, because we haue thought the same to be expedient for the preseruation of the Countrie. Giuen in our congregation and assemblie in the Hage, the 6. day of Februarie, 1586. by ordinance of the foresaid generall States.

This placard thus passed, the Lord lieutenant did ordaine certaine speciall men natiues borne, of the counsell, to the intent that such affaires as chanced to occur, might by them be conueniently managed: the names of which counsellors with the places of their charge I ouerpasse.

Hauing thus far discoursed of the lord lieutenants passing from place to place, and the manner of his entertainment: the obseruation of time doth vrge vs ere we proceede any further, to deliuer a peece of seruice done by coronell Skinke, and then to proceede in the commemoration of the lord lieutenants entertainement in other places.

Skinke tooke the towne of Warle.

On the 21. day of Februarie, Skinke not lying still from indammaging the enemie, did take the towne of Warle, and the castle thereto belonging, the maner whereof was thus: himselfe lying in Uendelo, a towne in part besieged, left his men with the Graue Maurice, charging thē not to depart till such time as they heard from him, which they fulfilled: he came with two or three men from Uendelo to his men, no man knowing his enterprise, caused them in the morning to be readie, and so passed on till mid day, at which time they were not far from Warle: Skinke espying a thirtie wagons, clad certaine of his men in the Bours apparell, sent them into the towne to sell the victuals, which they followed, and one of them brake his wagon in the gate, so that the gate could not be closed: One of them shooting off a dagge gaue Skinke warning, and he sodainely entred the towne without resistance, and tooke both it and the Castell. This towne is thought not so strong as profitable, yet verie strong. In it are diuers saltpits which do make great store of salt, which salt doth serue a great part of the countrie to Cullen, and further altogether serued the enemie of salt, which now he wanteth. About the first of March he left the Towne, burning it, and spoyling the Countrey, the cause was this. There was an armie comming to stay his passage, which which he hauing 300. horses did assaile, slue 1000. souldiers, tooke flue enſignes and sent to the lord lieutenant. Thus did valiaunt Skinke, whom we will leaue and returne to matter of delight.

On the first of March, the lord lieutenant came from Hage to Leidon, and the third of March from Leidon to Harlem, whose entertainement there was with orations, representations, verses, shewes, &c. not inferior to those of other townes. On the fourth of March the Lord lieutenant, saw the Earle of Esſex coronell, and sir William Russell coronell muster and traine by Harlem, to the number of two hundred horse. He was there feasted and banketted. And on the tenth of March he came from Harlem to Amsterdam, and by the way was met with diuers men of warre well shipped, which brought him by a long riuer that went into the Towne, ouer the which riuer were three strong bridges, placed full of armed souldiers, on the first bridge was planted ten or twelue peeces of ordinance, which after his honor was past, were shot off, the souldiers on euerie bridge discharging by volies in braue maner: being past these bridges, he was met with two great pageants in this maner: two boates were made in monstrous greatnesse, on the one the shape of a horse swimming, on the other the likenesse of a fish, on each of them a man riding, signifying the god Neptune: both these, one on the one side, and the other one the other side, did accompanie him to his landing, which was at the market place, where were planted great numbers of armed men with shot. Right before him where he landed was a scaffold, whereon was placed diuers shewes and representations, with verses, &c. The day and night following fire works, and afterward banketting, &c. The 20. of March, the Lord lieutenant came from Amsterdam to a castle called Mullen, 4. miles from Norden, and there did dine, and from thence he came to Norden to supper and to bed. On the 22. he came from Norden to Vtricht, where his receiuing was nothing inferior to most of the rest.

The Lord lieutenant came to Harlem.

The Lord lieutenant going to Amsterdam.

The Lord lieutenant came to Vtricht.

On the 26. of March, the Earle of Esſex went to Leger with his horsemen, where he began a new worke. The 28. the Earle was feasted by Graue Maurice, on the which day in the morning there was charge giuen to all the English souldiers in the towne, that they should march from thence to Hage, which for that they wanted pay they refused, and raised a mutinie, for the which one of captaine Polles men was taken and put in warde, whereupon the rest of his followers seeing this, came to the gaole, burst the locks of the doores, and tooke out the prisoner, for the which there was flue apprehended, and three of them were hanged. On the same day was hanged the secretarie to the Countie Hollocke, which secretarie was a counseller to the betraying of the Towne of Graue. The 30. of March, the Earle feasted the Nobilitie and Bourgesses of Vtricht, where there wanted nothing that might fill their bellies or their heads.

Earle of Esſex went to Leger.

A mutinie among the souldiers.

About the first of Aprill, Generall Noris tooke the sconce called Lite. On the fourth of Aprill, was a sore conflict betweene the Male-contents & the English, the enimies being foure thousand were vanquished by Generall Noris with one thousand men, wherefore hs lost a great number, and slue 1200. Spaniards. The letter of Generall Noris to the L. lieutenant I haue set it downe in maister Reine Woolfe and Holinshed.

Generall Noris tooke a sconce at Lite.

The Feast of S. George obserued at Vtricht.

The three and twentieth of Aprill, the Earle of Leicester lieutenant, and gouernour generall of her maiesties forces in the Low countries of the vnited prouinces, making his residence at that time in Utricht (a great and goodly towne vpon the frontiers of Holland) kept most honourably the feast of Saint George therein, the proceedings whereof being so princely performed to the honour of our nation in the view of so many thousand straungers, I could not chuse (hauing gotten the true and faithfull description, by one William Seager alias Portcloſe, an officer at armes in that seruice) to make some briefe remembrance of the manner thereof, to wit: The streetes of Utricht being large and faire, were rankt and set with eight enſignes of Burgesses, richly appointed, wearing scarfes knit like roses white and red vpon their armes, betweene whom from the court of my Lord vnto the cathedrall Church called the Dome, the proceeding was on horse backe. First rode the trumpetters apparelled in scarlet, layd with siluer lace, sounding their trumpets most royally, their banner roles being displayed, and richly limed with my Lords armes: then followed the Gentlemen, Captaines, Colonels, and her Maiesties sworne men to the number of fortie horse, richly adorned in cloth of gold, siluer, and silkes of all colours. After came sixe Knights, foure Barons, with the counsell of Estates, the earle of Esſex accompanied with the Bishop of Cullen Prince Elector, and the Prince of Portingale rode by himselfe: next proceeded the Captaine of the gard, the treasurer, and controller of the house hold, bearing their white staues: after whom followed two Gentlemen vshers, and Portcloſe herault in a rich coate of the armes of England: then came my Lord most princelike, inuested in his robes of the order, garded by the principall Burgers of the towne, which offered themselues to that seruice, besides his owne gard, which were a fiftie halbarders in scarlet cloakes, garded with purple and white veluet. He being thus honourablie brought vnto the Church, after due reuerence done vnto the Queenes Maiesties state, which was there erected on the right hand, he tooke his owne stall on the left, by certaine degrees lower: then began prayers, and a Sermon made by maister Knewstubs my Lords chaplaine, after which, my Lord proceeded to the offering, first, for her Maiestie, and then for himselfe, the which he performed with such decorum and Princely behauiour, that all generally spake most honourably of him. These solemnities being done, his Lordship returned as he came, leauing behind him the Earle of Esſex, and certaine Gentlemen to accompany the Princes and the Ladies of the court. His court was a faire and large house, belonging in times past to the knights of the Rhodes, in which was a very great hall, richly hung with tapistrie: at the vpper end whereof was a most sumptuous cloth and chaire of estate for the Queenes Maiestie, with her armes and stiles thereon, and before it a table couered with all things so requisite, as if in person she had bene there: on the left hand, almost at the tables end, was my Lords trencher and stoole, for he would haue no chaire. The tables being couered, and all degrees assembled, my Lord before the state of her Maiesty, knighted a Dutch Gentleman, called Martin Skinke, for his manifold seruices done to his countrie, the which done, done, the vshers marshalled the feast. At the table on the right side of the hall sate the yoong Prince of Portingall, the Prince elector and his wife, the Princes Simeie, the Earle of Esser, the Graue Mures and his Lady, and betwixt euerie Ladie was an English Lord, or knight placed. On the left side sate the States and chiefe Bourgers of the Towne, and the graund prior of Amerforde, (who came to see the feast) was by my Lords appointment placed vppermost at that table. Then began the trumpets to sound in the seruice which was most prince-like and abounda[n]t, serued on the knee, carued and tasted to her Maiesties trencher. The side tables being furnished all in siluer plate, and attended on by Gentlemen, sundrie sorts of musickes, continued the entring of the first course, which done and auoyded, the trumpets sounded in for the second, which was all baked meates of beasts, and fowles, the beasles, as lions, dragons, leopards, and such like, bearing phaines or armes, and the fowles, as peacocks, swans, phesaunts, turkie cocks and others in their naturall feathers spread as in their greatest pride, which sight was both rare and magnificent. This seruice being placed on hir Maiesties boord, the beasts on the one side, & fowles on the other, the lion lying couchant at her Highnes trencher, the vshers cried, a hall, which being made, with much a doo (by reason of the multitude) they brought vp betweene them, with three reuerences to the state, Portclose Herault, inuested with the armes of England, who in Latine, French, and English, pronounced the Queenes Maiesties vsuall stile of England, France, and Ireland, defendresse of the faith, &c. crying three times, largesse. Then began the trumpets to sound, and the Dutch men to carouse to the health of her Maiestie, the welfare of my Lord, and to the prosperities of the vnited prouinces, and nothing wanted wherein either estate, magnificence, or ioy might be expressed. To be briefe the feast ended, and tables voyded, there was dauncing, vauting, and tumbling, with the forces of Hercules, which gaue great delight to the strangers, for they had not seene it before, and thus they passed the time, till euensong and then departed. At supper being all assembled againe, great was the feast, and plentifull the cheere: and after supper began the barriers betweene challengers & defendaunts men of armes, wherein the Earle of Esser behaued himselfe so valiantly, that he gaue all men great hope of his noble prowesse in armes. The Barriers done, and either part retyred with equall praise, (though not with equall blowes) there was a most sumptuous banquet prepared of Suger meates for the men of armes, and the Ladies: which banquet being finished, my Lord wishing them all good rest, tooke his leaue, and so this honourable feast brooke vp about twelue of the clocke at midnight.

On the 24. of Aprill, our English men that were in the enterprise before Graue retired, hauing set Graue in sufficiencie both of victuals and munition, and in their retrackt set vpon a sconce called Knols sconce, which was yeelded vpon composition. The next day our men or some part of them came before Emple sconce, and presently wan it without the losse of any man. H. Archer. Knols sconce won, & Emple sconce.

The 26. of Aprill, the lieutenant of Sir Martin Skinke, his maister being with my Lords Excellencie, knowing of a companie of foote men Spaniards, he with certaine of his horse laid themselues in ambush, set vpon them, killed thirtie of them, them, and tooke 8 l. and caried them to their garrison.

View of horsemen at Newkirke and boores taken.

The 4. of May, his Excellency did view all his horsemen, being in number about thirteene or fourteene hundred by Newkirke, on a great heath betweene Newkirke & Amerford. And this day his Excellencies gard being sent to Newkirke to keepe the towne, tooke a seuenty boores, that were purposed to haue spoyled Newkirke. The seuenth of May, his Excellencie remooued from Amerford to Arnam, and passed through Reine, and Wagonet. Reine is a peeper strong towne, situate on the riuer of Reyne, pleasant, and defenceable, roundly compact together. Wagonet standeth by a creeke of water comming to the Reyne, and within twentie score yeards of the Reyne, this towne is a strong towne, and stands most pleasant, wanting nothing but peace. Arnam is a faire Towne, strongly enuironed with wals, rampiers, and other matter of strength, it also standeth on the riuer of Reyne, on the one side of the towne the ground is most fertile and pleasant, on the other side is a great heath most barren, all the countrey is spoyled, abbeys, faire houses, and doxpes are all wasted, neither any house standing, nor any man there dwelling. Ouer the Reyne against this towne is a sconce, onely for defence of the boores, if the enemy come to destroy and take from them their cattell, to which sconce both the boores runne, and also driue their cattell. Within one mile of this towne is the sconce of Arnam, which our English men won the last yeare, this sconce is wondrous strong, being compassed with such rampired wals, and deepe ditches, that it is almost inuincible. It standeth on the one side of the Reyne. At this sconce was captaine Hening a braue gentleman slaine at the winning of it, and there is buried: of other townes I leaue farther to describe, and turne to the accidents. The 9. of May, the Prince of Parma with others, came to view the towne of Graue, which a canoneere saw, and discharged his canon, wherewith he tooke away the hinder part of his hoyse, and missed the prince but a little, so that he bruised him sore. The same day they of Graue shot fire bals into the greatest sconce of the enemy, and by good lucke one of them lighted among the powder in the sconce, set it on fire, which with such violence brake forth, that it blew vp the Spaniards most terribly, and layd the sconce flat. About this time the enemy battered the base towne of Graue, and presently vpon the battery entred, which the souldiers of the towne suffered, but in fine they set on them, slue 400. and purged the towne againe.

Enemy repulsed out of Graue.

The 12. of May, sir Martin Skinke obtained a little peece of ground enuironed with water, neare vnto Nemegan, where he intrenched himselfe, so that the towne could not hurt him, and his ships of warre comming downe to him, nothing could passe by the riuer of Reyne to the towne but he commanded it. The 14. of May, our men lying at Nemegan sconce, there reuolted to them out of the towne two boyes. The sixteenth his excellency passed from Arnam to the campe at Nemegan: this day the castle of Lenow was yeelded him, and the same day came fiue boyes to our men from Nemegan. The eighteenth of May, the enemies entring Graue, lost 500. men.

The 20. of May, early in the morning the strong fort of Nemegan was yeelded to his Excellencie in this fort, to depart like souldiers, which was graunted, and they to the number of 156. souldiers very braue passed by his Excellencies lodging at Blankharst: there was in all at the siege of this sconce of Nemegan slaine about fortie souldiers and pioners, and twenty hurt. Now to returne to other accidents, such as in the meane time happened in England. The strong fort of Nemegan yeelded to his Excellencie.

This yeare the Queenes maiestie tooke order for the peopling and inhabiting of the countries, late belonging to the earle of Desmond and his rebellious companions, to which end diuerse honorable and worshipfull gentlemen prouided to be vndertakers of signories there, whereof some went into the said countrie, others according to order taken, sent their people, amongst which were sir Christopher Hatton, sir Walter Rawlie, sir William Courtney, sir Richard Molineux, sir George Bourcher, sir Edward Fitton, sir Valentine Browne, sir Walter Lulon, Iohn Popham, her maiesties atturney generall and other. Desmond in Ireland peopled of the English nation.

The 19. of Ianuarie, Nicholas Denorox was condemned for treason, in being made a Seminarie priest at Rhemes in Fraunce, since the feast of Saint Iohn Baptist, in Anno primo of her Maiesties raigne, and in remaining here after the terme of fortie daies after the session of the last Parliament.

Also Edmond Barbar being made priest as aforesaid, and comming into this realme after the said terme of fortie daies, was likewise condemned of treason, and both drawne to Tiborne, and there hanged, bowelled and quartered on the 21. of Ianuarie. And on the same day a wench was burned in Smithfield for poisoning of her Aunt, and mistresse, and attempting the like to her vncle. Seminarie priests executed. Archbishop of Canterburie called to be of the priuy councel

On the feast day of the purification of our blessed Lady, Doctor Iohn Whitegift archbishop of Canterburie, William lord Cobham, warden of the fiue Ports, and Thomas lord Buckhurst, were chosen and taken to be of her Maiesties priuie councell. T. Louelace lost his eares for traiterously practising to enioy the goods and lands of his neerest kinne.

The 11. of Februarie, Thomas Louelace was brought prisoner from the Tower of London to the starre chamber, against whom her Maiesties atturney did informe, that the same Louelace, vpon malice conceiued against Leonard Louelace, and Richard Louelace his cosin germaines, had falsely and diuelishly contriued and counterfetted a very traiterous letter in the name of Thom. Louelace (another brother of the said Leonard and Richard then resident beyond the seas) purporting, that the same Thomas should thereby incite and prouoke the said Leonard to procure the said Richard to execute her Highnesse destruction with other circumstances of treason. This letter he cast in an open high way, pretending thereby, that vpon the discouerie thereof, his said kinsmen Leonard and Richard should be drawne in question for the treasonable matter against her Maiestie in that bill contained, euen in the highest degree, for which offence her maiesties atturney prayed, that the said Thomas then prisoner, might receiue condigne punishment. Whereupon the court adiudged that he should be carried on horseback about Westminster hall with his face to the horse taile, and a paper on his backe wherein to be written: For counterfetting of false and trecherous letters against his owne kindred, containing most traiterous matter against her Maiesties person. And frō thence to be carried in ỹ manner, & set on ỹ pillory in the palace Praise worthie iustice, the like whereof is to be wished to the like trecherous practiser, and libeller against his eldest brother, after he had defrauded him of his goods and leases.

at Weſtminſter, and there to haue one of his eares cut off: alſo to be carried in like manner into London, and ſet on the pillorie one market day in Cheape, with the like paper. After that carried into Kent, and at the next aſſiſe there to be ſet on the pillorie with the like paper, and his other eare to be cut off. Alſo to be ſet on the pillorie one market day at Canterburie, and an other at Rocheſter in the like manner: and at euery the foreſaid places, this order taken touching his offence to be openly read, the ſentence whereof was duly executed in the pallace at Weſtminſter, in Cheape, &c.

Straunge ſicknes and death at Exceſter through ſtench of the priſon.

The 14. of March, at the aſſiſes kept at the citie of Exceſter in Deuonſhire before ſir Edmond Anderſon, lord chiefe Juſtice of the common pleas, ſergeant Floriday, one of the barons of the exchequer, and other Juſtices, there happened a ſtraunge ſickneſſe, firſt amongſt the priſoners, and then amongſt other perſons, and beſides the priſoners, many of all degrees died thereof, namely ſergeant Floriday, ſir Iohn Chicheſter, ſir Arthur Baſſet, and ſir Barnard Drake knights, Thomas Carew, R. Carie, Iohn Forteſcue, Iohn Waldren, and Thomas Riſdone eſquires, and Juſtices of peace: of the common people died very many, Conſtables, Rues, Tithingmen, and Iurors, and namely of one Iurie, they being twelue in number, there died 11. of them. This ſickneſſe was imputed to certaine Portingals then priſoners in the ſaid goale. For not long before, one Barnard Drake eſquire had bene at the ſeas, and meeting with certaine Portingals come from new found land, and laden with fiſh, he tooke them as a good prize, and brought them into Dorthmouth hauen, and from thence they were ſent, being in number about 38. perſons, vnto the goale of the caſtle of Exon, and there were caſt into the deepe pit and ſtinking dungeon. Theſe men had bene before long time at the ſeas, hauing no change of apparell, nor lyen in bed, and now lying on the ground without ſuccour or reliefe, were ſoone infected, and all for the moſt part were ſicke, and ſome of them died, and this ſickneſſe very ſoone after diſperſed it ſelfe among all the reſidue of the priſoners in the goale, of which diſeaſe many of them died, but all brought to great extremities and very hardly eſcaped. Theſe men when they were to be brought before the foreſaid Juſtices for their triall, many of them were ſo weake and ſicke, that they were not able to go nor ſtand, but were carried from the goale to the place of iudgement, ſome vpon handbarrowes, and ſome betweene men leading them, and ſo brought to the place of iuſtice. The ſight of theſe mens pitifull cafes, being thought to be hunger ſtarued, rather then otherwiſe diſeaſed, moued many to pitie them, &c.

A ſtraunge worm found in the heart of an horſe.

The ſeuenteenth of March, a ſtraunge thing happened, the like whereof before hath not bene heard of in our time. Maiſter Dorington of Spaldwicke in the countie of Huntington eſquire, one of her maieſties gentlemen Penſioners, had a horſe which died ſuddenly, and being ripped, to ſee the cauſe of his death, there was found in the hole of the heart of the ſame horſe a ſtraunge worme, which lay on a round heape in a kall or ſkinne of the likeneſſe of a toade, which being taken out, and ſpread abrode, was in forme and faſhion not eaſie to be deſcribed, the length of which worme diuided into many greines to the number of fiftie (ſpread from the body like the braunches of a tree) was from the ſnowte to the end of the longest greine 17. inches, hauing foure issues in the greines, from the which dropped foorth a red water: the bodie in bignesse round about was three inches and an halfe, the colour whereof was very like a makarell. This monstrous worme found in manner aforesaid, crawling to haue got away, was stabbed in with a dagger and died, which after being dried, was shewed to many honorable persons of the realme.

The eighteenth of Aprill, in the assises holden at London in the Iustice hall, William Thomson alias Blackborne made priest at Rhemes, and Richard Lea alias Long made priest at Lions in Fraunce, and remaining here contrarie to the statute, were both condemned, and on the 20. day of Aprill drawne to Tyborne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered. Seminarie priests executed.

The first of May, deceased sir Henry Sidney knight of the garter, lord president of Wales, and was honorably buried at Penshurst in Kent on the one and twentieth of June. Sir Henry Sidney deceased.

The eight of May being sonday, in the afternoone, Henry Ramelius chancelor for Germanie, ambassador from Fredericke the second king of Denmarke, vnto the Queenes maiestie of England, came into the riuer of Thamis with his ships so farre as blacke wall, where he was receiued by Gilbert lord Talbot, and by him conueyed by water along to Greenwich, and so to the tower wharfe, where he arriued and was honorably receiued of the lord Cobham, and other great Estates, and by them conueyed through the Tower streete, Fanchurch streete, and Grace streete into Bishopsgate streete, to Crosby place, where he was lodged, and remained till he had finished his ambassade at the Queenes charges, and returned on the 30. of May towards Denmarke. Ambassador from the king of Denmarke.

The seuenteenth of May, Philip earle of Arundell was conueyed from the Tower of London to Westminster, and there in the Starre chamber, by the councell condemned to pay 10000. pound fine for his contempt, and to remaine in prison at the Queenes pleasure. Earle of Arundell condemned to pay 10000. pound.

A commission was directed from her Maiestie, tending to the ratifying of a firme league of amitie betweene her Maiestie and Iames king of Scots, which league being articuled, commissioners were appointed, Edward earle of Rutland, William lord Euers, and Thomas Randolph esquire, who with their traine came to Berwike on the 19. of June, where the ambassadors of Scotland being present, they accomplished the matter according to the commission, the articles of the said league in all and euery part sufficiently confirmed on the first of July: which being done, the said earle of Rutland with his traine returned home, maister Randolph went into Scotland to take his leaue of the king, and returned into England about the 15. of August. Seruices in Ireland by sir Richard Bingham against the Burkes.

This yeare (as in the last proceeding) fell great troubles in Ireland in Connaght, which because they are memorable, and no lesse happily then valiantly appeased, I will set downe the causes and foundations thereof, with all the particular seruices and successes, as I haue receiued them, confirmed vnder the hands and testimonies of diuerse captaines and gentlemen employed in the said seruice.

All Cõnaght quiet through sir R. Binghams good gouernment

In the moneth of September, in Anno 1585. at a sessions holden at Doonemony in the county of Mayo, within the prouince of Connaght by sir Richard Bing. knight, chiefe commissioner and gouernour of the said prouince (sir Nichol. White Maister of the rols then being present, and employed with him for the perfecting of the last compositiõ made within ỹ said prouince) the countie of Mayo, and the whole countrie stood then in generalitie, through the good and politique gouernment, and the iust and vpright dealing of the said sir Richard Bingham on peaceable and quiet termes, without any face of alteration. And the most part of ỹ gentlemen and freeholders of that countrie resorted to the said sessions before: neuertheless, when now by meanes of this compositiõ & agreement betweene her M. and them, they perceiued ỹ the names, titles and superiorities of their chiefe L. and specially of M. W. the chiefest of the septs of that countrie should cease, extinguish, & for euer after be determined: it did not a little grieue them, although some of them not long before had expostulated ỹ like reformation. The plot of this compositiõ was deuised by sir R. of purpose, to take away the greatnesse of the Irish lords, with their names of Macs & Oes, that the inferiour subiect might be freed from their Irish customes, cuttings and vnreasonable exactions, & (by knowing what was their owne) be drawne to depend euer after vpon the state, & not on those Irish lords or gentlemen: which also might not only much availe her Maiestie in time of any stirs or reuolts (by drawing the common people from following the great & chiefe lords, but also bring a more certaine yearely rent, or reuenue into her highnes coffers then formerly was accustomed. When the people perceiued these their old customes & vsages like to take end, they deuised with themselues for the preuenting thereof, and according to their old customed manner, euer by them vsed in all their discontentments, they tooke vp their weapons, armed them against the state, thinking by stirs and broyles to winne the reuocation of this setled and determined resolution, and so to be left againe in their old customes and vsages.

A wise and politike deuise of sir R. Bingham to strengthen the gouernment and weaken the Irishrie.

The Irish fal into rebelliõ when they are discontented.

This their purpose appeared in one Thomas Roe Burke, a chiefe gentleman of that sept, who at this very instant, during the sayd sessions at Doonne-monie, kept himselfe within a strong castle of his, standing in an Iland on Loghe macke, euen within the sight of the gouernour and the other commissioners, refusing to come at them, albeit they had seuerall times sent for him. Sir Richard Bingham perceiuing that the coales of troubles were now layd together, and would shortly after kindle and become an angry fire, if the same were not politikely and warily preuented (dissembling the matter as if it were of no moment) he bethought him of the best and safest remedy to meete with this inconuenience. And knowing well that those Burks had euer bene very bad and loose people, such as very hardly continued themselues two yeares together within a due course or compasse of obedience, he saw that the onely way to stop this gap, was either to cut off or to apprehend and lay vp in durance as pledges two or three of the best of that sept, such as were most dangerous for the inciting of stirs, and the drawing of others into action. And therefore vpon his returne out of that county to Roscomon, he dealt with the sherife of the county of Mayo, for the apprehension of the sayd Thomas Roe. The sherife not long after sent his subsherife to put this matter in execution, who being resisted and hurt by the sayd Thomas Roe, and not otherwise able to apprehend him, wounded him in such sort as he therof died. This Thomas Roe, being thus slaine was not much lamented, no not euen of his owne kindred, for he was an oppressor of them, and doubtlesse it was thought by wise men that the death of this man, and the hanging of two others of that surname at Roscomon, which had deuised for the drawing of Scots into the prouince, had preuented the stirs and troubles that after ensued, and at that time seemed to haue a beginning, had not some men depending on the state) through enuy and malice to sir Richard Bingham & his good and happy gouernement) perswaded diuers others of that sept of the Burks to haue a care of themselues to be vpon their keeping, & to trust no officer, nor to come to any such till their pardons should be by them procured from the lord Deputy. These mens names I forbeare to remember, because they haue since that time made it knowne before the lord Deputie and counsell of the realme, that in giuing such caueats to ỹ Burks, they meant nothing lesse then to harten them into rebellion against the state, and to attempt such bad actions as afterwards they did. Of this counsell ỹ Burks, which of themselues were seditious inough, in whose minds did stil sticke the abolishing & taking away of their M.W. with their old Irish cuttomes & cuttings tooke hold and conuerted the same to an apt & conuenient occasion offred them, for their better assembling together into a conuenient number. And more effectually to win the harts of many men to follow this their intended enterprise, they made the Clandonnels, the Ioies, & most of the countrey beleeue, that sir R. Bingham hauing already taken from these men their ancient cuttomes & liberties, would also deliuer the like measure to them, & take from them also their liues, if they did not well looke vnto themselues. By this meanes they drew many vnto them, perswading themselues that they might safely assemble together in companies without feare of interruption, for by the friendship of their foresayd counsellors which were in Dublin, their assemblies should there be thought as a thing by them done for their defence & safety. They also knew

Thomas Roe Burke would not come at the gouernour.

Sir Richard Binghams care to preuent a mischiefe.

These two were Moyler Oge Burke and Thebot Keoghe.

The Burks turne the counsell of sir Richard Binghams backe frieds to serue their purpose.

Slanderous lies to set forwards rebellion.

The simple Irishrie are more wiser then we take them to be.

that ſir Richard Bingham being reſtrained from following them in this or other their actions, without direction fro Dublin, could not ſtop or preuent them in their firſt beginning, by reaſon whereof they would in ſhort time draw together & ioyne to them the greateſt part of the countrey, whereof ſome ſhould be drawne to aſſiſt them in open hoſtility, and ſome others in ſecret and vnder-hand dealing, of which ſort the latter ſhould ſtill ſeeme ſubiects & liue as neare as they could in ỳ boſome of the ſtate. And to make themſelues the ſtronger, and to draw the whole prouince into action with them, they gaue it forth, ỳ their caſe was euery mans caſe within the ſame: And that as their ancient cuſtomes & liberties were infringed, and their liues ſought to be taken away, ſo ſhould it alſo fare with the reſt of the ſaid prouince. And here for an entrance into this rebellion, the ſons of Edmond Burke of caſtle Barry being many (which Edmond was an old man, one of the competitors of ỳ M. William Ihip, & a moſt bad affected member to the ſtate, and his wife as bad as himſelfe, together with Edmód Kerragh Burke, Riccard Burke ỳ Diuels Hookes ſonne, Moyler Oge Burke, Walter M. Danie Bane, Cahir M. Connell, and diuers others, aſſociating vnto them many idle perſons, entred into a caſtle in Loghmaske called caſtle Mecalley, and manned the ſame together with Thomas Roes caſtle, where of mention is made before, which caſtle after Thomas Roes death, was now in the poſſeſſion of his brother Riccard Burke called the Pall of Ireland: which caſtles they kept in rebellious manner againſt the ſtate, refuſing to come at any of her maieſties officers. About this time ſir Richard Bingham lay at the ſiege of Clanowen in Thomond, a ſtrong pile, manned and kept againſt her maieſty by Mahowne Obrian a moſt dangerous enemy to the ſtate, a chiefe champion of the Popes, and a great practiſer with forrein powers, for the inuaſion of this realme of Ireland. At this ſiege ſir Richard Bingham had but 100. Engliſh ſouldiers, and ſome few kerne of the countrey, by reaſon whereof he was driuen to no ſmall paine in ſkirmiſhing, watching, and warding with ſo few men: neuertheleſſe, within ſeuen dayes after he wan the caſtle and ſlue the ſayd Mahowne Obrian & the ward within, and raſed the ſaid caſtle, without the furtherance of any great ordinance. After ỳ ſir R. marched from this caſtle to caſtle Mecalley, within the which the traytors were and incloſed themſelues. At his firſt comming thither he parled with them, aduiſing them to remember the obedience which they owed to her maieſty, and to yeeld themſelues to her maieſties mercie, aſſuring them that in ſo doing they ſhould find that fauour in all reſpects that other her highneſſe ſubiects did. But they (minding nothing leſſe then to ſubmit themſelues, on any ſuch conditions) ſayd they would not do any hurt, but keepe themſelues there in ſafety, for that they were fearefull to truſt any Engliſhman, alleadging many friuolous and impertinent cauſes mouing them to ſtand vpon their gard. Hereupon ſir Richard proceeded to beſiege them in the ſayd caſtle, which was a ſtrong round fortreſſe erected farre within the Loghe, vpon a ſmall compaſſe of ground, ſo ſcanted by the wall, that ſcarce a ſtanding place was left vnto it. The ſiege was all by water in boates, and could not otherwiſe be attempted. men, hauing but a small company there, and those also sore wearied, bruised with stones and galled with shot at the siege of Clanowen) was forced by the sudden rising of contrary weather, which much fauoured the enemy, to leaue the attempt with the losse of his boates, and two or three of his souldiers, himselfe and others being in the sayd boate, hardly escaped by the helpe of other boates, which other boates came not in time to his succour, through the negligence of such as he had put in trust with them, and appointed to come, and ioyne with him. The boate which he so lost the enemies gote, in which and in another boate of their owne (before sir Richard could returne to charge them with a fresh supply from his camp lying on the shoare) they shipped themselues, and with great celerity escaped into the woods, fearing that at the next charge, sir Richard would haue won the castle. Captaine Mordant and others had the chase of them by water. These traytours being thus escaped to the woods and mountaines out of the castle Mecalley, their accomplices also fled out of the other castle. Both which and one strong pile of Farrowe M. Donnels, sir Richard raced to the ground, for that they were not fit or stood seruiceable to be kept by the English, and were very dangerous to be in the possession of the Irishrie. Richard Burke alias the Pall of Ireland a man of no small accompt among his sept, and all the ill affected Irishry repaired to sir Richard at his first comming to castle Mecalley, being in deed the chiefe of their confederacy. This man vnder colour of dutifull subiection, intended to haue betrayed sir Richard and all his company: but (intelligence hereof being giuen, and many apparant proofes had of his trayterous intentions and deuises) this Pall of Ireland was soone executed by marshall law: this man was assuredly the most dangerous member in all the county of Mayo, especially for the drawing in of Scots, a thing which sir Richard euer doubted, and which the Burkes vndoubtedly intended.

After this the gouernour sir Richard Bingham tooke order for the following of those Burkes to the woods and mountaines, which were now growne to be some fourescore swords, he leuied some forces on the country, and with them and his owne company of an hundred souldiers, he so hunted them from bush to bush, and hill to hill, that in short time no newes was to be heard where any of them were. After this the gentlemen of the countrey which had not combined with them, seeing the rebels to be driuen to their holes and fastnesse in hiding manner, by meanes whereof the souldiers could do nothing vpon them, offered to sir Richard that if he would draw his forces out of the countrey, they would vndertake the seruice against the rebels, and either kill them, or banish them at their owne cost and charges, without abating any peny of the composition rents due to her maiesty by them in lew thereof: hereunto sir Richard assented, finding it a good policy to set one of them against another. But here (hauing these bad Burks at a great aduantage, & in a hard distressed case) when they were thus at ỹ lowest ebbe, sir Richard receiued especiall and straite charge and commaundement from the lord Deputy to protect them, & he receiued also a protection ready signed by the lord Deputy to that end, which thing, though the matter and manner of it much grieued him, he handled it in the best sort he could to saue the credit of the state, and wrought deuises to driue them to seeke their protections, which when they did, be granted it vnder his owne hand, and the seale of the prouince, as formerly was accustomed, and in such causes ought to be done. But although this was closely handled by the gouernour sir Richard Bingham, yet the Burks had intelligence that the lord Deputy had protected them, and commaunded the gouernour to performe it, which, as is to be gathered, they had learned from some wel-willers of theirs out of Dublin: this made the gentlemen very high and hauty minded, and was to them a soueraigne preparatiue, for to vnderstate new and greater stirs and broiles then before they had begun. For the peace being such as the state offered it, and they sought it not, continued but a small time, although they had giuen in a simple pledge for the performance thereof. After the Burks were thus protected, sir Richard Bingham repaired to his dwelling house and from thence vpon occasions) to Dublin, where he had not long stayed when the Burks reuolted againe now the second time, ioyning vnto them the Clangibbons, the Clandonnels, and the Ioyes in farre greater number then before, which sayd Ioyes, the more to manifest their bad and trayterous intentions, and the better to assure their complices of their fast dealing in this combination, murdered certaine of the officers of Yrconnaght and their men, to the number of fiftéene or sixteene. About this time order came from the lord Deputy for the leuying of mē within this prouince for the seruice in the Low countries. The brute thereof and the repaire hither of Francis Barckley sent by the lord Deputy for the leuying of the sayd men, caused many idle men who had no zeale to serue beyond the seas, to ioyne themselues with the sayd Burks then in action against her maiesty. And thus these Burkes hauing had an enterview of peace and a pawsing time to gather head againe and increase their forces, stood on very lofty termes, and sayd they would haue a K. William, or else they would go into Spaine for one: also they would haue no sherife within that county, nor be subiect to answer in appearance at any assise or sessions. These points and termes they stood on, and articled the same accordingly, with many other vnreasonable demaunds which they would haue to be granted, or otherwise they wold in no wise yeeld to haue peace with the state. At the beginning of this second reuolt, for that the gouernor was willing to haue drawne them to peace (if by any reasonable meanes he might haue done the same without any indignity to the state) he sent vnto the commissioners, viz. the L. archbishop of Tuam, the L. Bremingha baron of Athenry, T. Dillon esquire chiefe iustice of the prouince, Gerrald Comererford esquire atturney of the same, & others to parley with them, and to examine the cause of those their insolent attempts: vnto whom they answered in effect, as is aforesayd, deliuering them the sayd articles in writing. And euen during the time of the commissioners abode in the countrey, they did not forbeare to burne and spoyle the same. All which notwithstanding a time of peace was granted vpon conditions in a sort to their liking for eight dayes by the sayd commissioners, that in the meane time the lord Deputies pleasure might be signified to the gouernor how he would haue them to be proceeded withall, and direction sent accordingly. But (after this also was granted them) the commissioners were no sooner departed out of those parts, then they began to breake downe diuers castles, and to burne many townes in the plaine and champaine baronies. And the more to make knowne their trayterous and wicked purposes purpoſes, they proceeded againſt her maieſty in moſt odious and vnduti-full ſpeeches, ſaying: What haue we to do with that Caliaghe, hath vnwiſe are we, being ſo mighty a nation, to haue bene ſo long ſubiect to a woman? the Pope and the king of Spaine ſhall haue the rule of vs, and none other. Sir Richard (notwithſtanding all this) did forbeare to raiſe forces, and to ſerue vpon them (greatly to his diſaduantage) for that he had receiued many and earneſt cautions from the lord Deputy to forbeare the beginning of any warre againſt them. But in the meane time the rebels grew to be very ſtrong, and were now increaſed to the number of ſeuen or eight hundred men, and had alſo ſent Edmond Kerragh Burke, and Iohn Ireleaue brother to Walter Kittagh Burke to practiſe with the Scots, and to draw them into the prouince to their ſuccour and aide, aduertiſing the Scots by the ſayd meſſengers, that the time was then to ſubdue Connaght, for the queene had few or no ſouldiers in the realme, they were all imployed into the Low countries. This fire kindled and flamed in ſuch ſort that now it was high time to take in hand the quenching thereof: neuertheleſſe ſir Richard himſelfe durſt do nothing againſt them for that he was aduiſed and willed by the lord Deputy to do nothing in that caſe without his lordſhips aduiſe & directiõ, which (when he had long looked for) at length he receiued, although ſomewhat late, the effect whereof was, that the ſayd lord Deputy & the counſell concurred in opinion with ſir Richard, that the conditions which the Burks required were ſo vnreaſonable, as neither ſubiect ought to demãd the, ne yet the ſtate (without great indignity) could yeeld vnto them, and therefore reſolued and willed ſir Richard to proſecute them with ſuch forces as he had or could leauy, except he could find them to ſtand on more dutifull termes then afore is ſayd. Hereupon the gouernor leuied ſuch forces as he thought might ſuffice to anſwer the ſeruice both effectually and ſpeedily, for he found and ſaw that lingring ſeruice could not but greatly charge her maieſty, and much encourage the enemie: (a ſoft kind of warre that hath bene too too long vſed in this realme:) Firſt, hauing taken order for the aſſurance of the countrey behind him, he marched towards the countie of Mayo, the 12 of July 1586. with his owne garriſon forces which were 100. footemen and 50. horſemen, and came to Ballinroba the 14. day of the ſaid moneth: here he ſpent ſir or fiue daies, as well in parling with the ſaid Burkes, as alſo in gathering of his whole forces together, hither came to him the earle of Clanrickard with 300. horſemen and one hundred kearne, alſo many gentlemen of the countrey came hither, namely the L. Bremingham lord baron of Athenrie, ſir Hubbert M. Dany knight, Teig Okelley, and diuers others: hither alſo came in the ſupply of forces which he had leuied within the prouince, viz. a hundred footemen of captaine Mordants, a hundred footemen vnder captaine Merriman, and a hundred footmen vnder captaine Moſtean, beſides diuers companies of light kearne to the number of fiue or ſeuen hundred: & then hauing imployed the earle of Clanrickard, the archbiſhop of Tuam, the biſhop of Kilmore, the lord Bremingham, Thomas Dillon iuſtice of the prouince and others in parling with the Burkes one day, and finding that no reaſons nor perſwaſions might win them to peace, he executed certaine of their pledges, which they before had put in for their loyaltie and good behauiour (for it appeared to this politique and wiſe gentleman ſir Richard Bingham,

Bingham, that the ſparing of rebels pledges heretofore had done no ſmall hurt in this realme, by incouraging the to ill actions, truſting vpon the accuſtomed mercy ſhewed to the like pledges: and then he marched to the Abbey of Ballentubber, the two and twentieth of July: and from thence he ſent his forces of footemen and kearne into the mountaines and woods to ſeeke the rebels in their faſtneſſe, which aforeſaid forces was led by Captaine Iohn Bingham, who had the charge of the garriſon band, which behaued himſelfe ſo well therein, that within the ſpace of fiue or ſeuen weekes they all ſubmitted themſelues to the ſtate: himſelfe with the earle of Clanrickard, and the horſemen kept the champaine and plaine country, as well for the defence of her maieſties good ſubiects in thoſe parts, as alſo to keepe the enemie from eſcaping away from the forces ſent into their ſaid faſtneſſe. About this time there came an eſpiall out of Mounſter, being ſent, if it were as he ſaid, as a meſſenger from thoſe parts to Francis Barckley prouoſt marſhall of Connaght. This eſpiall, the more to incourage the traitors, and to animate others to ioyne with them, gaue it forth, that the earle of Leiceſter was ſlaine in the lowe Countries, and the moſt of the Engliſh forces ouerthrowne there: that there were 2. great armies of Spaniards landed in England, and that there was a great nauy of Spaniſh ſhips in Baltimore, that the king of Scots was in armes againſt her maieſtie, and that her highneſſe was ſicke, and in great danger of death: vpon which vntrue ſeditious rumor and report, ſir Richad cauſed the Author and meſſenger thereof being a bad runnagate to be executed by martiall law. And now the footemen within the mountaines, and himſelfe in the champaine, ſo hunted the Burkes and their accomplices from place to place, that within the ſpace of three weekes they began to be tame, and they had taken from them in that time the number of foure or fiue thouſand head of cattell, whereof ſir Richard Bingham reſerued towards the defraying of the extraordinarie charges of the iourney the number of one thouſand. All the reſt were beſtowed on the captaines and their companies, and the officers of the field as booties, according to the cuſtome in this country ſeruices, or elſe giuen to the kearne and light footemen as a conſideration of their entertainments, which thereupon were diſcharged and diſmiſſed from that ſeruice. Beſides the depriuing theſe rebels of their cattell, as aforeſaid, there were ſlaine of them about the number of fiue or ſixe ſcore of all ſorts. The reſt in ſhort time after pilfered themſelues, flying from caue to caue, and from one groue of wood to an other, where they might beſt hide themſelues, ſending in meſſengers to the gouernor to beſeech him of mercie and pardon, and offering to ſubmit themſelues with all humbleneſſe. Hereupon it was when they were thus broken, that the gouernor diſcharged the kearne he had, as aforeſaid, together with all Iriſh horſemen of ſeuerall parts of the prouince, contenting all of them, either with ſome portion of the praies and booties gotten, or elſe with his owne money, his owne horſemen and footemen, and the three bands of ſupplies aforeſaid he ſtaied from the ſeruice for a ſpace, as well to refreſh them, as alſo to giue time and leaue to the enemies to come in freely without feare, which otherwiſe would haue poſſeſſed them, had the forces beene ſtill vp and downe in the woods. This being done they ſubmitted themſelues one after an other in ſort following: Videlicet, Ewster M. Donnell chiefe of the Gallowglasses came in, submitted himselfe, & put in his sonne pledge for himselfe and his sept, the next Edmond Burke M. Richard Euerrine one of the strongest amongst them sonne to the last M. William saue one, came in and submitted himselfe, giuing in his sonne as pledge: after whom William Burke alias the Blind Abbot the chiefe of that surname, Edmond Burke of Castle Barry being dead, which clamed to be M. William, submitted himselfe very humbly, offering one of his sonnes as pledge. But (for that he Richard liked not the sonne that he offered, but demaunded his eldest sonne whom he knew to be a good pledge) he departed againe, yet within two dayes after, when he saw the gouernour would haue sent in his forces amongst them againe, he came to him, submitted himselfe, and brought his eldest sonne for a pledge: Moyler Oge Burke submitted himselfe. The lords did in like maner submit themselues, and also Riccard Burke alias the Diuels Hookes sonne, all these gaue in good pledges for the obseruation of the peace. These men vpon their submission were so pined away for want of foode, and so ghasted with feare within seuen or eight weekes, by reason they were so roundly followed, without any intermission of rest, that they looked rather like to ghosts then men. Edmond Burkes sonnes of castle Barry persisted still in the action. Their father was the man whom they sought to haue made M. William. till he was executed by course of the common law. This man was very old, yet was he put to death for these causes ensuing: he was a notable traitor, and the incouragor of his sonnes to this action, during whose life, both they, and he, had a hope he should be M. William. To the end therefore they should be carried away no longer with the deceitfull wings of this vaine hope, and so the sooner drawne to submission, he was indicted, arraigned, condemned and executed, as in like cases is accustomed. The gouernor might haue hanged him by martiall law, but rather made choice to haue it orderly done, as aforesaid, to the end her maiestie might haue his lands by escheat vpon his attainder (for he had a good quantitie of land.) After this the said sonnes of Edmond Burke (seeing their father, and in him all their hope dead) offered to submit themselues, so as they might haue enioyed their fathers lands. But herein the gouernor referred them to the resolution of the lord Deputie and councell to be further heard in that point, which they somewhat liked of, and then they offered the eldest brothers sonne as pledge: but the gouernor refused to take any child or other pledge, sauing one of those brethren, which were in number fiue or seauen: but that they vtterly denied to do: whereby it was well perceiued they caried very bad intentions. At this time, whilest these men stood thus vpon the pinch of submitting them, newes came to the gouernor, that 2000. Scots came ouer ý riuer of Karne toward Sligo with Edmond Kerragh Burke and Io. Iccleaue, who were sent by the Burkes their kinsmen, as you haue heard before, to draw in those Scots for ý better defence of their quarell, which Scots were promised by the Burkes that they should inhabite the countrey, so as they would banish out the Englishmen & defend the said traitors. These newes hindred a through pacification within the countie of Mayo: neuertheless this prouident & circumspect gouernor sir Richard Bingham, hauing already reduced and brought things there to so good a state, as before is said, dispatched the earle of Clanrickard with with thirtie or fortie horsemen, and two bands of footement, sending also presently after them another band of footemen, all which ioyned with George Bingham, esquier, brother to the said sir R. who was then shirife of the countie of Sligo, and leuied there some shot, and horsemen before the comming of the said forces. These companies being thus united, stood vpon gard and defence of the borders of the prouince, which caused the Scots not to make so much and so great hast to come forwards, as otherwise they would haue done. Sir Richard staied in the countie of Maio a small time after the sending away of his said companies, of purpose to order things there more effectually for the defence of the countrie, & for the prosecution of those few bad Burkes which yet continued in action against her Maiestie; which being done in such good sort as the danger and necessitie of that time could afford, he then set forwards towards Sligo, with a hundred footemen and fiue and twentie horsemen that were remaining with him: but vpon his setting forth, he had newes brought him, that the Scots were drawne through ORoweks countrie into the Mawghery or plaines by Roscomon to pray and spoile the same, by meanes whereof he rode a great daies iourney, and came that night neere to Roscomon, and lay that night foure miles from it, from whence (vnderstanding contrarie that the Scots were betweene Sligo and Boundrois) he rode the next day to the towne of Sligo, being well-nigh three score English miles, but the footemen he left to march away after him with as much conuenient speed as they might. His highway was to passe by the abbey of Boile, where he found sir Thomas Leitrange, and other the risings out of the countrie, whom he had appointed to lie there for the defence of the countie of Roscomon, he left them there for that time, and so came to Sligo the eight and twentieth of August. At his comming thither he was giuen to vnderstand that the Scotes lay still incamped at the Earne, some on the one side, and some on the other side, to the number of so many as he was before aduertised, with some increase of horsemen and footemen, for sir Arthure Oneale, and Hugh M. Gwyer had ayded them with some forces, so as their forces was now about 2000. as it was said, of able men, besides women, boyes and churles, whereof they had great store, I take it neere as many more, with great store of carriages. The comming of sir Richard so soone to Sligo, and the newes of the pacification within the countie of Maio, made them stay long about the Earne and Boundrois, either to expect more forces to come and ioyne with them, or some new broiles to be raised in the countrey behinde the gouernor by their confederates, which might cause him to deuide his forces, which were then foure hundred English and Irish, and about three score horsemen, besides the risings out of the countrey which were about a hundred horsemen and two hundred kearne: A force far too weake to haue encountred with the Scots, except they might haue bene gotten in a champaine ground. To which like place of disaduantage they had no intention to come, for of the 400. the Gouernor had 300. which were Irish, and for the most part men but newly trained. He wrote to the L. Deputie to send him 2. other bands of 50. horsemen, for that there was no trust in the Irish horsemen, which horsemen & footemen (if they had come sooner than they did) had either cleane discouraged or sufficiently withstood the Scots from comming into the prouince at all. Sir Richard lay at Sligo, & the foote foote of the Curlewes with his said forces fronting the Scots, and withstanding their entrie into the countrey (expecting still a supply from the lord Deputy) the space of fourteene daies: the Scots drawing on by little and little through O Rowrks countrey vpon mountaines, woods and bogs towards the Curlewes, with intention to passe that waies into Maio, encamped euer in such saltnesse as he could not by any meanes come at them, without great disaduantage. At the length although sir R. kept the passage straightly vpon them (for the watching of which he was driuen to diuide his companies into sundrie places far distant from each other) yet in an exceeding foule, tempestuous & darke night, they deceiued him, for after he had watched & waited for their comming till 10. of the clocke at night, hearing before night y they had remooued their campe, & were rather going backe againe then cõming towards him, he left to watch abroad any longer, & bestowed himselfe and his companies in places of succor, which he did, supposing that (by reason of the abundance of raine which fell that euening, their long absence till that time of the night, and the words of Occõnor Sligo, which assured him that the said Scots had incamped themselues againe for that night. But shortly after this, when the Scots, by reason of some espials of their owne, or some traiterous intelligence out of the gouernors camp, had vnderstanding that sir Richard and his companie had reposed themselues to rest, stale towards the bridge of Kiltowney, neare to which at a castell not far off sir Richard for the defence thereof had placed his footemen, and fiftie Irish horsemen, and so being come priuily to the bridge 3. or 4. hundred of them gate ouer the same before the English footemen came at them: who, as soone as they came in, beat the Scots backe and won the bridge. But here the Irish horsemen did no seruice at all: when the alarum was, sir Richard himselfe was at a place called Knocknulleyn about a mile from the bridge, being also an other passage, where it was thought the Scots would sooner haue passed ouer than at the bridge. At this place the bridge was the onely streight and passage that sir R. knew the Scots could find to passe ouer into the countrey by: but they contrarily waded ouer at a foord not far from the bridge, neuer before knowne by any of the countrey that had or would confesse the same to the English: sir Richard and the horsemen, vpon the alarum hasted with great speed to the bridge and rode ouer the same without danger both of the enemy and his owne companie (for the night was exceeding darke) and the bullets and arrowes flew to and fro, without regard of any man that might march or ride betwixt them, and hauing passed the bridge (although the ground were ill for horsemen to serue on) yet he charged the Scots, and killed and drowned about 40. or 50. of them. The most part of his horsemen here failed him, some, because they were far off, and the said Irish forces he remooued with his owne ordinary companies into the baronie of Tyzeragh, which he chiefly did, for to saue the pray of that countrey which was great: he left the great mountaines of Slowgany on the left hand, which were before on his right, and marched downe 8. miles into the said baronie, consisting of plaine ground with some bog in it of twenty miles in length, lying all along by the sea. In the same he came to a towne or village called Ardglasse, where he camped the second night, & hauing intelligence by espials that the enemy lay on y other side of the mountaines, not far frõ an Abbey called Banneda in in marueilous fast and strong ground, he toske with him good guides ship, he passed the sayd mountaines with his forces, and encamped that night at Oconron a towne of the bishop of O Hartes. At his being here he gaue it forth in policy, that the enemy was marching vp through Fallen toward the inner and ciuile countries, as the lord Bremingham's countrey, and the county of Roscomon. And thereupon he hasted by great dayes march to a castle called Moygary, which stood in a streight, and in a fit and apt place to answer the seruice vpon them, if they had passed into the sayd countries. Sir Richard did this, to draw the Scots into an assured beliefe of their owne security, to win such aduantage of ground of them, as afterwards was gotten, for vpon the newes of sir Richards returning backe, they grew somewhat careleſſe, and perſwaded themselues (as also they were informed) that he was returned home to Roscomon, and durst not by reason of his small forces encounter with them, as after shall appeare well. Lying at Moygary, the monday at three of the clocke afternoone, newes was brought him from his brother George Bingham, that an hundred footemen of maister vicepresident, vnder the conduct of lieutenant Hunt, had passed the Courlews, whereupon the gouernor dispatched messengers to them: whereupon they came vnto him the same night. The morrow after being tuesday, he remooued to a castle called castle Moze, in the barony of Costellogh 5. miles from Moygary, and a place as commodious to answer the seruice as the other was. Here came in to him 100. footemen of sir William Stanleis, vnder ỹ conduct of lieutenant Iaques, & 50. of sir George Bowchers footemen vnder the leading of lieutenant Day, with 25. horsemen of sir Henry Haringtons, & 15. of maister Wingfields. These men were brought in by captaine Gren Omoloy, whom he had sent forth for that purpose fiue of seuen dayes before. Lying here, sir Richard & his company were in some distresse for want of victuals, but he was supplied by captaine Woodhouse, who brought him some beeues out of the plaine and champion countries. At this place sir R. B. with his companies lay tuesday and wednesday till noone, for it was long before the beefe was killed and made ready to sustaine them. By that time the espials which were before sent forth to discouer the enemy, returned, bringing newes ỹ at their last remoue from Clamary, they tooke their way toward Irdnary, a castle neare to Tirawly, and standing on the riuer of Moine, thinking to passe that way into the barony of Tirawly. This being knowne, sir Richard dealt with his guide to bring him the nearest way he could thither. At 12. of the clocke at noone vpon wednesday aforesaid, he remooued frō castle Moze, & marched towards the abbey of Bauned, all vnder the high woods & mountaines, through a place called the Litter, in the barony of Costellogh, & came to the sayd abbey two houres within night. This abbey stands two miles from the woods in a plaine and open place: here the guide whose name was Edmond Mac Costellogh found out a priest which had that day broken from the Scots, with whom he had bene prisoner. The priest the sayd Edmond brought to the gouernour, of whom he learned most assuredly, that the Scots were all encamped at Irdnary, and had there proclaimed, that all the countrey was theirs, that sir Richard was returned to Roscomon, and that all his forces had forsaken him, and there fore whosoeuer would willingly come vnto them, should be friendly receiued to their fauour, and haue no hurt.

Sir

Sir Richard dealt with this priest to be his guide to bring him where the Scots were: but the priest durst not vndertake it, except a couple of horsemen of the O Haries which he named might be sent with him: the gouernor willed him to fetch those two gentlemen of the O Haries, which he did, and returned to him againe an houre after midnight. These two gentlemen sent away two espialles to discouer the Scots more certainely, and about three of the clocke in the morning when the moone gaue light, sir R. arose, and addressing himselfe and his company, marched towards Belcleare 4. miles from the Abbey in the highway towards the enemie: here one of the espials came in, bringing newes, that the Scots lay still incamped at Ardnary, which was 12. miles from the aforesaid Abbey of Baundea, and 8. miles from the Abbey of Belcleare. At his marching from hence the night forsooke him and his companie, and they forsooke the highway and marched ouer the mountaines both horsemen and footemen, with all their cariages, carying themselues in a hearce altogether, keeping the bottoms and low places by circumferent waies, with as great silence as was possible. This mountaine was in breadth 4. or 5. miles, which sir R. with his forces past about nine of the clocke. And after he had marched a mile into the hard ground, and were not aboue two miles from the enemie, he made alte to draw all his forces together, & there gaue order & direction for the fight. From whence himselfe with his horsemen rode towards the enemie, and left the footemen to come after, with a speedy march. Sir R. with his horsemē being now come within halfe a mile of the Scots camp, sent out halfe a dozen horsemen as scowts aforesaid to discouer them, & the maner of their camp, which horsemen came euen amongst their cabbins, & gaue them a sodaine & fearefull alarum, & so retired to sir R. who that time came to the top of the hill neare to them, where he might take view of all the ground betwixt him & the castle where the Scots lay. Now he sent away post after post for the battell, and the loose shot to come in to him, for the enemie was risen and arrayed in battell, and made head towards him in their greatest brauerie: sir Richard entertained them with skirmishing to winne time, and draw them vp higher to the hard ground till the footemen might come in, who approched with such silence that the Scots neuer suspected any such companies to be at hand: but when the shot began to approch them, sir Richard charged them roughly, and throughly with his horsemen, beate backe their loose wings to their battell, draue them to a little bogue, and killed many of them. After which he againe retired, and caused some of his shot on horse-backe to alight from their horses, and therewithall entertained them with a second charge, about which time his loose shot, and the whole battell of footemen came in, and then the footemen charged them in the forward, and himselfe with his horsemen in the flanke, in such sort, that they soone discomfited and ouerthrew their whole force, and draue them to the riuers side, where he and his companie slue and drowned them all sauing 80. or thereabouts, which stripped themselues, and by swimming ouer the riuer of Moine into Tirawly, saued themselues, leauing their weapons & apparell behind them. There were no more saued of all their forces, and of all sorts of them but these, and a 100. and od that went the day before into Tirawly for a pray with some of the Burkes. Scots killed in the county of Sligo by maister George Bingham esquire, and the gentlemen of the countrey.

in their returne and flying towards the north in the county of Sligo, by George Bingham esquire brother to the gouernour, being then chiefe of the county of Sligo, together with the helpe of the gentlemen of the countrey, diuerse also of them which were absent for this sayd pray whilest the battell was fought, and certaine of their horsemen, which were then also forraging abroad for horsemeate, were afterwards slaine in their returne and flying homewards, euen by some such as when they came first forwards and were strong, were their great friends. The number of fighting men slaine and drowned, as hath bene well knowne and tried out, were fourteene of fifteene hundred, besides horse and foote boyes, women, churles, and children were as many more, so as in the whole there died of them that day and the day after in their flying homewards, three thousand persons, and of the English companies were not slaine paid two persons, and those also through their owne folly in being too forwards for the spoyle, but many men and horses were hurt and galled. This day the chiefest leaders of them, Iames Mac Connels sons, viz. Donnel Gocum, & Alexander Carrogh were slaine, together with all the rest of their leaders, and the chiefest Burks which drew them into the prouince. In this seruice was imployed vnder sir R. Iohn Bingham captaine of 100. footemen, Nicholas Mordant captaine of the like number, captaine Merryman of the like company, William Mottean captaine of the like number, besides the lieutenants afore rehearsed sent from the lord Deputy, and certaine leaders of horsemen. And besides captaine Woodhouse, captaine Greene, which had no charge, and maister Newton, and captaine Beraghe, which had charge of some horsmen, the whole cõpany were in name about 600. footemen, and by poll about 500. besides 90. horsmen, whereof fifty were of the garrison of the prouince, and the other forty were sent by the lord Deputy. This ouerthrow was great, and the paines and policies thereon taken and vsed great, but the seruices in Mayo, the watching & trauels at the streights before the Scots came into the countrey was much more greater: but the wonderfull care and industry of sir Richard in those seruices, which continued out in it 13. or 14. weekes together, not once comming home to his house in that time, and faring hardly, and lying on the ground and on straw a great part of the sayd time was to be noted, and in him highly commended. Yea ouer and aboue all this, although he erected three seuerall companies of footemen, each of them consisting of a hundred men with their officers, and certaine horsemen which continued in pay during all the sayd time, besides fiue or six hundred kearne, which also had pay ouer and aboue her maiesties allowance, yet he so handled the matter, y with the goods of rebels, which by strong hand he got from them, and with 3. or 4. hundred pound of his mony, he defraied the extraordinary expences of the sayd seruices, not charging her maiesty with any one groate thereof, or any of the subiects of the countrey either for victuals or any other thing, other then some small matter, which the risings out brought, or which souldiers in comming to him or going from him eate, where they came for a night in a place: yea he charged himselfe in this case (that being scanted of powder from her maiesties store in Dublin) he was driuen to furnish himselfe thereof, for his ready mony in Galway. Lastly, this seruice was such as drowned and cut off all the old beaten Scots which vsed to haunt Ireland, insomuch that now (it is sayd) there are not forty such to such to beare vp head in all that realme of Ireland to the great behoofe and comfort of the same, to the great ease and benefite of her Maiestie, and to the eternall commendations of this worthie gentleman sir Richard Bingham for euer.

In the moneth of July diuerse trayterous persons were apprehended, and detected of a most wicked and detestable conspiracie against her Maiestie, and also of minding to haue stirred vp a generall rebellion throughout the whole realme: for ioy of whose apprehension, the citizens of London on the 15. of the same moneth at night, and on the next morrow caused the bels in the churches to be rung, and bonefires in their streets to be made, and also banquetted euery man according to his abilitie, some in their houses, some in the streetes with singing of Psalmes & praising God, for preseruing her Maiestie and people of this land, which doings of the citizens were so well accepted of her Maiestie, as by her letters to them directed may appeare, the copie whereof being read openly in a great assembly of the commons in the Guild hall of that citie the 22. of August, before the reading whereof, master Iames Dalton one of ỳ Counsellers of that citie, in the absence of ỳ Recorder, made this speech hereafter following. But first her Maiesties letters. Great reioycing for apprehending of traitors.

To our right trustie and welbeloued, the lord maior of our citie of London and his brethren the aldermen of the same.

Right trustie and welbeloued, we greet you well, being giuen to vnderstand how greatly our good and most louing subiects of that citie did reioyce at the apprehension of certaine diuellish and wicked minded subiects of ours, that through the great and singular goodnesse of God haue bene detected, to haue most wickedly and vnnaturally conspired, not onely the taking away of our owne life, but also to haue stirred vp (as much as in them lay) a generall rebellion throughout our whole realme: we could not but by our owne letters witnesse vnto you the great and singular contentment we receiued vpon the knowledge thereof, assuring you, that we did not so much reioyce at the escape of the intended attempt against our owne person, as to see the great ioy our most louing subiects tooke at the apprehension of the contriuers thereof, which to make their loue more apparant, they haue (as we are to our great comfort informed) omitted no outward shew that by any externall act might witnesse to the world the inward loue and dutifull affection they beare toward vs. And as we haue as great cause with all thankfulnesse to acknowledge Gods great goodnesse towards vs, through the infinite blessings he layeth vpon vs, as many as euer prince had, yea rather, as euer creature had: yet do we not for any worldly blessing receiued from his diuine maiesty so greatly acknowledge the same, as in that it hath pleased him to incline the harts of our subiects euen from the first beginning of our raigne, to carrie as great loue towards vs as euer subiects caried toward prince, which ought to moue vs (as it doth in very deede) to seeke with all care, and by all good meanes that appertaine to a Christian prince, the conseruation of so louing and dutifull affected subiects: assuring you that we desire no longer to liue, then while we may in ỳ whole course of our gouernment cary our selfe in such sort, as may not only nourish and continue their loue and good will towards vs, but also increase ỳ same: we thinke meete, that these our letters should be communicated in some generall assembly to our most louing subiects the commoners of that city. By the Queene to the Lord Maior of London, her letters.

Right worshipfull, my good countrie men and citizens of this most noble citie of London: since the late bruite and report of a most wicked and traiterous conspiracie, not onely to take away the life of our most gracious Soueraigne, (whome God graunt long to liue and raigne ouer vs) but also to stirre vp a generall rebellion throughout the whole realme: the great and vniuersall ioy of you all of this citie, vpon the apprehension of diuerse of that most wicked conspiracie, of late declared and testified by many outward acts and shewes, hath wrought in the Queenes most excellent maiestie such a gracious contentment, that it hath mooued her Highnesse by her letters signed with her owne hand, to signifie vnto my lord maior of this citie and his brethren, her most noble and princely acceptation thereof, and that in such sort as thereby may appeare, that her Highnesse hath not more, no not so much reioyced at the most happie escape of the wicked mischiefe intended against her owne person, as at the ioy which her louing subiects, and namely you of this citie of London tooke at the apprehension of the practisers of that intended treason. By occasion whereof her highnesse brought to a thankfull remembrance and acknowledging of Gods infinite blessings bestowed on her, comparable with any prince or creature in the world, no worldly thing more or like accounteth of, then of the heartie loue of her louing and faithfull subiects many waies and many times before now, but especially by this our great ioy in this sort at this time, and vpon this occasion shewed.

And that her exceeding great loue and acceptation of our reioycing may the more appeare vnto you, it hath pleased her Highnesse in the same letters to declare, that she desireth not longer to liue among vs, then she shall maintaine, continue, nourish and increase the loue and good will of her subiects towards her. And this her Highnesse hath willed to be made knowne vnto you all, with this, that she will not faile with all care, and by all good meanes that appertaine to a Christian prince, to seeke the conseruation of you all so louing and dutifully affected subiects. This her maiesties pleasure in part now declared, and more to be made knowne to you by her owne letters, which you shall heare read: my lord maior and his brethren haue required me to declare vnto you all, that they do highly reioyce and thanke God for the happie day of the good acceptation of this your great ioy, and my lord himselfe hath willed me to giue you all heartie thankes in his name, for that in the time of his seruice your dutifull behauiours haue gotten to the citie so noble and worthie a testimonie of dutie and loyaltie of so noble and worthie a Queene. Now for as much as Gods blessings wonderfully abound, and one ioy comes vpon another, let vs not be vnthankfull to God, but acknowledge his goodnesse, and attribute the same (as indeede we ought) to the sincere religion of Almightie God, most godly established by the Queenes most excellent Maiestie, which hath taught vs to know God aright, our dutie to our Soueraigne, and to loue our countrie, and hath made vs dutifull and obedient subiects, reioycing at all good things happening to her Maiestie, her realme, or to any in her noble seruice, the true effects of a true and good religion: whereas the contemners thereof, and immoderate affecters of the Romish religion, and superstitions, tions, being voide of the true knowledge of God, haue declined from God, their allegeance to their prince, their loue to their countrie, and haue become inuentors of mischiefes, deuisers and spreaders abrode of false and seditious rumours, such as ioy at no good thing, but contrariwise reioyce at euery euill successe, the badges and markes of their profession, who haue before this, in this realme and in other her highnesse dominions, stirred vp rebellion, forraine inuasion, and many times practised the very death and destruction of the Queene her selfe, the ruine and subuersion of the whole realme, the proper effects of their Romish religion. We haue beheld all these things, and seene in our daies the ruine and mischiefes inuented against others, fall vpon the inuentours themselues: and haue knowne the wicked and violent hands of diuerse of them, diuellishly to kill and murther themselues, when most trayterously they would, and most happily they could not slay the Lords annointed. As we haue knowne all these things, so God be thanked, that by a better religion, hauing bene better taught, we haue bene no partakers of their wicked deuises, but haue put to our helping hands as occasion hath serued, and euer readie to ouerthrow the authours and deuisers thereof. And I haue no doubt, but we of this noble citie, who hitherto haue bene alwaies readie dutifully and faithfully to serue her Maiestie vpon all occasions (her Highnesse now so graciously accepting onely of our reioycing at the apprehension of her enemies, euen the least part of the dutie of a good subiect to so good a Queene) will be readie euery one with all that he can make, and with the vttermost aduenture of all our liues, speedily to be reuenged vpon all such as shall diuellishly and traiterously attempt or put in vre any mischiefe to her noble person, and in the meane time will haue a better eye and care to all suspitious and miscontented persons, to their sayings and doings, to their false bruits and reports, to the places and corners of their haunt and resort, to their harborers, companions, aiders and maintainers.

God vphold and continue his religion among vs, and increase our zeale therein, which hath made vs so louing and loyall, and so beloued and acceptable subiects to so worthie a prince, and roote out that wicked and Romish religion, that hath made so many disloyall and trayterous subiects: to whom is both odious and irksome the long life and prosperous raigne of our most noble Queene Elizabeth. God confound all such traitors, and preserue her Highnesse long to liue and raigne ouer vs.

The 7. of September, certaine of these diuellish and wicked subiects were indicted: first, for intending treason against the Queenes owne person: secondly, for stirring ciuill wars within the realme: and thirdly, for practising to bring in forraine power to inuade the realme: seuen of them appeared at Westminster on the 13. of September, who all pleaded guiltie and were condemned, but had iudgement on the next morrow. On the 15. of September, other seuen were likewise arraigned, who pleading not guiltie, were found guiltie by ỹ Jury, & had iudgmẽt. Traitors indicted.

These traytors 14. in number, were executed in Lincolnes Inne fields on a stage or scaffold of timber strongly made for that purpose, euen in the place where they had vsed to meete and to confer of their trayterous practises, there were they hanged, bowelled, and quartered, seuen of them on the 20. of September, to wit, Traitors executed.

The Royall Merchant and other foure ships of London their victory against 13. gallies of Castile and Malta.

The merchants of London being of the corporation for the Turkie trade, intending onely a merchants voyage, prouided and furnished with all things belonging to the seas, fiue tall and stout ships appertaining to London, to wit, ỳ Merchant Royall, the Tobie, the Edward Bonauenture, the Willam and Iohn, the Susan: these fiue departing from the coast of England in the moneth of November, 1585. kept together as one fleete, till they came as high as the isle of Sicilie within the Leuant, where each ship tooke leaue of the rest, and separated themselues to particular ports, whereunto they were bound, one for Tripolis in Syria, and other for Constantinople, and the rest to other places: but before they deuided themselues they agreed, after the lading of their goods at their seuerall ports, to meete at Zante an yland neare to the maine continent of the west part of Morea. These accordingly (their businesse first performed) failed not to keepe promise, and arriued at Zante within the compasse of the time afore limited, here they staid in this port till the necessities of each ship were supplied, and nothing wanted to set out for their returne. In this port the newes was fresh of two seuerall armies and fleetes lying in await to intercept them, the one consisting of thirtie strong gallies, and that fleete houered about ỳ straits of Gibraltare. The other army had in it twentie gallies, whereof some were of Sicily, and some of the ysland of Malta, vnder the charge of Iohn Andreas Dorea a captaine seruing ỳ king of Spaine. The Merchant Royall was appointed admirall of the English fleete, & the Tobie vice-admirall, by whose orders the rest promised to be directed, and each ship vowed not to breake from the other. Thus in good order they left Zante, & committed themselues to the seas, and proceeded in their course without sight of any enemy, till they came neare to Pantalarea an ysland betweene Sicilie and ỳ coast of Affrike, into the sight whereof they came the 13. of July, and the same day they descried thirteene sailes, 11. gallies, and two frigots lying in waite for them. As soone as the English ships had espied them, they made themselues readie to fight, the gallies more and more approched them, and in their banners the armes of Sicilia & Malta: they sent their frigots to our admirall, demaunding of him whence they were: who answered, of England: they asked why they delayed to send or come to Don Pedro de Luna their Generall, to acknowledge their dutie to him in the name of the Spanish king lord of those seas: our men replyed, ỳ they ought no such dutie to him, nor would acknowledge any, &c. Whereupon in the end the fight began betweene them, and continued very hote for the space of fiue houres, what slaughter was made among the Spaniards the English men were vncertaine: but they supposed the same to be so great, ỳ they wanted men to continue ỳ charging of their peeces: whereupon with shame they withdrew themselues, and the Englishmen contented in respect of their deepe lading, rather to continue their voyage then to follow the chase, ceassed from further blowes, with the losse onely of two men slaine and one other hurt in the arme, whom maister Edward Wilkenson captaine of the admirall, with his good word did so comfort, that he nothing esteemed the smart of his wound in respect of the honour of such a victorie, and shamefull repulse of the enemie. The English ships proceeded in their navigation as high as Algier, a port towne vpon the coast of Barbarie, where they refreshed themselues, and tooke such supplie of fresh water and victuals as they needed, and put to the sea looking to meete with the second armie of the Spanish king, which waited for them about the mouth of the streight of Gibraltare, which they were of necessitie to passe: but comming neare to the said streight, it pleased God to raise a very darke fog, so that one ship could not discerne another, by meanes whereof, together with the faire easterne winde that then blew, they passed with great speede through the streight: but yet the Spanish gallies had a sight of them when they were come within three English miles of the towne, & made after them in all hast possible, but in vaine: they shot off their ordinance in the sea, as if they had bene in the midst of them. But thus it pleased God to deride and delude all the forces that the king of Spaine had prouided to distresse the English, who notwithstanding passed through both his armies: in the one little hurt, and in the other nothing touched, and arriued at Erith the 18. of September, in the yeare of our lord, 1586.

Now to returne to the seruice in the Low countries done by his Excellencie & other vnder his charge, after the yeelding of the strong fort of Nemegan, which was on the 20. of May, as ye haue heard before: it followeth, that on the 21. of May, his Excellency returned to Arnam, and there soiourned. On the 22. of May, there passed towards Barrikes hooke 11. or 12. hundred men most bravely furnished of our English natiõ. The 25. of May, was brought before Barrikes hooke sconce two canons, which shot at the sconce that day, & on the next morrow in the morning was the same sconce yeelded to his Excellencie, the soldiers putting themselues to his mercie, who pardoned them, & let them passe with life onely. In this sconce were found aliue about 60. persons, the rest were slaine in the siege. At the yeelding of this sconce coũty Hollocke found one of his colins, which when he beheld, he said, Ha villaine, art thou become a traitor to thy country & his excellencie? I auouch, ỳ thou art none of my blood, & with his rapier thrust him in & slue him.

Berke hooke woon.

County Hollocke.

The 24. day of May, the enemy played before Graue with their ordinance, and presently assailed it, but they of the towne being led by the county Embrigh did repulse them so sufficiently, that the enemy lost neare a thousand men.

An ouerthrow giuen to the enemie at Graue.

On Whitsunday, Peregrine Bartie, lord Willoughby of Eresbie lying at Berganaplome, vnderstanding of a great conuoy that was comming to Antwerpe, set vpon it, and tooke it, there were of wagons 480. laden with victuals, oyle, salt, and wine taken, which had to draw those wagons a thousand mares and horses, there were 200. men slaine by our horsemen and footemen, and 400. taken prisoners that were sent with the conuoy to haue the defence therof. The Lord Willoughby tooke a threescore wagons into his towne of Berganaplome, and burned the rest, and for the salt, oile, and wine, he brake vp the heads of the vessels, and let them be spoyled.

Lord Willoughby tooke a conuoy at Antwerp.

Bariks hoofe sconce ouerthrowne.

The 30. of May, sir Iohn Norris was sent to take order for the ouerthrowing of Bariks-hoofe sconce, which was done, for that it was thought not meete to be kept with men, his Excellency hauing the sconce at Nemegan that kept the riuer of Wall, and the sconce made by Skinke at Thelhouse kept both the riuer of Wall and the Reine, for that this sconce standeth at the entrance of these two great riuers: And for that his Excellency had Arnam sconce at the ioyning together of Ilell, Reyne, and Dowborough riuers. In this meane time, to wit, on the 26 of May, the enemy spared no kind of shot to annoy the towne of Graue, but thundered with canons at it as it had bene musket or caliuer. He had at it 8. canons, 20. smaller peeces, as culuerings and demy canons, &c. The Graue of Embrickeleeing the assault to be so hot, and fearing the euent (although he had written to his Excellency that he should not care for Graue, but go about his other businesse) on the 27. of May entred parley with the enemy, and presently let in his souldiers, which seeing certaine English men and others more faithfull then the rest, straight tooke a place of strength, and kept without victuals three dayes in despite of the enemies, and after seeing no way to be releeued, they departed by composition. And thus was the strong towne of Graue lost by the county Embrough, who after came to Huldon, sent for foure of the burgers of the towne, for what purpose was not knowne, but thought to perswade them to betray the towne, but 3. of them returned, the fourth not found, but thought to be with ý prince of Parma. As for the county Embrough as he was walking with 3. or 4. other captaines of Graue, he was with 4. other captaines surprised by some of our side, & brought to his Excellency on the 2. of June to Brunkhurst, & were committed to prison.

Graue lost to the enemy.

His Excellēcy remoueth from Armew to Nemegan.

The last of May, his Excellency with his whole companies of souldiers and gentlemen passed from Armew to the campe before Nemegan, where his pauilion was pitched, and presently he sent a 2000. men toward Tille, to keepe the water from the enemies passage.

Tille and the Amon therof, his strāge dealings with messengers.

The fourth of June, his Excellency first hauing sent Skinke and captain Williams, with diuers other corpnets of horse and gentlemen, towards Vendolo (for that the prince of Parma had begun to besiege it) came from the legar at Nemegan to Tille where he rested that night. The gouernour of Tille, called the Amon being a man of great courage, and a protestant; vsed the prince of Parma in this sort, the prince sending a trumpeter to parley with him, he straight wayes without any talke hanged him vp. The prince wondering he heard not of his trumpeter, sent a drumme to know what was become of him, vnto whom the Amon answered, your trumpeter is hanged, and thou shalt be drowned, & so it was done without any more words. This towne is situate in the Betto, whose ground is the most fertile or onely place of fertility in Guelderland. The towne is strong, the one side the Amon may at his pleasure drowne, the other is so strong with rampires, wals, and forters, that the Amon protesteth that he regardeth no prince or princes power in the world. He hath halfe a score ships of war at his appointment, whereby he commandeth all the waters about him, he hath alwayes shewed a singular loue to our nation, especially to his Excellency, insomuch that he vowed to keepe the towne to his vse, so long as he liued.

The first of June, his Excellency passed from Tille to Bomell, there was the castle castle of the Warneborough, and for that he tooke part with the prince of Parma, his house was brent and spoyled. The beauty of the towne of Bomell is in two streetes, crossing one the other, very large and faire, at the crossing of which streete, there is a very faire market place, the towne is strong though little, and sufficiently appointed with ordinance and munition. It standeth in an Iland very fertile and sweete, having such store of orchards, gardens, and other pleasures, as it passeth all others: on the top of the steeple of the church in this towne, the country lieth so plaine about it, that one may see all these townes following, Nemegan, Waganing, Arnam, Reyne, Weicke, Colinborough, Utrike, Uiana, Gurcom, Huldon, Fatinghamballe, Graue, Tille, Haozle castle, and Baryll castle. The towne of Bomell. Warneborow castle spoyled.

The 9. of June, his Excellency came from Bomell to Garcome downe the riuer Walle, leauing at Bomell a garrison of three hundred Dutchmen, with those of the towne, who at the first could hardly brooke the garrison, till they were perswaded by county Hollocke passing toward the towne. There was sire or seuen ensignes of his Excellencies souldiers on the banke of the riuer, which did discharge braue volies of shot, then was there on each side the riuer a mightie sconce full of souldiers, which gaue their volies of shot, then the ordinance of the towne went off: and entring the towne, he was entertained by the Burgesses, and passing through the towne, on both sides were placed souldiers in great number. On the next morrow his Excellency went into the castle of the towne, which is maruellous strong. This towne is very rich, for there are many rich marchants, which passe to all parts of the world vsuall. The riuer Walle runneth through the midst of this towne, and the riuers of Reine and Maze on each side. The towne is very strong, for that round about the countrey may be drowned. His Excellency with his whole traine were here maruellously welcommed, and well vsed, for victuall, lodging, &c. There is by this towne, another towne of great force, called Worcome, by the castle of Lusten, this Worcome is in greatnesse but a village, but in situation and strength, a thing of great importance: it standeth in the same Iland that Lalon standeth in. It is Graue Maurice his towne, and kept his garrison of souldiers. Garcome. Worcome.

The 10. of June, a post came to his Excellency, from coronell Skinke and captaine Williams, with letters: the effect whereof were, that the sayd sir Martin Skinke, and captaine Williams, staying not farre from Uenlo (which the duke as then besieged) and longing to shew the zeale they had to the seruice of her maiesty of England, set out with their horsemen in the night, all the Dutch men for the most part forsaking them, so that with him was not aboue 160. horses, with these he set forward, killed the still watch, & passing farther killed also two courts of gard fully appointed, and entring by force the quarter that the prince of Parma was in, they killed a number of noblemen and gentlemen: but in the returne the enemy well appointed set on our men, and scattered them, to some losse, but the greater sort escaped: the skirmish being ended, and our men retiring, Captaine Williams was one of the hindmost of them all, and he cried (being yet in the enemies campe) where is Williams, where is Williams, and another answered, before, before, and thus he escaped.

The 13. of June, his Excellency went to Dort with a small traine, where being come about fiue of the clocke in the afternoone, the Burgers made him such great cheere, as was thought to haue bene vnpossible for so short a time of prouision. The 14. he tooke ship towards Vtrike from Dort, being waited with an hoye full of souldiers of the towne.

Venlo lost to the enemy.

The 22. of June, the enemy attained Venlo, a towne of great importance and strength: there was in this towne, not only the wife of Skinke, and his children, but also the treasure, horse, and (for the most part) the furniture that Skinke had, this towne had in it of souldiers, to the number of fiue or sixe hundred, all of Skinks men well appointed and braue souldiers.

The 23. of June, his Excellencie passed to Colinborough about nine english miles from Vtrike, only to visite the Graue of Colingborough, where hee dined, viewed the towne, and returned to Vtrike, taking with him the saide Earle of Colingborough.

The 29. of June his Excellēcie passed from Vtrike to Dort. The 30. of June, he remooued from Dort, to Williams slate or Ragon hill. The same day County Hollocke ouerthrew a cornet of horse belonging to Breda, with the helpe of Walter Robert Sidneyes cornet, sir Philip Sidneyes cornet and other. The said County Hollocke practised to haue a conuoy passe from out of Brabant, to Berganaplome, which ỹ enimie being warned of by spies, that this conuoy was guarded but with some sixteene or twenty horse, the gouernour of Breda sent out his cornet or strength of horsemē to this exploit: but some few of them, being either afraide to meddle with our men, or doubting the true occasion that happened, staied behind the rest. Captaine Welch an english man, which a great time had serued ỹ enemy, had ỹ leading of ỹ horse at Breda, but passing to this exploite, county Hollocke with maister Robert Sidney beset them round, which the enemy no sooner perceiued, but yeelded, so there was taken captaine Welch and a thirty horse, & as many men. The 31. of June his excellency early in the morning passed from Williams slate to Berganaplome, & about three of the clocke in the afternoone he arriued there, and presently passed to the strong castle of old Wlaw: this towne is in the entrance of Brabant, 20. english miles from Antwerpe, vpon the same riuer that Antwerpe standeth. It is a towne now almost ruinated, though before in the prosperity of it, it was not much inferior to Antwerpe, there are few people but souldiers, the Burgers forsaking their goodly builded houses, are gone to other places. This towne is subiect in two places to hils of firme ground, which are the places that make this towne far weaker then otherwise it would be, yet wonderfully tāpered with bulwarks, wals, and flankers in all places. The L. Willoughby hath wonderfully enlarged the strength of this towne: further he hath made two very strong bulwarks in two places of the towne, at the hauen of the towne, and from the towne a flight shot or more, are 2 mighty sconces, which stand by the riuer side, which indeed are of more strength then the towne, & they are to command the towne: a 2. english miles from the towne standeth a ruinated towne in an Iland, & by this riuer, whose situation is such, as for strength it mought be made a braue place, for aire & otherwise, this towne is called Romars ward, against the which standeth a strong sconce, and so along the riuer to the towne standeth diuerse the

like,

like, to command the riuer and passage to the towne: the castle before named, that his Excellency went to view, at his arriuall at this towne, is also such as no reasonable force can win, alwayes once a yeare victualed and manned afresh, this castle regardeth not the canon shot, it is so rampered. The 1. of July, his Excellency passed from Berganaplome to Surickzea, a towne in Zeland, and in an Iland so called. In this Iland also is another towne called Brewers hauen, a very strong towne, this Iland is most fertile. The 2. of July his Excellency passed to Dort. And the same day passed from Berganaplome 3000. men (that were there newly arriued) to Stenbergē, a towne greatly noyous to the garrison of Berganaplome, for when they passed into Brabant vpon any exploite, they were letted by the souldiers of this towne: this iourney was so closely kept, that our men shot at the wals of Stenbergen ere any of that towne knew for what cause so great a number of men were gathered. Surickzea. Stenbergen.

The 3. of July, there entred into Flaunders, the Graue Maurice, the prince of Orenges sonne, and sir Philip Sidney, lord gouernour of Flushing, with other, to the number of foure thousand footemen, and three thousand horsemen. The fourth of July, Graue Maurice tooke on him to cut the bankes of the sea, to drowne the land of Walte, hauing with him two thousand men, the rest of the army passed with sir Philip Sidney into Flaunders, and surprised the towne of Axell, there were slaine of souldiers of that towne three hundred, besides the Bourgers that made resistance, which were likewise slaine. This done, they came to Dorpe, or Drope, a towne of great importance, this they entred and tooke in it fiue hundred boores, which were kept to do seruice, and to be ransomed. Graue Maurice with his two thousand men so plied the bankes, that in short time he had made it sufficient for the water, not onely to enter, but to drowne all the country, but the wind stood so contrary, that no water to the purpose entred at that time, onely the bankes lay open. In the meane time our men tooke fiue sconces, and put all to the sword that they found in them, and this was their entrance into Flaunders. The towne of Axell is not farre from Antwerpe, and about the same distance from Gaunt, and not fiue english miles from either; the land of Walte wherein this towne standeth, is the onely paradice of those lands, and most fertile place of all other. The eight of July, Graue Maurice returned to Middleborough, leauing all occasions to sir Philip Sidney gouernour of Flushing. The tenth of July, coronell Yorke brought to his Excellency to Dunbage, fiue enlignes of the enemies, all which were taken from the enemy in the towne of Axell, and the sconces. Sir Philip Sidney entred Flaunders. Axell surprised by the English. Drope. Fiue sconces taken by the English.

In this meane time, to wit, on the ninth of July was Paulus Buce a great state and a politike man taken at Vtrike and put in prison, and very shortly after was taken another named Peter Fullistine, and likewise committed to prison. The 14. of July, his Excellency commanded the gates of Vtrike to be enclosed, and all the bridges to be drawne, all the men both English and Dutch souldiers to be in armes, and further proclaimed that all men that loued the queene of England, should presently be armed to the vttermost, which being done, the English souldiers were placed on the wals, with commandement, that no Burger whatsoeuer should come thereon, but presently they should take from them their vpper Vtrike in armes by commandement of his Excellency.

garments, which if they refused, they should be straight slaine. Also a straight search was made in the Towne for suspitious persons, and there were taken three which were committed to prison. The cause of this stir was this, it was reported, that there were come into the towne 500. of the enemies, in boores apparell to betray the towne, but it was not so.

About this time, sir Philip Sidneys cornet at Houdon, and certaine Dutch cornets, to the number of a hundred horse or more, with a two companies of footemen, entred into Brabant, taking booties, and spoyling the countrey, which being knowne to the enemies, they sought to intrap our men, and with a three hundred horse, and certaine companies of footemen, they set vpon our horse, put them to retreit, and pursued them far: but our men, by swimming, and goodnesse of their horses, escaped for the most part, onely a cornet of Dutch & one other officer of them were slaine, our footemen brought their bootie into such streights and fens, that the enimies could not indomage them, so that they brought their booties safe to Hudon.

The 15. of July, sir Philip Sidney, Lord governor of Flushing, the Lord Willoughby, with those powers they had received from the garison of Arel, considering the comming in of the water into the land of Waske, which might sufficiently defend that countrie, remooued the campe. The lord Willoughby to Berganaplome, where he was governor, sir Philip Sidney passed the sea with a three thousand men: whose enterprise shall be shewed hereafter. This sir Philip Sidney, at or before the taking of Arel within an English mile of the Towne, called so many of his souldiers together as could heare him, and there made a long Oration, wherein he declared what cause they had in hand, as Gods cause, vnder, and for whom they fought, for her Maiestie; whom they knew so well to be so good vnto them, that he needed not to shew, against whom they fought, men of false religion, enemies to God and his Church: against Antichrist, and against a people whose vnkindnesse both in nature and in life did so excell, that God would not leaue them vnpunished: further, he perswaded them that they were Englishmen, whose valour the world feared and commended, and that now they should not, either feare death or perill whatsoeuer, both for that their seruice, they ought to their Prince, and further, for the honor of their Countrey, and credite to themselues. Againe, the people whom they fought for were their neighbors, alwaies friends, and wel-willers to Englishmen. And further, that no man should do any seruice worth the noting, but he himselfe would speake to the vttermost to preser him to his wished purpose. Which oration of his did so linke the minds of the people, that they desired rather to dye in that seruice, then to liue in the contrary.

Sir Philip Sidney his oration.

The 14. of July, sir William Pellam, lord marshall of the field, came to Dunhage. The 16. of July, his Excellency remooued from Dunhage to Brill, in which passage he tooke to crosse the water at the dorpe of Sluce so called, being passed the water, he entred the land betweene two sconces, a quarter of a mile or more from the towne, where he was entertained with all the sconces shot both of great ordinance and smaller shot, passing by land he came to the towne, where the gouernour sir Thomas Cisell entertained him both with cheare and otherwise, most honorably.

Brill.

honorably. This towne is on the mouth of Maze, where the water is in breadth foure miles English. The Iland of Bull is great, more than twentie miles ouer, in it are Dorps not so well built as rich. On the 19. his Excellencie returned from the Bull to Dunhage.

In this meane space, to wit, on the 16. of July, the enemy entred Neuce, after a long assault, in which assault, he lost three thousand men. This Towne of Neuce was foorthwith burned downe to the ground by the lackies and boyes belonging to our soldiers, there remained whole but eight houses. Nuce burned by the English boyes.

The 23. of July, his Excellency made a banket to diuers great personages of those Countries, as the lady Bredo, lady of Uiana, the Palsgraues wife, the county Egmounts daughters, the prince of Orenges daughter, with a number more. In which banquet wanted not what might be had to augment their cheere, either in musicke, dauncing, fire workes or otherwise.

The 22. of July, the garison of Sutfin issued out, to the number of neare two hundred, and came to Arnam, tooke some cattell and other things, and returned, whereupon master Anthony Sherley came to captain Wilson gouernor of Arnam, and required that he and his company might issue out and reuenge this iniurie, which at length was granted: then master Sherley chose out to the number of fourescore footemen, and 20. horsemen, and sent them out, which the enimie seeing, to intice our men forward, set the booty not far from Sutfin, on a hill, and laide a fourescore of their men in an ambush, betweene Arnam and the bootie, the twenty horsemen came to them, which they let passe in a streight, but no sooner past but they discharged on them and seeing no more thought to slaie or take them all but no sooner had they charged the horse, but maister Sherley charging them behinde, the horsemen returned, and so what on the one side, and on the other, they slue of them the number of 80. & tooke 13. prisoners, which with the bootie, they brought againe to Arnam, hauing lost but one man, and two men hurt. Of Sutfin.

About this time, maister Butlers cornet, lying at Deuentrie, issued out and tooke from Suthfield or Sutfin, of cattell to the number of foure hundred Cowes, and fifteene Mares of great price, in this maner. Those of Suthfield had by the riuer side a great marish, all so ditched in, that no horse could passe ouer by any possible meanes: but they of Deuentrie and Campyn consulting together, did one night at a lowe water passe into the marish ouer by the side of the Towne, and brought without losse of any man of our part, foure hundreth and odde Beastes, and fifteene Mares, most of them sold for fiue pound a Mare, amongst the souldiers. This exploit with others did greatly pinch those of Suthfield, for that the milke of those beastes were to them a great relicke.

The 26. of July, maister Robert Sidneis cornet, lying at Gertrenberge passed with some of county Hollockes horse, to the number of an hundred, and passed on purpose onely towards Breda, but being within sight thereof, they espied a number of cattell issuing foorth of the Towne (for feare of our garrisons in those parts) vp towards high Brabant, hauing to conuey them some 300. shot, and a 10. or 12. lances, our men seeing so fit a bootie vnlooked of their part, charged and put to slight the shot and horse, cut betweene the Towne and the cattell, Robert Sidney tooke a bootie.

and tooke from them fiue hundred oxen, seauen hundred sheepe, & threescore mares, and some boares, all which they caried to Gertenberge, to the great reliefe of the souldiers there.

Mountford. The second of August his Excellencie passed from the Hage to Utrike, he dined at Tergowe, from thence he came by Oden water, & from thence to Mountford, a strong towne, at night he came to Utrike, where by the Lord North he was receiued with great store of shot.

Mewes yeelded to the enemie. In this meane time, to wit, on the 29 of July, the enemy lying part before Berke, the residue came before Mewes, which towne was no sooner summoned, then it yeelded to the enimie, and on the next day they tooke a little Towne called Alpyn, both these townes belonged to the Erawe Maurice.

The second of August, the enemy hauing passed by Berke as before, diuers of his company were cut off as straglers, and further a great sort of horse, the men that were taken were hanged: amongst whom a yoong lad which was taken, confessed to Skinke that as the prince passed by Berke, on a hill made this speech, My souldiers (quoth he) you may see here this Towne, neither great nor strong, but so manned, that assure your selues you shall receiue blowes inough, and no wealth, wherefore we may now passe with no dishonor, but if we stay here long, it will be dishonor to passe away, therefore say what you minde to do, and presently they were all contented to depart, and so they passed from the Towne. Berke. The third of August, the prince seeing he could not passe any thing by water, but Berke letted it, besides he had a conuoy of venison, wine, &c. which was by them of Berke taken away with fiftie men that had the conducting thereof, the prince noting that the principall men that annoyed him, were there where the prince saw the Towne weake, he returned to it againe: for Skinke had no sooner taken the fiftie men, and others, but asking them whose men they were, and they answering the princes, they were straight waies hanged, which doings of Skinkes caused the prince to returne his army to Berke, on the said third of August, on which day he passed with three cornets of horse from Alpyn where his munition lay, to Dyson, a Towne of the Duke of Cleues, a small league from Berke, and came with certaine to viewe the Towne of Berke, which Skinke perceiuing, streight issued out of the Towne with certaine horse and foote, and charged the prince which had three cornets of horse, and fiue hundred footemen, yet Skinke put him to the retraite to Alpine to his quarter there.

The fourth day he came with his maine battell, and passed on the south side of the Towne, though often times he were charged, and lost many of his men, yet he abode there.

The Lord Marshall and other entred Brabant. On the third of August, the Lord Marshall, the Generall of the horse, &c. with some thousand horse and footemen passed in the night farre into Brabant, and came early in the morning to the great Dorpe Olell Stiluoringbenke, set it on fire, and burned it to the ground: There was with the Lord Marshall two hundred Kernes, who shewed their courages, for none were so ready to burne, nor so readie to kill all that came in their danger, so that fewe escaped them. Comming further they came to a Dorpe more like a good Towne, not farre from Sattingam busse, wherein is a castle, and a strong sconce, but the wild Irish kernes, neither fearing shot nor threat, ranne vp the sides of the sconce, tooke it presently, and put to the sword all in it, and tooke the prouision to themselues. Those of the towne had crossed the way with trees in such sort, as the horsmen could not passe to the towne but with great labour, but the Irish entred the Towne onely, and burned it to the ground, sauing none that came to their hands, so our men returned to Gertenberge, not looking foure of their Irish men.

The fift of August, his Excellency passed from Utrike to Tergowe, where he stayed till the seuenth, being honorably entertained: this towne is very strong, situate so, that all the countrey round about may speedily be drowned. About this towne is the greatest nurseries of fruite that men there present had euer seene, and by them thought sufficient to serue many countries, with trees of all sorts, but peares especially. The ground about Tergowe of a 14. score broad, is nought else but the most braue trees that can be seene. This towne hath the most faire market place that hath bene seene of many, in the midst whereof standeth a faire Stats house, in the which his Excellency did eate and was lodged. The 7. of August, his Excellency passed from Tergowe to Utrike, by the which he must passe through Doonwaters, by the Burgers of which towne, he was honorably receiued, all the towne throughout ouer head was hanged with garlands of flowers for his welcome. The 19. he passed from Utrike to Reyne, and there stayed all night. The next day he passed to Arnam. About this time a ship was sent from the bishop of Cullen to the prince, laden with canon shot, and powder, the maister of which ship, either misliking the bishop, the prince, or their religion, so soone as he came where he might well recouer Bercke, where Skinke and his force lay, he by one meanes or other, so opened the ship that the water entred, so that he and the rest were forced by that meanes to retire to Bercke. In this ship was a commissary of good accompt with the Prince, whom the maister of this ship did conuey to Skinke, who was no sooner come, but Skinke entred iudgement with him, and he desiring to be vsed like a gentleman, Skinke answered he should be hanged with his face toward the enemies campe, for, sayth he, I know you desire to see your friends, and so it was done. This losse of prouision made the prince want of his will, for battery of the towne, onely planting fiue canons in two places. Further, at the same time, there came newes to his Excellency, that the horse and footmen of Gelder had often put the enemy to losse, and had taken 150. horses from them, besides a number of them slaine.

Tergowe.

A ship sent to the prince but came to Skinke.

Sir Martin Skinke hanged a commissary.

The 17. of August, sir Iohn Norris passed ouer Issell by Arnam sconce (a bridge of boates being there made) with some 3000. english footmen, and 6. or 7. hundred horse. And about the same time, the prince remooued some part from Bercke to Alpyne, a dutch mile from Bercke. The 21. of August, the lord marshall passed ouer the riuer by Arnam sconce, with 3000. footmen, and 600. horse toward the legar. The 23. of August, his Excellency passed ouer the water by Arnam sconce with 2000. or more footmen, and 100. or more lances. The 24. of August, the leiger rose, and passed to Eltham: there is neather Eltham, and vpper Eltham, both haue bene houses of religious women, most sumptuously built: the neather standeth neare the Reyne: the vpper standeth an english mile from the Reyne vpon an high hill, and in such a place, as few the like for prospect: where a man standing may behold 100. parish churches. This cloister was of such credit and estimation, that none came there by the order of the place, but she was a barons daughter at the least. The lady Anne of Cleue was brought vp in this cloister. The 27. of August, his Excellency passed from Irnam to the campe at Eltham. The 28. he caused all the English to be marshalled into squares, and two preachers made to them 2. sermons in the field by the hill side of Eltham cloister. The 30. of August his Excellency passed from Eltham to Dowborough with all his army, except only those that the night before were sent to lye about the towne. On the north side was an Iland, to the which was sent the Scots regiment, which ẏ night with their pioners did intrench within 80. yards of the north part: On the west side came the regiment of sir T. Sherley. On the east side was the regiment of sir William Standley & ẏ L. marshall: on the southeast side was his Excellency with the regiment of the L. Audley. All the residue, as sir Iohn Norris, M. Digby, and diuers other regiments as well English as Dutch, were placed betweene these quarters, euery one in part indeuoring to intrench neare the ports, so that the same night, though with some alarums from the towne, were the whole ports of the towne intrenched, so that none could issue without danger. The same night also that his Excellency came before Dowborough, himselfe in person with the lord marshall in the night, with their gards, went from their tents to view ẏ south trench, being neare the towne, there was a base shot at them, which though all were together, yet rebounding amongst them all, hit ẏ lord marshall on the belly, pierced his buffe ierkin, his dublet, and hurt him somwhat: this shot milling his Excellency, made the returne. The last of August, there was nothing but intrenching, and some vollies of each side, for that the ordinance was not come. The first of September came our ordinance, which being landed, & drawn neare the places of battery, some of the demy canons discharged, to displace the ordinance of the towne, which was in part done, but againe in other places mounted. This day his Excellency remooued from the east or southeast side to the west side into an Iland, the riuer Iscall running by it. The 2. of September halfe an houre before sun-rising, began the battery of Dowborough, & was so throughly plied, ẏ with 9. battering peeces a maruellous breach was made. In time of which battery captaine Williams was shot through the arme, yet in this siege not 20. men lost, and a 20. hurt. About one of ẏ clocke they agreed to parley, all our battels being ranged in squares before the towne to assault. The souldiers had made ẏ breach more strong then before with feather-beds, dung, timber, &c. & made in ẏ inside a great sight, but fearing an assault, which they knew wold be furious, they (as was said) agreed to parley: the conditions were, that the souldiers should passe away with their liues onely, the Burgers should haue all they had at his Excellencies mercy: these things being agreed, about foure or fiue of the clocke in the after noone, all the souldiers with their wiues passed outr the breach away. The women that passed with the souldiers, it was a grie-uous thing to see how they were ransacked, till the earle of Essex and diuers other gentlemen came downe the breach, & by smiting & beating the soldiers, made them leaue off rifling them: his Excellencies expresse commandement was, that none should take ought from the towne, but that was not obserued, for much of ỹ goods was spoiled. Captaine Borowes was appointed to keepe the towne, whose ensignes with captaine Prices colors was set in the breach. The captaines & soldiers that were sent to saue the towne from spoile, did to the contrarie, for they made hauocke and most horrible spoile, wherewith his Excellencie was greatly displeased. The 8 of September his Excellencie went into the towne, and there dined, and after viewed the towne. The same day maister Anthony Sherley and other captaines came to the campe, and declared that the enemie came to Wessell, and with a peece of ordinance beate backe our ships wherein our men were, and killed some of them, & further beate them downe the riuer. The towne of Dowlborough standeth by the riuer Issell, an arme or issuing of the Reine by Arnam sconce, & runneth along through the countrey of Ouar Issell, it runneth also by Suthfield, and is in the prouince of Suthfield and fiue English miles from Suthfield, and fiue miles or more from Arnam. It standeth in a most fertile soile, pleasant & fruitfull ground. It is of reasonable strength, hauing high wals, not rampired but in certaine places, hauing a water running round about it, it is about the bignesse of Arnam, nigh an Englishmile & a halfe compasse. The order of the assault of this towne (as it was determined) sir Iohn Norris had the honor giuen him to enter the great breach, sir William Stanley with his regiment had the seconding of sir Io. Norris, county Hollocke had giuen him the small breach with his regiment. These ranged themselues in the most braue manner, but his Excellencie offered parly as ye haue heard. The 9. of September word came, that sir Martine Skinke was gotten frō out of Berke, & the 11. the same Skinke, captaine Thomas with some other braue souldiers lances came to the camp before Dowlborough. The 13. of September his Excellencie with all his forces came from Dowlborough, & that same night incamped himselfe before Suthfield, but he for want of a bridge could not go ouer the water, this night he intrenched himselfe very neare in diuers places, and on the morrow he made a bridge, which passed ouer to the other side. The 15. of September his Excellencie, leauing sir Martine Skinke in his absence passed to Deuentry, but shortly returned, for that he was informed that the prince with his whole force was marching towards Suthfield. This town of Suthfield is very strong, being in diuers places parted, in all which places is such strength, as all must be woon ere the towne be woon. It standeth a good distance from the riuer Issell, but hath a sconce on Issell of incredible strength, for Hollocke with all his force, and our English men a two yeeres since lay at it three quarters of a yeere, but could not win it: but now his Excellencie began to beliege it, and for that his forces were not sufficient to incampe it round about, he framed himselfe to do his best to win the sconce, for by that meanes he might the more easily win the towne. The first night our men intrenched at a Church beside the Towne, but for that they thought after it was not so commodious, they passed not for it, and therefore went on the other side of the water to insconce the sconce, for that out of it there issued both horse and footemen, which did greatly annoy our camp, for none could passe or repasse from Deuentrie, or otherwise stir from the strength of the camp, but they were taken or in danger, if not rescued. The 18. of September, Skinke tooke on him to make a sconce neare the enemies sconce, which the same night he began, though the towne shot sore at him, & also the sconce, yet he followed his worke, & so fortified it, that it was sufficient for greatnesse to hold men to keepe it, and sufficient for strength to hold out what the enemies shot could do against it, & this sconce Skinke kept on ỳ side the water, that passage could not so well come to the sconce, but he did sinke their boats. His Excellencie the next night caused another sconce to be made iust by the enemies sconce, so that ỳ enimie was by these two sconces so kept in, that they were kept from issuing out for their pleasure. The 20. of September, the enemie lying not far off at Langham a towne of ours, distant from Suthfield an 8. or 9. miles English, sent in the night into Suthfield certaine cornets of horse, which were suffered to enter by our men, and further to passe away againe to the enemies campe, they brought nothing into the towne to relieue it: moreouer, all the whole English camp lay on the other side of the towne ouer the water, so that readily a sufficient power could not be made.

A fight before Suthfield. Zutphen

The 22. of September, was the most braue fight performed of our side that could be. The enemie this night put into Suthfield some hundred wagons with victuals, which being perceiued, streight waies sir William Stanley went with his owne company, which were some 200. to stand as a bulcado, sir Iohn Norris ouertooke him, being sent to the seruice, & said to sir W. Stanley: There hath bene (said he) some words of displeasure betweene you and me, but let all passe, for this day we both are imployed to serue her Maiestie, let vs be friends, and let vs die together in her Maiesties cause. Quoth sir William Snanley, if you see me not this day by Gods grace serue my prince with a valiant and faithfull courage, account me for euer a coward, and if neede be I will die by you in friendship. Thus the long quarrell begun in Ireland was here ended, with such friendship as made all men reioyce: both of them serued so forwardly this day, that the one could not tell how much to commend the other, onely the one serued with footemen, the other with horse: sir W. Stanley marched with his footemen, but the enemy was come to the Church where our men had at the first placed themselues, there was of the enemies 2200. muskets, and 800. pikes, which were inow to gard the place of their refuge, (to wit, the intrenched Church.) The Lord Audley with some hundred and fiftie men, by great suite made to his Excellencie, attained at length to go, who made so great haste, that he ouertooke sir William Stanley ere the skirmish began, which was hot, but the Lord Audley and sir William Stanley not liking the hot vollies of musket shot, pressed neare the enemy, and themselues at the push of the pike with their men, put the whole compasse of the enemie to retrait to the holde, which done, they retyred a little backe out of the musket shot, and there made a stand: the Earle of Esser Lord generall of the horse, the lord Willoughby, sir William Russell, and sir Iohn Norris with their cornets came to charge the enemy. There were of the enemy fifteene cornets, of which fiue or sixe were Albanoys, the rest were Spaniards or Italians. The Albanoys issued, which our men charged so furiously, that it was thought at the first shocke there were a thirtie or fortie of the enemies ouerthrowne, then our men went to the curtelar, which they so furiously plyed, that the enemie after some three quarters of an houre retraited to their pikes, losing of foote and horsemen, as the prisoners since taken confesse, besides hurt, an hundred men of their braueſt, amongſt which was the countie Anoball, also captaine George the commaunder of all the Albanoyses was taken prisoner, besides neare twenty commaunders, some captaines, some ensigne bearers, lieutenants and other officers: but to sir Iohn Noris he gaue the first charge, who with his pistoll in his hand offered to discharge it on a braue man, but his pistoll would not go off, which he seeing, stroke it on the head of his enemie and ouerthrew him. The lord Willoughby with his launce in his rest met captaine George and vnhorsed him, so that he fell into a ditch, and cryed to the L. Willoughby, I yeeld your prisoner, for that you be a seemely knight, (this he spake in French:) the lord Willoughby came not to take prisoners, but passed on with his curtelar in his hand, & his whole cornet after so furiously, that it was wonder to see, ỹ lord Willoughby was so forward, that oftentimes, but twise especially he was like to be taken prisoner, his bases were pulled off from him, but rescued by our side. When ỹ skirmish was done & all retraited, captaine George being in his Excellencies tent, would not graunt to be prisoner to any but to him who vnhorsed him, whome he knew if he saw him in his armor, the L. Willoughby came in armed, this is the knight that I am prisoner to, & I yeeld to him, said he, to the L. Willoughby had ỹ prisoner adiudged to be his. The 3. the earle of Essex charged with his cornet, who so encouraged his men, for the honor of England said he, my fellowes follow me, & with that he threw his launce in his rest, and ouerthrew the first man, & with his curtelar so behaued himselfe that it was wonder. Sir William Russell with his cornet charged so terribly, that after he had broke his launce, he with his curtelar so plaid his part, that the enemy reported him to be a diuell & not a man, for where he saw fiue or seuen of the enemies together, thither would he, and so behaue himselfe with his curtelar, that he would separate their friendship. Among the rest sir Philip Sidney so behaued himselfe, that it was wonder to see, for he charged the enemie thrise in one skirmish, and in the last charge he was wounded with a musket shot through the thigh, to the great griefe of his Excellencie and of the whole campe, who being brought to my lord lieutenant, his Excellencie said: O Philip, I am sorie for thy hurt, and sir Philip answered: O my lord, this haue I done to do your honor and her Maiestie seruice. Sir William Russell comming to him, kissed his hand, and said with teares: O noble sir Philip, there was neuer man attained hurt more honorably then ye haue done, nor any serued like vnto you. He was conueyed to Arnam, where he continued till his end in such kind of godly behauiour, that both the preacher did wonder at it, and the chirurgions admire, the one seeing his wise godlinesse, the other his valiaunt courage with patience to abide all kind of paines. The cornet of sir Philip Sidney was at this time at Deuentrie, vpon this occasion, his Excellencie feared Deuentrie, for that it had often bene in question of reuolting; but the prince of Parma hauing occasion to be employed other waies, could not come that way: now (as is aforesaid) his Excellencie fearing that while he were winning one towne he might lose another, the prince being so neare, sent sir Philip Sidneyes cornet, his owne cornet, and maister Robert Sidneyes cornet all into Deuentrie, and of foote folke captaine Flud with his souldiers, and captaine Ward with his: this was the cause sir Philip Sidney was alone without his cornet at this seruice. Sir Thomas Parrat also was at this seruice, and serued most brauely. All the time this skirmish was with these cornets, so our footmen were in fight with the enemie, and by fine force made them once againe retire to their safetie. The enemie being retired to his strength, al our horse made a stand by the musket shot, which played on them fore, and braued the enemie, bidding him come foorth if he durst, but he would not: which sir Io. Norris seeing, rode to his Excellencie, and bad him be merry, for said he, you haue had this day the honorablest day that euer you had, for a handfull of your men haue driuen the enemie three times to retrait this one day. Further he willed his Excellencie either to send for more strength, or else to sound the retrait, which last request he graunted, for that his strengths were otherwise employed, and so the retrait being sounded both by drum and trumpet, our captaines came backe in good order, euery man to his quarter with great praise and honour. We lost men of account at this fight, captaine Martine, and captaine Thomas Welch is thought to be dead, he came with Skinke from Berke in hope now to be in more safetie: we lost of foote and horse, dead, about forty.

Sir William Stanley and sir Iohn Norris became friends that before were enemies.

The 25. of September our men seeing ỹ great aduantage that a certaine yland lying in the riuer betweene the sconce and the towne, would do them, and further that there was therein some souldiers of the enemie, which greatly annoyed them in shooting as they passed any way, our men therefore set vpon it, skirmished with the souldiers, and put them to flight, many of them leaping into the riuer were drowned, some were killed, but in fine our men insconced there, and the town shot at them, but did them little hurt.

The 28. of September, his Excellencie with a great part of his campe remoued to the other side of the towne, and there began to intrench: leauing the sconces well manned, it was thought the towne was neuer so well victualled, for by his Excellencie the prouant was cut off, and euery soldier had halfe a crowne a week, which greatly contented them, and this was paid to them truly, so that a souldier might by this meanes be able to pay the victualler, & that made many resort to the campe. Further, Deuentrie was so neare, that by that meanes victuals were brought the more fully to the campe, for at Deuentrie is great plentie of victuals. The horsemen had foure shillings the weeke loane, to find them and their horse, which was better then the prouant: his Excellencie knighted maister William Harton and maister Henry Vmpton, who were then sent for to returne into England to their friends.

W. Harton & H. Vmpton knighted.

The 29. of September, our men set vpon the lope sconce of the enemie, which with some difficultie they obtained, but after thinking to win another sconce, there were many of them slaine, as well as on the other side was the like or worse: there were of our men slaine and hurt aboue an hundred. In this lope sconce as was reported, there were fiue sights, which were woon that night, and certaine trenches of the enemie, and further intrenched almost round about the great sconce, so as they of ỹ same could now hardly issue out, or any come in to thē.

The

The second of October, in the night there passed into Zutphen fiue thousand of the princes folke, a foure thousand footmen and a thousand horsemen, these passed into the towne all in order vntroubled of our campe: these companies brought no carriages into the towne, but all the wagoners were to come after. The victuals which the princes power had gotten in Drent and Twent was conueyed into Zutphen permitted by his excellencie, for that his men were otherwaies employed, those of Longham did cut off some straglers of the princes power as they passed by them. The fourth of October, they of the sconce at Zutphen called for a parley, which was graunted, and countie Hollocke for that he spake Dutch stept out of our sconce, and parled with them, and after long talke, one of the souldiers shot a musket, which as countie Hollocke was speaking, shot into his mouth, and out by his care, so that it smote away the iewell hanging at his care. The fifth of October came to Deuentrie many of our horses, and about midnight, taking all the garrison of horses in the towne, passed from thence to Langham, where they also tooke the horses of the garrison, and went about an exploit, which was, they hearing of a conuoy of victuals comming to Suthfield, they determined to haue cut it off, but they could not meete with it. There was of our men at this exploite pretended a fiue or sixe hundred horse, the leader whereof was sir William Russell. The same fifth of October, early in the morning our canons being placed against the lesser sconce, they played at it till three or foure of the clocke, at which time maister Edward Stanley leader of sir William Stanleyes companie came to assault the breach, but before he came to the breach, the enemie had a sight or trench full of souldiers placed there for to offend vs, and defend the sconce, which souldiers all at once discharged their muskets, killing onely one man. Edward Stanley entred the trench with all his men, killing some of the enemies, and the rest fled. In this trench he stayed till our canons had made the breach cleare, then maister Edward Stanley before his men, clambred vp the breach, but a braue man of great stature captaine of the sconce stood alone in the breach with a pike, and thrust at him, which pike with the one hand he defended, and with the other caught hold to get vp, till at the last he was throwne downe by a bullet throwne out of the sconce: the second time he assaulted the breach, but this captaine so defended it, and kept him downe as was wonderfull: and although our men with the canon did play on the breach, yet he still fought, and did not stirre till at the last a canon out of the Island stroke the ground from vnder him, so that he fell out of the breach into the sconce: but in fine this braue leader of our men led them vp the breach, and first entred the same, then was the fight in the sconce, where at the first our men killed foure or fiue, at the second the like, at the length, they hauing made a traine, three or foure of our men were brent, but the souldiers of the sconce fled out at a little wicket, which our souldiers chaunced to light on, and killed to the number of thirtie, so our men possessed the lesser sconce, with the losse of three or foure of our men, and sixe or seuen hurt. This seruice being done, his Excellencie seeing the valour of maister Edward Stanley, gaue him thankes, and calling captaine Reade knighted them both. This taking of the lesser sconce greatly terri-terrified them of the greater ſconce. The next night the countie Williams men lying neare them, they with a ſore volle of ſhot did diſcharge at them, and bad them hauſe vp, for ſaid they, you will play but as countie Hollocke did, ſpend powder and ſhot, and loſe your men, and hauſe vp when you haue done. This ſudden volly of ſhot put Sraue Williams men in doubt that they would iſſue, wherefore they had thought to haue giuen alarum, but finding them ſo quiet after, they ſtayed their enterpriſe, and liſtened what would follow, and hearing no noiſe or ſhew of ſouldiers, they paſſed neare the ſconce to ſee the euent, at length they might ſee a fire in the ſconce which made them to preaſſe nearer, and at length entred the ſconce, where they found a ten or twelue men, which fled (as was thought) into the water and were drowned. Thus had the cowardly praters made a fire, and ranne away by the light thereof. Thus was the great ſconce which was ſo well manned, ſo well prouided of powder and ſhot, that they wanted none, yet without aſſault or charge, breach or any thing to diſmay them, they ran away, to their vtter infamy and reproch.

They of the great ſconce ran away in the night.

The ſeuenth of October his Excellencie paſſed to Arnam, there to viſite ſir Philip Sidney lying of his hurt receiued as is afore ſhewed, before whoſe going he made knights theſe captaines and gentlemen following: ſir Henry Goodyere captaine of the guard, ſir Henry Norris, ſir Iohn Borowes, ſir Iohn Winkfield, ſir Roger Williams, ſir Robert Sidney, ſir Philip Butler. More were knighted, ſir Henry North, ſir Thomas Dennis, ſir William Knowles, ſir George Farmer, ſir George Digby, ſir Steward, ſir Bewford: beſides theſe, were made knights bannarets theſe following: the earle of Eſſex, the lord Willoughby, the lord Audley, the lord North.

Knights made.

There was (ſaith my coſin Henry Archar) a ſtrange thing happened at Berk in the time of Skinkes gouernment there, which I thought good to impart. As the ſouldiers were repairing and working to make the towne ſtrong, a ſouldier comming by ſaid, you worke and worke, but the enemie will haue the towne within this weeke: which words being both noted and taken grieuouſly that he ſhould ſo diſcourage the ſouldiers, he was taken and carried to Skinke, who without any circumſtances condemned him to be throwne off the great ſtaple of the towne into the Reine, which was accompliſhed. But he falling off from a monſtrous height, light in the water, and riſing againe, as the nature of the water is, to raiſe one vp twiſe or thriſe, he had both life and memorie, ſuch as he offered to ſwim, and ſcrawling got out of the water: but Skinke had taken ſuch an hatred againſt him, that he cauſed him to be bound hand and foote, to haue bene caſt againe into the riuer of Reine, ſauing that colonell Morgan being there, ſo perſwaded him, that the poore mans life was ſaued.

A ſouldier throwne from an high tower into the riuer of Reine.

The ninth of October countie Hollockes cornet of horſes lying at Langham, tooke a ſirtie wagons, which had carried the conuoy before ſpoken of, into Suthfield, and a fiftreene of them being laden with hurt men that were wounded in the ſconce, he put them all to the ſword, and tooke the wagons into Langham.

The 15. of October, his Excellencie paſſed from Deuentrie to Arnam to ſir Philip Philip Sidney there lying ſicke, as is afore ſhewed.

On the 17 of October, the ſaid ſir Philip Sidney, knight, a moſt valiant and towardly gentleman, ſonne and heire to ſir Henry Sidney (late afore deceaſed) of his hurt receiued at Zutphen in Gelderland deceaſed, vpon whoſe departure he ſo bleſ his mind and toong, that the preacher that came to inſtruct him in his extremitie, might rather learne of him than teach him his aſſurance in the premiſes of Chriſt. From thence he was brought by water to Flu∫hing, where he was kept eight daies, on the firſt of November he was brought to the ſea ſide by the Engliſh garriſon, which were twelue hundred, marching three and three, ſhot, halbards, pikes, & enſignes all trailing, the burgers of the towne following: his body being imbarked, the ſmall ſhot gaue him a triple volly, then the great ordinance, &c. On the firſt of November he was landed at the Tower wharfe, and conueyed to the Minories without Ald-gate, on the eaſt ſide of the citie of London frō whence on the ſixteenth of Februarie next following, he was conueyed to Saint Paules Church in London, in order marſhalled by Ro. The 18. of October, his Excellencie paſſed with great ſorrow, for the loſſe of his nephew ſir Philip Sidney to Vtrike: and on the ſame 18. and 19. dayes of October, ſir William Standley gaue in charge to his officers, chieftaines & commāders, as alſo to his ſouldiers, that they ſhould go into Deuentry by 15. by tenne, by fire and by three, which commandement they did fulfill, so that for the most part they got them into the towne, being nothing mistrusted of the Burgers, they got into harborow, and close places, that they were not espied. Also other captaines sayd to their souldiers, if you will go fine or fire, or somewhat more to Deuentry to recreate your selues, take with you store of powder and shot, for feare of the enemy, which liberty they were ready to take, and performed accordingly, so that there was by this meanes gotten into the towne well knowne 1200. english souldiers: on the 19. day in the morning came sir William Stanley with some troupe of his men, and in the afternoone sir William Pelham lord marshall, likewise with his troupe. The counsell of States, with maister Killegrey, maister Kitly, and other were debating of matters all this day with the Burgomaisters, nothing mentioning of the garrison that there should be placed: further those of Suthfield in dildaine, did tel those that passed by their towne to Deuentry, that they should hye them, or the gates would be shut. The lord marshall being come to his lodging, sent for all the Burgomaisters, which were in the counsell as before, who being come, he told the, that his Excellencie, both for their owne safety, and suppression of the enemy, was fully determined to put in a garrison of men there, and for that before time he had found them strange in granting, he had sent him thither, for that the campe was now ready to breake vp, to know in short their determination, whether they would receiue a garrison or not, and for that his haste required no long stay, they to giue him answer on the next morning by 8. of the clocke, that he might send word to Vtricke to his Excellency, which the Burgomaisters promised to answer according to his request: now all this night, did sir William Stanley and others, with the lord marshall take counsell what were best to do, which was agreed that all the souldiers secretly should on the morrow at 7. of the clocke, be in the market place with their furniture: this order being taken, all with quiet rested, but the Burgers which made that night a double watch, and chained all the streetes, made fast all passages, and further did make and man all the ports most strong.

At this time flor. Lewis Marmol a Spaniard of Granada Author of ye History of Africa by wch he got great Credit Thuanus lib 7.

In the morning early, by 6. of the clocke, all the Burgomaisters were assembled in the state house, to agree of this purpose. About 7. of the clocke the L. Marshall came to the state house, with diuers gentlemen, and others, who knocked and were let in, straight sir W. Stanley also entred with his traine al appointed for the purpose, by this time were all our Englishmen assembled in the market place, which the townes men seeing were in piteous feare, the women crying out for feare to be spoiled. The lord Marshall asked them a direct answer whether they would haue a garrison or not, giue me quoth he, a direct answer, for I must so haue it. One of the principal Burgomaisters rose softly, & stole away, which being told the lord Marshall, he said: fetch me presently him that is gone, or before the liuing God, before whom I stand, you shall all die for it, and delay not sayd he but do it, straight was he fetched againe. Then demanded he for what cause, that this night ouer all other, they had made so strong a watch, wherefore they had chained their streetes, &c. but they answered not: well sayd he, euerie one of you set his hand to this bill, and deliuer ouer your authority, to these whom his Excellencie hath set downe, or before God you shall all die, you haue not to deale with a nation simple, or foolish, or such as will be vsed in this or the like sort, comming hither to spend their goods, toile their bodies, and venture their liues, and now be accounted such as your subtilty should ouerreach. They foorthwith at his commaund (being sore afraid) set their hands to the bill, and gaue their authority ouer to others, all protestants, appointed by his Excellency: well said he, send one of you straight to all those Burgers that are on the wals and rampiers, and command them to passe to their dwellings, and to let them foorthwith be vnarmed, which was presently done. Then he commanded the, to bring to him the keyes of all the ports, or gates, vpon the like paine before spoken of, which was also done, with swearing both the old and new officers to the queene of England. This being done, all that before were suspected to be enemies to the Englishmen, were turned out of their places of authority. There was a 4000. souldiers, all Burgers in this towne, which for the most part watched and warded, besides a number others, as too rich for such paines, boors, which are all counted to be a 12000. fighting men, wherefore it requireth great care and wisedome to deale in this sort. The campe at this time brake for the most part vp, to the garrisons, and all those companies that were appointed to the sconce went from Vtrike on the 22. of October.

The 23. of October the States of those parts came from Deuentry to Vtrike, where with his Excellency they sate in counsell, of determining all the 24. day from morning till night. The 28. early in the morning, his Excellency passed from Vtrike, and came that night late to Rotherdame: On the 29. his Excellency passed from thence to the Hauge, where he stated some small time. The 8. of November he went to Delph, where he was banqueted, & went that night to Dunhage. On the 16. he passed from Hauge to Rotherdame: and on the 17. to Dort. On the 18. he tooke shipping to passe from Dort to Flushing, and being passed a seuen English miles from Dort, the yce was so great, and so oppressed his ships that it indomaged the most strong ship in the fleete, so that perforce his Excellency was forced to land at Dorpe, a poore village, and in a wagon to passe by land to Rotherdame, and there prepared ships, and when the wind serued he passed towards Flushing, but calmenesse of the wind caused his stay against the Iles of Acoyo wherein Flushing standeth, but in the morning he landed at Camphere, and thence in a wagon he passed to Middleborough, and from thence to Flushing, where he tooke shipping towards England.

The 22. of November, the honorable lord Robert earle of Leicester, lieutenant generall of all her maiesties forces in the vnited prouinces of the Low countries, returning from thence, arriued at London, & went late that night to the Court at Richmond, where he was not so suddenly come, as forwardly welcome of her maiesty, and the rest: and thus leauing the seruice done in those vnited prouinces, the Low countries or Netherlands (whereof thus far I had receiued aduertisements from my good friend, and neare kinsman Henry Archer, one of his Excellencies gard) I returne to matters at home.

The 8. of October last before passed, I. Low, I. Adams, and Richard Dibdale, being before condemned for treason, in being made priests by authority of the bishop of Rome, were drawne to Tyborne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered.

Parliament at Weſtminſter.

The 29. of October, the archbiſhop of Caunterbury the lord treaſurer, and the earle of Darby, repreſenting the queenes maieſties perſon, began the high court of parliament by prorie, which ſeſſion of parliament was at this time aſſembled, for triall of matters concerning Mary the queene of Scots, &c.

An reg. 29.

The 2. of December, the ſeſſion of parliament brake vp, and was prorogued vntill the 15. of February, the ſubſtance of matter handled in the ſame ſeſſion concerning the queene of Scots, is ſet downe at large in a letter learnedly penned, and publiſhed in print, directed to the honorable the earle of Leiceſter, and as I haue ſet downe in my continuation of M. Reigne Wooſe and Holinſheds Chronicle.

Proclamation againſt the queene of Scots.

The 6. of December, the lord maior of London, aſſiſted with diuers earles, barons, the aldermen of London in their ſcarlet, the principall officers of the city, the greateſt number of the gentlemen of the beſt account in and about the city, with the number of 80. of the moſt graueſt and worſhipfullеſt citizens in coates of veluet, and chaines of gold, all on horſeback, in moſt ſolemne and ſtately manner, by ſound of foure trumpets, about ten of the clocke in the forenoone, made open and publike proclamation, and declaration of the ſentence lately giuen by the nobility againſt the queene of Scots, vnder the great ſeale of England, bearing date at Richmond the fourth of December, being openly read by maiſter W. Sebright, Towne clearke of London, and with loud voyce ſolemnely proclaimed by the ſergeant at armes of the ſayd city, in foure ſeuerall places, to wit, at the croſſe in Cheape, at the end of Chancery lane in Fleete-ſtreete ouer againſt the Temple, at Leaden-hall corner, and at S. Magnus corner neare London bridge, during which time, like ſolemne proclamations were made with great ſolemnity in the county of Middleſex, namely in the palace at Weſtminſter, without Temple bar, and in Holborne, by the ſheriffes of London and Middleſex, aſſiſted with ſundry noblemen and gentlemen of good account, and the Juſtices of peace of the ſayd county, to the great and wonderfull reioycing of the people of all ſorts, as manifeſtly appeared by ringing of bels, making of bonfires, and ſinging of Pſalmes in euery of the ſtreetes and lanes of the city.

Douer hauen repaired.

The queenes maieſty granted to the towne of Douer toward the repairing of their hauen, the free tranſportation of 30000. quarters of wheate, 10000. quarters of barley and malt, 4000. tun of beare, without paying cuſtome or impoſt, this licence or pattent was ſold to a couple of marchants of London, named Iohn Bird, and Thomas Wats, after the rate of three ſhillings and foure pence the quarter of wheate, and 2. ſ. 8: d. for euery quarter of barley or malt. And the licence for beare being ſold to diuers, amounted to 4000. markes at the leaſt: more there was granted by parliament Anno 23. Elizabeth, that for euery veſſell or crayer whereof her ſubiects were owners or partners, being of burden twenty tuns or vpward, loading or diſcharging within this realme, or paſſing too or fro any forrein countrey during the ſpace of 7. yeares then next enſuing, there ſhould be payd for euery ſuch voyage by the maiſter or owner of all ſuch veſſels, &c. three pence for euery tun of the burthen of ſuch ſhip, which grew to 1000. pounds yearely at the leaſt.

The queenes maiestly foreseeing the generall dearth of graine, and other victuals, growne partly through the vnseasonablenesse of ẏ yeares past, partly through the vncharitable greedinesse of such as be great corne maisters, but especially through the vnlawfull and ouermuch transporting of graine into forraine countries, vnder colour of licence granted, by the aduise of her honorable counsell, published a proclamation and booke of orders to be taken by her iustices for relefe of the poore, notwithstanding all which, the excessiue prises of graine still increased, so that wheate was sold at London for 8.s. the bushell, and in some other parts of the realme, for 10.s. 12.s. 13.s. &c. 1587. Proclamation for graine.

The 8. of Februarie being wednesday (according to sentence lately giuen by ẏ nobility) Mary Steward queene of Scots, abdut ten of the clocke before noone, was executed, and suffered death, by beheading vpon a scaffold set vp for that purpose in the great hall of the castle of Foderinghay, in presence of George Talbot earle of Shrewsbury, Henry Grey earle of Kent, principall commissioners, and others the gentlemen of the countrey neare adioyning, to the number of about 300. She was as appertained to a queene) royally buried at Peterborough on the first of August next following. Queene of Scots beheaded. at 45. Sigismund III K. of Poland Sr. of John III K. of Swéden

The 15. of Februarie, the parliament began at Westminster, wherein was granted to her maiestly towards her charges for the defence of this realme a subsidy by the clergy of 6.s. the ꝑ. and of the temporalty 2.s. 8.d. goods, & 4.s. lands, with 2. fifteenes, &c. The 20. of Februarie, a strange thing happened, a man hanged for felonie at S. Thomas Waterings, being begged by the Chirurgions of London, to haue made of him an Anatomy, after he was dead to all mens thinking, cut downe, stripped of his apparell, layd naked in a chest, throwne into a carre, and so brought from the place of execution through the Borough of Southwarke ouer the bridge, & through the city of London to the Chirurgions hall neare vnto Criplegate: the chest being there opened, and the weather extreame cold, he was found to be aliue, and liued till the 23. of Februarie, and then died. Parliament at Westminster. A man hanged begged for dead, and liued three dayes after.

The same 23. of Februarie, a gun powder house at Radcliffe, was blowne vp, about ten of the clocke before noone. Gun powder house blowne vp.

The 12. of Aprill, sir Thomas Bromley knight, lord Chauncelor of England deceased, and was honorably buried at Westminster on the second of May. About the same time deceased sir Ralfe Sadler, Chancelor of the Dutchie of Lancaster, and one of her maiesties priuy counsell. Also on the 16. of Aprill deceased the Dutches of Somerset, at Hanworth, and was buried at Westminster. Item, Edward earle of Rutland, baron Roos of Hamlake, lord of Trusbut and Beauoire, knight of the honorable order of the garter, departed this life at London, on the 14. of Aprill, and according to his desire was honorably conueyed from thence to his castle of Beauoire and buried in the parish church at Bedford, the 15. of May, where many of his noble ancestors and parents are honorably intombed. Lord Chancelor deceased. Chancelor of dutchie deceased. Dutches of Somerset deceased. Earle of Rut'land deceased.

The 29. of Aprill, sir Christopher Hatton knight, captaine of the gard, vicechamberlaine, and one of her maiesties priuy counsell, was made lord Chancelor of England at Croydon, in the archbishop of Caunterburies house, where he receiued the great seale in the gallery there. And the third of May, being the 1. day of the terme, he rode from Elie place in Oldborne, to Westminster, there to take his oath, Sir Christopher Hatton Lord Chancelor of England.

oath, before whom went about the number of fortie his gentlemen in one liuerie blew, and chaines of gold, diuers Pensioners, and other gentlemen of the court, vpon foote-clothes, the officers and clarks of the Chancerie, and then the Lord Chancellor, hauing on his right hand the Lord Treasurer, and on the left hand the Earle of Leicester, after whom rode certaine of the Nobilitie, the Iudges of the realme, many knights, and lastly a great troupe of their retinue.

T. Fenner. Seruice of sir Francis Drake at Cales, and Cape S. Vincent.

In this meane time, the most fortunate seruice for England, performed by sir Francis Drake in Cales the 19. of Aprill with his latest exploits in Cape S. Vincent, and Cape-saker, done the 21. of May, written by a gentleman of his companie, was such as followeth.

He hauing discouered (by aduise of 2. ships of Middleborough that came from Cales, with whom he met in 40. degrees the 16. of Aprill) and by them vnderstanding that there was great prouision in Cales, and thereabout, appointed to come for Lishborne, he with all speed possible did bend his force thither, to cut off their power and prouision: so as the 19. of Aprill, an houre before sun setting, he entred the harbour of Cales, & his fleete: there checked with him at the entring thwart the town, 6. gallies: but they in short time retired vnder their fortresses. There fled some 20. French ships to port Royall, & some Spaniards, which could not be hindered of the flight, by reason of the shields. There were sunke by sir Francis, at his comming in with shot, one argosie of 1000. tun, furnished with 30. peeces of braſſe, & richly laden. There were to the number of 38. ships vndertaken before night, & victors of the Rode: 30. hulks Hollanders confiscated to the king, and their goods sold to the kings vse, 24. of them were fiered, the other 6. were at port Royall laden with wines & bread, & to be presently full laden for Lishborne. One carrike of 1400. tuns appertaining to the Marques of S. Cruse, fired. Fiue great Bilkes fired, 4. of them lading and taking in of victuall for the kings prouision for Lishborne, the fift a ship of a 1000. tun, bound for Lishborne, hauing in hir great store of pipes, much yron nailes, spikes, yron hoopes, and such like, fired. One Shattey laden with wines, of 250. tuns, for the kings prouision, which the English brought to sea, and discharged part of her wines for prouision of the fleete, and then fired her. Three fleeboates of about 400. tuns laden with bisket, whereof they fired one, & kept the other two. Ten barkes more laden with wines, raisins, figges, oyle, wheate & such like: they fired, by supposition 38. ships & barks fired, sunke & brought away, amounting in iudgement to 13000. tun of shipping, &c. this was for the first exploit. The second was as followeth, about the 21. of May, they assaulted the castle of Cape-saker, and three other strong holds, all which they tooke, some by force and some by submission. They tooke at seuerall times of shipping, barks, & caruels aboue 100. laden with hoopes, gally oares, pipe staues, timber, and other prouisions of the king of Spaines, for the furnishing of his forces intended against England, which they burned, and consumed all the fisher boats, and nets thereabouts, to their great hinderance. Thence they came before the hauen of Lishborne, anckoring neare vnto east Cales, where the Marquesse of S. Cruse was with his gallies, and seeing them chase his ships a shore, to take and carry away his barkes and caruels, was content to suffer them there quietly to tarrie, and likewise to depart, and neuer charged them with Cannon shot.

The 18. of June Robert earle of Leicester, was made L. steward of houshold, & R. Deuereux earle of Esser, was made M. of her maiesties horse. The 25. of June, Robert earle of Leicester tooke shipping at Margate in Kent towards the Low countries, where he remained not log, but returned. This yeare was a late spring and a cold sommer, so that at midsomer pesen in the cods at London (where they be most forward) were sold for 8. d. the pecke, yet afterward great plenty, & sold for 8. d. the bushell, or better cheape, no cheries ripe till S. James tide or Lammas, & then such plenty, that they were sold for a peny the K. and not aboue. The moneth of September vehement cold, white frosts, winds boysterous in ỹ north, sometime haile, snow and sleete, and yet a reasonable good harueſt for corne, praised be God.

Earle of Leicester went into the Low countries.

A very cold spring, sommer, and harueſt.

The 7. of September. sir Thomas Hineage was made vicechamberlaine. The queenes maiesty hauing diuers waies vnderstood the great and diligent preparation of the king of Spaine, in diuers parts both by land and sea, not onely of the strongest ships in all places within his dominions, but also of all sorts of prouision and munition necessarie for a mighty fleete, which was to come from Spaine and Portingale, for the furnishing & better direction whereof he had drawne together into the places aforesaid, the most principall and ancient captaines and souldiers, aswell of the kingdomes of Naples, and Sicilie, as of Lombardy and other parts of Italy, and the more remote parts of India, as by euery one was long before very euidently perceiued, by reason that the preparation of these things together with the ships, mariners, and souldiers, the diuers sorts and quantities of victuall, the great number and diuers kinds of artillery, with the summe of euery seuerall kind, were sufficiently specified vnto all countries by certaine pamphlets, laying foorth at large the whole intent, the which pamphlets were printed and published in Spaine and Portingale, and other prouinces of Christendome, with this title: The most puissant and most happie Fleete of the King of Spaine, against the Realme of England: her Maiestie, I say, hauing in this manner receiued so open and manifest information hereof, as also certaine intelligence of horsemen, and footemen, sent in so great number, that they were sufficient for the furnishing of diuers campes in the Low countries, vnder the gouernement of the duke of Parma his lieutenant generall for those prouinces, and withall knowing the multitude of the ships of war, and the possibility that the sayd king had, to transport his souldiers out of Flanders, & land them in England, not sparing to giue out thereupon open and free report, that all that prouision was for the inuasion & conquest of England: Her maiestie therefore furnished her selfe by sea with a mighty fleete, & by land with no lesse diligence to resist such great forces as by all nations were reported to come against her: for it was neuer knowne in the memory of man, that so great preparation was euer heretofore at one time made out, either by King Philip himselfe, or yet by the Emperour Charles the fift his father, although his power were much more, and his occasions of warre farre greater. The diligence therefore of the Englishmen, answerable vnto the care of the Prince, was such, and so great, that her Maiestie was prouided of a mightie fleete to defend her by sea from the enemie, betweene the first of Nouember in this yeare 1587. and the 20. of December next ensuing, a time very short for such a prouision, most excellently furnished of all things necessary for such a purpose. charge of which naule was commended vnto the right honorable Charles Lord Howard, baron of Effingham, lord high Admirall of England, who for his place and office, noble courage, experience in martiall affaires, and nobilitie of bloud and descent, was thought most fit to be employed in that seruice: he had in his company a sufficient number of honorable, worshipfull, and valiant personages, desirous to serue their prince and countrey in such a cause as this: likewise of seafaring men and priuate souldiers, so competent a number, as might be answerable vnto the power of so great a prince in so weightie a cause. The lord high admirall therefore with those forces keeping for a season the narrow seas, & chanell between England and Flaunders, sir Francis Drake knight, was by the aduise of the lords of the counsell, & his honor so commanding it, sent towards the west parts with certaine of the Queenes ships and others, from certaine ports of England thereabout, being in all about the number of fiftie saile of all sorts, there to attend the lord high admirall his comming with greater forces, if occasion should require. In the meane season the lord admirall, with his viceadmirall the lord Henry Seymer, kept the narrow seas, accompanied with 20. ships more, very well furnished at the charges of the citizens of London, besides many other from diuers parts on that side the realme, that lieth from the towne of Douer vp to the north-ward, which met altogether in good order, and well appointed for the wars.

The lord high Admirall with his forces keeping for a season the narrow seas & chancll betweene England and Flanders, sir Fran. Drake knight, mentioned here also in honor of his deserts, was by the aduise of the lords of the councell, & his honor so commanding it, sent towards the west parts, with certaine of the M. ships, and others frō the ports of England (as is aforesaid) being about 54. or 56. saile of all sorts, there to attend the L. high Admirall his comming with greater forces, if occasion should so require. In the meane season the L. Admirall with his vice-admirall the Lord Henry Seimor kept the narrow seas, accompanied with twentie ships more, very well furnished, at the charges of the citizens of London, besids many other from diuers parts on that side of the realme, that lieth from the towne of Douer vp to the northward, which met altogether in good order, and well appointed for the warres.

The Lord Admirall kept the narrow seas.

And here the L. high Admirall vnderstanding for a certaintie, that the fleete of the enemy was already launched & at the sea, he weyed anker, and leauing the lord Seimor with sufficient forces of the Queenes ships, & other vessels to watch what the Duke of Parma would do, or was able to vndertake by sea, and parting from thence the 21. of May to the westward with her maiesties nauy, and 20. ships of London, with some others, he arriued at Plimmouth the three and twentith of the same moneth, where sir Francis Drake with more than fifty saile which he had vnder his charge, met with the Lord Admirall in very good order. And then the two nauies being ioyned together into one, the Lord Admirall made

sir

ſir Francis Drake his vicеadmirall: he that had ſeene theſe together, would haue commended it to haue bene a moſt royall fleete, about two hundred ſaile, adding nine voluntaries, or adventurers, furniſhed by the gentlemen of Deuonſhire and fifteene victuallers from London, the leaſt being of one hundred and twentie tun, all very well furniſhed for the fight, and a number of goodly men that were faine to returne home for lacke of entertainement, for there was choiſe both of mariners and ſouldiers.

Arriuing at Plimmouth (as is ſaid) his lordſhip preſently gaue order for proviſion of victuall for the whole navy, that it might want nothing that ſhould tend to the neceſſary ſeruice enſuing.

This proviſion being complete, he reſolued with himſelfe to put foorth to the ſea againe about the 30. of May aforeſaid, but the winde not ſeruing his turne, he kept kept himſelfe abroad, ſailing vp and downe within the ſleeue betweene Vlhant and Silly, attending ſome ſight or report of the enemies fleete: where hauing waited a certaine time, ſomewhiles drawing neare to the coaſt of France, and ſometimes to the coaſt of England, he returned, being thereto enforced by a great tempeſt with his whole navy into the port of Plimmouth about the firſt of June, to refreſh his company there.

Christian IV K. of Denmark

In the meane ſeaſon there were diſcouered betweene Vlhant and Silly certaine ſhips of the Spaniſh fleete, not aboue the number of fourteene, which were knowne to be ſeuered from the whole fleete by violence of the aforeſaid tempeſt: but before they could be encountred withall by any of ỹ Engliſh naue, the wind came about, whereby they had opportunitie to returne backe againe, ſauing themſelues from all perils in their hauen called the Groine, into the which alſo the reſt of the Spaniſh fleete was put prouide themſelues a new of other thinges which they wanted, and ſpecially of freſh water. Of this thing the Lord Admirall had intelligence and aduertiſement from ſundry parts, as alſo that the Spaniſh fleete was by great fortune diſperſed and ſeuered into diuerſe places, through penury of many and thoſe neceſſarie things, through diſeaſes and mortalitie of men, although the report hereof could not afterwards be verified, whereof the certaine truth was, that being troubled with tempeſt, they were commanded to come a ſhore at the Groine.

Jo.n Baptiſt Van Helmont a Noble-man of Brabant a g.t Phyſician & Natural & Philoſoph.r he was put into y.e Inquiſition as doing things above y.e power of nature born at Brussels dy'd 1664.

The lord Admirall therefore ſeeing the coaſt of England and France cleare and free from all danger, as by diligent ſearch it was vnderſtood, reſolued by the aduice and opinion of his counſell, to take the aduantage of the next winde that ſhould blow from the North, that paſſing to the coaſt of Spaine he might find the enemies fleete ſo diſperſed in the Groine, and in other parts of Galitia where they had driuen by the ſtorme.

This was put in execution betweene the 8. and 10. of the moneth of July, the winde being then at the North, which within a while changing vnto the South, after that he was come within 40. leagues or therabout, of the coaſt of Spaine, made him to caſt a doubt of that which afterwards happened indeed. For laying this before him as his principall care, according to the charge laid vpon him by her maieſtie, to be diligent and carefull for the defence of the coaſt of England, and conſidering considering that with the wind which was now changed & very good to make for England, the enemie might set out & passe for England without discouery of his fleete, he returned backe with the whole naule, & the 12. of the same month he arriued at Plimmouth, there accordingly to prouide himselfe of all that was necessarie.

The 19. of July, his honor had intelligence by a barke or pinnace, whose captaine was Thomas Fleming, amongst other behind in the fleete for discouerie, that the Spanish fleete in number by estimation 158. sailes, was discouered neare vnto ẏ Lizard, the wind being then south & by west. And therefore albeit that by reason of the great number of English ships which were in Plimmouth, it was with that wind very hard to bring them foorth from thence: (as the militarie art of the sea, and the condition of their affaires required) yet was there such diligence vsed by the L. admirall and the rest by his example, as they indeuoured therein with such aduise and earnestnesse, that many of the ships at the length warped out of ẏ hauen, as if the wind had bene wholly fauourable vnto them: which thing could not haue fallen out, but through the long and certaine skill which ẏ English maisters generally haue in marine discipline. To the which reason this may be added, that they were all of one nation, of one young and touched with a grieuous and equall hatred toward their enemies, being mightily perswaded of their forces. Wherupon we may in such cases assure our selues of what importance it is in seafaring matters, for a fleete of any prince whatsoeuer, inuading any forraine state or kingdome, to incounter with a fleete ready for defence in such manner as ẏ English naue was, for so much as the fleet inuading being prouided diuersly of maisters and officers, differing one from another in custome, language & conceit, cannot in any measure giue any assured hope of certaine victorie how honorable soeuer ẏ commander be: many of the ships therefore came foorth, by reason that the men were moued in the foresaid respects to labor diligently, & so much the rather, by how much the captains & chiefe officers both by counsell and hand, shewed themselues more diligent & industrious. By this means ẏ 20. day of July ẏ L. admirall accompanied with 54. ships, came foorth with the same wind ẏ the enemy had from the south west, which thing certainly was not esteemed a small thing to be done, in regard as well of the wind as of ẏ narrownesse of ẏ place it selfe. The Spanish fleet being manifestly discouered about 140. miles from Edestone, & clearely seene of euery one toward the west, & so far off from Foy as the English fleet was, that is, 25. English miles. The next morning being ẏ 21. of July, all ẏ ships which were now come out of ẏ hauen, had got the wind of the Spaniards, & approching somewhat neerer, found ẏ their naue was placed in battell ray, after the manner of a moone crescent, being ready with her hornes & her inward circumference to receiue either all, or so many of the English naue as should giue her the assault, her horns being extended in widenesse about the distance of 8. miles, as was informed. The reason of their arranging in this order, arose vpon the foresight of the D. of Medina Sidonia generall of the Spanish fleet, who approching the coast, sent out a final ship to espy somwhat concerning ẏ English fleet, & hearing by certaine fishermen taken prisoners, ẏ our fleete was in Plimmouth, he prepared himselfe as aforesaid, for the auoyding of all such chances as might after befall: wherupon about 9. of ẏ clock before noone, the L. Admirall commanded his pinnace called the Disdaine, to giue the defiance vnto the duke of Medina: after which he himselfe in the D. ship called the Arke went formost, as was conuenient, & began hotly to fight with a great ship which was admirall of the Spanish fleete, in which ship he thought by reason of certaine likely coniectures, the duke of Medina to be, considering also the ship was so well accompanied by others. The fight with her continued so long and so hote, that diuerse other ships, yea the most part of the Spanish fleete came to her succour.

In the meane season the vice-admirall sir Francis Drake, with maister Iohn Hawkens, & maister Martin Frobisher, fought with a galeon of Portingal, wherein they thought Don Martin de Ricaldes the vice-admirall to be. This fight was so well maintained for the time it continued, that the enemie was enforced to leaue his place, and to giue way gathering toward the east. In the which point of remooving, a great galeon wherein Don Pedro de Valdes went for captaine, falling foule with another ship of their fleet, was depriued of her fore-mast, so that she could not follow the body of the fleet that forsooke her, to the great maruell of the Englishmen themselues, whereby Don Pedro became prisoner, as after shall be declared. Furthermore also there was at this time a great ship of Biscay about 800. tuns in burthen, sore battered in fight, by casualtie of their owne powder, was set on fire, part thereof blowne vp and their people slaine, and so left to aduenture with the people that remained, so that being vtterly vnable al ẏ night to helpe her selfe, she was succoured by ẏ gallialles, & for ẏ time saued in ẏ body of the fleete.

But to returne to our purpose: This first skirmish continued not aboue two houres, because the lord Admirall considering that he wanted as yet fortie ships, which could not so readily come foorth of the hauen, thought he should do better seruice if he stayed their comming before he proceeded any further, beating behind vpon the enemie, lest he should bring the rest too much in hazard, and therefore he thought it not profitable too much to embolden and pricke those forward that he had with him, in a matter that was not greatly conuenient, either for the honour of the realme, or his owne person, neither did the militarie discipline of the English nation purchased by long experience at the sea, giue him leaue to do it. And therefore he put foorth his flag to call the other captaines to counsell, who agreeing vnto his determination, receiued instructions concerning the order that they were to keepe in following the Spanish fleete. Then hauing giuen libertie to euery man to returne to their charge, he gaue order likewise to his vice-admirall sir Francis Drake to appoint the watch for that night, and to beare out the light.

The same night the Spanish fleete lay about 14. miles off from the fleet.

The next day following early in the morning it was vnder the wind not so farre off as Berie.

In the meane time the English fleete wanting light, because the vice-admirall sir Francis Drake leaning his place to follow fiue Hulkes, which were discouered in the euening very late, it came to passe that all the other ships stayed behind, not knowing that they were to follow, or whither to direct themselues: so that there mought haue followed some great inconuenience, had they had to do with an enemie more practized in our seas: but as it seemed by report, ẏ said vice-admirall was mooued to do this by meanes of a certaine curious diligence, and a militarie militarie suspition, growing in his mind vpon certaine and very probable coniectures, grounded on circumstances of matter considered in his mind: and therefore he gaue them the chase, thinking that they had bene enemies. But being ouertaken and their officers examined, and being knowne to be friends, or at the leastwise not enemies, he permitted thē to go their way, returning himselfe vnto the fleete the day following.

The lord Admirall notwithstanding accompanied with the Beare, and the Marie Rose comming a little behind his sterne, by reason of the clearenesse of the aire, followed the enemy all ỳ night within a Culuerin shot. By occasion whereof the rest of the fleete was cast so farre behind, that the morning after the nearest part thereof could hardly descrie the tops of the other ships, and many of thē were cleane out of sight, so that with all the force of their saile they could hardly come al together the whole day following vntill the euening.

The next day the vice-admirall sir Francis Drake being in the Queenes shippe called the Reuenge, hauing also the Roe-bucke, and a pinnace or two in his cōpanie, tooke Don Pedro de Valdes, who, as was said before, had lost the fore-mast of his ship: and hauing receiued the said Valdes as his prisoner, and certaine other gentlemen of most account that were therein, he sent the ship together with ỳ prisoners vnto Dartmouth, vnder the conduct of the Roe-bucke, & he himselfe made toward the lord Admirall, vnder whose lee he came that night. This ship or galeō of 1150. tuns, in which Don Pedro de Valdes Generall of the ships of the army of Andaluzia was, had in it three hundred and foure souldiers, one hundred and eightene mariners, brasse ordinance sixe and fortie peeces, shot and bullet 2. thousand and three hundred, powder one hundred and fourteene quintals, lead for the muskets two and twenty quintals, match nintéene quintals, and so euery ship in the fleete according to his burthen had the like prouision, as is set downe in a booke extant in the Spanish toung (which booke I haue seene at the hands of the worshipfull maister Anthony Radcliffe alderman of London.)

A great galeon with Don Pedro taken.

The same day being the 22. of July, a little before the vice-admirall sir Francis Drake was returned vnto the fleete, the Spaniards forsooke the ship which the day before was spoiled by fire: to the which ship the lord Admirall sent the L. Thomas Howard, and with him maister Iohn Hawkens, who being in the cocke-boat of the Victorie, went aboord her, and there found a lamentable sight, for all the vppermost deckes of her being tozne and spoiled by the fire, there were in her fifty men miserably brent with the powder. The stinke in her was so great, and the ship it selfe so filthie, that the lord Howard departed presently from her: and returning with maister Iohn Hawkens to the lord Admirall, they informed him of that they found and saw there: for which cause there was presently commaundement giuen, that the little pinnace of captaine Fleming should conduct her vnto some port of England, where they might most commodiously helpe themselues: whereupon it was carried to Weymouth the next day following. For all the mishap that befell this ship they vnderstood that the Spaniards had taken out of her all the best things that they could, casting off the bulke of her, together with certaine grosse stuffe therein, as for that time altogether vnprofitable.

A caract taken and sent to Weymouth.

The night last before mentioned there befell a great calme, and thereupon foure

Spanish galiasses severed themselues from ỳ rest of their fleete. This thing made the Englishmen to doubt, that that night they had resolued to giue the onset vpon some of their lesser ships, imagining that they might annoy them the rather, for that they were the rereward of the fleete, but afterwards the galiasses (whatsoeuer the occasion was) enterprised nothing, either for that they saw they could not safely do it, or else because their minds were not throughly setled vpon that which before they thought to do.

The morning following being the 22. of July, the wind was at northeast, whereupon the Spaniards came backe vpon the Englishmen with the aduantage of the wind, directing their course toward the land: the which course was not profitable for the Englishmen. Therefore to take the aduantage of the enemy, they sail about towards the west with a reasonable compasse, their ships being very good both of saile and burrage, that they might bring about their purpose. Now ỳ Spaniards to hinder their intent after they perceiued it, offered to come neare aboord to fight with them, trusting in the huge greatnesse and height of their ships: the which offer of theirs the Englishmen refused not, but began presently to bring themselues in battell aray, which the enemie perceiuing, he also did the like. In this sale the Arke, the Lion, the Beare, the Elizabeth Ionas, the Victorie, and certaine other ships were content to follow the ship called the Nonpariglia.

In the meane season the Triumph with other fiue ships of London, namely, the Merchant Royall, the Centurion, the Margerie Ioan, the Mary Rose, and the golden Lion were so far to the rereward, and so far seuered from the rest of the fleete, that the galiasses vndertooke to giue them an hard assault: but they were well entertained by the ships for the space of an houre and an halfe, vntill at the length some of the Queenes ships comming to succour the Triumph and the Lordoners, dealt so well in the matter, that the galiasses were driuen to retire. The wind came about at this present to the southeast, and afterwards to the southwest and by south, at which time a certaine number or squadron of the Queenes, together with other Merchants ships gaue assault vnto the Spanish fleete, and that so furiously to the westward of them, that the Spaniards were all enforced to giue them way: for which cause the lord admirall considering both the discommoditie and daunger whereinto the Triumph and the other 5. ships were come, he called other of the Queenes ships that were not far off, and gaue them strait commandement to follow him, and to charge the enemies which were to the westward with all their force, giuing further order to them all, not to discharge any one peece of ordinance before they should come within a musket shot of the enemy, in as much as that was the onely way to succour the ships of their friends with the great domage of the enemy. This was well performed by the Arke, the Elizabeth Ionas, the Galeon Leicester, the golden Lion, the Victorie, the Mary Rose, the Dread nought, and the Swallow: which thing the duke of Medina perceiuing, he also came forth with sixteene of his best galeons, to hinder and impeach the Englishmen in the defence of the Triumph, seeming in this case to pretend that the reason of ỳ fight did so require, whereas the regard of his honor did no lesse inforce him vnto it, because it seemed inconuenient ỳ he should in euery thing be inferior to ỳ Englishmen, & therfore he made large promises vnto those by whose meanes ỳ victorie could be gotten: howbeit the Spaniards in the end were inforced to giue place and to retire vnto their array of battell. In this conflict one William Cox captaine of a little pinnace called the Violet belonging to sir William Winter, behaued himselfe very valiantly against the enemie in the greatest heate of this incounter: but within a little while after he lost his delight, wherewith he was not very well acquainted, and his life, by a great peece of ordinance.

Toward the euening foure or fiue Spanish ships came out from the rest of the fleete from the southeastward, against whom certaine of the English ships came, and namely the May-flower of London, which discharged certaine peeces vpon the enemie with a very honorable declaration of the marine discipline, & being accompanied by other ships that were there found, they all behaued themselues no lesse diligently (which thing was not at ỹ first hoped for) shewing their desire tempered with a wish of other company. The conflict continued from the morning vnto the euening, the L. Admirall being at all times ready and vigilant in all aduentures that might fall out: and thereupon he was sometimes more, and sometimes lesse egre in the conflict, as necessitie required, giuing thereby euident example how others should behaue themselues. It might well be said, that for the time, it was not possible to see before this battell in this sea, so hard a conflict, nor so terrible a spoile of ships, by reason of the pellets that flew so thicke euery way: to conclude, there was neuer seene so vehement a fight, either side endeuoring through an head-strong and deadly hatred the others spoile and destruction. For albeit the musquetiers and harquebuziers were in either fleete many in number, yet could they not be discerned or heard, by reason of the more violent and roaring shot of the greater ordinance, that followed so thicke one vpon an other, & played so well that day on either side, that they were thought to be equall in number to common harquebuziers in an hot skirmish. The battell was not onely long, but also neare at hand, within halfe a musket shot, and that to the great aduantage of the English men, who with their ships, being excellent of saile and stirrage, yet lesse a great deale than the Spanish ships, and therefore more light and nimble, sought not at all, (according vnto their manner otherwise) to boord them, but keeping themselues aloofe at a reasonable distance, continually beate vpon the hull and tacklings of their enemies ships, which being a great deale higher, could not so conueniently beate the English shippes with their ordinance.

This long conflict being finished, and euery one retiring vnto his part, the next day following, which was the 24. of July, was passed without any thing done, because, by reason of the fight the day before, there was spent a great quantitie of powder and shot: whereupon the lord Admirall sent diuerse barkes and pinnaces to the shore for a new supplie of such munition. For her Maiestie prudently foreseeing each thing necessarie for her men, ordained that there should be sufficient prouision made, according as should be needfull, as well of victuals as of munition. It seemed moreouer that day, that the Spanish fleete was nothing grieued with that dayes respite, but were all of them indifferently glad of that breathing, in as much as thereby they had good opportunity to looke to their leaks, whereof, no doubt, they had a great number, for they had caried away many shewd stripes from their enemies, their hurts being of great likelihood so much the more, in that the Spaniards were pend vp in a narrow roome.

The English fleete deuided into foure squadrons.

This day the lord Admirall for certaine conuenient reasons deuided the whole body of the fleete into foure squadrons, by meanes of which diuision the enemy might be greatly, and more continually troubled. The first squadron he kept for himselfe: the second he assigned vnto sir Francis Drake his viceadmirall: the third to maister Iohn Haukins: the fourth to maister Martin Frobisher, and after noone he gaue order, that in the night five of the marchants ships in each squadron should charge the Spanish fleete, in as many parts at one & the same time, ỳ at midnight the enemy might be kept occupied. This order taken (as it was very likely) might haue had as good effect as it was wisely giuen: but by reason of a great calme which fell out, no part of this aduisement could be accomplished, fortune interrupting good counsell.

Flor. Archibald Napier of Marchiston whose Logarithms haue made him famous he writ upon ỳ Reuelation's & dy'd in 162 — Napier's Bones.

The next day being the fiue and twentieth day of July, or Saint Iames day, there was a great Spanish galeon left behind her company to the south-ward neare to the squadron of maister Iohn Hawkins, so that the barkes belonging vnto the great ships, were within musket shot of her: by reason hereof three of the galiasses and another ship that was in manner of a galeon, and well appointed, came from the Spanish fleete to succour this galeon. Against whom went out the lord Admirall in the Arke, and the lord Thomas Howard in the golden Lion, and drew so neare being towed by their boates, that they did them much harme, whereby one of them requiring the helpe of the rest, being succoured by them, returned vnto the fleete. And from another, by meanes of a shot comming from the Arke, there was taken away her light and throwne into the sea: the third lost her becke, whereby these two ships, the Arke, and the golden Lion declared this day to each fleete, that they had most diligent and faithfull gunners, desirous as well of the common good, as of the priuate honour of their leaders the lord Admirall, and the lord Thomas Howard which went in them: which commendation might rightly be imparted with them concerning this happy euent, because the calme was so great, that albeit the two fleetes were well able to behold the fortune of each of their friends, yet notwithstanding they could not helpe them at all: at the length the wind beginning somewhat to rise, the Spaniards tooke the opportunity thereof, and put themselues forward to helpe those of their side, and succoured them honorably. After this time the galiasses, in whose puissance the greatest hope of the Spanish fleete was founded, were neuer seene to fight any more, such was their entertainement that day.

The two fleetes notwithstanding approching nigh one vnto another began a conflict, but they continued it but a while, except one ship called the Non-pariglia, and another called the Mary Rose, which hauing taken in their topsailes staied themselues there, to make as it were a certaine experience of their manhood vpon the Spanish fleete, behauing themselues honorably for a season. In which time the Triumph being to the northward of the Spanish fleete, was so farre off, that doubting that certaine of the Spanish ships would assault her to the wind ward, they succoured her with diuers boates that got the wind easily: for the Beare and ỳ Elizabeth Ionas, euen at one instant hauing knowledge of the danger wherein the other were,drew neare vnto them, desiring both in regard of the honor of their common wealth,and also for the preseruation of their friends and countrimen,to be partakers of the like danger and difficulty.

Whereupon each ship doing her duty,they ioyntly saued the Triumph from all harme, and recouered the wind. And thus this dayes worke ended: whereof I may say that the conflict was no whit shorter then the day it selfe.

At this present the Englishmen considering the great waste of powder and shot that had heretofore bene made, the lord Admirall determined not to assault the enemy any more, vntill he were come nigh vnto Douer, in which place he should find the fleete vnder the charge of the L. Seimor, & sir Willi Winter, who were ready to ioyne with him, that thereby he might both fortifie himselfe with a great number of ships, and in this manner prouide themselues of munition from that part of the realme. Upon friday therefore being the 26. of the moneth of July,ceasing from fighting,the lord Admirall (as well for their good deserts and honorable seruice,as also to incourage others to like valor) was desirous to aduance certaine personages to the degree of knighthood, for that behauing themselues manfully, as well with their ships as their good aduise, they were worthie that degree of honour: and so much the more worthie, in that being farre separated from all courtly fauour, which many times imparteth the chiefest honours vnto the least deseruing men, they declared their valour in the eyes of either fleete. Christian IV. K. of Denmark

Therefore the two lords, viz. the lord Howard, and the lord Sheffield, Roger Townesend,Iohn Hawkins,and Martin Frobisher,were called forth,and the order of knighthood giuen them by the lord Admirall,as their generall. Knights made for seruice.

This day there came to the seruice of her maiestie in her fleete diuers gentlemen, honourable both by bloud and place,but much more in respect of their courage and vertue,for that in these publike affaires,and so necessary seruice of the warres,they willingly offered their seruice in the defence of their country, and honour of her Maiestie.

This day also, and the next, being the seuen and twentith, the Spaniards followed their course quietly before the English fleete. In which time the earle of Sussex,the lord Buckhurst,sir George Carie knight, & the captaines of the forts and castles thereabout, sent their men with powder, shot,and victuals,to the lord Admirall to assist and helpe the army. The same 27. day towards the euening,the Spaniards drew nigh to Calais vnder the coast of Picardy, and there suddenly cast anker,almost right against the left hand of the hauen to the west-ward, a little lesse then fiue miles from Calais Cleues: the English fleete also cast anker within a culuerin shot of the enemy to the westward. The Spanish fleete flieth, and is chased by the English.

In the meane season the lord Seimor,and sir William Winter ioyned with the L. Admirall, whereby the English fleete increased to the number of 140. ships of all sorts: but the Spaniards with all speede sent tidings vnto the duke of Parma of their arriuall, who at this present was at Bruges, who hauing retained with him al his seafaring mē many dayes before to this purpose,yet proceeded no further in the matter for that time,although for such time as the king had limited him, he for his part tooke as much care as might be looked for at his hands: for hauing already imbarked a certaine number of souldiers, he was carefull in like manner to dispatch the rest as soone as they should be ready, that they might take opportunity to come foorth, furnishing them abundantly with victuall and munition. But in the meane time such a chance fell out as made frustrate, not only his, but the conceipt also of the duke of Medina, and wholy ouerthrew their enterprise, for the lord Admirall hauing by certaine notice vnderstood, that the duke of Parma had prepared a great number of tuns of water, and 10000. chosen footemen to be imbarked for the ioyning with the fleete, which could not be auoided, if the duke of Medina were not compelled to auoide that place, knowing also the euident perill that was to be feared, if the Spanish fleete should be suffered to refresh it selfe, and to be furnished with so many souldiers, he applied his wits so in the deliberation of these matters of weight and importance, hauing the consent of others more practised, that no time might be lost for the furtherance of this seruice, and forsomuch as the forces of the enemy were not yet vnited and ioyned together, therefore the 28. of this moneth at midnight, he prouided 8. small ships dressed with artificiall fire, to the intent to driue the same vpon the Spanish fleete. This thing was diligently & effectually brought to passe vnder the charge of captaine Yong & captaine Prowse, two valiant and couragious men: by reason hereof the enemy was not only inforced to breake his sleepe, but the fire coming so suddenly vpon him, to cut his cables, to let slip his ankers, and to hoyse vp sailes, as the only way to saue his fleete from so imminent and vnexpected a mischiefe. Furthermore, by meanes of this tumult & confusion, the chiefe galiasse fell fowle with another ship, vpon the cable of whose anker her sterne was set so fast, that they could not loose her all the night long, so that the next day following she was inforced with her oares to make toward the land, & to draw nigh to the hauens mouth of Calais, to saue her selfe in that place: but not knowing that water, and hauing no profitable and conuenient counsell for the time, she fell vpon a sheife. This thing being in good time espied by the L. Admirall, he sent thither his greatest boate vnder the charge of Amias Preston his lieutenant, and together with him Thomas Gerard, sonne and heire to sir Gilbert Gerard maister of the Rowles, & maister Harvy two of her maiesties gentlemen & seruants, and others of the court and of his owne seruants, who fought with her, but vnequally, for that the ship being grauelled could with her force preuaile but little. In this conflict it chanced ỳ a musket shot stroke Hugo de Moncada chiefe captaine of ỳ galiasse, a noble & valiant man, in the head: the which mishap ioyned with the difficulty of stirring themselues in their defence, bred such a despaire in euery man, that the greater sort leapt into ỳ water to saue themselues by swimming into the hauen, although many of thẽ perished in the water. By this disorder of the enemy, the Englishmen being more secure, tooke her, and sacked her to their great commodity, about 100. men being entred into her, and their company increasing more and more. Whereupon monsieur Gordon gouernor of Calais, a man of good estimation in respect of his prerogatiue in that place, sent his nephew to giue the Englishmen to vnderstand, that they should content themselues with the ordinary spoile, & that they should leaue behind them the great ordinance, as a thing belonging vnto him by vertue of his office: the which message being sent the second time vnto men more intentiue vnto their pray, then other mens reason, made the gentleman to be euilly entertained by our men, in such sort, that they would haue forcibly taken from him some things about him, thinking him to be a Spaniard: whereat M. Gordon being offended, caused certaine peeces of ordinance to be discharged from the towne, and then the Englishmen departed, leauing the galiasse at his pleasure, after the losse of some souldiers, hauing notwithstanding sacked 22000. duckets of gold, appertaining vnto the king, and 14. coffers of mouables of the duke of Medina, with some other, both mony and mouables of other particular men, and some prisoners, among whom was Don Roderigo of Mendoza, and Don Iohn Gonzales de Solitzauo vnder-captaine of the galiasse.

During the time of surprising of which galiasse, sir Francis Drake vicеadmirall being in the ship called the Reuenge, accompanied with Thomas Fenner captaine of the Nonpariglia, with the rest of that squadron, set vpon the Spanish fleete, giuing them an hote charge. Within a while after, sir Iohn Hawkins in the Victory, accompanied with Edward Fenton captaine of the Mary Rose, with George Beeston captaine of the Dread nought, and Richard Hawkins in the Swallow, with the rest of that squadron, put themselues forward and brake through the middest of the Spanish fleete, where there began a vehement conflict continuing all the morning, wherein euery captaine did very honorable seruice: among the rest captaine Beeston deserued speciall praise. Vnto this fight came the lord Admirall, accompanied with the earle of Cumberland, the lord Thomas Howard, the lord Sheffield, and in that place where the fight was made, and the victory was gotten, they were publikely commended. Not farre from this place there was a great Spanish galeon seene, which was set vpon on the one side by the earle of Cumberland, and George Riman in the Bonauenture, and on the other side by the lord Seimor, in the ship called the Rainbow, and sir William Winter in the Vantgard, yet she saued her selfe valiantly, gathering into the body of the fleete, although with ill successe, for she was so beaten and so terribly rent and torne with our great ordinance, ẏ the night following, in ẏ sight of her owne fleete she sunke, her men (as it was thought) being saued. After this, captaine Fenton in the Mary Rose and a Spanish galeon met together, being cast and west one of another yet no nigher then that their shot might play safely, and lie betweene them without any great hurt. Captaine Fenton notwithstanding, and those that were with him, were worthily commended for their seruice begun and accomplished with such prosperous boldnesse. The same day the deeds of sir Robert Southwell were seene and worthily commended. Also was praised Robert Crosse captaine, who in the ship called the Hope, gaue a signe of valour to be in him.

It fell out also the same day, that the L. Henry Seimor, & sir William Winter did so throughly beate two Spanish galeons although they were of the chiefest of them, and ẏ best prouided, that they were enforced to withdraw themselues to the coast of Flanders, where for a while as they were in a very euill taking, as well in respect of the number of their men, as the manifold leakes of their ships, they were surprised, and without fight rifled by the Zelanders, and with all the men in them caried as prisoners vnto Flushing. Among these the chiefest was Don Diego Pimentello, a man very famous among this countrey people. It seemeth hereby, that in these conflicts many of the Spanish ships perished. After this battell which was made the 29. of the moneth of July, the Lord Admirall the 30. day ordained, that the lord Seimor and sir William Winter should returne with their fleete vnto their appointed office in the chanell, which was to keepe the coast from the danger that the Duke of Parma seemed to threaten. The which Duke had already lost the opportunitie of being able to do any thing for the accomplishing of the common intention of the Spaniards: because the sodaine and vnlooked for departure of the Duke of Medina with the whole fleete from the coast of Calcis, caused the whole care of the aforesaid Duke that he tooke vpon the maine land, to become void, so that he did not imbarke the rest of his men to ioyne with the Duke of Medina.

Torquato Tasso a famous Italian Heroick Poet flor. he introduc'd Pastorals into Creecill by his Aminta) upon ye Stage.

The Lord Admirall therefore determined to follow the Spanish fleete onely, so long vntill they might be shot vp to the northward, whither the Spanish fleete directed her course, but to what end, it was not knowne. And that he with the same winde might come to the Frith, which is vpon the coast of Scotland, if so be he saw the enemie passe those parts. Whereupon he thought moreouer, that it was good to stay his fleete from attempting ought vpon the Spaniard, vntill he should haue good intelligence of their purpose, thereby to worke a meane vtterly to dispers and ouerthrow them. But the Spaniards kept their course about the Ilands of Orkeney, declaring thereby, that they minded to returne that way into Spaine along by the north coast of Scotland, which as skilfull men coniectured would be to their euident danger, as it fell out afterward: perceiuing therefore the purpose of the enemie when he was shot vp 55. degrees & 13. minutes to the north ward, and 30. leagues off from Newcastle, the L. Admirall resolued with himselfe to let the Spanish fleete keepe on her way. The Spanish fleete therefore as for her owne welfare it was requisite, hauing gone on so far before, the lord Admirall resolued to put into the Frith in Scotland, aswell to refresh himselfe with new victuals, as also to dispatch certaine other matters which he thought necessary. But the wind being much westward & against him, the day following he changed his course, and turned into England with the whole fleete the 7. of August, although by reason of a tempest part of the ships put into Douer, part to Harwich, the rest into Yarmouth. And thus much of the seruice by sea, wherein God hath giuen to the English a wonderfull victorie.

The Spanish fleete passing (as aforesaid) into those seas which for ỹ most part are quiet & calme enough, whether it were driuen to and fro in them with contrary winds, or by some other fatall accident that fell out, it continued therein tossed vp and downe vntill the end of September, with fearefull successe & deadly shipwracke along the whole coast of Ireland: so that the Duke of Medina Sidonia was inforced to leaue there behind him about the nũber of 17. good ships, besides those 15. that were thought to be lost in the moneths of July and August, & so to returne into Spaine. The persons lost in Ireland were esteemed to be about 5500. so that all being accounted together, it is certainely auouched that all the ships that were lost amount to the number of 32. & the men accounted one with an other, arise to the number of 13500. or more. The prisoners also of all sorts in England, Ireland, and the low Countries, arise to the number of 2000. and more. As for the losse of the ordinance, & the commõ or priuate treasure, or whether the the Duke after he was preserued from the former fearefull & mortall dangers, lost any more ships or no, or last of all, how many he brought home with him againe into Spaine, I know not, and therefore leaue any further to write of that matter.

Now (as you haue heard before) the campe in the meane time, being kept at Tilbury in Essex, vnder the charge of the earle of Leicester L. Steward, &c. the 9. of August, her maiestie repaired thither, where all the whole campe being set in order of battell, both horse and footemen, she passed through euery ranke of them, to their great comfort and reioycing, and was lodged that night and the night next following, in the house of maister Edward Rich, a Iustice of that shire in the parish of Horndon. On the next morrow being the tenth of August, her maiestie returning to the campe, beheld the same, they being all trained in the best order that might be, and on the eleuenth of August returned to Saint Iames, and shortly after the campe was dissolued.

Her maiestie went to the camp at Tilbury in Essex.

Camp at Tilbury dissolued.

And on the 20. of August, M. Nowell deane of Paules at Paules crosse, in presence of the lord Maior and Aldermen in scarlet, the companies in their best liueries preached a sermon, mouing them to giue laud & praise vnto Almighty God, for the great victory by him giuen to our English nation, by the ouerthrow of the Spanish fleete and our enemies.

Sermon of thanksgiuing at Paules.

The 26. of August, at the sessions hal without Newgate of London, were condemned fiue persons, for being made priests beyond the seas, and remaining in this realme contrary to a statute therof made: foure temporall men for being reconciled to the Romane church: and foure other for releeuing and abetting the others. And on the 28. W. Deane and H. Webley were hanged at the Miles ende, W. Gunter at the Theater, R. Moorton and Hugh Moore at Lincolns Inne fields, T. Acton at Clarkenwell, T. Felton and Iames Clarkson betweene Brainford & Hounslow. And on the 30. of August, R. Flower, Ed. Shelley, R. Leigh, R. Martine, I. Roch. and Margaret Warde gentlewoman (which Margaret had conueied a cord to a priest in Bridewell, wherby he let himselfe downe and escaped) were hanged at Tiborne.

The 4. of September, deceased Robert Dudley earle of Leicester, lord steward of her Maiesties houshold, lieutenant generall and marshall of all England, at Cornebury in Oxford shire, from whence he was conueied to his castell of Kenelworth, & from thence to Warwike, where he was honorably enterred. In which towne of Warwike, he had in his life time, of an olde guilde (giuen him by the townes men for that purpose) founded an hospitall for 12. poore men, indowing the same with lands to the yearely value of 200. l. and better, and 52. loade of wood ready cut and made out of Kenelworth wood, &c.

Robert earle of Leicester deceased.

The eight of September, the preacher at Paules crosse mooued the people to giue God thanks for the ouerthrow of our enemies the Spaniards, and there were shewed eleuen enfignes or banners taken in the Spanish ships by our men, these enfignes were set vpon the lower battlements of Paules Church, before the preacher and the audience, (which was great) all sauing one streamer, wherein was an image of our Lady, with her sonne in her armes, &c. and this was held in a mans hand ouer the pulpit. And the same banners were on the next morrow hanged on London bridge towards Southwarke,

An. reg. 31. Sermons & thanksgiuing vnto God for victorie against the Spaniards.

The 17. of November being sunday, D. Cooper bishop of Winchester preached at Paules crosse, at the which sermon her maiestie appointed to haue bene present, for whose receiuing great prouision was made, but her highnesse comming thither was put off till the sunday next following. The 19. of this moneth being Tuesday, was this yeare kept holy day throughout the Realme, with sermons, singing of Psalmes, bone-fires, &c for ioy, and a thanks giuing vnto God, for the ouerthrow of the Spaniards our enemies on the sea, and the citizens of London assembled in their liueries, had that day a sermō at Paules crosse tending to ỹ end.

Her maistie came to Paules, and there heard the sermon.

The 24. of November being Sunday, her Maiestie hauing attendant vpon hir the priuie councell and nobilitie, and other honorable persons as well spirituall as temporall in great number, the French Ambassador, the Iudges of the realme, the heralds, trumpetters, & all on horse-backe, did come in a chariot-throne made with foure pillars, behind to haue a canapie, on the top whereof was made a crowne imperiall, and two lower pillars before, whereon stood a lion and a dragon, supporters of the arms of England, drawne by two white horses frō Somerset house to the Cathedrall church of Saint Paule, her footemen and Pensioners about her: next after rode the earle of Esser maister of her horse, leading her Maiesties horse of estate richly furnished: after him a great number of Ladies of honor, on each side of them the garde on foote in their rich coates, and halbards in their hands. At what time before she came at the Temple bar, Edward Schets Coruinus an officer of her priuie chamber, gaue her maiestie a iewell containing a Crapon, or Toade stone set in golde, which she graciously accepting, said, it was the first gift she had receiued that day. The same day also her highnes receiued a booke entituled, the Light of Britaine, by the gift of Henrie Lee of Litelcarie gentleman the author thereof. Ouer the gate of the Temple bar were placed the waites of the citie. And at the same barre the Lord Maior and his brethren the Aldermen in scarlet, receiued and welcommed her Maiestie to her citie and chamber, deliuering to her hands the scepter, which after certaine speeches had, her highnesse redeliuered to the Maior, and he againe taking his horse, bare the same before her. The companies of the citie in their liueries stood in their railes of timber, couered with blew cloth, all of them saluting her highnesse as she proceeded along to Paules church, where at the great west doore, she dismounting from her chariot-throne betweene the houres of twelue and one, was receiued by the Bishop of London, the Deane of Paules, and other of the Cleargie, to the number of more than fiftie, all in rich coapes, where her highnesse on her knees made her hartie praiers vnto God: which praiers being finished, she was vnder a rich canapie brought through the long west Ile, to her Trauers in the quire, the cleargie singing the Letanie: which being ended, she was brought to a closet, of choise companie of knights, captaines, gentlemen and soldiers, departed from Plimmouth, and on the 23. of the same month arriued at the Groine. The 26. they tooke the lower towne by assault, together with great store of ordinance victuals, cables, ropes, and other furniture for shipping.

About the first of May, they fought with the Spaniards at Puente de Burgos Bridge, where the enemy fled with losse of 700. men.

The seuenth of May, the lower towne of Groine was burned, and on the ninth our fleete set saile, the 13. the earle of Esser, with master Walter Deuereux his brother, sir Philip Butler, sir Roger Williams, and sir Edward Wingfield met with our fleete. The 16. the whole nauie arriued at Penicha in Portingale, where in despite of the enemies, our people were set aland, and the same day wan both the towne and castell of Penicha. After this they diuided the armie, whereof part marched with sir Iohn Norris by land to Lisbone, the rest with sir Francis Drake passed by sea to Castcales. The 24. our men entred the suburbs of Lisbone, where they obtained rich spoiles, and plenty of euery good thing. The 27. the armie being viewed, was found to be weake, and of small force to sustaine so great a siege as that was like to be, besides the want of powder, and some other necessaries: for which causes, after counsell taken, they left Lisbone, and came to Castcales, without any great fight or skirmish, where they tooke the castell, and thence returned for England. There followed them nine gallies, who fighting with two English marchants ships, by comming of the Queenes ships, discharging but one peece at them, they retired, & so our ships came safely to Vigo, where landing our men the towne was taken, & the countrey walked, &c. More at large this matter is published in print both in Latine and in English.

The 21. of June, sir Francis Drake arriued at Plimmouth, and on the third of July, sir Iohn Norris with the rest of the fleete arriued there also.

Great lightning and thunder.

The first of August at night, was the greatest lightning and thunder that had at any time bene seene and heard about London, in the memorie of any man liuing and yet thanks be giuen to God little hurt heard of.

Sir Iohn Norris & sir Francis Drake being returned, as ye haue heard many of their sailers and soldiers, shortly after their landing, fell sicke, and died of a stanch bred amongst them on ship-boord, other some of the so rudely behaued themselues about the countrey, about the court, & elsewhere, that many men misliked of their doings, and diuers of them being apprehended, on the 27. of August one was hanged on the end of a signe at an Inne doore in the towne of Kingstone vpon Thames, for a terror to the rest. The 29. of August, two more were hanged in Smithfield, two at the Tower hill, two beside Westminster, & on at Tiborne.

Disordered soldiers executed.

About the 21. of September, the citizens of London furnished a thousand men to be sent ouer into France, to the aiding of Henry late king of Nauar, then chalenging the crowne of France, as rightfull inheritor by lawfull succession. Also diuers shires in England sent into France to the same aide, some shire a thousand, as Kent and other shires, and some shires lesse, &c. All which companies were sent ouer into France, vnder the conduction of Peregrine Bartie lord Willoughby and Ercloy.

Men furnished into France.

The first of November, Ledowike Griuell of Wilcote in the county of Warwike

Warwike esquire, was brought from the Tower of London to Westminster, and there at the kings bench bar, beeing accessary to murder, wherewith hee was charged, was arraigned and found guiltie: but standing mute, hadde iudgement to be prest to death, and was accordingly executed in the gaole of the kings bench in Southwarke on the 14. of Nouember, on the which day for committing the murther, as principall, his man was hanged in the Palace court at Westminster. Lodowike Grisuell pressed to death.

In this moneth of Nouember, the Citizens of London were sundry times frighted by casualtie of fire about New Fishstreete, three times in one weeke, the Citizens raised, lightes hanged out at euery doore, and euery man labouring for his owne safety, as more at large appeareth in my Summarie of the Chronicles. An. reg. 32. Citizens of London stirred by fires.

The 5. of January, about fiue of the clock in the euening, before the Twelfth day, began a great and terrible tempest of wind in the southwest, which continues with great vehemencie till about 11. of the clocke of the same night, this in the citie of London blew the tiles off mens houses, ouerthrew many chimneies, and caused manie men feare the ouerthrowe of their houses: one of the three west gates of Saint Paules Church, to wit, that next to the Bishoppes palace was broken, with the bolts, bars, and lockes of the same gate, so that it was blowne ouer. In the countrey, houses and barns were borne ouer, and some of them blowne far from the places wherein they stode, besides trees in great numbers blowne vp by the rootes. On the Seas, no man can tell what harmes were done, by ships and barks cast away. About Southampton the ships and barks riding at anchor, were driuen a land and sunke, the like was neuer seene thereabouts. Tempest of wind great and violent. South west gate of Paules blown open.

In this moneth of Januarie, Nicols one of her maiesties purueiors was hanged, for that hee conuerted to his owne vse certaine prouision taken of her subiects for her maiesties vse. Purueior hanged.

The 21. of February, Ambrose Dudley earle of Warwike deceased at his house in Strande streete neere vnto Yue bridge, towardes Westminster, and was honorably buried at Warwike. Ambrose Earle of Warwike deceased.

Christopher Bales made priest beyond the sea, was conuicted of treason, for remaining in this Realme contrarie to a statute. Also Nicholas Horne and Alexander Blage, conuicted of felonie, for relieuing of Bales, contrarie to the like statute, those were all executed on the fourth of March. Bales was hanged bowelled, and quartered in Fleetestreete, at Fewtar Lane ende, Horne hanged in Smithfielde, and Blage hanged at Graies Inne lane end. Bales and other executed.

The fift of March, a Wench was burned in Saint Georges Fielde without Southwarke, for poysoning of her mistres and other.

Coppinger and Arthington preached on a cart in Cheape

The 16. date of Iulie in the morning, Edmond Coppinger and Henry Arbington gentlemen, repaired to one Walkers house neere vnto Broken wharf of London, where conferring with one of their sect, named William Hacket of Owndale in the County of Northampton yeoman, they offered to annoint him king, but Hacket taking Coppinger by the hand, said: You shall not neede to annoint mee, for I haue beene already anointed in Heauen by the Holie ghost himselfe. Then Coppinger asked him what his pleasure was to bee done. Go your way both (said he) and tell them in the city, that Christ Iesus is come with his fan in his hand to iudge the earth. And if any man aske you where he is, tel them he lies at Walkers house by Broken wharfe; and if they will not beleeue it, let them come and kill me if they can: for as truely as Christ Iesus is in heauen, so truely is hee come to iudge the worlde. Then Coppinger saide it shoulde bee done forthwith: and thereupon went forwarde, and Arthington followed, but ere hee coulde get downe the staires, Coppinger had begun below in the house, to proclaime newes from Heauen of exceeding great mercie: that Christ Iesus was come, &c. with whome Arthington also cried the same words alowde, following him along the streetes from thence by Watling streete, and Olde change toward Cheape, they both adding beyond their commission these words: Repent England, repent. After they had both thus come (with a mightie concurse of the common multitude) with an vniforme crie into Cheape neere vnto the crosse, and there finding the throng and preasse of people to encrease about them, in such sort as that they coulde not well passe further, nor bee conuententlie hearde of them all as they desired: therefore they gotte them vppe into an emptie cart which stoode there, wherin they stood not onelie vpon the wordes of their former crie, but they reading something out of a paper, went more particularlie ouer the office and calling of Hacket, Hacket, how he represented Christ, by partaking a part of his glorified body, by his principal spirit, and by the office of severing the good from the bad with his fan in his hand, and of establishing the Gospell in Europe, &c. telling also the people, where they saw him, where he late and remained: that they were two Prophets, the one of Mercie, the other of Judgement, sent, and extraordinarilie called by God to assist him in this great worke, and were witnesses of these thinges, &c. And thereupon the one of them pronounced Mercie, great comfort, and unspeakeable ioyes to all that should repent presentlie, bee obedient, and embrace this acceptable message, and opportunitie offered: And the other denounced terrible Judgement if they repented not, which should euen presentlie (also) fall vpon them, and especiallie vpon the City of London: affirming, that all that beleeued them not, were condemned bodie and soule: with other matter against her Maiestie, and some of her honourable Priuie Counsaile, which I ouerpasse. And whereas they had purposed to haue gone with the like Crie and Proclaimation, through other the chiefe partes of the Citie, the preasse was so great, as that they were forced to go into a Tauerne in Cheape, at the Signe of the Mermayde, the rather because a Gentleman, beeing of his acquaintance, plucked at Coppinger, whiles hee was in the Carte, and blamed him for his demeanor and speeches. From whence they went by back lanes, but yet crying (as afore) Repent England, repent, &c. to VValkers house at Broken Wharfe. This strange accident being quicklie blowne through the citie, all was in a buzze, and a kind of astonishment, what to thinke of the matter: and being spedilie brought to hir maiesties eares, two of hir honorable counsaile were presently dispatched vnto London, to take further notice of the whole matter: so that about one of the clocke in the afternoone, Coppinger was sent for, whiles Hacket and Arthington were brought before those honorable counsellors and others at the Lorde Maiors to bee examined; whose examinations I ouerpasse: but in the ende it was thought good, that Hacket should come to triall; so that on the twentie fire of Julie, hee was brought from Bridewell to the Sessions House, neere to Newgate, before the Lord Maior and other Justices, where being arraigned, hee was by two seuerall inditements founde guiltie; as to haue vttered and spoken diuers most false and traiterous words against her maiestie, to haue razed and defaced her Maiesties Armes; as also a certaine Picture of the Queenes Maiestie, and did maliciouslie, and traiterouslie thrust an yron Instrument into that part of the sayde picture that did represent the Breast and heart of the Queenes Maiestie, &c. He had iudgement, and on the 28. of Julie, he was brought from Newgate towards the place of execution after ten of the clocke in the morning, albeit by reason of the incredible multitude then in the streetes, but especiallie in Cheape. All the waie that hee was dragged vpon the hurdle, hee continued his counterfeit vaine; one while crying out, Iehouah, Messias; Iehouah, Messias: another while crying out thus, Iwke, Iwke, howe the heauens open wide, and the sonne of God commeth downe to deliuer me; when hee came vnder the gibbet (which reared hard by the Crosse in Cheape) hee was exhorted to aske God and the Queene forgiuenesse, and to fall to his prayers: but he in stæd thereof, fel to railing, and cursing of the Q. maiesty, most villanously, and then began a most blasphemous and execrable prayer, against the diuine maiesty God. They had much adoo to get him vp the ladder, where he was hanged and after bowelled and quartered.

Coppinger died in Bridewel.

On the next daie, being the nine and twentieth of Julie, Edmond Coppinger, hauing wilfullie abstayned from meate (as was sayde) died in Bridewell. And Arthington longe after in the Counter in Woodstreete, was reserued in hope of perfecte repentaunce. More of this yee maie read in a Booke entaunte, intituled, Conspiracie of pretended Reformation, &c.

Earle of Essex sent into France.

In the moneth of Julie, Robert Earle of Esser Maister of her maiesties horse, a yong nobleman of great valour and expectation, was by her highnesse appointed to haue the charge & conduction, as her maiesties lieutenant generall, of 4000. footemen, and some number of horsemen, and pioners, sent into France, for the assistance of the French king, against the confederates of the league. In which expedition his Lordship was also honourably accompanied, with sundrie Gentlemen and souldiers that voluntarilie followed him in this seruice. During the time that the Earle intended these French Warres, Walter Deuereux a young gentleman, and forward in Martiall actions; and brother to the earle, was slaine with a small shot before Roane in Normandie.

Proclaimation against Iesuites and Seminaries.

In the moneth of October, a proclaimation was published, conteining a declaration of the manifest troubles pretended against the crown and estate, by Seminaries and Iesuites, suborned by the pope and king of Spaine, to infect hir maiesties subiects with the poison of their seditious religion, and vnder colour thereof, to traine them vnto their pretended treasons, for the betraying of this estate vnto the Spanish tirannie and inuasion. For the better preuenting of which imminent dangers, a speciall charge was thereby giuen vnto all her Maiesties officers and ministers, vigilantlie to looke vnto their seuerall charges of the forces appointed to be in a readines, for the necessarie defence of the realme. And for the better repelling of the fraudulent attempts of those Iesuits, the very seducers of al treasons and rebellions, disguising themselues in their habit and apparell, somtimes like gentlemen, and sometimes like seruing men, and so insinuating themselues into the families and seruices of noblemen, ladies, and gentlemen, to couer themselues from suspition and apprehension: It was by the saide proclaimation prouided, that speciall commissioners shoulde bee appointed in all Shires, Cities, and porte Townes of this Realme, to inquire out this viperous broode, and such as maie bee reconciled by their enchantmentes, thereby farther charging all manner of persons of whatsoeuer degree or condition, to retain none vnto their houses, without due examination of their conditions, maner of life, & conformitie in the religion, and to keepe thereof a Register, to be shewed vnto the saide Commissioners, if they shall demaunde the same, vppon suspition of the disloialtie of anie such persons.

Jo. Antony Facchinetti Pope by the name of Innocent IX Oct. 29 1591.

Not long after the publishing of this proclaimation, her maiesty addressed commissions commissions vnder the great seale of England, generally into al parts and diuisions of the Realme, for the purposes aforesaide: The faithfull execution whereof, according to the orders prescribed, will in time discouer and vnmaske these Iesuiticall hypocrites, and diminish the ouer great swarmes of them, spreading their secret poison into the hart and bowels of this politicall bodie, indangering the sense, feeling, and life thereof. Commissions for inquisition to be made of suspected persons.

In the moneth of October, to wit, on the 28. day, Bren O Royrke, a great man of Ireland, was arraigned at Westminster, where he was found guiltie of high treason, and after for the same executed at Tyborne on the 3. of November, as hereafter more at large insueth. Bren O Roirke of Ireland arraigned.

The articles contained in the inditement against Bren O Royrke, Lorde of a great territorie and countrete in Ireland, named Breny I Royrke, who accounpted himselfe to haue descended of one of the Monarches that were in Ireland heeretofore: at his arraignement at Westminster on S. Simon and Iudes day, Maister Iohn Ly of Rathbride a gentleman out of Ireland, beeing assigned by the lordes of the councell and commissioners to enterpret betwixt the Iudges, and the saide O Royrke, who did expounde and declare in Irishe the Articles ensuing, and also all speeches vttered by the Iudges, and the said O Royrke, to the good liking of all the said Iudges and others that were present.

That the said Bren O Royrke sought the deprivation of hir maiestie from her regal seat, the destruction of hir person, and the ouerthrow of hir realme of Ireland, at Dromaher and other places in Ireland, the 2. of July, in the 28. yeere of hir maiesties raigne.

That the said O Royrke stirred vp and procured Alexander Mac Coonel, and Denell, Mac Coonell being enemies to her Maiestie and her saide Realme of Irelande: to raise forces against her Maiestie in Irelande, and after that relieued and succoured them the second of August, the twentie eight of her Maiesties raigne.

That the saide O Royrke at Dromaher aforesayde, caused the Picture of a woman to bee made, setting to her Maiesties name, and caused it to bee tied to an horse tayle, and to bee drawne through the mire in derision of hir maiestie. And after caused his Galliglasses to hewe the same in peeces with their axes, vttering diuers traiterous and rebellious words against her maiestie.

That the saide O Royrke, when Sixtus the fift of that name was Pope, and Philip the Spanish king had bent their forces against Englande, and after dispersed by her Maiesties fleete, till they came about Scotland, and so to Irelande, and arriuing there, the sayde O Royrke did entertaine, relæue, and succour, at Dromaher aforesaide, and other places, diuers of the saide Spaniards, which were employed to this intended inuasion. And after proclamation being giuen by the lord Deputy vpon paine of death, that no man should keepe anie of the saide Spaniards, but they to bee sent to his Lordeshippe, by a date limited: yet the sayde O Royrke kept the sayde Spaniardes till the sayde Lorde Deputie went with her Maiesties Forces to the North, at which time, the saide O Royrke conueied them through the North with a Spanish Frier, and an Irish Frier in their companie, and so to Spaine, without making the saide Lorde Deputie of Irelande acquainted therewith: and after receiued letters by the Frier from the saide king of Spaine, gratulatory for the entertainement he gaue to the saide Spaniards anno 30. of her maiesties raigne.

That the saide O Royrke procured and caused one Thady O Harte and his sect, with diuers others to enter into actuall rebellion against hir maiestie, so that the said Thady and others did burne Ballymote and other places, and after that done, the saide O Royrke did relieue and succor the saide traitors, that were entered into the said rebellion.

That the said O Royrke did enter and burne Ballingasse with diuers other villages in the county of Roscoman, and murthered O Kena at Corlier, Christopher Caddell, and diuers others of hir highnes loiall subiectes, and spoiled and carried away the praies of the said townes.

That the saide O Royrke did violentlie enter into the Towne of Knocke, Mullen, and diuers other villages in her maiesties realme of Irelande, in the barony of Tyrrell in the county of Sligo, and burned the saide Towne, and murthered one Chenem Wood a gentleman, with diuers others of her maiesties loyall subiectes within the said Barony of Tyrrell, and so continued his outrages, vntill he was constrained by her Maiesties forces to fly into Scotland.

That the said O Royrke being fled into Scotland, did stir vp certaine Scots there to insurrection, and to ioine with himselfe their forces against hir maiestie in the Realme of Irelande. And also offered at Glasco vnto the king of Scots, if he would maintaine him and suffer his subiects to go and ioine with him, that he would bring the realme of Ireland to his subiection: contrarie to his duty, and in contempt of hir maiesties lawes, the 9. of March, anno 33. of hir maiesties raigne.

Also it did appeare by the saide Bren O Royrke his speeches made in the tower, where he said, that if the Spaniardes had first come into Irelande, as they did into Englande, that Ireland had beene their owne, and that hee would do them a peece of seruice: which speeches were sufficient proofe of his traiterous mind towards hir graces maiestie.

To conclude, the said O Royrke, after manie speeches by the Iudge and him vttered, beeing at the barre, saide, that hee would not consent that anie inquest or Iurie should passe vpon him, vnlesse hee might haue a weekes respite to be giuen him, and all those writings sent by William Fitz Williams, Ryssen, Bingham, and others in Ireland to be deliuered him, and a good man of lawe to be assigned vnto him, and the same man of law to be sworne to deale as truelie for him, as hee would do for the Queenes heire apparaunt, if her were in his place. And besides this, that hee would haue the Queenes maiestie to bee one of the Iurie to passe on him. This his refusall to bee tryed was entered, at the request of her Maiesties learned Councell. And after entrie so made: the saide Iohn Ly, beeing interpreter, was willed by the lord

chiefe Iustice to tell him that the law was, if hee woulde refuse to bee tried by twelue men, then iudgement must bee giuen according to the quality of those Articles of treason wherewith hee was charged, and beeing obstinate therein, was guiltie of his owne death, yet that notwithstanding, hee refused tryall. Then the saide Iohn Ly expounded vnto him his iudgement, which was as ensueth.

That the saide Bren O Royrke shoulde bee taken from thence to the place from whence hee came, there to be laide vpon an Hurdle, so to bee drawne to the place of execution, there to bee hanged vntill hee were halfe dead, then to bee let downe, and his members and bowels to bee taken out and burnt in the fire, his heade to bee stricken off, his bodie to bee quartered, and his head and bodie to bee disposed at her Maiesties direction. This beeing expounded to him by the said Ly, he answered nothing, but said, if that were their will, let it be so.

Upon Wednesdaie the 3. of November, Bren O Royrke was drawne to Tyborne, and there hanged, his members and bowelles burned in the fire, his heart taken out, and holden vp by the hangman, naming it to be the archtraytors heart, and then did he cast the same into the fire, then was his heade stricken off, and his bodie quartered. But before this was done: the said O Royrke yet standing vpon the cart, Master Iohn Ly aforesaid, willed him in Gods behalfe to remember the filthy and odious treasons that hee committed against her maiestie, with many other good exhortations, to draw him to repentance, and to aske her maiestie and all the world forgiuenes; and he to forgiue all the world: yet he obstinately answered that he would not, but said, that if the M. would haue granted him space, and all such writinges, as the officers in Irelande, viz. William Fitz Williams, and Dicke Bingham sent against him, to bee giuen him to make answere to them, and also to giue him his life, that then he woulde aske her forgiuenesse, and from henceforth serue her truelie. And further saide, that hee did thinke little that the King of Scottes woulde haue sent him to the queene without safety and good assurance of his life, and remit tall of his offences. Bren O Roirke executed at Tyborne.

The said Iohn Ly did further vrge and entreat the said O Royrke to repent, and to aske forgiuenes (as afore) and likewise to forgiue, and that, that was the onely way for him to come to the heauenly kingdome; and also told him that all the standers by, requested and praied him so to do: he answered and willed them to make meanes for themselues to come to God, and that hee woulde make meanes for himselfe, but no more coulde bee had of him, but fell to his praiers. The said Ly told him againe, ỹ he could not lawfully pray being so obstinate, hard hearted, and to die without repentance, but it would not be, and so the carte went from him. Also Meylerns the Lord archbishop of Cashell in Irelande beeing present, was willed by the standers by, to counsaile the said O Royrke, and the saide Archbyshoppe requesting him to call to God, with other good exhortations: The sayde O Royrke turned vpon him and sayde, hee had more neede to looke to himselfe, and that hee was neither heere nor there. Ann. reg. 34.

Oration of her maiestie to the parliament men.

My Lordes, and you my commons of the lower house, were it not that I know no speeches presented by any other, nor wordes deliuered by any substitute, can be so deepely imprinted into your mindes, as spoken by her selfe, whose order and direction was but followed and deliuered by the lord Keeper, I could be content to spare speech, whom silence better pleaseth then to speake: And because much hath béen spoken, much lesse shall I nowe néede to speake of mine owne indisposition of nature, and small desire in priuate respect to be enriched by you present, which wordes shall not witnesse, but déeds by your former experience, hauing expended what I haue receiued, to the preseruation and defence of your selues. And thus much I dare assure you, that the care which you haue taken for my selfe, your selues, and the common weale, that you do it for a Prince, that neither careth for any particular, no, nor for life, but so to liue, that you may flourish. For before God and in my conscience, I protest, whereunto many that know me can witnesse, that the great expence of my time, the labour of my studies, and the trauell of my thoughts, chiefely tendeth to Gods seruice, and the gouernment of you to liue in a flourishing and happy estate, God forbid you should knowe anie change thereof. Many wiser princes than my selfe you haue had, but one only excepted (whom in the duty of a childe I must regard, and to whom I must acknowledge my selfe farre shallow) I may truely say, none whose loue and care can be greater, or whose desire can be more to fathome deeper for preuention of danger to come, or resisting of dangers, if attempted towardes you, shall euer bee found to exceede my selfe: In loue I say towardes you, and care ouer you. You haue heard in the beginning of this parliament, some doubt of danger, more then I would haue you to feare: Doubt only should be, if not preuented; and feare, if not prouided for. For mine owne part, I protest I neuer feared, and what feare was, my heart neuer knew. For I knew that my cause was euer iust, and it standeth vpon a sure foundation, that I should not faile God assisting the quarrell of the rightwise, and such as are but to defende. Glad mought that king my greatest enemy be, to haue the like aduantage against me, if in truth for his owne actions, he might truely so say. For in ambition of glorie I haue neuer sought to enlarge the territories of my land, nor thereby to aduance you. If I haue vsed my forces to keepe the enemy farre from you, I haue thereby thought your safetie the greater, and your danger the lesse. If you suppose I haue done it in feare of the enemy, or in doubt of his reuenge, I know his power is not to preuaile, nor his force to feare me, hauing so mighty a protector on my side. I would not haue you returning into the countrey to strike a feare into the mindes of any of my people, as some vpon the arriuall of the late naule, dwelling in a Maritane shire fled for feare farther into the middle of the land, but if I had bene by him, surely I would haue taught him to haue shewed so base and cowardly a courage, for euen our enemies holde our nature resolute and valiant, which though they will not outwardly shew, they inwardly knowe. And whensoeuer the malice of our enemies shall cause them to make any attempt against vs, I doubt not but we shall haue the greater glorie, God fighting for those which truely serue him, with the iustnesse of their quarrell. Only let them know to be wary, and not to be found sleeping, so shall they shew their owne valour, and frustrate the hopes of the enemies. And thus farre let me charge you that be lieutenants, and you that in shires haue the leading of the most choice and seruiceable men vnder your bands that you see them sufficiently exercised and trayned, so oft as néede shall require, that the wantes of any of them be supplyed by others to be placed in their romes, and that all decaies of armour bee presently repaired and made sufficient. The enemy finding your care such, and so great to prouide for him, will with the lesse courage thinke of your disturbance. To conclude, that I may shewe my thankefull minde, in my conscience neuer hauing bén willing to draw from you, but what you should contentedly giue, and that for your selues, and hauing my head by yeeres, and experience better stated, whatsoeuer any shall suppose to the contrarie, then that you maie easily beléeue that I will enter into any idle expences. Now must I giue you all as great thankes, as euer prince gaue to louing subiects, assuring you that my care for you, hath, and shall exceede all my other cares of worldly causes, whatsoeuer.

About the same time Perry a Welchman, a principal penner and publisher of Perry apprehended & hãged.

of bookes, intituled Martin marre prelate, was apprehended at Stebenheth, by the Vicar there, and committed to prison. In the moneth of Maie, he was arraigned at the kings bench at Westminster, condemned of felonie, and afterwarde sodainly in an afternoone, conuaied from the Gaile of the kings bench to Saint Thomas Waterings, and there hanged, with a small audience of beholders.

Court of assises kept in Saint Georges field for feare of the plague.

The 19. of July, the court of assise for Surrey was holden and kept in S. Georges field, a tent being set vp for that purpose, many prisoners were there arraigned, condemned and had iudgement, nineténe were brent in the hand, but none executed. This assise was ended the same day, which was thought would haue béene thrée dates worke, for the Iustices (all duties being paide) made haste awaie for feare of being infected with the pestilence by repaire of people thither.

The 11. of Aprill, a raine continued very sore more then 24. houres long and withall, such a winde from the north, as pearced the wals of houses, were they neuer so strong. Great raine.

The 14. of Aprill, a woman was brent in Smithfield for murthering of her husband. A woman brent in Smithfield.

The 16. of Aprill, Ferdinando Earle of Darby deceased at Latham, whose strange sicknes and death, gathered by those who were present with him al the time thereof, was such as followeth: his diseases apparant, were vomiting of sower or rustie matter with blond, the yealow iaundies: melting of his fat, swelling and hardnesse of his spleene, a vehement hichcocke, and foure daies before he died, stopping of his water. Ferdinando earle of Darby deceased.

Gustavus Adolphus born at Stockholm

The causes of all his diseases were thought by the physitians, to be partly a surfet, and partly a most violent distempering himselfe with vehement exercise, taken foure daies togither in the Easter weeke.

John Daillè 4th famous Minr of Charenton, a gt Critic upon yt Fathers born this year a gt favourite of Du Plessis Morney & Fra. Paolo, was in Holland & England dyd at Paris Apr. 15. 1670 æt 77.

The 5. of Aprill about five of the clocke at night he fell sicke at Knowsley, where he vomited thrice.

The 6. he returned to Latham, and feeling his health to sinke more & more, sent to Chester for a doctor of physicke.

The 7. before the comming of the doctor, he had cast 7. times, the colour of his vomits was like to sowtie or rustie yron; the substance verie grosse and fatte: the quantitie aboue seuen pintes, the smell not without offence, his waters were in colour, smell, and substance not vnlike his vomites. The same night he toke a glister to drawe the course of the humors downeward, which wrought fiue times and gaue some ease.

The 8. he toke a gentle infusion of Rubarb and Manna in a draught of chicken broth, which wrought very well nine times.

The 9. because of his continuall bleeding by mouth with his vomits, he was instantly intreated to be let blond, to diuert and stay the course thereof, but by no meanes he could be perswaded thereunto, wherefore that date onely fomentations, oyles and plaisters were outwardly applyed, to stay and comfort his stomacke.

The 10. he toke one other glister, which wrought well fiue times.

The 11. he toke one other purge which wrought with great ease 9. times vpon the humors. The same night he toke a little diascordium with the syrope of limons and scabious water, which somewhat staied his stomacke and gaue him some rest.

The 12. because his vomiting continued still, hee was moued to take a vomit, that thereby the bottome of his stomacke might be scoured and cleansed from so vile and lothsome matter wherewith he was troubled: but by no perswasion he would yeelde thereunto, notwithstanding the same date hee toke a medicine to procure sweat, but prenayled not, the very same night his water staide vpon a sodaine, to the astonishment of all.

The thirteenth, all meanes were offered to prouoke water as glister drinkes, fomentations, oyles, pultises, plaisters and stirrings, but nothing happelie succeeded.

The

The 14. and 15. was vsed an instrument called a Catheter, which being conueied into his bladder, was strongly sucked by the Chirurgion but no water followed.

The 16. day about fiue of the clocke at night, he most deuoutly yelded his soule to God.

In all the time of his sicknes, he often toke Bezars stone, and Unicornes horne, his pulse was euer good, his strength indifferent, the number of his vomites were 52. and of his stooles 29. his physitions were doctor Canon, doctor Ioynar, doctor Bate, doctor Case.

A true report of such reasons and coniectures, as caused many learned men to suppose him to be bewitched.

The first of Aprill being the mondaie before his honor fell sicke, a woman offered vnto him a supplication, or petition, wherein her request was, that it would please him to giue, or assigne her a dwelling place neere vnto himselfe, that she might from time to time reueale vnto him such thinges with speede, which God reuealed vnto her for his good. This petition was thought vaine and therefore refused.

On the fourth of Aprill, he dreamed that his ladie was most dangerously sicke to death, and in his sleepe being sore troubled therewith, he wept, sodainly cried out, started from his bedde, called for helpe, sought about the chamber, betwixt sleeping and waking, but being fullie awaked was comforted, because he found her well: here we omit strange dreames, or diuinations of diuers graue men, which happened before or about the time of his sicknes.

On the fift of Aprill, in his chamber at Kronsley about fiue of the clocke at night, there appeared sodainly a tall man, with a gastly and threatning countenance, who twise or thrise seemed to crosse him, as he was passing through the chamber, and when he came vnto the same part of the chamber where this shadow appeared, he presently fell sicke, and there vomited thrise. After Goborne one of his secretaries attending then vpon him sawe nothing, which more amazed him. The same night he dreamed that he was in fighting, and twise or thrise stabbed to the heart, and also wounded in manie other places of his bodie.

The 10. of Aprill about midnight, was founde in his bed chamber by one master Halsall, an Image of ware with haire, like vnto the haire of his honors head, twisted through the belly thereof, from the nauell to the secrets: This Image was spotted, as the same master Halsall reported vnto master Smith, one of his secretaries, a daie before anie paine grew, and spots appeared vpon his sides and bellie. This Image was hastely cast into the fire by master Halsall, before it was viewed, because he thought by burning thereof, as he said, he should relieue his lord from witchcraft, and burne the witch who so much tormented his lord, but it fell out contrary to his loue and affection, for after the melting thereof, he more and more declined.

The 12. of Aprill, one Iane a witch demanded of master Goborne, whether his honor felt no paine in the lower parts, and whether he made water as yet

or no: and at that verie time notwithstanding all helpes, his water vtterlie stopped, and so remained till he died.

Sir Edward Filton, who with other Iustices examined certaine witches, reporteth, that one of them being bidden to saie the lords praier, said it well, but being contured, in the name of Iesus, that if she had bewitched his honor, she should not be able to saie the same, she could neuer repeate that petition, Forgiue vs our trespasses, no not although it was repeated vnto her.

A homely woman, about the age of fiftie yéeres, was found mumbling in a corner of his honors chamber, but what God knoweth. This wise woman (as they termed her) seemed often to ease his honor both of his vomiting and hickocke, but so it fell out, which was strange, that when so long as hee was eased, the woman her selfe was troubled most vehemently in the same maner, the matter which she vomited, being like also vnto that which passed from him. But at the last, when this woman was espied by one of the doctors tempering and blessing (after her maner) the iuice of certaine herbes, her pot where into she streined the iuice, was tumbled downe by the said doctor, and she rated out of the chamber, notwithstanding she did still saie that she would not cease to ease him, although she could not perfectly helpe him, because hee was so strongly bewitched. All physicke wrought verie well, yet had he none or little ease thereby, his diseases were many and his vomits, with stopping his water grieuous, yet euer his pulse remained as good and perfect as euer it did in time of his best health, till one quarter of an houre before he died. He himselfe in all the time of his sickneſſe cried out that the doctors laboured in vaine, because he was certainly bewitched. He fell twise into a traunce, not able to moue, hand, head, or foote, when he would haue taken physicke to doe him good. In the ende, he cried out often against all witches and witchcraft, reposing his onely hope of saluation vpon the merites of Christ Iesus his Sauiour. see Buchanan's History of Scotland under Duffus.

One excellent spéech, can not be omitted amongst many in the time of his sickneſſe, especially the day before he departed, at which time he desired one of his doctors, whom he especially loued, to perswade him no longer to liue, because (saieth he) although out of thy loue, thou wouldest stirre vp hope of life, and doest imploie all thy wit, arte, and trauaile to that ende, yet knowing for a'certaintie that I must now die, I praie thee cease, for I am resolued presentlie to die, and to take awaie with me onely one part of my armes, I meane the Eagles winges, so will I flie swiftly into the bosome of Christ my onely sauiour, And with that he sent for his Ladie, and gaue her his last Vale or farewell, desiring her to take alwaie and loue his doctor, and also to giue him some iewell, with his armes and name, that hee might be remembred: the which thing, immediatly after his death was most honorably performed. His spirituall physitions, were the bishop of Chester, and master Lee his chaplaine.

Doctor Loppez and other Portingales executed.

The 7. of June, Rodericke Loppez, with two other Portingales, were conuaied from the Tower of London by the lieutenant, vnto the olde swan, and from thence by water to Westminster, where being brought before the kings bench barre, the lieutenant was called to bring in his prisoners, which hee there deliuered, and was discharged of them. Then was it by the court declared vnto them, how they had beene charged with high treason against her maiestie, had beene tried, found guilty and had receiued iudgement; wherefore it was demanded of them, what they could say for themselues, and should not suffer death accordingly: whereunto one of the Portingales began in his language to tell a long tale, but was willed to be short, which he answered could not be done without circumstance, &c. whereupon he was willed to holde his peace. The second answered by writing in his language, which being read by an interpreter, the Quenes attourney had saide, for it was not true. Rodericke Loppez in English made his submission, and affirmed hee neuer thought harme to her maiestie, &c. Then was called the marshall of the kings bench, and appearing, hee was charged with the prisoners, to conuaie them to the prison of the kings bench, and there to deliuer them to the Sheriffes of London, with a writte to see them executed: so were they conuaied by water from Westminster to the bishoppe of Winchesters staires in Southwarke, from thence to the kings bench, there laide on hurdles, and conuaied by the sheriffes of London ouer the bridge, vp to Leaden hall, and so to Tyborne, and there hanged, cutte downe aliue, holden downe by strength of men, dismembred, bowelled, headed and quartered, their quarters set on the gates of the citie.

Ships sent to the seas by the citizens of London.

Souldiers set out by the Londoners.

The 15. of July, by a common councell in the Guild hall was granted (according to precept from her maiesty) that fiue ships, and two pinnaces should be set forth to the seas at the charges of the citizens, the same to be readie with men, munition, and victuals for three moneths, by the last of July. More, on the 17. of July the same common councel according to another precept, granted 450. men on foote to be likewise set out by the citizens, towardes the charges whereof, a fifteene was sealled, and collected.

Great raines.

This yeere in the month of May, fell many great showres of raine, but in the moneths of June and July, much more: for it commonly rained euerie day, or night, till S. Iames day, and two daies after together most extreamly, all which, notwithstanding in the moneth of August there followed a faire haruest, but in the moneth of September fell great raines, which raised high waters, such as staied the carriages, and bare downe bridges, at Cambridge,

After the same time certaine men for coining were hanged: Also a seruenner in Holborne was hanged, bowelled and quartered, for counterfaiting of a new pattent, and setting to the seale of an olde.

Unruly youths on the tower hil apprehended.

The 29. of Iune, being Sunday in the afternoone, a number of vnrulie youths on the tower hill, being blamed by the warders of Tower stréet ward, threw at them stones, and draue them backe into Tower stréete, being hartened thereunto by sounding of a trumpet, but the trumpeter hauing béen a soldier, and many other of that companie were taken by the sheriffs of London and sent to prison. About 7. of the clocke the same night, sir Iohn Spencer lord maior rode to the tower hill, attended by his officers and others, to sée the hill cleared of all tumultuous persons, where, about the middle of the hill, some warders of the tower, and lieutenants men being there, tolde the maior, that the sword ought not in that place to be borne vp, and therefore two or three of them catching hold of the sworde, some bickering there was, and the sworde bearer with other hurt and wounded: but the lord maior, by his wise and discréete pacification, as also by proclamation in her maiesties name, in short time, cleared the hill of all trouble, and rode backe, the sworde bearer bearing vp the sword before him.

Proclaimation for staying of vnlawfull assemblies.

The Quéenes maiestie being informed of these, and sundry other disorders committed in & about her city of London, by vnlawful assemblies: And some attempting to rescue out of the hands of publike officers such as had bin lawfully arrested, whereby the peace had bin violated and broken: Her maiestie, for reformation therof, by proclamation dated the 4. of July, straightly charged all her officers, both in the city, and places néere adioining in the counties of Middlesex, Kent, Surrey and Essex, that had authority to preserue the peace, and to punish offenders, more diligently, to the best of their powers, sée to the suppression of all offenders against the peace, vpon paine to be not only remoued from their offices, but to be also punished as persons maintaining or comforting such offenders. And because the late vnlawfull assemblies & routs were compounded of sundry sorts of base people, some prentises, and some others wandring, idle persons of condition Rogues & vagabonds, and some colouring their wandring by the name of souldiers, her maiestie, for better direction to her officers of Iustice, and inquisition to be made, notified her pleasure to her councell, to prescribe orders to be published, and straightly obserued, and for that purpose a Marshall with sufficient authority to apprehend all such as should not be readily reformed and corrected by the ordinarie officers of Iustice, and that without delay to execute vpon the gallowes by order of martiall law. The orders prescribed, were the same day also by proclamation published. Sir Th. Wilford knight, was appointed prouost marshal for the time, he rode about, and through the City of London daily, with a number of men on horsebacke, armed, with their cases of pistols, &c. This marshal apprehended many vagrant and idle people, brought them before the iustices, who committed them to diuers prisons. In this time of dearth and scarcity of victuals, at London, an hens eg was sold for a peny, or three egs for two pence at the most, a pound of sweet butter for 7. d. and so the like of fish or flesh, exceeding measure in price, such was our sins deserving it. Dearth of victuals.

The 17. of November, a day of great triumph, for the long and prosperous raigne of her maiestie, at London, the pulpet Crosse in Powles churchyarde newe repaired, painted, and partlie inclosed with a wall of bricke: Doctor Fletcher bishop of London preached there in praise of the queene, and praier for her maiestie, before the lord maior, Aldermen, and citizens in their best liueries. Which sermon being ended, vpon the church leades the trumpets sounded, the cornets winded, and the quristers sung an antheme. On the steple many lightes were burned: The tower shot off her ordinance, the belles were roong, bonefiers made, &c. Ann. reg. 38.

The 5. of Februarie, two marshals were chosen and appointed in the citie of London, for the apprehending of vagrant and other disordered persons. Two marshals at London.

The 20. of Februarie fiue men for coloning and counterfeiting of commissions, were set on the pillorie in west Cheape, some of them had their eares nailed and cut off, other that had before lost their eares, were nowe burnt in their cheekes and foreheads. Coulouners set on the pillorie.

This yeere a certaine Pinnace was made by an house Carpenter, in the great green yard of the Leaden hal in London, it was of burthen about some 5. tun: this was made to be taken a sunder, & set together with vices: the same was finished, and launched out of the Leaden hall on the 12. of March in the night, being drawne by strength of men, and of horses on a sled, with wheeles made for that purpose, towards Aldgate, where against the parish church of S. Katherine Christs church, the wheeles taking fier on the axeltrees, were broken about one of the clocke in the morning, where it staied till the next night, and then was drawne to the Tower hill, where the same was calked and pitched. And on the 20. of March drawne and launched into the riuer of Thamis at the water gate by the tower, and from thence by water drawne to Radclife, and there tackled. A pinnace made in the Leaden hall of London.

The 9. of Aprill being good friday, in the afternoone, the lord maior and aldermen of London being in Powles church yard, hearing the sermon at Paules crosse, were sodainelie called from thence, and forthwith by a precept from her maiestie and counsell prested 1000. men, which was done by 8. of the clocke the same night, and before the next morning they were pursued of all maner of furniture for the wars, readie to haue gone towardes Douer, and so to the aide of the French in Caleis against the Spaniardes, but in the afternoone of the same Saturday they were all discharged: notwithstanding on the 11. of Aprill being Easter date, about tenne of the clocke before noone, came a newe charge, so that all men being in their parish Churches readie to haue receiued the Communion, the aldermen, their deputies, constables, and other officers, were faine to close vp the Church doores, till they had prested so manie men to 1596 Soldiers prested and discharged. Souldiers prested on Easter day.

Cæſar Baronius a native of Sora in Campania made Cardinal by'd at Rome. 1607.

To all Chriſtian people, to whom this declaration ſhall come to be read, or heard greeting. We Robert Earle of Eſſex, and Ewe, vicount Hereford, lord Ferrers of Chartley, Bourgcher and Louane, &c. and Charles lord Howard, baron of Effingham, lord high Admirall of England, &c. hauing the charge of a Royall nauie of ſhips, prepared and ſent to the ſeas, by the moſt excellent Princeſſe, the ladie Elizabeth, Queene of England, France and Ireland, &c. doe giue all men knowledge that the ſaide nauie vnder our charge is by her maieſtie prepared and ſent to ſerue on the ſeas, for defence of her maieſties realmes, dominions, and ſubiects, againſt ſuch mightie forces, as we are aduertiſed from all partes of Chriſtendome, to bee alreadie prepared by the king of Spaine, and by further prouiſions of men and ſhips daily ſent for, are to be mightily increaſed, to inuade her maieſties Realmes: as heretofore in the yeere of our Lord 1588. was attempted (euen when there was a Treatie continued by both their Commiſſioners for a Peace) with a greater Army then euer before in his time was ſet to the ſeas: though by Gods goodnes, and the valour and wiſedome of her Noble and faithfull Subiects, the ſame was notably made fruſtrate. And becauſe her Maieſtie hath good intelligence of perfite amitie with all Kings and Princes of Chriſtendome, ſauing with the King of Spaine, who hath this manie yeeres moſt vntruelie profeſſed openly great enimitie by diuers actions, both againſt her Royall perſon, and her people, and Countries, without anie iuſt cauſe firſt giuen on her Maieſties part. Therefore we ſaide the Earle, and Lorde Admirall, doe aſcertaine all perſons, that wee are moſt ſtraightly commanded by her excellent Maieſtie to forbeare from offending in this our Voyage of anie maner of perſons of what Nation ſoeuer, except the ſaide Kings naturall Subiects, or ſuch others borne Strangers, as ſhall giue to the ſaide King manifeſt ayde, with Men, Shippes, Artillerie, Victuall, and other Warlike prouiſions for inua-

sion of her Maiestie. Which her Maiesties commandement we meane dutifullie to obserue: and doe therefore giue streight charge to all persons that shall serue in this Naule vnderneath vs, vpon paine of extreme punishment to obserue the same, &c. R. Essex. C. Howard.

The 6. of Maie, sir Thomas Edgerton master of the Rols, was made lorde keeper, and had deliuered vnto him the great seale. The 11. he rode (accompanied of the nobilitie and others in great number) to Westminster, and there toke his place. New Lord Keeper.

On Sundaie the eight of Auguſt, great triumph was made at London, for the good successe of the two Generals, and companie in Spaine, the winning, sacking, and burning of the famous towne of Cadiz, the ouerthrowe and burning of the Spanish Naule, and other accidents, as here followeth. Triumph at London for good successe at Sea.

Anno Domini 1596. her Maiestie sent a great fleete to the seas consisting of 17. or 18. of her Royall shippes, and three of the L. Admirals, and of Merchants shippes and men of warre, and victualers aboue 100. and to these the States added foure and twenty: so that the whole fleete being assembled at Plimmouth, was about 150. saile. An Abstract of the expedition to Cadiz 1596. drawne out of Commentaries written at large thereof, by a Gentleman who was in the voyage.

This Royall fleete was commanded by the most noble and fortunate in all his aduentures, the L. C. Howard (now Earle of Nottingham) high admirall of England in the Arke Royal, wherin (by Gods fauor & her maiest. auspices) he defeated the great Spanish fleet in the yeare 1588. And by the right honorable and renowned lord, Robert D'Eureux earle of Esser and Ew, and master of her maiesties horse and ordinance: both iointly her maiesties Lieutenants generall for this expedition by sea and land; their authoritie and power being equall, sauing that the one had the precedence at sea, the other at land: the Earle was shipped in a newe built and very warlike shippe called the Due repulse. The Vice admirall of the whole fleete was the L. Thomas Howard second sonne to the duke of Norffolke in the Minoritie. The Rere admirall was sir Walter Rawleigh Captaine of her maiesties guarde and lieutenant of Cornwall in the Wallspite, both new ships. The Admirall of the fleet of the States was Ion van Duvenvoord lord of Warmoont, in the Neptunus a ship of 400 tunnes.

This whole fleet was diuided by the LL. Generals into fiue squadrons, euerie one of these Chiefs aforesaid had their particular squadron, and Vice admiral. The first squadron was lead (as it was his right) by the lord high admirall of England: the second by the earle of Esser: the third by the lord Thomas Howard: the fourth by sir W. Rawleigh: the fift by Mounsier Du venuoord: And straite commandement was giuen throughout all the fleete that euerie shippe should waite vpon the Admirall of his squadron. The Vice admirals of these squadrons were, sir Robert Southwel (son in law to the lorde admirall of England) in the Lyon, to the lord Admirall: sir Francis Vere lord marshall in the Rainbow, to the earle of Esser: sir Robert Dudley son to the earle of Leicester in the Nonpareille, to the L. Th. Howard: Captaine Robert Crosse in the Swiftsure, to sir Walter Rawleigh: and Ion Gerbrantson in the R. of Holland, vice admirall of the Hollanders. The fiue squad. with their admirals and vice admirall.

The lords Generals while they lay at Plimmouth (to arme or furnish themselues with euerie thing necessarie for so great an army) gouerned their charge with verie good iustice and martiall discipline: and for instance hereof briefly this I obserued: Two souldiers were hanged vpon the Hoe with papers vpon them shewing their offences: vpon the one paper was written: For drawing his sword, and raising mutinie against his Commander. Vpon the other, For running away from his Colours.

His name was Hammon.

There was also a lieutenant that had taken fortie pounds to discharge men that were pressed in Wales, he was disarmed by proclamation, and adiudged to repay the money and banished the army.

A souldier also in a dutch regiment that had killed one of his companions, was by order of martiall lawe tied to the partie murthered, and so throwen both into the sea: And in Faro afterward an English souldier was shotte to death by other souldiers, for killing a dutch sea Captaine. The lords Generals at Plimmouth also published a declaration of y^e iust causes which moued her maiestie to set forth this fleete against the king of Spaine: admonishing also the subiects of all other princes and states, of their danger if they ayded the said king with shippes, victuals or munition, which was translated into Italian, French, Dutch and Spanish, and dispersed.

This yr was beer Rene des Cartes L^d of Perron the famous French Philosopher, he dy'd attending upon Q. Christina at Stockholm ao. 54. 1650. His body was remou'd to S^t Genovieve at Paris where he has a fine Tomb.

The soldiers were mustred at Plimmouth and trained euery day by their Captaines, Colonels and Commanders. The chiefe Commanders and officers of the army by land (besides the earle of Esser, and the lord admirall ioint Generals as aforesaid) were, sir Francis Vere lord marshall, sir Iohn Winkfield Campmaster generall, sir Coniers Clifford sergeant maior, sir George Carew master of the ordinance, master Astley secretarie, captaine Iohn Buck prouost marshall, captaine Oliuer Lambert quarter master. The Colonels of the regiments of the army were, the earle of Sussex, sir Christopher Blunt, sir Thomas Gerrat, sir Richard Winkfield, and sir Edward Winkfield of the voluntaries: besides the regiments of both the generals, whose lieutenants colonels were, sir Mathew Morgan, and sir VVill. Woodhous, of equall ranke with colonels: and besides the regiments of the lord Marshall, of the Campmaster, of the Sergeant maior, and of the Dutch, commanded or to haue beene commanded by the Count Lodowicke, and all these regiments contained not aboue 10000. men.

The Queenes Prayer.

And in this meane time of all these businesse at Plimmouth, the Queenes Maiestie (well considering that the lord of hosts blesseth the hosts and forces of godly Princes, and giueth victorie to the faithfull armies) made a verie deuout praier to Almighty God for the good successe of the fleete, and sent it by Captaine Ed. Conway to the Generals, commanding that it should be daily saide throughout all the fleete. And here also they receiued instructions for appointing their priuate counsell for this expedition, viz. the lord Thomas Howard, sir W. Rawleigh, sir Francis Vere, sir George Carew, and sir Coniers Clifford: and here they ordred that there should be two flags vsed to be hanged in the shrowdes of the lord Admirals shippe about counsell causes, the one a flagge of the armes of England with a warning piece to call the select counsell, ſell, and the other the flagge of S. George hanged in the ſame place to call the common counſell of all ſea captaines and maſters of ſhips, and beſides that euerie ſhippe in the fleete ſhould hang vpon their miſen yarde a white pendant foure elles long.

And they ſent to euerie ſhippe certaine inſtructions ſealed vp, with ſtraite commandement to the Captaine thereof not to open them vntill ſuch time as they were come to the South cape, vnleſſe they happned in the meane time to bee ſeuered from the fleete by ſtorme, or other miſfortune: and if they happned to be taken by the enemy, then to hurle them ſo ſealed ouer boord. But for breuitie ſake I paſſe ouer thus theſe and other like preparatiues to this iourney: and come to the matter.

By theſe inſtructions the Bay of Cadiz was appointed their Rendeuous.

The firſt daie of June all the ſouldiers and mariners being embarked, and the winde comming to the Northweſt and by north, the lord Admirall of England being aboord the Arke, commanded his maſter gunner to ſhote off a piece to giue warning to all the fleete to weigh anchors and ſet ſailes: which they did incontinent, and thus being vnder ſayle (the lord Admirall leading) they ſayled the ſame daie and night as farre as a promontorie in Cornewall called Dodmans point: but the winde ſcanting they were faine to returne againe, the greater ſhips into the ſound of Plimmouth, and the leſſer ſhips into Cauſon bay by ſpeciall caution of the lords Generals, leaſt anie mariners ſhould returne againe to Plimmouth: which they alſo preuented by ſending cõmandement to the maior & gouernor of Plimmouth that they ſhould ſuffer no boates from the fleete to come aſhore.

The nert daie following being the 3. of June we ſet ſaile againe, and in a good houre, for from that time till wee came to Cadiz, we had faire weather and the winde proſperous: but we neuer came within ſight of Spaine till we came to the cape of S. Vincent, and thereabout vpon the 18. daie of the ſame moneth the L. Admirall toke an Iriſh Barke that came but a daie or two before from Cadiz, of this Iriſh man the lord admirall enquired what forces were in Cadiz, what ſhipping in the Bay, what newes of the Engliſh fleete: to whom the Iriſh man anſwered, that in the towne were no forces more then ordinarie, but in the Bay there were 20. gallies and about 50. ſaile of ſhips, whereof foure or fiue were of thoſe Gallions of the kings which are called the twelue Apoſtles, & two great Galiaſſes, three Fregates, three Leuantiſcas or Argoſies, two great Biſkaines, the reſt were merchants ſhips rich, and moſt of great burden, and the lading of theſe ſhips was munition, coine, wine, oyle, ſilkes, cloth of gold, gold lace, quicke ſiluer and aboue 1500. quintals of ware, and diuers other rich merchandiſe: and ſome were bounde for the Indies, ſome for Britaine, ſome for Liſbone, and ſome for other places: and that there was no ſpeech (that he heard) of the comming of any Engliſh fleete thither. By this time the Earle of Eſſex was come aboord the Arke, and there was a flagge of the armes of England hanged in the ſhrowdes, and after conſultation, and euery man returned to his owne ſhippe, the lords Generals haſtened their courſe to Cadiz, and vpon the 20. day of this moneth being ſundaie early in the morning we came all to anchor within halfe a

The Generals attempted presently to land neere to this Frierie at a descent called the Caletta, they filled many boates and barges with souldiers, and leaders, but the weather was verie fowle, and the water went so high that two boates with some 80. souldiers armed sanke, whereof some were drowned, the others by helpe of other boates were saued, and set aboord their owne ships againe. This mischance did not happen as anie token that God was displeased with our enterprise (as the sequell shewed) but that we mischose the daie attempting so great a worke vpon his daie of rest. And it was also a mercie of Almighty God: for we could not haue landed there without great difficulty and much losse, for besides that the place was strong of it selfe, the Spaniards had brought all the strength that they could to it.

Gaspar Bartholin her famous Physician born at Malmoe in Sweden the way Father to Tho: Bartholin

The next daie being munday early in the morning, the Spanish fléete which rode at our comming before the towne vnder the fortes and bulwarks thereof (by the aduise of Diego Soto master of the S. Philip the Admirall ship) shot with the tide within the point of the maine land, and Castle of Puntall in the straites of the Bay: immediatly after the English fléete weighed, and came to anchor néere the same place where the Spanish fléete rode before, and there the fort S. Philip and the rest plaide vpon our ships with their great ordinance, and the Gallies were very busie: but by the Generals commandement sir Iohn Winkfield in the Vantguard hauing some other lesser shippes ioined to him, tooke them to taske, and so tamed them that they were glad to séeke to saue themselues; they crept by the shore, first to the Puntall, and from thence into the Bay, and so to the Bridge called Puente de Suaco, where striking their masts and by helps of certaine engines vpon the Bridge (contrarie to the expectation of the Generals) they went rounde about the Isle of Leon, and came to Rota. But the eie and care of the lords generals was chiefly fixed vpon the Gallions and other great ships before mentioned: whereupon they resolued to send that most noble Gentleman and great sea Captaine the lord Thomas Howard to encounter with them in the Nonpareille, adioyning to him some fewe ships of the Quenes (for the place was so narrow that hardly ten ships could come to fight:) The other that were employed in this enterprise with the lord Thomas, were sir Walter Rawleigh, sir Robert Southwell, sir Francis Vere, captaine Robert Crosse (aboord whome the Earle of Sussex was) sir George Carew in the Mary rose, and Captaine Alexander Clifford in the Dreadnought and the Alcedo of London. And although it were agréed in counsell that the lords Generals should not hazard their shippes of greatest burthen and of most charge in those straites and holes; yet the earle of Essex could not endure to be onely a looker on in so honorable an action, but he put in amongst the thickest of them, and sought very gallantly: which the lord Admirall seeing (and being not able to bring in his owne shippe) tooke his long boat and went presently aboord the Pinnace, & went into the fight also, taking with him his noble yong sonne now the lord William Howard of Effingham, being at those yong yéeres very desirous to séeke and share honor with the oldest captaines at all hazards.

The Battaile at sea.

The

This fight lasted till past none, and then the Gallions being cruelly rent and torne, and so much slaughter in them, that the blood gushed out at the scoppit holes, some resolued to flie to Porto Reall, some to burne their ships, some ran their ships aground: diuers Spaniards lepte into the water, whereof some swamme ashore, some were drowned, some taken, some slaine. The L. Admirall beholding this miserable spectacle of a conquered fortune in these distressed Spaniards swimming about their ships and craving mercie, had compassion of them, and toke his boate and rewe vp and downe amongst them forbidding these cruelties, & preuenting the firing of the Spanish ships so much as was possible, which the Spaniards remaining aboord in this desperate beaten estate chiefly intended, and first they fired the S. Philip a ship of 1500. tunnes, by whose side a pinnace of sir Robert Southwels was burned, but the men were saued. They fired also the S. Thomas, and the S. Iuan (as Signior Fantonio affirmed to me in his house in Cadiz) but the other two Apostles S. Mathew, and S. Anders ships of 1200. tunnes apiece were preserued from fire, and flats, and brought safe into England.

The battaile by sea being thus happily fought and victory obtained, the lords Generals (not willing to lose any opportunity) presently set in hand the landing of the souldiers, and in a verie little space there was such diligence vsed, that the earle of Eſſex was aland neere the Puntall about a league from Cadiz, with 8000. shot and pikes: he was accompanied with the earle of Sussex, the earle Lodowike of Nassaw, the lord Harbert sonne and heyre to the earle of Worcester, the lord Bourke of Ireland, sir Edw. Winkfield, sir Robert Drury, sir Thomas German, sir Anthony Standen, master S. Laurence, master Alexander and master Will. Ratcliffes brothers, and diuers other gallant gentlemen aduenturers.

As soone as this lord Generall was landed he dispatched presently three colonels with their regiments to the Puente de Suazo, the Sergeant maior, and sir Christopher Blunt, and sir Thomas Gerard, with charge so to empesch the passage of that bridge that there might be no meanes left for any succours to come into the Ile of Leon to helpe the Spaniards, and to breake downe that engine, by helpe whereof the Gallies might passe, and also to surprise or force the Castle at the bridge foote called by the dutch Herods house: they did somewhat ruinate the bridge, and returned to Cadiz that same night. But the dutch (which presently after the Earles landing toke the fort at Puntall) toke also afterward that Castle of Leon at the bridge foote (as E. Meteranus writeth) but I neuer heard so much before. The Earle of Eſſex hauing for his guide Captaine W. Morgan, marched apace with his army toward the towne, although in no hope to lodge within it that night: vpon the way he was encountred with 400 or 500. cauallcroes or horsemen of Xeres, and 600. or 700. footmen, but they were without any great difficultie beaten backe, and ran into the towne, offering to shut the gates; but the Earle made such haste as he entred with his troopes pell mell with them: and some made such shift to get into the towne that they climbed ouer the wals, shewing our men by that meanes another way to enter the towne if they could not haue got in at the gates, which they ſone learned and put in practiſe: and by this the L. Admirall was landed with his battaile of ſome 12. or 15. hundred, and followed the earle with a very round march: hee was accompanied with all the chiefe commanders by ſea, and captaines of ſhips and their retinue, as the lord Thomas Howard, and ſir Walter Rawleigh, who was not able to march ſo faſt as the reſt, by reaſon that he was hurt in one of his legs with a ſplinter in the fight with the Gallions. There were alſo in this march the yong lord William Howard, ſir Robert Southwell, ſir Edward Hoby who bare the lord Admirals enſigne, maſter W. Paget, ſir R. Leuſon, maſter Philip Woodous, maſter John Townesend, maſt. Ri. Weſton, maſter Mathew Browne, captaine Robert Manſell, maſter Miles Corbet, maſter George Bucke, maſter John Morgan, maſter Th. Woodous, and diuers other gentlemen aduenturers, and men of qualitie, whoſe names I doe not now remember.

When the lord Admirall came into the towne, he found the Earle of Eſſex ſkirmiſhing and fighting with the Spaniards, who fought and fled ſtill before him, others threw downe ſtones from the battlements of their houſes, which annoyed much our ſouldiers, and ſome were hurt thereby. But after that the forces of both the Generals were ioyned together, the fight and reſiſtance of the Spaniards continued not long, but they fled into the Caſtle and into the Ciualda or towne houſe in the market place adioyning to the Caſtle, and into other their ſtrong places. And here ſir John Winkfield riding vpon a nagge vnarmed, hauing beene hurt before in the thigh was ſhot in the head from a loop in the Caſtle, whereof hee inſtantly died: yet before night the Ciualda was taken, and therein the Generals lodged that night, and they were maſters of the whole towne (the caſtle and the fort S. Philip excepted) both which alſo in the morning were rendred the one to the earle of Eſſex, and the other to the lord Admirall, and their red enſignes diſplayed vpon the tops and wals of them. And the next night the earle lodged in the Frierie of S. Francis: and the lord admirall in the houſe of Don N. Ruygoes whoſe ſonne was captaine of S. Philips fort, where he had three or four hundred pikes and ſhot, and eight faire braſſe pieces of Ordinance, & wine and bread good plentie, as I my ſelfe ſawe being at the taking in of this fort by the commandement of the Lorde Admirall.

The conditions whereupon the Corrigidor and the reſt of the chiefe of the towne yelded were theſe: they ſhould haue their liues ſaued, and onely their wearing clothes permitted them: all the reſt of their goods and wealth ſhould be ſpoyle and pillage to the ſouldiers, and ſhould pay beſides to the Generals for their ranſome fiue ſcore thouſand ducates: and for the payment hereof, the Generals tooke forty of the chiefeſt Regidores, Caualleroes, Clergie men and merchants for Rehenes or Pledges, and brought them into England, and here kept them till the money was paide. And now proclamation was made that no Engliſh man ſhould offer violence to any religious perſon, to any woman, or childe, or any other of the Spaniſh nation in Cadiz: and the Generals ſent away boates, barges, and pin aces, firſt with the Ladies and the religious, and then the men & all other of the inhabitants of Cadiz to Porto Santa Maria, excepting the Rebenes, and the prisoners of some English Captaines. The women were suffred by the Generals to weare so much apparell as they were able to beare vpon them, and all their iewels: and because none of them should be spoyled by our ruder soldiers and mariners, the lords Generals themselues stod at the water gates and saw their safe imbarking. The lord Admirall also let go the rich Bishop of Cusco, who was his prisoner without any ransome, onely he promised to send him a horse which he hath not yet performed. In this interim also the L. admirall appointed the rereadmirall to take some of the lesser of the Queenes ships and merchants ships (that drew but little water for their more safetie) to go after the Spanish shippes which were fled to Porto Reall, and there either to take them, or to sinke or to fire them, if they would not yeld. But whiles this was determined, offer was made of two millions to the earle of Esser for the sauing & ransoming of those ships and their lading: The L. admirall would by no meanes agree that the ships should bee left to the Spaniardes, nor ransomed: but onely the merchandice. But the Duke of Medina Sidonia Admirall of Spaine decided this controuersie: for he being then at Porto Santa Maria, and alwaies ill affected to them of Cadiz, gaue order that the next morning before daie the whole fleete at Porto Reall should be fired, which was put in execution: yet neuertheless our men made such haste thither that they recouered much merchandise and diuers pieces of ordinance & other things, but none of the ships could be saued.

Thus this whole fleete which was valued by some of the best of the Spaniards at tenne or twelue millions of ducates, was all either taken, sunke, or burned in a short space. In the towne of Cadiz were 1500. pipes of wine, 2000. chests of sugar, great store of rice, much coine and plate and rich furniture in their houses: The K. had also much rich merchandice in his Duaines or Warehouses, and a great deale of treasure in the castle, all which should haue beene preserued (and all what soeuer else was the kings peculiar goods) for her maiestie by her right, if some had, or could haue performed the trust committed to them. But the losses which pinched the king most (his ships excepted) were the 1200. pieces of ordinance which were taken or sunke in his ships and his fortes, and armor in his armorie to arme fiue or sixe thousande men. All which riches, treasure, munition, merchandice, victuall, &c. of the kings and of his subiects there aboord the ships and in the towne, I heard valued by Pedro de Castilla the kings Iudge of the contratation, and Don Iuan de Soto a principall seaman, and Signior Fantonio the rich Florentine, three graue and well experienced men) to bee worth twenty millions of ducates at the least.

These things being thus happily atchieued, and sir Iohn Winkfield herle honorably buried in Santa Cruz the chiefe church of Cadiz, with all the funerall solemnities of warre, the drums and trumpets sounding dolefully, the shot bearing the noses of their pieces downward, the pikes trayled, his body was borne by six knights, the Generals threw their hand kerchiefs wet from their eies into the graue, and at the instant the most part of all the shot great and small about and ashore were discharged.

The 27. day of June being sunday, the LL. Generals with all the Chiefs and gentlemen of the army heard a sermon at S. Francisco, where after dinner they made a great many knights, euen all almost that did deserue it, or affect it, or not neglect and refuse it (as some did:) this great Indulgence of fortune, and exceeding accesse of honor to them in this atchieument, made them not onely bountifull, but prodigall of honor. But two verie worthie Captaines (which were hurt in the fights at the entring into the towne) were knighted before the towne was all won: sir Samuel Bagnol, and sir Arthur Sauage. The rest which were knighted at the Frierie and afterward, were,

There was great dispute about the keeping of Cadiz, and the opinions of all the olde souldiers and seamen asked: but because it appeared not howe it mought certainly at all needes be relieued with men, munition, and victuals,

and for other causes best knowen to the Generals, it toke no effect.

The nert day being munday, the L. Admirall went aboard, to set things in order in the fleete, and to make readie for a new enterprise: and by his example also to draive the sea men and mariners to their shippes that were loth to come out of the towne.

About this time the L. Admirall receiued (from his olde acquaintance, since 1588.) the duke of Medina Sidonia Admirall of Spaine, two very honorable answeres to two letters which hee had before written to him about the exchange of prisoners, Spanish for English in the Gallies: the Dukes answere was that he liked well of the motion, and would do in it so much as lay in him. But (he saide) that that charge was more particularly in the Adelantado of the Gallies, to whom he would write, which he performed so effectually, that within a day or two the Adelantado sent a principall Captaine to the L. Admirall, and he made a full agreement for the exchange of English prisoners in the Gallies for Spanish prisoners in our Hoyes: and vpon the fift of July following, about 40. of our English prisoners were deliuered aboard the Arke by the Gally called La fama, and promise for the rest which was afterward duly accomplished. This gally La fama wherof Don Iulian Hurtado was Captaine, came from Rota to the English fleete with a white flagge of safe conduct, according to the order of warre, but an ignorant sea Captaine made a shot at her as she passed by him, and hurt and killed three men in her, whereat the lord admirall was much grieued, and greatly offended with the Captain, and threatned to haue hanged him: but the Captaine of the Gally and Don Payo Patin one of the Reyenes, made earnest suite to the L. Admirall for his pardon, which they obtained.

The Earle of Ellex staide all this while in the towne with the rest of the commanders & captaines and companies of the army by land, which he suffered not to be idle. Vpon the 28. day the ordinance was taken from the wals, Castles and fortes. Vpon the 30 day of June in the night hee made a rode into the Ile, and burned and rased and spoyled, all that mought serue the enemie to anie strength or reliefe. The nert day he set pioners aworke to rase and deface the forts and castle in the towne. The first of July, the Tower of the Cualda was battered downe. And lastly, vpon the fourth of July set the whole towne on fire (the Churches excepted) and saw all his men embarked, & came aboard last. And the nert day the whole fleete set saile, & steerd their course to the westward: and in the mean time besides the negotiation (which I spake of before with the gallies) the 6. of July the Generals sent a Pinnace into Barbary with 40. slaues which had escaped out of the gallies & came to them for succour. And about this time Sir Anthony Ashley was sent into England to make report to her maiestie what had passed hitherto, and for other secret affaires of the lords Generals.

From this time till we came to Faro, there was nothing done, but often metings for consultation about their nert enterprise, & how to get victuals & fresh water: saning that the Gallies in a calm caught vp a flieboat of ours bound for Engl. In this course we passed first by Rota, and by the point of

Chipions

Chipiona nére vnto which lie the Rockes called the Salmedinas, and by the Duke of Medinas Tower, or Almadzaua for Tunny fishing: and by Arenas Gordas in the mouth of the Bay of S. Lucar, and by Aymont in Portugall, and then we doubled the cape S. Mary, and so came before Faro a principal towne of Algarua, where they resolued to land.

But first the Generals sent both their Lieutenants of their ships, sir Amias Preston, and sir Will. Mounson, and Captaine William Morgan, to discouer the passage to the towne by the channel in their Pinnaces in the euening, and to view the place, to espie the forces, and to learne what flagge that was, which they saw at their comming before the towne, and to seeke for fresh water and victuals, and such like instructions. They brought answere the next morning, that the people were fled and had carried away their goods, and that they could not as yet finde any fresh water nor victuals: but yet for all this in the afternoone the lords Generals landed with all their forces: but the L. Admirall being not well, and hauing little hope of any reliefe there for their wants, returned aboord his shippe taking sir Edward Winkfield with him, who was lame of a hurt which he had receiued at Cadiz in one of his legges, and indéede it was the earle of Essex his earnest desire that the L. admirall (séeing him so ill) should returne to his ship and take that valiant knight with him.

The Obedience of the Gallies. Whilest the lord Admirall lay here at anchor, the fleete of the Gallies came, and anchored close by the English fleete: but the L. admirall sent a ship presently to them to command them in his name to depart from thence and goe further off: which commandement they obeyed as readily, as if the Admirall of Spaine had sent it, and I rather note this because I thinke it was the first commandement that they euer obeyed, being giuen them by an enemy vpon their owne coasts.

The earle of Essex being landed (as I said before) and being desirous to doe some exploit vpon the Terra Ferma of Spaine, being also prouoked hereunto the rather by the enemy (who made braue shewes of horse and foote vpon the coast all alongst as we sayled by) he marched with his army that night to Faro (being about some two leagues from the place where wee landed) hee tooke the towne with ease, for the inhabitants had abandoned it and carried away most of their goods (as he was enformed before) there was in the Nunnerie some stuffe left, and in the Bishops palace, and a Library of bookes valued at 1000. markes: there was also in the towne some fruites, and wines, and a few hennes: and in the fort there was some pieces of great Ordinance, whereof one was the fairest and longest Culuerin which the king of Spaine had, as it was esteemed. And here the earle appointed Captaine Brett a valiant gentleman, and of very able body, to march into the Countrey with 800. souldiers of the strongest, chosen out of diuers bands: he marched some two or three leagues and found a towne called Lotha which he tooke and brent, without any resistance, but he saw a farre off troupes of horse and foote, (but none) approched him: but if any of his soldiers straggled, or were left sick vpō the way (as many were) hee found them at his returne pittifully mangled, some with their hands chopt off, some had their nostrels slit, and others killed.

In

In this iourney he got aboue a hundred Cowes and Oxen, and some Swine, for victuall, and was brought by an old Portugall to a well of good fresh water, but small store: and so returned to Faro to the lord Generall, who after he had sacked and fired the towne, the third day returned to the fléete.

And now being all aboord againe, the Generals with their counsell helde a new consultation what was elſe to be done, and how victuals and fresh water mought be supplied: some had great desire to go for Lagos: but ere any thing was resolued, the fléete was past the cape S. Vincent where a strong Northerly winde toke vs and forced vs to hale off into the sea some 80. leagues from the Cape, and towards the Iles of Azores: and here they called a counsell againe, and resolued to go for those Islands, there assuring themselues to haue plenty of fresh water and victuals, and there to lie for the Caracks and West Indian fléete, and to encounter with the 25. Spaniards men of warre, which lay at the Iles (as the Generals were aduertised.) But neither did this purpose hold, for the windes comming contrarie, they held a new consultation, and that was to beare in with the coast of Spaine and Portugal, and to search what shipping was in the harbours thereof as they passed. And this course was thought the best, and kept for the most part vntill we came before the Groyne & Ferola. From thence maister George Buck was dispatched by the lords Generals to her maiestie, to make relation of that which had passed in the army since the fléetes departure from the Bay of Cadiz: and other particular busines of their Lordships for her maiesties seruice.

The LL. Generals thus being come before the Groyne the first of August, and finding no shipping there nor in Ferols, now lastly resolued to come for England, and the rather by reason of the generall wants of victuals and fresh water, and for that there were many sick men in the Wastspite and in diuers other ships of the fleete, and for a great leake that was sprung in the Vauntguard, and for that (which moued their Lordships most of all) her maiesties commandement that they should stay forth but fiue moneths in this voyage. All which reasons duly considered, the lords generals now shaped their course directly for England, and vpon the 7. and 8. daies of August they arriued with their whole fleete in Plimouth safely thanks be giuen to Almighty God, who hath so blessed her maiestie and her ministers in all her desseins and enterprises, with so much honor and good successe, as he hath made her the mirrour of all princely felicitie in this world. Thus far of the expedition to Cadiz. The first of August.

Duke of Boloine came into England.

The twentie nine of Auguſt, the Duke of Boloine being arriued in England, came to the Court then at Gréenewich, and there by her Maieſties othe confirmed the league of amity and peace betwixt the two Realmes of England and France: and ſhortly after ſoldiers were ſent ouer to aide the French, in their wars againſt the Spaniards.

The Earle of Shrewſburies ambaſſage into France.

Preſently vpon the departure of the Duke of Buillon, the right honorable Gilbert Earle of Shrewſbury was ſent into France to take the oth of Henry the fourth French king, for the confirmation of the ſaide League, as alſo to inueſt the ſaid king with the order of the Gartar: the manner whereof being carefullie obſerued by M. William Segar then Somerſet Herault, I haue ſet downe according vnto his owne deſcription as followeth.

We departed from Douer on thurſday the 16. day of September 1596. and arriued at Dépe in France the Thurſday ſeauen night following, where both the Ambaſſadors, the right Honorable the Earle of Shrewſbury, and ſir Anthony Myldmay Knight, were very nobly entertained, and feaſted, the firſt night by the Commander of Dépe, Mounſieur de Chaſte, who was inuited the next day to dinner and requited by the Earle, and ſo during the vnſhipping of their horſe, and other their prouiſions, their Lordſhips paſſed the time in hunting for two or thrée daies.

Sunday the 27. following, the Earle ſet forwarde to Roane, the capitall Towne of Normandie, and was mette on the way by Mounſieur Feruaques, and his traine, who conducted his L. that night to the Caſtle of Clere, where he lodged.

Tueſdaie his L. proceeding on was encountered within two miles of the Citie of Roane, by the Duke Mountpenſier, the kings Lieutenant thereof, and about 200. horſe, of nobles and gentlemen his attendants, who bringing his Lordſhippe to his lodging, after ſome ceremonies of honorable entertainement tooke his leaue: his Lordſhips lodging was in the market place, called Le March Veux, in a very faire houſe, furniſhed with rich hangings and tapits, thrée clothes of eſtate, and two ſtanding beds.

The Wedneſday ſeuenight following, being the firſt of October, the king made his rotall entrie into Roane, in which entring ſundrie meſſages paſſed betwéene the King and the Ambaſſadours, praying them not to thinke the time long of his comming, for that he was to attende a preparation which the townes men had purpoſed for his welcome, hauing neuer bin in the citie before: the maner thereof, for it was verie princelie, and full of rare deuiſes, I haue thought good to inſert.

In the ſuburbes of the towne on the farther ſide of the riuer, was newlie erected for the king a moſt ſtatelie towre, made of plaiſter of Paris, where his highnes ſtoode with his Nobilitie to beholde the companies, and ſeuerall Claſſes both of horſe and foote, and to receiue the townes mens ſubmiſſions as they paſſed, which was moſt humblie performed by fiue of euerie company, and of his Maieſtie moſt gratiouſlie accepted.

Firſt the Order of the Friers Capuchins followed their Croſſe, being of wood, vpon which a Crowne of Thornes and three great nayles were fixed, their habit was Ruſſet, all bepatched, girt with hempen cordes, shirted with haire-cloth, and bare ſoted, wearing ſandales onely. This order may haue but one habit for a man during his life, they feede ſtanding, and ſleepe ſitting, they liue by almes, and are much eſteemed of the people.

Secondly, the Gray Friers being Cordelers followed their Croſſe of ſiluer. This order haue a Librarie in their houſe, containing ſixe and fiftie paces in length, with three rowes of deſkes all along, replenished with manie excellent bookes both of Philoſophie, and the Fathers, the moſt parte Manuſcript. Large Library of bookes in Roane.

Thirdly followed the Carmelites, and Celeſtins. Fourthly, the Jacobins. Fiftly, the Auguſtins. Then proceeded the Prieſtes, and Chantries of the towne in their Surplices, ſinging, bearing 42. Croſſes of ſiluer, which was the iuſt number of the pariſhes, and chappels in the towne, and euery croſſe had a great banner of a Saint, richly painted thereon, beſides two tapers of white ware in aultar candleſticks, borne by youths, and euery taper armed with an Eſcutchion of the kings armes.

Then followed the Mint-maſters of Normandy, the merchants of the Vicountyſhip of the Riuer, Receiuers, Cuſtomers, Treaſurers, Aduocates, Procurators, and other officers of the palace.

Then came Batchelers, and Maſters of Arte, Doctors of Phyſicke, Ciuill lawe, and Diuinitie. All theſe degrees were clothed in very faire and reuerent garments, of damaſke, ſatten, and blacke veluet, long and large, and for the moſt part riding vpon mules, diſtinguiſhed by virgers that made way before them.

Then followed in Gownes of purple cloth, and hoods of the ſame, with ſquare cappes on their heads, the Officers and Councellers of the Chamber of Normandie, in which is kept their high court of Chancerie, and Parliament.

Then came riding on mules to the number of fortie in Scarlet, called De la robe rouge, being Iudges, and Officers of eſtate, belonging to the ſaide Chamber.

After them tooke place, the foure Preſidents of Normandie in Robes of ſcarlet, furred with Calaber, wearing on their heads great caps of maintenance of blacke veluet.

Then proceeded the ſeuerall bandes of the Towne, containing foure regiments of foote, and three cornets of horſe, ſuted in greene, ruſſet, and carnation ſatten, and veluet, garniſhed with ſiluer lace, their hats, plumes, ſcarfes, and ſhoes white: the furniture of their muſkets, feather ſtaues, and partiſans, ſutable to their colours, their enſignes, cornets, and ſtandards all white, emblaſoned with the kings armes, and inriched with his deuiſe, which was a Roman H Crowned, betweene two branches (as I take it) the one an Olive, the other a Laurell, his motto, or word, Has dedit, His dabit vltra.

After

After vpon great Coursers rode fortie enfant d' Honeur or Henchmen, the properest and choisest young men of the towne, suted in greene Velvet horsemens coates, richlie laced with Siluer, their Caparisons and trappinges answerable, their plumes, scarfs, and bootes white.

Then came all the Gallauntes and young Gentlemen of the French court (courretting and fetching vp their great horse) accompanied with diuers of the Nobilitie, as Barons, Vicountes, and Earles, the Knightes of the Saint Espirite were knowne by their blewe Ribandes, and white Crosses hanging thereat.

The Chauncellor Mounsieur Cheuerny rode alone after his mace.

The Archbishop of Rhemes, did ride betweene the Bishops of Anlow and Eureux.

Then marched the Kinges three guardes after their Drummes and Fifes. The Swissers with shotte and pikes, the Scots and French with Halberds, the Kings Trumpets in horsemens coates of greene Velvet, and verie well mounted, then tooke they place, and sounded oftentimes, as they passed. Mounsieur Suraine M. of the ceremonies, and one of the Captaines of the guarde rode together, after whome followed three Heraultes, Anlow, Picardie, and Brytaine, inuested in rich coates of Purple Velvet, embrodered with the Armes of France, each bearing his name in capitall letters of gold vpon the left manch.

Then followed two Sergeants of Armes, carrying maces before the person of the King, who that daie was mounted on a white Courser, his owne apparell plumes, and horses furniture white, wearing the order of the Saint Espirite at a broade blewe Ribande about his necke. About his person were his Guarde of Scottes, and certaine footemen in white. And after him followed the Duke de Neuers, Duke de Namours, Duke Ioyeuse, and others.

Leaue wee the King going to the Citie, and let vs by the waie of preparation know how the same was ordered for his entertainment.

Some fiue or sixe daies before the King made his entrie, the Bailiffes of Roane commanded by sounde of Trumpet that all the stretes through which his maiestie shoulde passe, shoulde be clensed, sanded, and their signes taken downe, hanging foorth their fairest coueringes, and Tapits at their Windowes, and to crie Viue le Roy as hee passed. All which beeing in a readines, the Windowes full of people of all degrees, the stretes garded with certaine ensigns of muskets, and infinite numbers of common people in euery quarter.

His Maiestie by this time was come to an vtter gate betweene the bridge and the Suburbes, which in the late warre had beene more than halfe ruined. This gate in two or three daies with plaister of Paris they had halfe repaired, and the other halfe remained in ruin for explicatiõ of a deuise, which was thus. On the toppe of the Gate were certaine personages made of Plaister, some carrying of stones, some morter, some heauing, some leueling, and al so liuelie, that they seemed to want nothing, but verie motion. Vppon the arche of the part repaired sate Apollo, with his lyre, vnder whome in goulden letters, was written this prophesie.

Henrico totum reparabitur auspice regnum.

And ouer the Portall,

Gallicarum vrbium restitutorem.

The king being past this gate, hee came to the first Gate of the Bridge, which was made of twelue columns about fourteene foote of height, the base bodie, Capitall, Freeze, and Cornish, after the order Ionica. Ouer the Arche thereof in a table of embossed worke sate a personage representing Normandie, resting her backe against two Leopardes (the Armes of the Dutchie) in her left hande, she helde a Hart, her right hande shee put forth to a figure, resembling the king, who seemed to raise her vp, vnder her was written, Da miseræ dextram, and ouer her certaine droppes distilling from the Heauens. Then in golden letters vnder the kings armes (which was embraced with lowe palmes) were these verses in French thus englished.

O doubled branches, for Conquerors ordaind,
If Henries name, for Crownes hath you not gaind,
Bowing downe your toppes, for to be wrethed
You cannot giue him your honors triumphant,
No more then this streame, can yeeld water-currant,
Vnlesse from higher spring it be receiued.

The king hauing viewed the deuice, and read the verses, passing further vnder the rose or vault of the gate, ouer his head certaine cloudes opened, and there descended vpon him the similitude of the holie ghost, and an angell presented vnto him a sword, called the sworde of peace, before the opening of which cloud, a voice was heard, as from God saying:

Heauenly mouing spirits, stable intelligences,
Cleaue through, make way for this sprites descent,
Presenting from one heauen, of thousand influences
To one speciall monarke, one speciall present.

Henries mine annointed, he feares me, I him loue,
Yeeld him due honor, the honor shall be mine:
All kings are Gods, and as my selfe aboue,
Dispose both good and bad, on earthly line.

The Angell descending saith:

Stay mighty monarke stay, the heauenly monarke sends
To thee this sword of peace, with good and happy day:
Take it, but in thy blisse, a modest heart entends,
Himselfe who raiseth, fals; and Gods loue looseth aye.

He hath giuen thee the sword in fields victorious,
And that which to no other could be giuen so:
One more of peace did rest for thy hand glorious,
Receiue it from aboue, for to command below.

Threefold great by these, thou maist thrice happy make,
France vnder thee to yeeld, thy scepter greatnes bring;
Pursue this good (therefore) the price for gratious take,
The which about thy browes, makes thousand laurels spring.

The Angell ascending saith:

Reioice yee heauens, since peace which yor hath lefte
Returned is on earth, to dwell with Henry,
Who for his neighbours good, of ioy bereft
Merits for his, that men one day be sory.

Earth do as much, tapet thy selfe with flowres
And sundry fruites, that henceforth may encrease,
All things without mans Art, or handy laboures:
For golden age is where there raigneth peace.

Then liue thrice happy, and content this prince,
Who chiefe of world, and peace, is made this day,
Of all the world heele make but one prouince,
If there be kings, these kings shall him obay.

After these wordes deliuered by the angell, the king proceeded ouer the bridge of Roane, which was garded by fiue or sixe hundred Swissers, al in bright armour, and Spanish pikes, vntill hee came to the other gate of the bridge, which entered into the towne, the building of which gate was after the order rusticque, rising three degrees, hauing vpon the one corner of the first degree, a hound with a Cupid riding on his backe, vnder which was written, Dux Amor est fidei. And on the other corner, an Ore, with another Cupid, subscribed, Vires frænantur Amore. Vpon the corners of the second degree, stood foure Tritons, or mare men with trydents in their hands, and aboue them vpon the third degree, was erected a personage representing Roane, with a lambe standing, and laying one foote vpon the knee of the figure, ouer which was written, Nowe, it is to be vnderstood, the lambe is the armes of the Citie, which in an Epigram made vnto the king was thus described.

O King your lambe before our wretched broile,
Was wont to beare vpon her humble backe
The golden fleece, like that of Colchos Ile,
But certaine newcome Argonauts (alacke)
Haue her ofttimes so barely cut and shorne,
That on her body poore, and all forlorne,
You scarce with paine, can find at all to pull
One simple fleece, or little locke of wooll.

The king passing through this gate, the towne had prepared for him a Canapie of purple veluet, richly embrodered with his armes, and deuice, and flower deluces strewed all ouer, which canapie was carried ouer him by sixe

henchemen apparelled in one ſute. From thence he went vp the ſtréete called La Rue du Pont, where was ſet vp a verie ſtately Pyramid, about 100. foote of height, on which was ſet forth in painting of Copper colours the labours of Hercules, on the toppe whereof was a great Sunne of golde, bearing the King crowned H vpon the pointes of his beames: the Spire of this Pyramid was carried from the Baſe, or Pedeſtall by foure Sphinxes guilt, and on the one ſide of the ſaide Baſe, was written Hercules Gallicus, and on the other ſide in letters of golde vpon ſable, French verſes thus Engliſhed.

Hercules, and Henry, are ſemblable
In vertues, wordes, and Actes,
But that Hercules is in the fable,
And Henry in the Factes.

Here the King turned downe the ſtréete called Ozou, where were ſet vppe two ſtatues of plaiſter, vpon Antique Baſes, both vndernamed in Gréeke characters. The firſt called ſtable victorie, helde in her one hand a Palme, and in the other an Imperiall Crowne, and Scepter, treading vpon armour, and other martiall engines. The other figure was quicke ſighted Juſtice, holding a ſword and ballance, and treading vnder her féete a number of viſors, or maſkes, ſignifying falſehods, betwéene them both was written in golden letters vpon Azur, certaine French verſes to this effect.

Kings which for honour, beare name of Auguſt
(Or happy Cæſars) preſerued by Hiſtory,
Acknowledge Henry more valiant and iuſt,
Would beare no other but the name of Henry.

So the Kings Maieſty riding through the ſtréete named Le Rue de la Viſcount, at the ſtréets end oppoſite his comming forth into the high ſtréete, there was raiſed a doricke piller about 20. foote of height, on the toppe whereof ſtood Fame, treading downe death, holding a crowned H in one hand, and a trumpet with a banneroll of France in the other, which when the Kings trumpets in paſſing by ſounded, Fame raiſed her trumpet to her mouth, and ſéemed to ſound alſo, turning her ſelfe rounde about, which motion was moſt cunninglie wrought by an engine belowe within the Baſe. And vpon the one ſide of the Baſe, leaning againſt the pedeſtall, ſate Pallas, and Peace; treading vpon Enuie, who was ſet forth like a furie, with haires of Snakes, and a murthering knife in her hand. Ouer theſe figures ſate Hiſtorie writing, and looking vp to Fame, vnder whom were written theſe Latin verſes.

Delicium hiſtoriæ, & famæ ſed vera canentis,
Henricum reges exemplar habete futuri;
Vt fauſte populos, & bello, & pace regatis.

O future kings example take by Henry,
Hiſtories delight, and Fames moſt true report,

That you may rule, and gouerne prosperously,
Your people both in warre and peacefull sort.

Under these verses was painted a Lyon breathing forth Bées, but without either motto, or allusion.

The King passing on through the Diall gate, there was an Arbor resembling Apolloes temple curiously wrought of herbage, and fashioned like wreathed pillers; adioyning to which was a little wood, where on a wall was painted in prospect diuers Metamorphoses, as Daphne pursued by Apollo and turned to a Laurell: Pan embracing Siringa, as she became Reedes: Europa & Iupiter, & such like. In which Arbor was excellent musique heard, both for voice, and instruments. All which being a while listned vnto by his maiestie, he proceeded to the streetes end, turning to our Ladie church (called Nostardame) where was erected a most magnificent Arch triumphall of plaister, after the order Corinthique, on the toppe whereof vpon a great Globe of the worlde, stoode the Figure of the King in his Royall Robes, supported by two personages, the one Prudentia who crowned him with a crowne of Starres, the other Fortitude, who offered him a scepter wreathed about with Laurell: before him late Occasion, behinde him Clemencie; and round about him late armours, ensignes, drummes, trumpets, and other martiall instruments; at either corner sate a huge Lyon of golde supporting the armes of France and Nauarre, and on the one side of the gate stoode Enuie, bound in chaines feeding of her own hart, and on the other side a man of armes sitting a sleepe on a drummes head, by whome was written Securitie. Ouer the Portall gate, vnder the Globe were written Latin verses thus translated.

To some for feare, to some for Clemencie,
Are prizes giuen; but fourth King Henrie
Excelling other kings in both, and both conioynde
In him by wisedome, hath also adioynde,
Vnto these three, a fourth (occasion)
Which if it stand, with lawes probation,
Hath sworne her selfe to be companion,
Yoking worldes to France by king Borbonion.

Opposite to this Arch triumphall, vpon two Rustique pillers (distinguished aboue 20. foote asunder) stood two Figures of plaister, the one of Saint Lewis in his kinglie Robes, holding a Scepter in one hand, and a verge in another; on the top whereof was a hand pointing to the king which stoode on the Globe, with this verse vnderwritten. Mactè tua virtute mea maxima surge. The personage on the other piller, was Sambetha, one of the Sibils, who likewise pointed to the kings proportion, and presented to the beholders a table with this prophesie in Latin, Englished thus.

Sambetha I of Sibils chiefe, an Hebrew by ofspring, Glad Oracles bring to the French, and vnto thee O king,

The

The earth did neuer boast her selfe of any childe so much,
As France (O Henry) shall reioice that thou their king art such.
Peace being to the people brought a thousand armies strong,
Dreadlesse shall march and follow farre thy battailes all along,
Where Tagus, and Durias swell, with goodly golden sand,
And where Idume for thy selfe holdes woorthy palmes in hand.
Thou being Captaine, souldiers shall returne with laden spoiles
Of Easterne and the Westerne wealths, and shall bring to their soiles, Triumphant signes, and trophies backe; O King their countrey wone, Fame shall eternall crownes thee giue, for that which thou hast done.
Liue thou therefore now all our yeeres, and Nestors longest date,
Worlds loue, to people giuing lawes, made quiet by thy state.

The king going through this Arch Triumphall, he presently entred the cathedrall church of Nostredame, with all the ecclesiasticall pompe that might bee, from whence, after certaine ceremonies which entertained him for a time, he returned more priuately in his coach to his Court, being some times a Cardinals house, adioyning to Saint Owins Church, and thus the kings entrie ended with the day, being performed with great honor, charge, and applaudements of all sorts of people.

Thursday the 7. of October, the right honorable LL. Embassadors had audience of the king, who most princely receiued, embraced, and welcommed them both, as also all other the Lordes, Knightes, and Gentlemen their attendants.

Satterday the 9. of October the fidelitie or othe of confederation betweene the king and the Quenes maiestie of England was verie solemnly taken in the church of S. Owen, in the presence of the French nobility, lords spirituall, and temporall, who that day toke the right hand of the quire. Oth of fidelity taken by the French king.

Sunday being the morrowe after, the order of the Garter was most royally performed in the saide Church, where both the Princes had their estates, and armes erected. The Quenes Maiestie being Soueraigne of the order had that day the right hand of the quire, and so had the right honorable Earle, her maiesties Embassador his armes, style, and stall accordingly. Before her maiesties estate sate Master William Dethicke, Garter principall king of armes in his Robe of the Order. Before the Earle stood William Segar Somerset Herault. Next vnto the Earle sate the lord Embassador Lieger. Then the lord Cromwell, the lord Rich, and all other knights, and gentlemen, according to their qualitie. On the left hand sate the king, betweene the two Bishops of Antow, and Eureux. Before the kings estate sate his Chancelor Mounsier Cheuerny alone. And before him stoode Aniow, Picardy, and Britaine, heraulds of armes. In the stals sate the knights of the Saint Esprit, who (as farre as I doe remember) were these, Duke Montpensire, Duke de Neuers, Duke de Namours, the Prince de Vandemont, Duke Montmerancie Constable, and his brother the Admirall, Duke Ioyeuse, Duke de Buillon, the Marshall de Rotz, and the Marshall Matignon. The French king inuested with the order of the Garter.

All things being accomplished with much honor, the kings maiestie inuested and sworne, the vespers ended, and the benediction giuen by a bishop in his Pontificalibus, the king taking the Earle by the hand, returned as they came, attended vpon by the nobility, who two, and two proceeded before them. That night the king and the Earle supped together vnder one estate in the house of Duke Monpensier; where also was a generall feast for all the Englishe.

Thursday being the 14. of October the king toke the Earle into his coach, and went to the bridge of Roan, to see a sea fight vpon the Riuer, which was performed by two French shippes, against two supposed Spanish, and one Brasilian (large boates armed and prepared for that purpose, with muskets, pikes and Hargubuze a Crocke) where after one houres fight, the Brasilian was sunke, and the Spaniards forced to flie, by the French. This pastime was done by the townesmen, for the kings more delight.

On Fridaie the right honorable Earle with his attendants toke leaue of the Kings maiestie, and kissing his hand departed with great loue, honor, and reputation.

Saterday the fiftéenth of October his lordshippe set forth of Roan, and came that night to Dépe, being accompanied with the commander thereof, Monsieur de Chaste, where he remained for conuenient passage, tenne daies after.

The 26. of October, the Quéenes maiesties Shippes being come, his lordship embarked himselfe in the Admirall, and arriued at the Downes nére Douer the day next following.

This yéere, like as in the moneth of August, so in September, October, and and Nouember, fell great raines, whereupon high waters ouerflowing the low grounds; wheate and other graines grew to great price, so that wheate meale was solde at London for ten shillings the bushell, Rie at fiue shillings, Pte meale at eight shillings the bushell, &c. Great land waters.

The 17. of Nouember, a day of great triumph for the long, prosperous, and triumphant raigne of her Maiestie, at the Court, the Earle of Cumberland Champion for the Queene, the Earles of Essex, Bedford, South-hampton, and Sussex, with other, ran at the tilt most brauely. Ann. reg. 39. Great triumph for the prosperous raigne of her Maiesty.

Sunday the fift of December, great numbers of people being assembled in the Cathedrall church of Wels, in Somersetshire, in the sermon time before none, a sodaine darknesse fell among them, a storme and tempest followed, with lightning and thunder, such as ouerthrew to the ground them that were in the body of the church, all which church seemed to be on a light fire, a lothsome stench following, some stones were stricken out of the belltower, the wiers and yrons of the horologe were molten, and no timber burnt; which tempest being ceased, and the people come to themselues, some of them were found to be marked with sundry figures in their bodies, and their garments not perished. Tempest in the City of Welles

The moneths of December, January and Februarie continued colde and moiste, also March colde, but drie with extreme frosts, Aprill colde showres, Maie colde and drie, &c. by meane of which weathering, and prouision for the ships at sea, all kinde of victuals kept at an high price, as well fish as flesh, white meate, and what soeuer. 1597

In the moneth of May, souldiers were prested in the citie of London, to the number of 550. with all their furniture and charges of the Citizens: these were for a long time daily trayned in the fields, out of which were picked 400. and the rest dismissed: These, and other the like picked men out of diuers shires, about the number of fiue thousand, most brauely furnished of al things necessary, (and some superfluitie, for no cost was spared of the voluntaries) were sent to Seas, and set from the west coastes of England, about the tenth of July. Souldiers trained.

This sommer arriued here an Orator from the King of Polonia, and had audience at the court then at Greenewich on the 25. of July, whose Oration in Latin, beginning, Serenissima princeps, domina Clementissima, &c. was presently, most learnedly and eloquently answered by her maiestie, also in Latin; the effect whereof in English followeth. Answere of her Maiesty to the Orator of the King of Poland.

Oh, how was I deceiued? I looked for an embassage, but thou hast brought a complaint vnto me. I vnderstood by thy letters, that thou wert a Legate, but I finde thée a Herault, neuer in my life heard I such an Oration. I marwell truely, I maruell at so great, and such vnaccustomed boldnes in a publike assembly. Neither do I thinke, if the king were present, that he would say so much, but if peraduenture hee hath committed any such thing to thy charge (which surely I much doubt) this is the cause: That where the K. is young, and not by bloud, but by election, and newly elected, doth not so perfectly vnderstand the cause of handling these businesses with other Princes, which either his auncestors haue obserued with vs, or perhaps others will obserue, that afterward shall succéede in his place. For thy part: Thou séemest to me, to haue read many bookes, but not to haue come vnto the bookes of Princes, but altogether to be ignorant what is conuenient amongst kings. For thou that makest often mention of the lawe of nature, and nations, know that this is the law of nature and nations, that when warre doth happen amongst princes, it is lawfull for the one of them to intercept the warlike helpes of the others, brought from any place, and to beware lest they fall to the losse. This I say is the law of nature and nations. Whereas thou doest rehearse a new affinitie with the house of Austria, which now thou makest so famous, forget not that there haue béene of the same house, that would haue bereft the kingdome of Polonia from thy king. But for the rest, which be not to be spoken of at this place, and time, because they are many, and to bee considered of, one after an other: Thou shalt expect that, which thou shalt vnderstand of some of my Councell, to whom I will assigne this matter. In the meane time farewell and be quiet.

In this moneth of August, the price of wheate in the markets at London, fell from thirteene shillings the bushell to ten shillings, Rie from nine shillings to fiue shillings, and so to three shillings two pence, but then arose againe, to the late olde, and greatest price.

Embassador from Denmarke.

This yéere also, Arnold Whitfield Chancelor of the Realme in Denmarke Embassadour, and Christian Barnice his assistant, from the king of Denmarke, arriued here, and were lodged in Fenchurch streete: these had audience at the court then at Tibals in Essex, on the seuenth of September, they made certain requests, which her Maiesty presently answered without pause, to euery point of their embassage.

Embassador.

The first, he required that where as there had remained a long league of amitie betweene the two Crownes of England, and Denmarke, both in the life of the late deceased king and his predecessors, that it might please her maiestie to confirme and continue the same to the king his master, now newly adopted and crowned.

Her Maiestie.

Her Maiestie granted thereunto, on condition the king his master would prowe no worse then his progenitors had done, and in all Christian loue accepted thereof.

Embassador.

His request was, that whereas there was great and continuall warres betweene her maiestie, and the king of Spaine, wherby much christian blood was shed, to the king his master, and all other christian kings great griefe, and to the great damage, and danger of Christendome, that it would please her maiestie, if in her wisedome did sée it conuenient to giue her consent, that the king his master might make a motion of peace, and if he found both parties thereto addicted, to proceede further for the effecting thereof.

Her Maiestie.

Her Maiestie replying, said, she thought the king his master was too yong to knowe the cause of the breach of the league betweene her maiestie and Spaine, and as it was not broken by her Royall consent, nor by anie of hers, so it should not bee sued, nor sought for by her maiestie, nor anie in her behalfe, behalfe, for said she: Know now, and be it knowne to the king your master, and all princes christned, or heathen, that the Quéene of England hath no néede to craue peace, for I assure you (saide she) that I neuer endured one houre of feare, since my first comming to my kingdome, and subiects.

He was to desire, if it might stand to her maiesties good liking, open traffike with Spaine, and that the goods might not be staide on the narrow seas, as it hath heretofore béene. Embassador.

Her Maiestie saide, if any his masters, or subiects goods so staied, it was to her vnknowne, but if he had any such iust complaint, he should, the matter being made to her councell knowne, haue such redresse, as should well content his master, and subiects. Her Maiestie.

He was to returne the Garter that her maiestie had bestowed vpon the king lately deceased, as the manner of all forraine Princes is to doe. Embassador.

Her Maiestie accepted thereof, but tolde him she was sorie to receiue it of him, for thereby she was put in minde of the losse of a most honorable brother and louing friend, and so that she were assured of his kings loue and friendship in the like sort, she would hereafter to the king his master do the like fauour. Her Maiestie.

The Embassadour hauing his Audience the daie that her maiestie was borne, toke thereby occasion to saie, that sithen it had pleased God, on that daie (which hee was informed was her maiesties birth daie) to glorifie the world with so gratious a creature, who had brought so great happinesse to the Realme, and the neighbour kingdomes, hee doubted not but that the king his master should in that happie daie, haue an happie answere of his request, &c. Embassador.

I blame you not to expect a reasonable answere, and a sufficient, but you may thinke it a great miracle, that a childe borne at foure of the clocke this morning, should be able to answere so learned and wise a man as you are, sent from so great a Prince as you be, about so great & waighty affaires you speake of, and in an vnknowne tong, by three of the clocke in the afternoone. Her Maiestie.

And with him more prudent and gratious wordes she ended, and gaue him leaue to depart.

The 23. of October, the right honorable lorde Charles Howard, lorde high Admirall of England, was created Earle of Nottingham at Westminster. Earle of Nottingham created.

The 24. of October began the Parliament at Westminster: on the which daie diuers people were smothered, and crushed to death, pressing betwixt White hall, and the Colledge church, to haue séene her maiestie, and nobilitie riding to the said parliament, sir Thomas Gerrard knight marshall, and his men, making way before them. A cold spring after a cold Winter. In the month of March, the beginning thereof, three or foure daies together were hot, more then ordinary for that time of the yeere, but the residue of that month, and the next following very bitter cold, with great windes still west, with haile, snow, &c.

Lightning and thunder Twisordowne burned. The 26. of March in the afternoone great lightning, thunder and haile, and the weather still cold.

On the third of Aprill, the faire and rich towne of Twisordowne in Deuonshire was brent by casualtie of fire, beginning in a poore cottage, a woman there frying pancakes with straw (for lacke of other fewell) the same fired the house, and so the towne, about one of the clocke in the afternoone: the rage of which fire, lasting one houres and a halfe, consumed 409. houses, burned downe: one hundred and fifty thousand pound consumed in money, plate, merchandise, houshold stuffe, and houses, fifty persons, men, women, and children consumed: an almes house preserued with poore men therein, in the midst of the flames. 2000. pound weekly was bestowed there in the market on mundaies, in Deuonshire kerseies: 9000. people maintained by the cloathing of that towne, in Deuon, Cornwall, and Somersetshires. It was the Earle of Deuonshires chiefe seate, where yet standeth his Castle, or court place, thus much of this towne, was certified to her maiestie, and was thought of many to be a iust punishment of God vpon that towne for the vnmercifulnes of the rich, and small regard of the poore, which were daily seene to perish in the streetes of that towne, for lacke of reliefe.

In the moneth of December great frosts, the Thamis nigh ouer frozen at London bridge, but thawed about one weeke before Christmas, & began again to freeze on S. Iohns day the 27. and a great snow on the 28. so that the Thamis was againe nigh frozen as before, but on Newyeares day it thawed. Ann. reg 41. Great frosts.

In the beginning of the moneth of January, souldiers in Essex and diuers other shires, as also in the City of London, were pressed, and furnished of all things necessary for the wars, were sent into the low Countries, there to remaine in seruice, and place of olde souldiers, from thence to be transported and sent into Ireland. All subsidy men in the city, were sessed at eight pence the pound goods or lands towards this charge. Souldiers into the Low countries. Souldiers sent into Ireland.

Also in this moneth great loanes of money were demanded, and granted by the citizens of London, besides all other charges, at that time.

In the month of Feb. about the 28. day, a fifteenth was granted and paid by the citizens of London, for the setting forth of more souldiers into Ireland.

Earle of Essex lieutenant generall, rode through the Citie of London towards Ireland.

The 27. of March, about two of the clocke in the afternoone, the right honorable Robert earle of Essex, lieutenant generall, lord high marshall, &c. departed from Seding lane, through Fenchurch stréete, Grace stréete, Cornehill, Cheape, &c. towards Iseldon, Highgate, and rode that night to S. Albons, towards Ireland, he had a great traine of noble men, and gentlemen, on horsbacke before him, to accompany him on his iourney, his coaches followed him. He had also (by the pleasure of God) a great showre, or twaine, of raine, and haile, with some claps of thunder as he rode through the citie.

The months of March, Aprill, and May, cold & drie, but on Whitsunday great raine, and high waters, the like of long time had not béen séene: the months of June, and July, hot and drie for the most part, thus much for weathering.

Ships prepared to the seas, and men trained for the wars, by the Londoners.

This yéere in the moneth of August, the beginning thereof, politikely preuenting danger that might be feared to happen, by occasion of some preparation of shipping reported to haue béene made in Spaine, and to be intended to the annoyance of this estate: The Citizens of London were charged, with the furnishing and setting forth to the sea, of twelue ships, since encreased to fiftéene. Also with 6000. men, and furniture for the warres, which men, with all spéede, and as it were on a sodaine were made in a readinesse. Three thousand of them were daily trained in the field vnder Captaines, Citizens of the same city, from the first of August, &c. The other three thousand appointed to attend vpon her maiesties Royall person, were also likewise trained vnder Captaines, in braue furniture, for they were housholders, of accompt, all which their charges, was partly borne by themselues, the residue performed by subsidies, leuied of the citizens.

Nich. Ianson y^e famous Fr. Geographer born at Abbeuill in Picardy.

In this meane time, to witte, on the fift of August at night by commandement from her maiestie, the chaines were drawne ouerthwart the stréetes and lanes of the City, and lanthorns with lights, of candles (eight in the pound) hanged out at euery mans dore, there to burne al the night, and so from night to night, vpon paine of death, and great watches kept in the stréetes, which hanging out of lights so continued, some fouretéene nights or longer.

Horsemen and foote men trained in the shires and mustered at London.

In this meane space, many thousands of horsemen and foote men, chosen persons, well appointed for the warres, trained vppe in armour with braue liueries, vnder valiaunt Captaines, in diuers shires, were brought vppe to London, where they were lodged in the suburbes, townes, and villages néere adioyning, from the eight of August, till the twentith, or three and twentith: in which time the horsemen were shewed in Saint Iames fielde, the footemen trained in other grounds about the Citie, and then all discharged homewards, with charge to be alwaies readie at one houres warning. And so it followed that on the fiue and twentith of August, being saturday at night, postes were sent after them, to recall the horsemen, presently to returne to London, with all spéede possible: which charge they prepared to performe. But on munday following the saide postes, were likewise sent to stais them at home, or to returne them backe, whose forwardnesse in seruice of her maiestie was such, as the like hath not béene séene, or heard of, towards any prince of this realme, or other, to the great happinesse, and comfort of her Maiestie, whom God (amongst many other blessings) hath blessed with so dutifull, loning, and obedient subiects.

The 26. of August being sunday, before fiue of the clocke in the morning, by comm mandement from her maiestie, the 3000. souldiers, trained vp by the citizens, were all in armour in the streetes, attending on their Captaines till past 7. of the clocke, at which time, being throughly wet by a great showre of raine, were sent home againe for that day.

On the next morrow being the 27. the other 3000. citizens, houlholders, and subsidie men, shewed on the Miles ende, where they trained all that daie, and other daies following vnder their Captaines, also citizens, vntill the 4. of September, and so ceased their training for that time; and what soeuer had béene feared, a good peace within this realme hath since followed, which God long time continue and increase amongst vs.

On Michaelmas éeue, the right honorable Robert Earle of Esser, lieutenant generall, lord high marshall, &c. being returned out of Ireland, came to the Court at Nonsuch, and spake with her maiestie.

The 13. of Nouember, the maior, aldermen, and sheriffes of London, in scarlet, and the commons a great number of them in velvet coates, chaines of golde, all on horsebacke, receiued the Quéenes maiestie at Westminster by torch light.

by the Iustices of the shires, but more by vnconscionable farmers hoording vp their corne, badgers, and other corne-mongers, keeping the same from the markets, or extorting what price they listed, euen vpon a sodaine, namely, wheate was raised from three shillings to fiue, seuen and eight shillings the bushell, still increasing their price. Vntill the Quenes most excellent Maiestie, perceiuing how bitter a thing the scarcitie of victuals is to the poorer sort of her people, published by proclamation that her Maiesty had, not onely recommended precisely to her councell and other principall ministers, that all maner of graine might bee kept within the Realme, but likewise directed them to punish such ingrocers, and forestallers of corne as by greedinesse laboured to racke things vp to vnreasonable prices, &c. since the which time the price of graine, hath slowly fallen, as being in hunters hands.

Looke the proclamation.

Souldiers sent to Ireland.

In the moneth to July, two fifteenes were granted, and collected by the Citizens of London, toward the furniture, and setting out of 300. souldiers into Ireland. Also out of diuers shires souldiers were likewise furnished, and sent.

This yeere in the moneth of Aprill, Richard lord bishop of London, with two other Commissioners, to witte, doctor Parkins, and doctor Swale, were sent in Embassage to Emden, there to treate with the Commissioners from the king of Denmarke. Those returned into England the eight of July next following. In which seruice the said Reuerend father so wisely, bountifullie, and honorably carried himselfe, that her Maiestie, verie gratiously accepted his proceedings.

Doctor Bancraste Lorde of London returned From Emden.

Conspiracy against the king of Scots.

Tuesday the fift of August, Charles Iames king of Scots in Scotland escaped a strange and strong conspiracie, practised by the Earle Gowry and his brother, as at large appeareth in a booke thereof extant, first published and printed in Scotland, and since in England.

Meanes for an intreaty of peace to be had.

A Peace beeing concluded at Verain in France, in the yeere 1598. betweene Henry the fourth king of France and Nauarre, and Philip the second king of Spaine: the Quenes Maiestie of England was likewise inuited by the French king, her Confederate and Allie, to dispose her selfe vnto a like treaty of Amitie with Spaine. To the effecting whereof, he had procured the consent of the king of Spaine then liuing. After whose decease, Philip the 3. succeeding his father in the Crowne, the same was againe renued and solicited by Andreas of Austria the Gouernour of the low Countries, and the Bysshop of Constance, both for the house of Burgundy and kingdome of Spaine, afterwards ratified by the Archduke Albert returned out of Spaine with the Infanta his wife. Vpon which former promise made vnto her maiestie, shee was at ẏ length induced, to condescend vnto a treatie of peace at Boloigne in France, a place chosen by mutuall agreement on either side, with the assent and good liking of the French king: whither both Princes sent their embassadours, furnished with ample power and authoritie in that behalfe, where the English Embassadours arriued the fiftéenth day of May, in this present yeere of our Lord God 1600. being the date prefixed for this assembly, and the Spanish the seuentéenth of the same moneth. the English side were these: sir Henry Neuill knight, her Maiesties ordinary Embassador resident with the French king, Iohn Harbert esquire, her maiesties second secretarie of Estate, Robert Beale esquire, her maiesties secretarie in the North parts, and Thomas Edmonds esquire, her maiesties secretarie for the French tong. The Commissioners for Spaine were Baltazar de Caniga & Fonseca, Embassador resident for the king of Spaine, with the Archduke of Austria in the lowe Countries, and Ferdinando Carillo Doctor of the Ciuill lawe: vnto whom were adioyned on the Archdukes part Iohn Richardot president of the Councell of the saide Archduke, and Lewis Verreyken the saide Archdukes Audiencer. The Commissioners on both sides being viewed and considered of, some question for the precedencie and superioritie of place fell into disputation and debate, her maiestie challenging the same as due vnto her before the time of the Emperor Charles (as appeareth by Volateran) in the time of king Henrie the seuenth her Highnesse grandfather, when this selfesame difference betweene both these crownes comming into question, the Pope preferred England, and adiudged vnto this crowne the most honorable place. But for as much as the same was contradicted by the Spanish Commissioners, who not onely refused to yeld preseancie vnto her maiestie, but also to admit of an equalitie, or of anie other indifferent and middle course, whereby the honor of her maiestie might be preserued: the present treatie (which hitherto was performed only by some priuate visitations and conferences of some one or two of the Commissioners on either side, without comming to anie generall meeting or colloquie) was on the second day of August in the yeere aforesaid for this time delaide, and by mutuall assent of the Commissioners on both sides, according to their seuerall authorities respectiuely granted vnto them in this behalfe, suspended, vntill the ende of sirtie daies following, in which meane while it might be vnderstoode what should be the determination of both Princes for a further proceeding in the saide Colloquie of peace, at some other time, and place: wherein as yet no certaine resolution hath beene hitherto taken.

Commissioners sent ouer to intreat of a peace to be concluded.

Our commissioners for peace returned out of France.

About the 8. of August, arriued at Douer, certaine Embassadors and assistants, fiftéene in number, sent from the king of Maroco, in Barbaria; these were by certaine English Gentlemen conducted to Grauesend, and from thence, by sir Thomas Gerard knight marshall, and other gentlemen, with the Barbarie merchants towards London, where they were landed at the Tower wharffe on the 15. of August, from whence they were conueied in foure Coaches to the Royall Exchange, and there lodged in the house of Anthonie Radclife esquire, of London merchant taylor.

Ambassadors from Maroco and Barbary.

The 20. of August they rode in Coaches through Cheape, to Westminster, from thence by water ouer to Lambhith, and thence again in Coaches to the Court at Nonesuch, where they were honorably entertained, and returned the same night to their lodging at London.

The 10. of September, the saide Embassadors of Barbarie were againe conueied to the Court then at Oatlands, there to take their leaue of her maiestie, but were required to staie to see the Iusting and other triumphes at Trinity hoſpitall in Croydon founded.

This yéere the moſt reuerende Father Iohn Whitgift, Archbiſhop of Canterburie, did finiſh that notable & memorable monument of our time, to wit, his hoſpitall of the holy Trinitie in Croydon, in the County of Surrey, by him there founded and builded of ſtone and bricke, for releefe and ſuſtentation of certaine poore people. As alſo a faire ſchole houſe for the encreaſe of literature, together with a large dwelling houſe for the ſchole maſter his vſe, and theſe premiſes he hath through Gods fauorable aſſiſtance in his own life time perfourmed and perfited, for that (as my ſelfe haue heard him ſay) he woulde not be to his executors, a cauſe of their damnation, remembring the good aduiſe that an ancient father hath left written to all poſteritie: Tutior via eſt, vt bonum quod quiſquis poſt mortem ſperat agi per alios, agat dum viuit ipſe, per ſe: It is a way farre more ſafe for a man to doe good and charitable déedes by himſelfe whileſt he liueth: then to hope that others will doe the ſame for him after his death.

¶ Of the Vniuersities in England, and Colledges in the same, with the founders, and principall benefactours.

I Haue before time reioiced (saieth Erasmus Roterdam) that Englande was so well furnished with so manie men of excellent learning, but now I begin to enuie her felicitie, for that shee so flourisheth with all kinde of literature, that by taking the commendation therof from other Regions, she doth as it were marueilouslie obscure them. And yet this commendation is not as now first due to England, in the which (it is well knowne) haue beene of long time, men of great learning. The Vniuersities proone this to be true, which haue for their antiquities and worthines, contended with the most auncient, and worthy Vniuersities in the world. Colledges

Colledges and Hals in the Vniuerſitie of Cambridge, to the number of 21. indowed with lands and poſſeſſions for maintenance of Students in all manner of Sciences, ſtrictlie accounted according to the time of their beginnings, although at this day by the altering of foundations they are but 18. left.

The common Schooles.

THe common Scholes of the Vniuerſitie haue béne of ſuch auncient continuance, as there is no certaine mention how or when they began. But the faire new building which nowe ſtandeth foure ſquare, like vnto the faſhion of a Colledge, was made by ſucceſſe of times vpon the coſts of the Vniuerſitie, and diuers benefactors in order as hereafter followeth.

First, the Philoſophie Schole aboue and beneath, ſometime called the Schole of Canon lawe (that is to ſaie, the Weſt ſide of the ſame quadrant) was builded at the charges of the Vniuerſitie, and other good benefactors, ſince the yeare of our Lord God, 1136. The Schole of Diuinitie, and ouer that the newe Chappell (that is to ſay, the North ſide) was begun by the Vniuerſitie vpon contributions and collections of ſundrie perſons. But the ſame was finiſhed in the yeare of Chriſt, 1400. by the executors of Sir William Thorpe Knight, ſometime chiefe Iuſtice of Englande. The Schole of Art, and ouer that the olde Librarie (that is to ſaie, the South ſide) was made by the Vniuerſitie of the ruines of the olde Schooles. The gate of the ſame Schooles, with the walkes on each ſide the roof, and the newe Librarie (that is to ſaie, all the Eaſt ſide) was builded at the coſts of Thomas Rotheram Archbyſhop of Yorke, with ſome contribution of the Vniuerſitie in the yeere of Chriſt, 1470. And in the yeere, 1476. was perfected, as now it ſtandeth.

Peter colledge.

Saint Peters Colledge, commonly called Peter Houſe, was founded in the time of King Henry the third, by Hugh Balſham prior of Ely, in the yeare of Chriſt 1256. This was after enlarged in the time of King Edward the ſecond, by maſter Robert Lyrling, who gaue a houſe with the appurtenances, wherein ſometime dwelled the religious men called Fratres de ſacco or de pœnitentia Ieſu Chriſti. Likewiſe another houſe was giuen by Ryherus de Ayleſham and Iohn of Felmingham. But the indowment was giuen by the ſaide Hugh Balſham, who was after the 15. biſhop of Ely, and finiſhed the Colledge in Anno 1284.

Michael houſe.

The Colledge or houſe of Saint Michaell, was founded by Herueus or Hericus de Stanton, ſometime Chancelor of the Exchequer, and a canon of Yorke and Wels, who obtained licence of King Edward the ſecond in the ſeuentéenth yeere of his raigne, to erect the ſame Colledge for a certaine number of Scholers and Chaplaines, to bee gouerned by a maſter according to his owne ordinances and rules: granting further by the ſame licence to the ſaid Herueus, power to vnite vnto his Colledge the aduowſon of Saint Michaels church in Cambridge, which was after more largely indowed with lands and rents, rents, as well by him as by diuers other good benefactors of latter time. At this day it is taken into Trinitie Colledge founded by King H. the right.

sters of the Vniuersitie of Cambridge, in the yeare 1326. And the 19. yeare of king Edward the second (master Richard Badew being then Chancelor) vp-on a ground, whereupon stode two houses belonging of old time to the saide Chancelor and Vniuersitie in Milnestreete, King Edward the third in the 20. yeare of his raigne, gaue licence of Mortmaine to the master and scholers of the saide new erected Colledge, to take lands and tenements to the yeerely value of forty pounds for euer, for their maintenance in study, at the request of the Chancelor and masters of the said Vniuersitie. Since that it was much increased by master Walter Thacksteed master of the same Colledge. But now it is vnited into the foundation of the lady Elizabeth de Burgo countesse of Clare.

The Kings Hall or Colledge had his first originall of king Edward the se- Kings Hal.
cond, who of his owne deuotion maintained there for a time 32. scholers, in studie of learning and knowledge, who for certaine yeares after were paide their salaries or stipends, sometime by the sheriffe of Cambridge, sometime by the prior and couent of Saint Neotes or Needes, and sometime out of the Exchequer. But king Edward the third by his charter dated the seuenth date of October, in the 11. yeare of his raigne, erected there a Colledge in the ho-nor of God and his blessed mother S. Mary the virgin, and all holy Saints, for a master and 32. scholers, calling it by the name of the Kings Hall. The ground whereof he purchased of master Robert Croiland, and after indowed it with lands and possessions, which so continued a Colledge till the time of king H. the 8. who vnited the same to his new foundation of Trinitie colledge.

time the wife of Iohn de Burgo Earle of Vlster in Ireland, daughter of sir Gilbert of Clare Earle of Glocester, and one of the heires of sir Gilbert of Clare her brother the last Earle of Glocester, she was first married to Iohn Burgh earle of Vlster in Ireland, after to Theobald of Verdon, and thirdly to sir Roger Damary, and had issue by them all, she taking into her foundation the forenamed Vniuersitie Hall by the resignation of master Walter Thack-steed master of the saide house, and the consent of master Richard Badew the first founder, called it all vnder the name of Clare Hall: and became the on-ly founder thereof in the time of king Edward the third, about the yeare of our Lord 1347.

Pembroke Hall was founded by the ladie Mary of Valentia Countesse Pembroke Hal of Pembroke, wife of Audomare de Valentia earle of Pembroke, and daugh-ter of Guido Earle of Saint Paule in France, shee obtained licence of King Edward the third (whose cosen shee was) to founde this Colledge of a master and thirtie scholers or moe, at her pleasure: And to assigne them for their habitation a place in Cambridge of her owne inheritance, with shee other messuages which shee purchased, and 100. l. of yeerelie rent in aduow-sons of churches for euer, and called it Aula de Valence Maria, Anno 1347.

Corpus Christi Colledge.

The Colledge of Corpus Christi & our blessed lady, commonly called Bennet Colledge, was founded by the alderman and brethren of Corpus Christi guilde, and the brethren of our Lady guilde in Cambridge, at the instance of the first Henry Duke of Lancaster, who in the 26. yeare of king Edward the third, obtained a licence of Mortmain for the said alderman and brethren, that vpon a messuage to them belonging in Cambridge, they might erect this colledge for schollers, chaplaines, and others, to be gouerned by a master, according to their rules and ordinances. By the same licence was also appropriated vnto the colledge for euer the aduowson of S. Bennets church standing before their gate. This duke of Lancaster in the 28. yeare of the said king Edward the third, was elected alderman of the saide guildes, who recognised the statutes of the colledge not by the dukes seale, but by the seale of the alderman of those guildes.

Trinity hal.

Trinitie Hall was of olde time an hostell or house of studie. And in the time of king Edward the thirde, Iohn Cranden prior of Ely and his couent procured the same hostell for their monks to studie in. To this house were added three other dwelling houses by master Richard Ling Chancelor of the Vniuersitie, and Archibald of Norwich, master Walter Elueden, and master Simon Rekinghale parson of Rollesby, either of them one house. And in the 28. yeare of the raigne of king Edward the third, master Robert Stratton, Iohn Trunch, Walter Bakton, Walter de Aldeby, and Peter de Bitterings, gaue toward the inlargement therof one messuage and seuen pieces of void ground. And likewise the said Walter Bakton, and Peter Bitterings, and Thomas Walsingham, gaue one other messuage called Draxes entrie. All which being thus laid together, were after purchased by master William Bateman bishop of Norwich, who by the kings licence builded thereon the Colledge, as now for the most part it standeth, in the worship of the holy Trinity, and indowed it with lands and possessions, and became founder thereof, though since it hath bene increased by diuers good benefactors: hee deceased at Auinion in France (where he was sent on the kings message) the first day of Ianuarie, in the 11. yeare of his consecration, and of our Lord God 1354.

Gonuile hal.

Gonuile Hall was founded by Edmond Gonuile parson of Terington in Norfolke, in the two and twentith yeare of king Edward the third, who for that purpose obtained a licence at the suite of sir Gualter de Manney, to erect a colledge for a master and twentie schollers, to be students in the art of Logicke and other sciences, vpon a ground where sometimes stode three houses and a garden in Lurtrowlane, which he purchased for his mony. And in the 26. yeare of the same king, the rome of that colledge was inlarged by the gift of two other houses, the one by the Chancelor and masters of the Vniuersitie, and the other by the master and brethren of Saint Iohns hospitall in Cambridge. This Edmond Gonuile at his decease hauing a good summe of money, commended the further finishing of the same colledge to master William Bateman bishop of Norwich, which he performed both in the buildings and indowment with lands, and caused it to be named Gonuile Hall. At this day it is vnited into the colledge of doctor Caius, and called by the name of Gonuile and Caius colledge.

The

The Colledge of Gods-house was first founded by maister William Bingham parson of Saint Iohn Zacharie in London, vpon a tenement and three garden plats in Milnestreete, which he bought for his money, and procured licence of king Henry the first, in the twentith yeere of his raigne, to erect thereon his said colledge for 25. persons and a prouost, to be gouerned by such rules and statutes, as should be assigned vnto them by the said William Bingham, and by William Wimbell, William Millington, and William Gull doctors of diuinitie, and Iohn Tilney doctor of Law, and the longest liuer of them. This colledge was chiefly erected for such as should professe the study of Grammar, whereof (as it seemeth) there was great want in those daies, not only in both the vniuersities, but also throughout the realme. In few yeres after K. Henry being determined to found his great Colledge of our Lady and S. Nicholas, obtained of the saide William Bingham a resignation of that house and ground for his said new colledge, and in steede thereof gaue vnto him two other places in the Preachers streete, belonging sometime the one of them to the abbot of Tiltie, and the other to the prioresse of Denny, wherewith he also granted a licence of Mortmaine for one hundred pound by yere towards their maintenance for euer. But shortly after the said William Bingham in the yere 1447. resigned vnto the said king Henry the foresaid colledge, to the intent that hee should be accounted the onely founder thereof as he was indéede. But now it is annexed to Christs colledge founded by the lady Margaret countesse of Richmond and Darby. Gods house.

The Kings Colledge of our blessed ladie and Saint Nicholas was first founded by king Henry the first, vnder the name of a Rector and schollers, in the nineténth yeere of his raigne. And after in the one and twentith yeere of his raigne, he translated the forme of that foundation into the name of prouost and schollers. Edward the fourth in displeasure withdrew from this Colledge so much land as the founder had giuen them, and after restored them to the yeerely valew of fiue hundred markes. After that king Henry the seauenth finished the same worke of that notable chappell begun by king Henry the first, and king Henry the eight finished the glasing, stalles, and pauement of fine Marble. This colledge was ment by king Henry the first, to haue béene one of the beautifullest houses in this land, the plat whereof is more particularly set out in this my Annales. Kings colledge

The Colledge of Saint Margaret and Saint Bernard, commonlie called the Quéenes Colledge, was first begun by Quéene Margaret wife to king Henry the first, and daughter of Reyner king of Sicilie and Ierusalem, who procured Mortmaine for the same of 100. pound by yere, in anno 1441. at the intercession of maister Andrewe Ducket, parson of Saint Buttolphes in Cambridge, sometime principall of Bernard Hostel, which Hostel he purchased and gaue to the said colledge. And by his owne money and helpe of others, purchased certaine other tenements and builded the colledge, being the first president of the same: and gaue as well in his life time, as by his testament, diuers summes of money and parcels of land: procuring likewise certaine giftes of George Duke of Clarence, of Cicely Dutches of Yorke, of Richard Queenes Colledge.

duke of Glocester, and Anne dutchesse of the same, of Edward earle of Salisburie, of Maude countesse of Orford, and Marmaduke Lomelie bishop of Lincolne, sometime Chancelor of the Vniuersitie. But the creation of this foundation goeth now in the name of king Henry the first, as appeareth by his charter dated the third day of December in the 25. yeare of his raigne, who made the same vpon his owne ground, where now it standeth in Milnestréete, for one president and foure fellowes or mo, as their liuelode should extend, according to such rules and statutes as should be deuised by Mast. Iohn Somerset, chancelor of the Exchequer, Iohn Langton chancelor of the Vniuersitie, Richard Cawdrey, Peter Hirford, Gilbert Northington, and Thomas Bolyn, and by the longest liuers of them. After all which, quéene Elizabeth the wife of king E. the 4. made perfect the defectes of that Colledge, in the yeare 1465. King Richard the 3. endowed this college, with 500. markes the yeare lands.

Katherine Hal. Katherine Hall was founded by M. Robert Woodlarke doctor of Diuinity, chancelor of the Vniuersitie, and pronoll of the kings Colledge, to the honor of our blessed Ladie and S. Katherine, the virgin and martyr, in the time of K. Edward the 4. about the yeare of Christ, 1475. for the number of one Master and three fellowes or mo, vpon a certaine messuage in Milnestréete, by him purchased, wherewith he also obtained of the said king a licence of mortmaine for 40. markes of yeerly rent towards their maintenance for euer. Since it is enlarged by other good benefactors.

Iesus colledge. Iesus Colledge was of old time a Monasterie of religious women of S. Radegund, which monasterie being destitute of gouernment, the edifices fallen in decate, the goods and ornaments of the church wasted, the lands diminished, and in conclusion a small number of nunnes left, being but two, whereof the one readie to depart, and the other an infant, were brought into such pouertie, that they were not able to relieue themselues, and therefore forced to depart and leaue the house desolate: whereupon Iohn Alcocke bishop of Elie, obtained licence of king Henry the 7. in the yeare 1497. to found in place thereof a Colledge to the honor of the holy Trinitie, and our blessed Ladie, and S. Iohn the Euangelist, and S. Radegund the virgin, for the number of one master, fiue fellowes, and a certaine number of scholers, to be gouerned by such rules and statutes as he should appoint vnto them.

This Iohn Alcocke was borne at Beuerley in Yorkeshire, and builded a free schole at Kinkstone vpon Hull, and a chappell on the southside of the parish church wherein his parents were buried: He builded likewise a most beautifull monument in the great church of Elie, where himselfe lieth buried, and did in his time so many and so good actes, as would require a long treatise to set them forth. The rents of this Colledge, and the number of fellowes and scholers haue been more amplified at seuerall times by sir Robert Reade knight, chiefe Iustice of the common Pléas, doctor Eleson, doctor Royston, and doctor Fuller.

Christs Colledge. Christs Colledge was first begun by king Henry the first, and after his decease by the ladie Margaret Countesse of Richmond and Derbie, daughter and heire of Iohn Duke of Somerset, and mother of king Henry the seuenth, in the place where sometime the Colledge of Gods-house stode in the Preachers stræte, which colledge was first founded by William Bingham parson of Saint John Sakary in London and other, but because it came neuer to perfection, she obtained of the said king her sonne his charter dated the first day of Maie in the 20. yære of his raigne, and the yære of our Lord God 1505. to increase the number of students there, translating it according to her disposition, so that from thencefoorth it should be called Christs Colledge, wherein she allowed by her Will to the number of 60. persons, with seruants to them conuenient and necessary. The Abbey of Creke being dissolued the lands were giuen to that colledge.

in

A master, xiii. schollers fellowes, and 47. schollers disciples.

Saint Iohns Colledge was of ancient time an Hospitall of regular chanons, founded by Nigellus the second bishop of Elie, and treasurer to king Henry the first, in the yære of Christ 1134. After him many yæres Hugh Balsham alias Norwold bishop of Elie, obtained licence of king Edward the first in the yære 1280. to translate the order of that house, and placed therein a certaine number of schollers, to cohabite among the religious persons, assigning to each part their portions by their owne consents, aswell of the landes as the goods: so that alwaies ẏ poze people of ancient time there relieued, should not be defrauded of their accustomed charitie.

Saint Iohns Colledge.

The noble ladie Margaret countesse of Richmond and Derby, being informed, that the number of religious brethren was greatly diminished, and now brought but to two, the house decaied, and the lands and goods wasted, procured licence of her nephew king Henry the 8. to erect in the same place a Colledge in the worship of S. John the Euangelist, but she being preuented by death, left the execution therof to her executors, Richard Foxe Bishop of Winchester, Iohn Fisher Bishop of Rochester, Charles Somerset lord Herbert, afterward created Earle of Worcester, Sir Thomas Louell, Sir Henry Marney, and Sir Iohn S. Iohn knightes, Henry Horneby, and Hugh Ashton clearkes, who with her goods finished the buildinges, and with the remaine of the lands that was in the house before, amplified with her owne landes, founded the said Colledge for a master and fifty schollers, in the yeere 1509.

Magdalene Colledge was first an Hostell or Hall, inhabited by diuers monks of sundry monasteries (and therefore of old called Monks Colledge) being sent from their abbeies to the Vniuersity for to study.

Magdalen colledge.

Edward Duke of Buckingham had an intention to bestowe great cost in the building therof, who builded vp the hall in the yeere of Christ 1519. whereupon it was for a time called Buckingham Colledge.

But these buildings being left by the duke vnperfect, were after brought to some better passe by the prior of Ely, and the abbots of Ramsey, and Walden, and so continued a place of study for the monks till the generall suppression of monasteries made by king Henry the 8.

At length the Lord Thomas Audeley Baron of Walden, and Chancellor of England, founded there a colledge vnder the name of S. Mary Magdalen, and indowed it with possessions, in the yeere of our Lorde 1542. But being preuented by death, so that what he had begun, he left vnfinished, Sir Christopher Wray Lorde chiefe Iustice of England repaired and beautified it.

Trinitie Colledge. Trinitie colledge was founded by King Henry the eight, in the yéere of Christ 1546. This colledge was erected in the plat where sometime Edward the thirde builded his colledge called the Kings hall, whereunto was also ioyned one other colledge called Michaell house, founded by Henricus de Stanton in the time of King Edward the second. And yet a thirde house called Physwicke Hostell: All which thrée houses the King tooke into his newe colledge, with the possessions and buildings to the same belonging, and called it by the name of Trinitie colledge. The possessions thereof were greatlie enlarged by the gift of Queene Mary. Shee gaue thrée hundred thirtie eight pounde lands by yeere: in whose time the faire chappell of that colledge was also builded about the yéere of Christ 1557.

Begun but not finished.

Gonuile and Caius colledge Gonuile and Caius colledge was first begun by Edmond Gonuile, as before is said. John Caius Doctor in Phisicke sometime fellowe and lately maister of the saide colledge, hath enlarged that house, and nowe made a seconde foundation thereof, with giuing certaine mannors and landes to the same, in the yeere 1557. and calling it by the name of Gonuile and Caius colledge.

Emanuel Colledge. Emanuell colledge was founded by Sir VValter Myldmay Knight, chancellor and vndertreasurer of the Exchequer, and one of the Priuie counsell to our Soueraigne Lady Queene Elizabeth, about the yeere of our Lord 1584. vpon the house and grounds of the late frier preachers, or Dominick friers, in the preachers streete.

And thus far of the Vniuersitie of Cambridge, with the Colledges and Halles in the same.

¶ The Vniuersitie of Oxford was instituted by King Alfred a Saxon, after the birth of Christ 873. yeeres: And hath Colledges.

Vniuersitie Colledge. VNiuersitie Colledge (as some haue written) was founded in the time of K. Alfred, by sir William Archdeacon of Dureme, in the yéere 873: but in a booke intituled, the acts of the bishops of Derham, I find that the said Colledge was builded by William bishop of Derham, in the 12. yéere of the raigne of William the Conqueror, to wit, in anno 1081.

The Vniuersitie Church, alias S. Marie Church, was begun to be reedified in the time of doctor Fitz-Iames after bishop of London: he procured much money towardes the building of it. The battlements of it were full of Pinnacles, but by tempest were most of them throwne downe in one night.

Bailiol colledge Bailiol Colledge was founded in the time of Edward the first, by John Bailiol, father to Iohn Bailiol King of Scotland, in the yéere of Christ 1263.

Merton colledge. Merton College was founded in the time of Henry the third by Walter Merton, sometime chanon of Paules, and also of Salisbury, at a Towne by Nonesuch called Maldon in Surrey, in anno 1264. and after in Edward the first time, he being bishop of Rochester, translated the same to Oxford in the yéere yéere 1274. This Walter Merton deceased in anno 1277.

Excester colledge was founded in the time of Edward the second, by Walter Stapleton bishop of Excester, 1316. Excester Colledge.

And augmented in the time of our Soueraigne Lady Elizabeth, by Sir William Peter knight, in the yéere of Christ 1566.

Oriall colledge was founded in the time of Edward the second, by Sir Adam Browne Almoner of the saide king, the recorde calleth king Edward the second founder, the yéere of Christ 1323. Oriall colledge.

Quéenes colledge was founded in the time of Edward the thirde, by Robert Eglisfield, in his owne grounde, and by him called the Queenes Hall: hee was chapleine to the Lady Philip, wife to the same Edward, the yéere of Christ 1340. Queenes Colledge.

New colledge was founded in the time of king Richard the second, by William Wickham bishop of Winchester, in the yéere of Christ 1379. New colledge.

He also founded a colledge in the citie of Winchester, by the like name of New colledge, in anno 1389. Lincolne Colledge.

Lincolne colledge was founded in the time of Henry the fift, by Richard Fleming bishop of Lincolne 1430. and augmented in Richard the thirds time, by Thomas Rotheram bishop of Lincolne, in the yéere 1479.

Alsoules colledge was founded in the time of king Henry the first, by Henry Chicheley archbishop of Canterbury, in the yéere 1437. King Henry the 6. gaue to it foure Priories alians, to wit, Alberberie in Salope, Rumney in Kent, Languenith in South Wales, Weden Pinkney in Northamptonshire: And therefore the foundation of this colledge was giuen to him, as appeareth by the chartar, recorded in the Tower. IN the Vniuersities of England (saieth Erasmus Roterodame) there be certaine colledges, in the which there is so much Religion, so streight discipline, in such integritie of life, that if you did see it, you woulde neglect in comparison of them, all monkish rules and orders.

All the cities in England, manie Market Townes, and villages, haue free Grammar Schooles erected in them for the further increase of learning and vertue. Vertuous men haue to the perpetuall registring of their good names done these good deedes, learned men haue not beene all the doers. Some therefore for the supplie in other, of that which wanted in themselues, haue done wiselie, all to this purpose: that vertue and learning united and knitte together, might in this our age make a learned vertuous worlde, haue done godlie. It were much (they are so manie) in a small roume to comprehende them, but the chiefe and worthy patrones of the rest are.
